Secondly, As they cannot make us better, ſo they cannot make our lives more comfortable to us. This is the ground of Chriſt's warning (Luke 12. 15.) Take heed and beware of covetouſneſs; for man's life (that is, the comfort of it) conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth. Yea, Solomon (Eccl. 5. 13.) ſhews, that a rich man's life is ſo far from being more comfortable to him, becauſe he is rich, that indeed it is more troubleſom; There is a ſore evil which I have ſeen under the Sun, namely, riches kept by the owners thereof to their hurt. And (v. 17.) All his dayes alſo he eateth in darkneſs. In what kind of darkneſs? Though he hath Sun-light at his dinner, and Taper-light at his ſupper, yet he eateth in darkneſs, that is, he hath no comfort nor contentment in what he eateth. How vain is it to put confidence in that, which when we have it moſt, and have it faſt, leaves us comfortleſs?

Thirdly, They cannot, by their own ſtrength deliver us from any evil, and they are not at all available to deliver us from that greateſt penal evil the wrath of God (Prov. 11.4.) Riches avail not in the day of wrath. They can do no good towards the ſecuring us from divine vengeance; Only, Righteouſneſs delivereth from death. And as they cannot at all deliver from the wrath of God (Ezek. 7. 19.) ſo they cannot alwayes deliver from the wrath of man; So ſome expound that place (Iſa. 13. 12.) I will make a man more precious than fine Gold, even a man than the golden wedg of Ophir; That is, ſuch ſhall be the fury and fierceneſs of thoſe that ſhall deſtroy Babylon, that they will not take any ranſom, nor be moved with any offer of the fineſt Gold to ſpare the life of a Babylonian. Further, riches cannot deliver from the pains of the body, much leſs from the pangs of conſcience; therefore put no confidence in them.

Fourthly, Why ſhould we deſire riches, or at all truſt in them, ſeeing they cannot at all ſatisfie our deſires? (Eccl. 5. 10.) He that loveth ſilver ſhall not be ſatisfied with ſilver, nor he that loveth abundance with increaſe: this is alſo vanity. The mind of man is ſo large and wide, that all this world cannot fill it; nor doth it bear any due proportion to it. Heaven cannot ſatisfie the ſoul without God, much leſs can this earth, yea, riches, gold and ſilver are ſo far from ſatisfying deſire, that they are but fewel to increaſe the flame of it. And as they increaſe deſire, ſo they take away or rob us of our reſt (v. 12.) The ſleep of a labouring man is ſweet, whether he eat little or much; but the abundance of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleep: That is, he hath ſuch abundance of cares about his abundance of riches, that he cannot be quiet night nor day.

And as they are a trouble to the body in hindring ſleep; ſo (which is infinitely worſe) they are a ſnare to the ſoul, and caſt that into a dead ſleep. How often do they intangle the ſpirits, and weaken the graces of good men? How often do they ſtrengthen their luſts, and furniſh their corruptions? They hinder many from believing and receiving the Goſpel (Luke 14. 16, 17, 18.) They choak the Word in others who ſeem to have received the Goſpel (Math. 13. 22.) How often do riches lead to neglect of duty, yea to a denyal of God? Hence that good man beg'd (Prov. 30. 9.) Give me not riches, leſt I be full and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? Julian the Apoſtate, ſpoiled the Chriſtians in thoſe times, of their outward eſtates, and then ſaid in ſcorn, That he did it to make them more expedite or ready for the kingdom of heaven, as their Maſter had taught them. Woe to ſcorners, yet there is a ſerious truth in that Atheiſtical ſcorn; We are made the more ready for heaven, by how much we are the leſs cumbred with earthly things. Laſtly, as riches clogg many in the ways of God; ſo they cauſe ſome totally to forſake and Apoſtatize from that profeſſion which they once made of them. Thus Paul complained (2 Tim. 4. 10.) Demas hath forſaken me, having loved this preſent world. Well therefore might the Apoſtle conclude (1 Tim. 6.10.) The love of money is the root of all evil, which while ſome have coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows. Add to all this, that amazing ſentence of Chriſt (Math. 19. 23, 24.) Then ſaid Jeſus to his Diſciples, verily I ſay unto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven; And again I ſay unto you, it is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. This ſaying aſtoniſhed the Diſciples, and therefore Chriſt gives a twofold mollifying interpretation of it; firſt, in the 26. verſe of the ſame Chapter; With men this is impoſſible, but with God all things are poſſible. Secondly (Mark 10. 24.) How hard is it for them that truſt in riches to enter into the kingdom of God? So then 'tis not the poſſeſſing or having of riches which renders the rich man's caſe ſo difficult, but truſting in them; 'tis hard for any rich man, but 'tis impoſſible for a rich man truſting in riches to enter into the kingdom of God: and I may ſay from Scripture grounds, 'tis impoſſible for any man who hath riches not to truſt in them, but by the grace and power of God. Judg then how ſtrong Job was in the grace of God, who could ſay, that he had never ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art my Confidence. Nor doth Job diſclaim confidence in gold only becauſe it is a vanity to confide in it, but alſo becauſe 'tis baſe, exceeding baſe to confide in it.

Hence note, Confidence in Gold embaſeth the mind of man, or nothing makes the ſoul ſo droſſie as confidence in fine Gold.

Yea, as confidence in Gold abaſeth the mind of man, ſo it abaſeth (in man's thoughts) God himſelf. God is little or nothing to them, who have an over-great eſteem of Gold. They have low and poor thoughts of God, who have high thoughts of riches; yea they think the All-ſufficiency of God too little for them, who look upon any creature as ſufficient for them.

Again, He that makes gold his confidence, is confident if he have gold enough he ſhall do well enough without God. He ſcarce believes that he hath any need of or dependance upon God, when once he ſees himſelf above dependance upon man. How great a wickedneſs is it for a man to rob the living God of that which is his greateſt honour, and give it to a liveleſs creature. As hope, ſo confidence much more, is proper to God. God will do nothing for us, unleſs we make him our confidence. And the creature will be nothing to us, if we make it our confidence.

From the whole matter take theſe two inferences.

Firſt, Of how excellent a ſpirit are they, who while (like Job) they have the cream of the creature, and all the contentments of the world courting them daily, the rock pouring them out rivers of oyl, &c. Yet keep the world at a due diſtance, and never make the beſt of it, the leaſt of their hope, nor the All of it any of their confidence? how clean do ſuch keep their hearts from the pollution of the world, how pure, how entire to God!

Secondly, This adminiſters ſupport to the Godly poor; for as they want many comforts which the rich enjoy, ſo they are freed from many temptations which annoy the rich. Riches are a mercy (they are ſo with the bleſſing and grace of God) yet they are a dangerous mercy. And though poverty be a trouble and a burden, yet it is a ſafe trouble, and (comparatively to riches) a light burden. I do not intend pinching poverty, or their poverty who are in a neceſſitous condition, but theirs who are in a mean condition. Gold is good, yet both an inferior good and an uncertain good; riches make cloggs for the ſoul in its courſe to heaven, but they make themſelves wings and fly as an Eagle to heaven. Gold is good, but 'tis a deceitful good; riches promiſe much, but perform little; and while they pay our debts, they do not pay their own; Gold is good, but 'tis ſo to us only when we uſe it well; Grace is ſo good, that it makes us uſe it well; Gold is ſuch a good as makes moſt who have it, uſe it ill, and enjoy it worſe; As Job plainly intimates in the words which follow.

For as in theſe words Job hath renounced all hope in gold, and confidence in the fineſt gold, ſo in the next (which is the common ſin of thoſe who enjoy much gold) he proceeds to renounce all inordinate joy or rejoycing in it.

Verſ. 25. If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great, and becauſe my hand had gotten much.

This argues the frame of Job's ſpirit yet more ſpiritual, and more refined from the droſs of earthlineſs. Poſſibly a man may not make Gold his hope, nor ſay to the fine gold, thou art my confidence, whoſe heart is over-affected with his wealth, and fluſht with ſecret rejoycings that his hand hath gotten much; But, ſaith Job, I did not ſo much as rejoyce becauſe my wealth was great, Mr. Broughton tranſlates, If I joyed that my wealth grew. Wealth, in ſome mens hands eſpecially, is a growing thing, it grows like a plant, it ſhoots forth buds and bloſſoms from day to day, like a tree planted in a fruitful ſoil, and by the waters ſide. Job was a growing man in wealth as well as in Grace, but this latter growth, not the former, was the matter and occaſion of his joy.

Rejoycing is the opening or dilatation of the heart upon the receiving of ſome preſent good. That which cauſeth joy muſt be good, and a good thing preſent; for if it be abſent how good ſoever it is, it only cauſeth hope, or if it cauſe joy, it is becauſe our hope is ſo ſtrong and lively, that it gives a kind of preſent fruition or enjoyment. As ſorrow ſtraightens and ſhuts up the heart, ſo joy unlocketh and enlargeth it. If I rejoyced

Becauſe my wealth was great.] The word which we tranſlate wealth, ſignifies properly, ſtrength, or, power; and ſo by a metonymie of the effect, riches and wealth, becauſe much of a man's ſtrength, of his civil ſtrength conſiſts in wealth or riches; A wealthy rich man is a powerful man; wealth doth great matters in the ſphere of this world; therefore the Scriptures Elegantly expreſs riches and ſtrength by the ſame word. 'Tis alſo rendred Subſtance (Mich. 4 13.) We uſually call a wealthy man a ſubſtantial man, or a man of ſubſtance. If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth

Was great.] It is not ſo much the thing as the degree of it that cauſeth rejoycing, if a man have but a little of that which is good, or no more than will juſt ſerve his turn, he doth not rejoyce much, yea he ſcarce rejoyceth at all; but when the good which he enjoyeth is great, his joy is great. Wealth put alone notes a great quantity of worldly goods, much more Great wealth. When there is much good in the hand, then uſually there is much joy in the heart. Therefore ſaith Job, If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great; though I had the greateſt occaſion and temptation to rejoyce in wealth, yet I did not; I was poſſeſſed of no ſmall matters, I was not among the middle ſort of rich men, but with the higheſt, yet I rejoyced not in my riches.

For the clearing of this proteſtation againſt rejoycing in wealth, it may be demanded; Is it not lawful to rejoyce in the good things of this life? eſpecially in the abundance of the good things of this life? and doth not Job ſpeak more of himſelf than is proper to man, or was ever found in a mortal man? is it poſſible that a man (who enjoys the uſe of his reaſon) ſhould have wealth, and great wealth, and yet be inſenſible of it? or not to be affected with it?

I anſwer, Job doth not proteſt againſt all manner, nor againſt all degrees of Joy: for Firſt, 'Tis natural to man to rejoyce in that which is good, in any kind of good; as it is natural to man (as man) to deſire that which is good; ſo it is natural to man (as man) to rejoyce in that which is good. Joys run to the ſame length with deſires.

Secondly, We find that God himſelf requires rejoycing, not only in ſpiritual, but even in outward good things. When the Lord commanded the Children of Iſrael to bring their ſacrifices and holy offerings to the place which he ſhould chuſe to put his name there, even unto his habitation, he there required them not only to rejoyce in his ſervice and in their ſoul-mercies, but in their riches and bodily mercies (Deut. 12. 5, 6, 7.) There ye ſhall eat before the Lord your God, and you ſhall rejoyce in all that you put your hand unto, you and your houſhold, wherein the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee. The things which they put their hands unto, were their worldly labours and buſineſſes, the Lord's bleſſing upon thoſe labours gave them an increaſe of worldly wealth; This bleſſing they muſt receive and uſe with rejoycing.

Thirdly, Joy in outward good things, is a part of that praiſe and thankfulneſs (and ſo of that worſhip) which is due and muſt be pay'd unto God. He reckons himſelf diſhonoured and neglected, if we receive ſo much as a morſel of bread with a ſour face, or with a ſullen ſpirit; yea he would have us chearful, and rejoyce in the leaſt outward comforts, which he beſtows upon us. Now if it be a part of our duty to rejoyce in the ſmalleſt portion of temporal mercies, why doth Job ſo earneſtly diſclaim rejoycing in the greateſt? or wherein doth the ſinfulneſs of rejoycing in wealth, in great wealth conſiſt?

I anſwer, rejoycing in worldly wealth, great or little, is not good.

Firſt, When we ſo rejoyce in it, as that we ſit down, acquieſce and reſt in it; All reſting joy in the creature is a moving or going away from God. Such was the joy of the rich man (Luke 12. 19.) who when his grounds brought forth plentifully, and he had prepared great barns to beſtow his fruits and goods in, ſaid to his ſoul, Thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink and be merry; ſit down here, thou art well, thou art in a warm place, in a good houſe; when our ſouls reſt in corporal enjoyments, this is ſin.

Secondly, 'Tis ſinful to rejoyce in wealth, in the greateſt wealth, boaſting of it, as a piece (at leaſt) of our happineſs and glory. Thus 'tis reported of Haman (Eſth. 5. 11, 12.) who, when he came home from Court, called his friends, and Zereſh his wife, and told them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and of all the things wherein the King had promoted him, and how he had advanced him above the Princes and ſervants of the King. Haman ſaid moreover, yea Eſther the Queen did let no man come in with the King into the banquet that ſhe had prepared, but my ſelf, and to morrow am I invited unto her alſo by the King. Such rejoycing as this either in wealth or honour with men, is one of the ſureſt ſigns of a heart eſtranged from the things and ways of God. They know not what favour with or by Chriſt means, who can thus glory in the favours or cry up themſelves the Favourites of the greateſt earthly Princes.

Thirdly, 'Tis ſinful to rejoyce in wealth as our good; riches are called our goods, and they are good things, but take heed of making them your good, as they did, and there were many of them (Pſal. 4. 6.) who ſaid, Who will ſhew us any good? what was that good which they would ſo fain be ſhewed? It was Corn, and wine, and oyl; therefore David ſaith (at the 7. verſe) Thou haſt put Joy into my heart more than in the time when their Corn and wine increaſed. Though corn and wine were good things, yet holy David would not call them his good; though gold and ſilver are your goods, yet wo to them who ſay they are their good. We muſt make nothing our good but God, and the things of God; there is a holy skill in a believer, he can critically diſtinguiſh between his goods and his Good.

Fourthly, So to rejoyce in wealth or in riches, as to forget, yea or to abate our rejoycing in God: All ſuch rejoycing is not only vain but abominable. The greateſt joy which a godly man takes in his greateſt wealth, doth not leſſen but heighten and increaſe his joy in God. The beſt advantage which he makes of what God gives him of this world, is to raiſe up his ſoul in the praiſes of God. David takes notice (Pſal. 10. 3, 4.) that when the wicked boaſteth of his hearts deſire (and what is the deſire of his heart? Surely his riches; for as it followeth in the ſame verſe, he bleſſeth the covetous whom God abhorreth; when I ſay, he boaſteth of his hearts deſire) God is not in all his thoughts; that is, God is not at all in his thoughts. He rejoyceth ſo much upon a worldly account, that he hath no joy left for God, or he quite forgetteth and leaves God out in his rejoycings. The people of Iſrael had a ſevere caution given them (Deut. 6. 10, 11, 12.) And it ſhall be when the Lord thy God ſhall have brought thee into the Land which he ſware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly Cities which thou buildedſt not, and houſes full of all good things, which thou filledſt not, and wells digged which thou diggedſt not, Vineyards and Olive trees which thou plantedſt not; when thou haſt eaten and art full, then beware that thou forget not the Lord which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage; As if the Lord had ſaid by Moſes, Let not contentment and delight in the good things which I ſhall give you to eat, eat out your thoughts of and delights in me, who am the giver of all theſe good things. Here's thy danger and thy ſnare, leſt when thou art come to great wealth, thou ſhouldſt forget the great God who made thee wealthy.

Fifthly, 'Tis much more ſinful to rejoyce in wealth, in great wealth, when we ſo rejoyce in it, as not only to forget God, but to rebell and kick againſt him. And indeed as to remember God and obey him is the ſame thing in Scripture ſence; So they who forget God are very near rebellion againſt him. (Deut. 32. 15.) Jeſhurun waxed fat and kicked; thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; Then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation; they provoked him to jealouſie with ſtrange gods, &c. Jeſhurun ſignifies righteouſneſs or uprightneſs. A Title moſt ſuitable to the duty of Iſrael, who ought to be an upright and righteous people. But they proved (when wealthy) like fatted oxen (to them alſo the word in ſound is applicable, and ſome conceive that Moſes uſeth it on purpoſe to give them a cloſe reproof, I ſay when Iſrael grew wealthy which was their fatneſs, then like fatted oxen) they kicked againſt God who had fed them; that is, they rebelled againſt the Commands and ways of God, they refuſed the rule of duty for his worſhip, and made them new gods; thus they rejoyced in their own greatneſs with neglect of the greatneſs of God.

Sixthly, So to rejoyce in wealth as by our wealth to make proviſion for our luſts, or (as it were) to let out our wealth to the uſe of any luſt is very ſinful; All ſuch rejoycing the Apoſtle forbids (Rom. 13. ult.) Make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfill the luſts thereof. Godly men provide for their neceſſities, wicked men lay up and lay out for their luſts.

Seventhly and laſtly, any ſuch rejoycing in wealth as doth but abate the edge, and allay the ſweetneſs of our Joy in God is ſinful; and that's it which Job here diſclaims; he did not ſo rejoyce in his worldly wealth as to leſſen his heavenly joy. His joy in riches was a poor joy compared with his joy in God; His joy in God was above and conquered all his other joyes. The Church (Pſal. 137. 6.) preferred Jeruſalem before her chief Joy. The Godly Jews in captivity could have rejoyced, and did in the reſtoring of their civil liberties and priviledges; but they made Jeruſalem their chiefeſt joy; And why was Jeruſalem their chief joy? Surely by Jeruſalem they intended their ſpiritual liberties and priviledges; the chiefeſt of which was their freer and fuller enjoyment of God in his holy Ordinances and appointments for publick worſhip. Now when Job ſaith, I rejoyced not becauſe my wealth was great; it is as if he had ſaid, My greateſt Joy in worldly things was not ſo much as my leaſt Joy in ſpiritual things, or the higheſt of my earthly joy was lower than the loweſt of my heavenly joyes. Yea his greateſt joy in his great wealth was in that reſpect ſo little, that he could ſafely profeſs he did not at all rejoyce in it. Job was doubtleſs very thankful for, and ſenſible enough of the favour of God in beſtowing ſuch great wealth upon him, yet the ſenſe which he had of the favour of God in beſtowing grace and ſalvation, yea and himſelf upon him, did even ſwallow the remembrance of, and ſo the joy which he took in all other favours. If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great.

Were it not ſo, it had not been worth the while for Job to have proteſted that he did not. We have a natural bent to rejoyce in what is pleaſing to nature, therefore in riches, which furniſh nature with all varieties of pleaſures and contentments; yea ſinful nature is beſt pleaſed with thoſe things which are worſt, and to rejoyce in that which ſhould be the object of our hatred, and will be (if conſented to) the matter of our ſorrow, ſinful ſordid ſenſual pleaſures. O how ready are our hearts to open at the firſt knock of worldly delights of any kind! Indeed the world is neer of kin to man, even to a great part of the beſt men; the comforts of it fit us well, and we can taſte and reliſh them ſavourly; and therefore it is no marvel that our Joys run out after them till grace puts a ſtop upon them and mortifies them, or turns them into another channel.

Secondly, For as much as Job doth not proteſt againſt all joy (as hath been explained) but againſt immoderate exceſſive and irregular Joy.

Obſerve, Secondly, That our joy about earthly things doth uſually exceed and go out of Compaſs.

We are quickly more taken with the world than 'tis worth; and as we are apt to rejoyce in what we ought not (miſſing our object) ſo (miſſing our meaſure) to rejoyce in what we may, more than we ought. The world is too narrow for our paſſions; we ſoon over-ſorrow the worſt things which the world can inflict, and we as ſoon over-joy the beſt things which the world can afford. Chriſt perceived the hearts of his Diſciples tranſported too far in rejoycing at their conqueſts over evil ſpirits. For having called, commiſſion'd, and ſent out his twelve Apoſtles to ſubdue and bring in the Jewiſh Nation to the acknowledgment of and faith in him, at the ſixth Chapter of the Goſpel of Luke; He at the firſt verſe of the tenth Chapter prepared and ſent out a band of ſeventy Auxiliaries to proſecute and advance the ſame bleſſed deſign. And to ſhew that the weapons of their warfare were not carnal, but mighty through God, theſe returning, report the ſucceſs of their expedition, and ſhew Chriſt the trophies of their victory (v. 17.) Lord even the Devils are ſubject to us through thy Name. Yea (ſaith Chriſt) I know it to be ſo, yours is no vain boaſt, I my ſelf can bear you witneſs, the effects of your miniſtry have been very great in mine eye (v. 18.) I beheld Satan like lightning fall from heaven. And becauſe they had mannaged their Commiſſion ſo well, Chriſt enlargeth it at the 19. verſe; Behold I give you power to tread on Serpents and Scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing ſhall by any means hurt you. Now Chriſt (who knows the meaſure and temper of every ſpirit) fore-ſeeing that his Diſciples might be over-joyed with the thought of thoſe paſt and theſe promiſed victories and conqueſts (which were indeed greater than all the Caſars and Pompeys in the world ever attained unto; he, I ſay, fore-ſeeing this) gave them an allay, by counſel and caution (v. 20.) Notwithſtanding in this rejoyce not, that the ſpirits are ſubject unto you, but rather rejoyce in this, that your names are written in heaven. Where he at once corrects or checks the ſuſpected exceſſes of their joy, for victories gained over evil ſpirits, and directs them to rejoyce in that wherein there could be no exceſs, their hopes of and intereſt in eternal glory. Now if good men are apt to exceed in their rejoycings about ſome priviledges which are of a ſpiritual nature (ſuch is that gift of power over evil ſpirits) ſurely then carnal men cannot ſtop their joyes from exceeding, and godly men are very prone to exceed in rejoycing about earthly things. How ſeldom is it that we rejoyce in ſpiritual things? we can hardly bring our hearts to any due height or heat of holy joy: And O how over-ſoon do our hearts over-act their joy in temporal things! When we rejoyce in God, we rejoyce as if we did not, we rejoyce but faintly, narrowly, ſorrily; yea while we are in the fleſh we can never rejoyce enough in ſpiritual things, only this is our comfort, that in heaven we ſhall rejoyce in God, and in God alone, and as we can never rejoyce too much in him, ſo then we ſhall rejoyce enough in him; our joy ſhall then be full, and we ſhall rejoyce our fill in God.

Thirdly, In that Job diſclaims all inordinate rejoycing in his great wealth,

Obſerve, To rejoyce much in the beſt or greateſt of worldly things is greatly ſinful.

The leaſt of our affections is enough for the greateſt good which this world yields. Nor is any thing of this world to have any thing of our affections, but in a ſubſerviency and ſubordination unto God. The Apoſtle gives us excellent counſel for the moderating of our joys about, and the drawing off our deſires from creature-enjoyments (2 Cor. 7. 30, 31.) The time is ſhort, brethren; it remaineth therefore, that they who rejoyce be as if they rejoyced not. So to do a thing as if we did it not, is to do it ſo little that we can ſcarce diſcern whether it be done at all or no. The Apoſtle doth not totally forbid that joy, but regulates it; he would have us rejoyce in the good things of this life, yet ſo, as it may appear we are dead to them. And if we conſider wealth, the greateſt worldly wealth in its utmoſt worth, we have reaſon enough to be ſo. For,

Firſt, as to its matter and extraction, 'tis of the earth; Secondly, as to its acquiſition and attainment, 'tis troubleſom to get it; Thirdly, when we have gotten it, new troubles and cares are begotten by it; Fourthly, the utmoſt uſe and enjoyment of it is but for the ſhort time of this life, and why ſhould we rejoyce much in that at any time, which we can enjoy but a little time? Fifthly, joy in wealth produceth many dangerous effects, unleſs it be well tempered and corrected through grace. For,

Firſt, it ſteals the heart away from better things, while we feed too heartily upon earthly things; and drink large draughts at the ciſtern of the creature, we little mind (if we do not forſake) the fountain of living waters (Jer. 2. 13.) much friendſhip and familiarity with the world, breeds an eſtrangement between God and the Soul; the more we converſe with creatures, the leſs fellowſhip we have with Chriſt: and then he is jealous of us, that we have found out other lovers, and are grown wanton with our wealth. This is ſpiritual Adultery, and a going a whoring from God. The Apoſtle James calls it ſo expreſly (Chap. 4. 3, 4.) Ye ask and receive not, becauſe ye ask amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts. Ye Adulterers and Adultereſſes know ye not, &c. The Adulterer cares not for his wife, and the Adultereſs is eſtranged from her own husband, ſhe regards not his company; And thus when the heart is taken with the beauty and glitter of the world, it is eſtranged from God.

Secondly, Such Joy in great wealth blows up the heart with vain oſtentation and ſwells it with pride, nothing keeps the heart ſo low as Joy in the higheſt things; and Joy in low things, or in things below, ſets the heart on high. Here's a ſtrange contrariety of effects; low things make the heart proudly high; and high things make the heart graciouſly low.

Thirdly, Inordinate worldly joy make the heart like the world, foul and unclean. The world is corrupt, and it corrupts thoſe who luſt after it (2 Pet. 1. 4.) They who rejoyce much in the world luſt after it, and ſuch cannot eſcape the corruption that is in the world through luſt.

Fourthly, Joy over-acted upon the world, deads the heart to all ſpiritual actings and quencheth the Spirit. The fire of worldly joy is as water caſt upon the holy Spirit, and upon our graces; O how deadly cold is the heart of a man to heavenly things when once he is heated with rejoycings about the things of the earth!

Fifthly, Immoderate Joy about earthly things alwayes concludes in diſſatisfaction, often in vexation; The world at beſt is not good enough, and at moſt is not big enough to fill or ſatisfie the mind of man; And ſtill the greater our expectations are from the world, (they who rejoyce much in it, expect moſt from it, now I ſay, the greater our expectations are) the greater are our diſappointments; Nothing vexeth more than diſappointment; and they are moſt vexed with diſappointments about the world, who have rejoyced moſt in it. So that we muſt ſay of worldly Joy as Solomon doth (Prov. 14. 13.) Even in ſuch laughter the heart is ſorrowful, or if not, yet the end of that mirth is heavineſs.

But ſome may ſay, how then ſhall we order our Joy? I will anſwer this query; Firſt, with reſpect to thoſe who have more than wealth to rejoyce in; Secondly, to thoſe who have nothing but wealth to rejoyce in.

To thoſe who have more than wealth to rejoyce in, that is, to godly men, Who are begotten again unto a lively hope by the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, to all ſuch I ſay, let your joy about corporal and temporal things lead you to rejoyce in thoſe things which are ſpiritual and eternal. Take occaſion from your great wealth (if your lot be there) to rejoyce in better and greater things than wealth. The beſt improvement of the creature is, to make it a ſtair or a ladder to aſcend up to God by. And to get a ſence of better things than the earth hath any, is the beſt uſe we can make of the good, of the beſt things we find on earth. Therefore as Chriſt ſaid to thoſe whom he perceived over-fearing the evils of this life, I will ſhew you whom you ſhall fear, fear him, who when he hath kill'd the body, can caſt both ſoul and body into hell; So I may ſay to thoſe who find their hearts over-joy'd about the good things of this life, I will ſhew you in whom and in what to rejoyce; rejoyce in him, and in that which can advance both body and ſoul to heaven.

Firſt, Rejoyce in God thorough Jeſus Chriſt. We, ſaith Paul (Phil. 3. 9.) are the Circumciſion which worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoyce in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh.

Secondly, Rejoyce in the means of knowing and enjoying God by Jeſus Chriſt. I was glad (ſaith David, Pſal. 122. 1, 2.) when they ſaid unto me, let us go into the houſe of the Lord; Our feet ſhall ſtand within thy gates, O Jeruſalem. In the houſe of God the ſolemn worſhip of God was celebrated, there he manifeſted himſelf to his people, and there they enjoyed his ſpecial preſence. This made David's heart more glad than all the wealth of his kingdom. The Ark of Iſrael was therefore called and eſteemed the glory of Iſrael by that good dying woman (1 Sam. 4. 21.) becauſe it was, Firſt, a type of the perſon of Chriſt; Secondly, a pledg of his preſence with them; Thirdly, a means of enjoying him. And ſurely what was the glory of Iſrael, was or ought to have been the principal matter of their joy.

Thirdly, Rejoyce in the grace of God, and in the fruits of his Spirit. One dram, yea a grain of grace, gives more cauſe of rejoycing than ten thouſand talents, yea than ten thouſand mountains of gold. What are the fruits of the earth to the fruits of the Spirit? let the beholding and gathering up of thoſe fruits cauſe joy in you like the joy of harveſt.

Fourthly, Rejoyce in the favour and loving kindneſs of God, That is better than life (Pſal. 63. 3.) how much more than the good things of this life? When many ſpake of Corn and Wine, David took occaſion to ſpeak of the light of God's Countenance, and to rejoyce in it. Thoſe beams of light which ſhine from the pleaſed face of God upon the ſoul, will cauſe joys there unſpeakable and glorious.

Fifthly, Rejoyce in the teſtimony of a good Conſcience; that's a continual feaſt; and more pleaſant than muſick at a banquet of wine (2 Cor. 1. 12.) This is our rejoycing, the Teſtimony of our Conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity we have had our Converſation in the world. To get and keep a good Conſcience, is more to be rejoyced in, than the getting and keeping the greateſt portions of this world. While a Conſcience well informed ſpeaks us fair, we may ſing for joy, though all men reproach and rail upon us.

Sixthly, Rejoyce in the hope of the glory of God! (Rom. 5. 2.) that hope is better than all your poſſeſſions; that goodneſs which God hath wrought for us is much to be rejoyced in, much more that which he hath laid up for us.

Seventhly, Rejoyce that your names are written in heaven! (Luke 10. 20.) That's better than to have your names written among the rich, or with the Honorable of the earth.

Eighthly, Rejoyce even in the Croſs of Chriſt, or in his ſufferings for you. Paul rejoyced ſo much in that, that he with higheſt indignation or diſdain, forbad the leaſt motion of any other Joy. (Gal. 6. 14.) God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the Croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom (or whereby) the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world. The ſorrows and ſufferings of Chriſt for our ſins, ſhould at once wound our hearts with ſorrow that we have ſinned, and affect our hearts with joy, that through his ſtripes we are healed of our ſin-wounds.

Ninthly, Rejoyce, as in the Croſs of Chriſt for you, ſo in your croſs for Chriſt. How honorable is it to rejoyce in ſuffering for Chriſt, and in our conformity to Chriſt by ſuffering. Suffering for Chriſt is not every ones priviledg, 'tis given but to ſome (Phil. 1. 29.) And though ſuffering even for Chriſt be grievous to the fleſh, yet as Chriſt himſelf exhorts (Matth. 5. 12.) we have reaſon to rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is our reward in heaven. So thoſe bleſſed ones did (Heb. 10. 34.) who took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, knowing in themſelves that they had in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance. Many rejoyce at the increaſing of their goods and livelyhoods, but can you rejoyce in the ſpoiling of your goods and livelyhoods, yea of your lives for Chriſt? that's joy worthy of a Chriſtian.

Secondly, As for thoſe who have nothing but wealth to rejoyce in, meer worldly men, who as they have a great portion in the things of this life, ſo they have their whole portion in this life; I may ſay to ſuch, ceaſe rejoycing that your wealth is great; mourn rather for your miſery is great. Go home and weep over your gold and ſilver, as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 5. 1, 2, 3.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for the miſery that ſhall come upon you, your riches are corrupt, &c. You that have not a God, nor a Chriſt, nor the pardon of ſin to rejoyce in, how can you rejoyce in riches which are corrupt, in gold and ſilver which are cankered? The marks of divine diſpleaſure are viſible upon all theſe enjoyments, and will you rejoyce in them? Nay rather as the ſame Apoſtle counſels you (James 4 9.) Be afflicted and weep and mourn; for your laughter ſhall be turned into mourning, and your joy into heavineſs. 'Tis better to turn your mirth into mourning, than to have it turned into mourning. They who turn their mirth into mourning, may find comfort after it; But they ſhall know nothing but mourning, whoſe mirth is turned into mourning. How ſad is it for any to rejoyce for a day, who are in a condition which tends to mourning for eternity? Wealth which cauſeth ſuch joy is periſhing, and muſt ſhortly be parted with; but ſin unrepented of and unpardoned, which will certainly produce ſorrow, abides upon the ſoul for ever, and therefore their ſorrow muſt. That's the meaning of Chriſt (Luke 6. 25.) Wo to you that laugh now, for ye ſhall mourn and weep; that is, you who laugh in the uſe or poſſeſſion of outward things, and have nothing elſe, no grace, no Intereſt in Chriſt, no favour with God to rejoyce in, ſhall weep at laſt and mourn everlaſtingly. Sorrow of heart, without change of heart, is the portion of ſinners for ever.

If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great.

Comparing this proteſtation of Job with that due Compoſure of his ſpirit before ſpoken of (Chap. 1. 21.) when all was loſt, ſee there how he took it? Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return; the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

Hence note, They who do not rejoyce much in the poſſeſſion of worldly things, will not grieve much at the loſs of them.

The reaſon why Job had ſuch an admirable ſpirit of moderation in his ſorrow about worldly things, was becauſe he had ſuch an admirable ſpirit of moderation about his joy in worldly things; he never rejoyced much in having them, therefore he never ſorrowed much in loſing them. The Apoſtle puts theſe two together (1 Cor. 7. 30.) Rejoyce as if ye rejoyced not, and weep as if ye wept not; As if he had ſaid, if when theſe things of the world are taken from you, you would not be oppreſſed with ſorrow, but weep as if you wept not; then, while you hold them, rejoyce as if you rejoyced not. Sorrow will break their backs, yea their hearts, who ſee that taken from them, with which themſelves were over-much taken. We are always afflicted with the paſſion of ſorrow in parting with any thing, proportionably to our paſſion of joy in holding it. If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great,

And becauſe my hand had gotten much.

This cloſe of the verſe is very remarkable; ſome rejoyce not ſo much in wealth, becauſe they have it as becauſe they have got it, or becauſe 'tis of their own fetching in; They more value a leſſer eſtate attained by their own Induſtry, policy, and contrivances, than a greater deſcended to them by inheritance from their Anceſtors. What is of our own gaining, is naturally more pleaſing to us than what is of other mens giving. We often hear rich men acknowledging, they had no great matter to begin with, but this they glory in, their hand hath gotten much. Such will ſay of that or 'tother rich man, his father was born before him: that is, he hath his eſtate by deſcent, his hand hath gotten little. And therefore it argues a further ſpiritualneſs in this holy man; that as he rejoyced not in wealth conveyed to him by his fore-fathers, ſo not in his own greateſt acquirements of wealth, that's the ſcope of theſe words; If I rejoyced

Becauſe my hand had gotten much.] The hand is the great Inſtrument of action; yet we need not underſtand it, that Job got his eſtate by hand-labour; he was a Magiſtrate, a man of great power and place; but that is ſaid to be gotten by the hand, which is any way gotten by our diligence. All that we get may come under this title, gotten by the hand. Thus Solomon ſpeaks (Eccl. 9. 10.) Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. Head-work or wit-work, is hand-work in Solomon's ſence as well as any other work. Moſes (Levit. 25. 47.) puts the work of the hand for all kind of work. The Hebrew of Job's text is, Becauſe my hand hath found much. So (Pſal. 21. 8. Iſa. 10. 10.) If I rejoyced becauſe my hand had found or gotten

Invenit. i.e. obtinuit.

Much.] The word notes a maſs or weight of wealth. The Septuagint tranſlate, If I put my hand to the getting of innumerable wealth; As if the meaning were, that he bounded his deſires in getting wealth. Some put their hands yea their hearts to the gathering of innumerable riches; they would be rich without all bounds. They never think they have enough, and therefore they would be always getting more; as the Prophet ſaith (Hab. 2. 6.) How long? So we may ſay, How much? No man knows. The Scholiaſt ſaith, Job did not put his hand to innumerables, becauſe he ſet a limit to his deſires in getting riches; and whatſoever was beyond that, he diſtributed it to the poor. This is a good ſence, but I rather keep to that of our own reading, which doth not make theſe words a new proteſtation, but a heightning of that in the former part of the verſe. As if he had ſaid, Though I not only had much riches, but made my ſelf rich, yet I did not rejoyce in it.

Hence note, Firſt, Much diligence and activity in any kind, puts us in a probable way for the getting of much.

As ſlothfulneſs tends to the loſing of all, ſo diligence to the getting of much; The diligent hand maketh rich, that is, there is a great advantage in diligence toward the attainment of riches.

Secondly, In that Job diſclaims his rejoycing in riches as got by his own hand; He indeed uſed diligence in getting riches, but he would not take notice of them as gotten by him.

Hence note, It is ſinful to aſcribe our gains to our own getting.

They who do ſo, put themſelves in the place of God, as if they were able to give an Iſſue to their own Endeavours, and make them ſucceſsful. Whereas (Pſal. 127. 1, 2, 3.)

Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it; Except the Lord keep the City, the watch-man waketh in vain. It is vain for you to riſe up early, to ſit up late, to eat the bread of ſorrows. There is a vanity, that is, a ſucceſsleſneſs in all that we put our heads or hearts or hands unto, till God breaths a bleſſing upon us. We build in vain, and watch in vain, and labour in vain, if God with-hold or with-draw his bleſſing. I (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 9. 11.) returned and ſaw under the Sun, that the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battel to the ſtrong, neither yet bread to the wiſe, nor riches to men of underſtanding, nor favour to men of skill, but time and chance hapneth to them all; that is, they are under the over-ruling and all-diſpoſing hand of God; Which gives ſuch iſſues to mens undertakings as himſelf pleaſes, not ſuch as they purpoſe and intend; ſo that they ſeem to fall out rather caſually than anſwerably to thoſe means, which have been uſed and managed with the greateſt probability in order to their attainment. Therefore let no man glory in man, how ſwift, how ſtrong, how wiſe, how underſtanding, how skilful ſoever, for no man is able to aſſure the effect of what he engageth in or goeth about. He that thinks he can do any one thing effectually, aſſumes his priviledge who alone doth all things.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Carnal or natural men aſcribe their wealth to their own getting more then to the bleſſing of God.

When a godly man hath got much in the world, and hath been very induſtrious in getting it; when the iſſue of his labours riſeth not only up to, but exceeds his expectation; he ſaith (as Peter when he had heal'd the Cripple) why ſtand ye looking upon me, as if I by my own power had got this wealth? When others admire his ſucceſs, he puts it back, with a Why do ye take notice of me, as if my wit, my policy, my cunning, my induſtry, my hand had done this? I know ſome are forward enough to aſcribe that to the bleſſing of God, which they have more reaſon to charge upon their own ſin, and indirect dealing, upon their injuſtice and unrighteouſneſs, take heed of fathering ſuch riches upon the bleſſing of God. Many are rich by common providence; God lets them proſper in their ſin as a puniſhment of their ſin. Only they who thrive by righteouſneſs may ſay of their wealth as Jacob of his Children, This is that wealth which God hath graciouſly given us. Now as ſome are rich by the grace and favour of God; ſo none are rich but by the leave of God. There are many witty, politick and painful men that could never get riches by their utmoſt Endeavours; it is of God that any get wealth. But the carnal man takes all or moſt to himſelf, and never aſcribes his ſucceſs in getting wealth to God, unleſs it be to eaſe himſelf of his ſin in getting it. Man naturally deſires to be ſomewhat to himſelf, and to be looked upon as the Author and finiſher of his own greatneſs. And therefore God chargeth his own people to take heed of this (Deut. 8. 14, 17, 18.) Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, &c. And thou ſay in thy heart, my power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth. Men ſometimes thank God with their tongues, and ſay, Bleſſed be God we are rich; and yet with their hearts they ſay, With my might and power have I got this: but thou ſhalt remember the Lord thy God, for he it is that gives thee power to get wealth. Many labour to get wealth, but God is he that gives power to get wealth; and 'tis of grace that any acknowledg this power to be of God. The proud Aſſyrian would not acknowledg this, we hear the language not only of his heart but of his tongue (Iſa. 10. 13.) He ſaith by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent. And ſuitable to this opinion was the practice of the Chaldeans (Hab. 1. 16.) They ſacrifice to their own nets, and burn Incenſe unto their drag, becauſe by them their portion is fat and their meat plenteous; that is, they conceive that their hand or the means which they have deviſed and uſed, hath procured them all their ſtore and plenty, and therefore they ſacrifice and burn Incenſe to them; that is, having aſcribed to them that efficiency which is proper to God, they alſo beſtow upon them that honour which is proper to God, incenſe and ſacrifice. Thus Nebuchadnezzar boaſted (Dan. 4. 30.) This is great Babylon which I have built for the houſe of the kingdom (that was his deſign, but by what means did he effect it? he ſignifies that plainly enough, as to his own apprehenſion, in the next words, by the might of my power; (to which he again ſubjoins and that more fully, the final cauſe or his aim in raiſing this mighty ſtructure) For the honour of my Majeſty. Man is a covetous Creature, he would have all for himſelf; and he is a proud creature, he attributes all to himſelf, or thinks he hath all from himſelf. Man would have even ſalvation it ſelf by his own getting. Hence that great Controverſie, and continual tugging about Juſtification by works.

But it may be objected, Surely to rejoyce that our hand hath gotten much, is not ſinful; for Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 5. 19.) Every man to whom God hath given riches and health, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take pleaſure, and to rejoyce in his labour (that is, in the effects or fruits of his labour) this is the gift of God.

I anſwer, We may indeed rejoyce in our labour, or that our hand hath gotten much; yet not as if the ſucceſs were from our ſelves, but becauſe God hath uſed us as inſtruments in his hand to obtain that ſucceſs. And as this is the bleſſing of God upon his people, ſo 'tis a ſpecial gift or favour to his people, when God gives them a heart to rejoyce in that which their hand hath gotten.

From theſe two verſes conſidered together, take theſe brief Corollaries.

Firſt, It is lawful for us to endeavour the increaſe of our worldly eſtate, or to get wealth. The hand is a great getter, and 'tis a mercy when it is ſo in the way of any lawful calling, whether in tillage of the earth, or commerce with Nations.

Secondly, Men ought to labour in their Callings, and get wealth by their hands. Though all are not bound to live by manual or hand-labour, yet in ſome honeſt trade (as our Margin hath it, Tit. 3. 14.) or uſeful Calling, all ought to labour. God bids the ſluggard go to the Ant (Prov. 6.6.) and the Apoſtles command is (Eph. 4. 28.) Let him that hath ſtoln ſteal no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good; that is, let him put his hand, that is, himſelf, to ſome good work.

Thirdly, We may lawfully poſſeſs or keep the wealth and good things which we have got by our hands. We may keep that in our hands for uſe which our hands have got into our poſſeſſion. Job got much by his hands, and we read (Chap. 1. 3.) that he had much in his poſſeſſion. The Scripture doth no where counſel us voluntarily to throw our wealth out of our hands, though it often commands us to throw it out of our hearts.

Fourthly, Riches honeſtly gotten by the hand are good, and the good bleſſings of God. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 10. 4.) The diligent hand maketh rich; and in the 22. verſe of the ſame Chapter, he ſaith, The bleſſing of God maketh rich. Thoſe are bleſſed riches which the bleſſing of God gives in either immediately without our diligence, or by our diligence. Many eminent ſervants of God, ſpoken of in Scripture, have been enrich'd by the bleſſing of God upon their diligent hands; Abraham was rich, and ſo was Iſaac and Jacob, all induſtrious men (according to the cuſtom of the great men of thoſe times) about corn and cattel.

Laſtly, Remember theſe two Cautions, and get as much wealth as you can.

Firſt, Take heed of getting any thing unjuſtly. He that gets unjuſtly in bargaining, buying or ſelling, ſteals, as well as he that takes away without either leave or bargain. Though a little gotten by righteouſneſs is not riches, yet 'tis better than the greateſt riches gotten by unrighteouſneſs. Only they are getters indeed who keep a good Conſcience.

Secondly, Take heed of truſting to or rejoycing in what you have juſtly gotten. They who avoid theſe two evils move ſafely, and without danger (as this holy man did) in getting wealth. Job had abundance, ſuch abundance as was a continual temptation to rejoyce in it. He had Gold, and fine Gold, his hand had gotten much; yet his heart was kept pure from any (ſo far as is conſiſtent with humane frailty) defilement with it, and free from all bondage to it.

VERS. 26, 27, 28.

If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs:
And my heatt hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand:
This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg: for I ſhould have denied the God that is above.

IN theſe three verſes Job proteſteth his freedom from, yea his abhorrence of Idolatry; Concerning which we may conſider;

Firſt, The object of Idolatry, a creature, here the Sun and Moon are ſpecified; If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs.

Secondly, The manner of committing Idolatry; and that is two-fold.

Firſt, Internal, The ſeduction of the heart, there it begins, If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed (v. 27.)

Secondly, External; The Action or geſture of the body; If my mouth hath kiſſed my hand: there it is perfected.

Thirdly, The extream ſinfulneſs of Idolatry; which is manifeſted two ways (v. 28.)

Firſt, By that ſeverity which man ought to uſe againſt it. This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg.

Secondly, By the notorious evil that is in the nature of it againſt God, as the ground of that ſeverity; For I ſhould have denied the God that is above.

Thus we ſee both the matter of this context, and the general ſcope of it. Job's clearing himſelf from the ſuſpition of Idolatrous practices.

Yet before I meddle with the expoſition of particulars in reference to that intendment, I ſhall take notice of three opinions which carry the ſence of theſe words wholly another way.

Firſt, The Septuagint or Greek tranſlaters render the text, as a reaſon why Job made not gold his hope, nor fine gold his confidence; why he did not rejoyce in his great wealth, or becauſe his hand had gotten much: in a word, why he was not taken or enſnared with the beauty and luſtre, with the worth and weight of any earthly thing. To which ſence they tranſlate the 26. verſe thus; Do we not ſee the Sun which ſhined failing, and the Moon decreaſing? As if Job had ſaid, Why ſhould I rejoyce in gold and ſilver? Are they not fading and uncertain? Are they not ſubject to decays and changes? Doth not the moſt dazling light of worldly glory decline into darkneſs and obſcurity? Though I now behold the Sun ſhining, yet many times 'tis under a cloud, and ſometimes eclipſed. And if I behold the Moon walking in brightneſs, or at full, yet ſoon after ſhe is in her wane, and waſtes as if ſhe were not. This is a pious ſence, but I conceive it too great a departure from the Original, and therefore I only mention it, and paſs from it.

An non videmus ſolem qui lucebat deficientem, lunam autem decreſcentem? Sept.

Secondly, Some of the Rabbins connect theſe words with the two former verſes, which concern his wealth and worldly ſubſtance, thus, If I beholding the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs, have aſcribed my proſperity or ſucceſs to the benignity of their influences rather than to the bleſſing of God; or, thus; If I have looked up to the planets and conſtellations of heaven, to the Sun, Moon, or Stars, and have thanked them that I have thrived in the world, then, &c. As there are ſome who complain they were born under an unlucky Planet when they are croſs'd in their worldly expectations; ſo there are others who in ſtead of thanking the God of heaven, thank the heavens as their God for their riches and increaſe; they bleſs themſelves that they were born under ſuch or ſuch a favourable Planet, lucky Star, or enriching Conſtellation; theſe, they judg, have made them ſucceſsful. But, ſaith Job, as I did not rejoyce in my wealth, nor ſay my own hand hath gotten it, ſo I did not aſcribe my getting of wealth to the Sun, or Moon, or Stars, no nor to any ſecond cauſes, either ſublunary or cœleſtial, but wholly and alone to God, whoſe bleſſing upon my diligence hath made me rich in all earthly bleſſings.

Rambam hos verſiculos cum jam dictis de auro & opibus connectit, hoc ſenſu, ſi ſolem aut lunam reſpexi, illis opes meas tribuens non Deo, &c. Merc.

There is a third interpretation which makes this verſe, as alſo the two which follow, a further heightning of what Job had profeſſed before againſt his rejoycing in the greatneſs of his wealth; As if he had ſaid, When my worldly proſperity was like the ſhining Sun, or like the Moon walking in brightneſs, yet then I was ſo far from glorying in it, that I took little notice of it, I did not behold it, I did ſcarce look upon it, or I did not look upon it, as worth the looking upon, compared with ſpiritual excellencies and my Intereſt in God.

Videre lumen ſplendens, &c. hoc loco eſt gloriari fœlicitate, & ea pro ſua libidine non tàm uti quàm frui. Siquidem lumen communi phraſi hujus libri pro fœlicitate ſumitur. Brent.

Some of the learned are much for this expoſition, judging it improbable that Job ſhould here intend any vindication of himſelf from the imputation of Idolatry, becauſe his friends never objected it againſt him. They charged him with many other crimes, but we do not read that ever they raiſed the leaſt duſt of a ſuſpition about this. Upon theſe grounds they are confirmed in the preſent expoſition, that while Job denieth that he ever beheld the Sun when it ſhined, and the Moon walking in brightneſs, his meaning is only this, that he never gloried in any earthly riches or preheminence, which in Scripture are often ſet forth by light, and may here by the light of the Sun and brightneſs of the Moon. Job indeed had a very glorious and illuſtrious eſtate in the world, he did ſhine in the ſphere of an outward proſperity like the Sun in its ſtrength, or like the Moon walking in brightneſs. Yet he was not affected with thoſe things, nor was his heart ſwell'd, nor his mind lifted up vainly by them. So that as he proteſted (Chap. 9.21.) If I were perfect (as to morals and ſpirituals) I would not know my ſoul; So he ſaith here (as to civils and temporals) though I did ſhine as the Sun, and were bright as the Moon in the eyes of the world, yet I did not ſee my ſelf in that Glory. And, ſurely he that can ſay ſo in truth of heart, hath an excellent frame of heart. This interpretation is carried quite through the Context by the ſame Authors. If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed; that is, with the beauty of the world. Some though they make a verbal profeſſion, and a great bluſter of words againſt rejoycing in outward things, and ſay they regard neither gold nor ſilver, neither the Sunſhine of the one, nor the Moon-ſhine of the other; yet their hearts go after them in ſecret. But (Job could ſay) my heart hath not been ſecretly enticed; nor (as it follows in the ſame verſe) hath my hand kiſſed my mouth; That is, my mouth hath not kiſſed my hand, as congratulating my own diligence and endeavours for bringing me in ſuch abundance, and amaſſing ſuch heaps of riches. Some (as hath been anciently noted) have ſaid of their right hand, Thou art our God; that is, they have boaſted of what they have gotten and done by their hand; To do ſo is a Judged iniquity; ſo they connect the next verſe with this in the ſame file of interpretation: and they have this help for it, becauſe thoſe words, to be puniſhed, are not expreſly in the Hebrew text. As if Job had ſaid, if my mouth had kiſſed my hand, that is, adored and applauded my own wiſdom and endeavours, as the cauſe of my great proſperity, I ſhould have denied the God that is above. Now it is a great truth, that whatſoever we aſcribe any efficiency to we make that our God, and ſo deny the God that is above. Which agrees clearly with that of Agur (Prov. 30. 8, 9.) praying for a middle eſtate, or that God would cut him out his portion neither too big nor too little; Give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me, leſt I be full and deny thee, and ſay, who is the Lord? As to ſit down in a creature-fulneſs is to deny God, ſo for any man to make himſelf the Author of his own creature-fulneſs is to deny God alſo. This expoſition being ſo much inſiſted upon, I would not leave it quite out, yet I ſhall not ſtay in it, but proceed to the opening of this context according to the moſt generally approved opinion, as containing Job's diſclaimer of all falſe worſhip and Idolatry.

Nunquam meis divitiis, ſucceſſibus, potentia aut majeſtate confiſus ſum, neq; gloriatus; Eſt autem carni nihil difficilius quam ferre ut dicitur bonos dies; citius enim ſub iis ſuccumbit quam ſub cruce. Brent.

Verſ. 26. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, &c.

But is there any hurt in beholding the Sun when it ſhineth? May we not contemplate the works of creation, and behold them in their greateſt beauty and brightneſs? Why then doth Job put this among the ſins which he ſo vehemently diſowns, that he did not behold the Sun when it ſhined; what fault is there in that? or if there be, how could Job eſcape that fault?

I anſwer, it is ſo far from being a ſin that it is indeed a duty to behold the Sun when it ſhineth, and the Moon walking in brightneſs. It is our duty to view and conſider the creatures for either of theſe two ends.

His verbis innuit ſe nunquam aſtra pro diis coluiſſe; quod gentes olim faciebant; unde θεοὶ dicti ἀπὸ τῦ θεῖν, quòd aſtra in perpetuo motu ſint, & ſemper quaſi currant. Druſ.

Firſt, That in them as in a glaſs we may ſee the glory, the power, the wiſdom and goodneſs of God. When the Creatures are not ſo much objects upon which we look as means by and thorough which we look unto and ſee God, then we improve them rightly. Thus the holy Ghoſt directs us by the Prophet (Iſa. 40. 26.) Lift up your eyes on high (there's a command or a direction at leaſt) and behold: (What ſhould they behold? What, the things or Creatures, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which are on high? No, but as it followeth in that place of the Prophet, behold) who hath created theſe things, that bringeth out their Hoſt; by number: He calleth them all by names, by the greatneſs of his might, for that he is ſtrong in power, not one faileth. When the Prophet calls them to lift up their eyes on high, he would not have their ſight terminated in any created thing on high, but in him, who hath created all high things. Behold them, but do not ſtay in them; let not high things be the limit or bound of your ſight, but glaſſes in and by which you are helped to ſee him who is The Moſt High. Pore not upon the Sun, Moon, and Stars, but paſs thorough them unto God, who hath Created them, and brings out their Hoſt by number, though to us a numberleſs Hoſt.

Secondly, As it is our duty to behold the Sun and Moon, even all things on high, to honour and exalt God in our eyes, ſo to humble and abaſe our ſelves in our eyes; that is the uſe we find made of this ſight (Pſal. 8. 3, 4.) When I conſider the Heavens, the works of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained. What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the Son of man that thou viſiteſt him? As if he had ſaid, What is man, that God ſhould make ſuch Creatures for him, that he ſhould ſet up a Sun and a Moon and Stars for him? To behold the beauty of the Creature that we may abaſe our ſelves, is a work of Grace about the things of nature. Thus to behold the Sun when it ſhineth and the Moon walking in brightneſs, is a command, not the breaking of a command, a duty not a ſin.

But how is it a ſin to behold them? The word which is here uſed in the Hebrew imports two things beſides bare ſeeing, which will help us towards an anſwer. Firſt, an affecting delight in them; Secondly, an admiring ſtay of the mind upon them: Such was that which the Angels gave ſome reproof to, though it were upon Chriſt himſelf when he aſcended into Heaven (Acts 1. 10, 11.) And as they looked ſtedfaſtly toward Heaven, as he went up, behold two men ſtood by them in white apparel, which alſo ſaid, ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into Heaven, &c. Such a pleaſing gazing ſight of the Sun Job here denies: And ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates; If I admired the Sun when it ſhined; that is, if I beheld the ſhining Sun with any exceſſive admiration; if I ſtood glutting my eyes upon it, as taken with its beauty, or ſatisfying my ſelf in it, this were iniquity.

Videndi verbum lætitia voluptatem affert hoc loco; affert etiam intentionem quandam et animi et oculorum in rem quæ videtur; Hæc recte conveniunt in adoratione. Ἐμβλέποντες; ſignificat oculis fixis, cum admiratione, cum complacentia aliquid intueri.

Secondly, To behold the Sun and Moon, ſo as to attribute any of that comfort which we receive by them to them, this is iniquity.

Thirdly, To behold the Sun or Moon, as if they had a divine power, or were worthy of divine honour and worſhip, this is the iniquity which Job chiefly diſclaimeth, when he ſaith, If I beheld the Sun when it ſhineth, &c. Hence ſome tranſlate the whole verſe thus; If I by or in beholding the Sun when it ſhined, &c. my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, and my mouth hath kiſſed my hand, this were an iniquity, &c.

Si aſpiciendo lucem &c. pellectus eſt in occulto animus meus. Jun.

If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined.

The Hebrew word here rendred Sun, properly taken ſignifieth light, and ſo ſome tranſlate; If I beheld the light when it ſhined. The ſame word may well ſignifie both light and the Sun, becauſe the Sun is the greateſt light, the Candle of the World. David (Pſal. 136. 7, 8.) exhorts us to give him thanks that made great lights, the Sun to rule the day, or (as our Margin hath it) for the ruling by day. And the Sun is ſo great a light, that though the Moon be one of the two great lights, yet 'tis comparatively called the leſſer light, (Gen. 1. 16.) God made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſer light to rule the night. So that by way of Emphaſis we may call the Sun, The light.

Sol hic אור vocatur i. e. lux; quia luce ſua cuncta colluſtret, & eſt Metonymia qua adjunctum ponitur pro ſubjecto vel effectus pro cauſa, hinc Ægyptiaca vox ὦρ☉ quia ſolem appellant teſte Macrobio. Druſ.

There is another reaſon in the Text, why we ſhould tranſlate this general word light the Sun, for ſeeing in the latter part of the verſe, the Moon is named, therefore it is moſt proper to reſtrain the general word light, to the Sun in the former part of it. If I beheld the Sun

When it ſhined.] That is, the Sun in his full ſtrength, luſtre, and glory. The Sun ſhines always, but it doth not always ſhine to us. The Sun ſhines not to us at all in the night, for then the Earth obſcures it, it is below our Horizon; and the Sun though it ſhine always in the day, yet we do not always ſee it ſhine, becauſe ſometimes the Clouds cover it, and ſometimes the Moon ſhadoweth it, as in the Eclipſe. So that, though the Sun ſhineth always, yet we cannot always behold the ſhining of it. The Sun is a lamp that never goeth out, it hath burned everlaſtingly from the Creation to this day, yet to this or that place, at this or that time it doth not ſhine. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined,

Or the Moon walking in brightneſs.

The word rendred brightneſs, ſignifies precious (Zech. 14. 6.) And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear nor dark; we put in the Margin, precious nor thickneſs. Thus Mr. Broughton tranſlates here, The Moon walking precious, and adds this gloſs, The new Moon; of which yet fools ſay, God ſave her. It ſeemeth he had obſerved ſuch a vain ſalutation given the new Moon by ignorant or ſuperſtitious perſons. And as he expounds it by the new Moon, ſo others by the full Moon, becauſe the Moon when ſhe is at the full hath her greateſt communications of light from the Sun; ſo that, if at any time ſhe inſnare the heart of man with her beautiful countenance, 'tis moſt probably at the full. The Moon at full walks in the precious light of the Sun, and the Moon in her wane, walks from the precious light of the Sun. If I beheld the Moon

Walking in brightneſs.] Walking is the proper motion of a man; the Moon is ſaid to walk becauſe ſhe moves and keeps on with a conſtant pace. The Moon at full is ſaid to walk in brightneſs, becauſe then ſhe walks, as it were, in ſtate, or in a kind of triumph, ſhe then ſhews her faireſt face, to attract the eyes of all beholders, and to entice the hearts of the ſuperſtitious, to adore and worſhip her.

Some read the whole verſe disjointly, or without any copulative, in three parts, repeating the verb, If I beheld, in all three, If I beheld the Sun, If I beheld the Moon, If I beheld the precious thing, which doth encompaſs all, that is, The whole frame of Heaven with all its Hoſt, moving about us. As if Job had ſaid, I never beheld either or all of theſe goodly Creatures ſo with my eyes, that my heart hath been enticed to give them any veneration.

Si vidi ſolem, ſi vidi lunam, ſi vidi pretioſum ambiens i. e. totam illam cœlorum machinam &c. Merl.

Thus we ſee in what ſence Job diſclaimeth his beholding the Sun and Moon. Before I proceed to verſe 27, where the manner of Idolatrous Creature-worſhip is ſet forth, take a few notes from the words already opened.

First, Note, The nature of man is extreamly prone to Idolatry or falſe worſhip.

Job here diſclaims the doing of that which many did, and which he himſelf poſſibly had found motions in his own heart to do. If there were not a ſtrong natural inclination in man to this ſin, it were no great matter not to be vitiated with it. As it is ſaid concerning ſufferings, 'Tis no vertue to endure that which we do not feel; So 'tis ſcarce an act of Grace to abſtain from that, to which we have no temptation nor deſire. The ſtronger the ſettings of the heart and affections are towards any ſin, the more is the power of God manifeſted in us by our oppoſition of it, and victory over it. And therefore when Job ſaith, I did not behold the Sun when it ſhined, he intimates a preſſure upon the Spirit of man (poſſibly upon his own) to it, both by the temptation of Satan, and innate corruption. For not only hath the ignorant and blind world found the power of this temptation, but even the wiſeſt and moſt knowing among the Sons of men. Not only the vulgar Heathen, but the moſt learned among the Heathens, the ancient Philoſophers, men eminent in Moral vertues, and deep-ſighted in the ſecrets of nature, have been exceedingly inſnared with Idolatrous opinions and practices. Auguſtine chargeth the Platonicks with it. And Lactantius falls down-right upon them for their baſe compliance with the vulgar in Idol-worſhip. What doth it advantage us (ſaith he) to preach thus to the ignorant multitude, when we ſee even learned and prudent men, who know the vanity of thoſe ſuperſtitions, yet ſtiffly perſiſting in them, and doing that which they themſelves condemn (are not ſuch condemned of themſelves?) and in ſpecial he applyeth his ſpeech to Cicero the Orator; I ſee thee worſhipping earthly things, and ſuch as are made with hands. Thou knoweſt well enough that they are vain, and yet thou doeſt the ſame things, which they do, whom thou confeſſeſt to be very fools. Therefore what doth it avail thee, that thou ſeeſt the truth, which thou wilt neither defend nor follow; But ſurely thou feareſt the priſon of Socrates, and therefore dareſt not undertake the patronage of truth.

Yea this ſin hath ſpread further than the wiſeſt of the heathen; for even the people of God have been infected with and captivated by it. There is a ſeed of this worſt ſin in the hearts of good men. The Iſraelites made them a Golden calf (Exod. 32. 1.) of which Moſes ſaith (v. 31.) they have made them gods of Gold. And are there not many Chriſtians in name (the Papiſts eſpecially) groſly tainted with Idolatry? The Apoſtle numbers Idolatry among fleſhly luſts (Gal. 5. 20.) Now the luſts of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, Idolatry, &c. All fleſh hath been corrupted as much with this luſt of the fleſh, as with any other whatſoever. And I conceive falſe worſhip is therefore often in Scripture called Adultery and Whoredom, to ſhew, that the heart of man is as much heated and carried out to this ſpiritual pollution, as unto that which is corporal. The Adulterer doth not more burn with his impure fires, than the Idolater with his. Thus the Prophet deſcribes them (Iſa. 57. 3, 4, 5.) Draw neer hither, ye ſons of the Sorcerer, the ſeed of the Adulterer and the Whore; againſt whom do ye ſport your ſelves? againſt whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not children of tranſgreſſion, a ſeed of falſhood? inflaming your ſelves with Idols under every green tree, &c. See what a ſignificant word the Spirit of God uſeth. They inflamed themſelves with Idols, which were worthy of nothing but a flame, or to be caſt into the fire and burnt to aſhes. Their hearts took fire like dry trees, yea like tinder, under the green trees where they adored their Idols. And poſſibly, they are ſaid to inflame themſelves with their Idols, becauſe they are uſually given up to bodily pollutions, who thus pollute their ſouls. Idolatry is often puniſhed by Adultery. And becauſe ſome may wonder why men ſhould be ſo forward to and inflamed with Idol-worſhip; I will give you two reaſons why.

Firſt, Becauſe 'tis a worſhip of our own invention; men are moſt forward to that ſervice of God which is of man's finding out, and ſetting up. 'Tis ſaid (1 Kings 12. 33.) that Jeroboam's idolatrous feaſt to the Calves was ſet up even in the moneth which he had deviſed in his own heart. That worſhip was of his own inſtitution, and ſo was the time of it. And how zealous are many in obſerving days which men have appointed, and wherein they exerciſe a devotion of their own deviſing! Hence that Apoſtolical Caution or Admonition (Col. 2. 18.) Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worſhipping of Angels, intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen. Which things (ſaith he, v. 23.) have indeed a ſhew of wiſdom in will-worſhip and humility, and neglecting of the body, not in any honour to the ſatiſfying of the fleſh. All duties of worſhip and humility ought to be voluntary, as voluntary is oppoſed to conſtrained, but they muſt not be voluntary as voluntary is oppoſed to inſtituted or appointed. God doth no more approve of that worſhip which we give him according to our will, than he doth our neglect of that which is according to his own will, or which himſelf hath willed. But man likes it better to worſhip a God of his own making, than the God that made him. And he likes any way of worſhipping God which is of his own framing, more than that which is of God's appointing. In this, above all things, the heart of man is deceitful and deſperately wicked, ſeeing while it ſeems very zealous to honour God, it hath no zeal to do it in any way but that which reflects higheſt diſhonour upon him.

Secondly, Men are naturally taken with Idolatry and falſe worſhip, becauſe 'tis ſo external and courts, yea feaſts their ſenſes with glittering and ſpecious forms. Falſe worſhip is chiefly ſpent in that which profiteth not (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks 1 Tim. 4. 8.) though it pleaſeth much, a meer bodily exerciſe. Whereas the ſtreſs of true worſhip lies upon the inner man. (Joh. 4. 24.) God is a Spirit and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth. A natural man loves not that which is ſpiritual; at moſt he likes only the form and outſide of it. He loves to worſhip what may be ſeen, rather than what is to be believed. As he walketh by ſight not by faith, ſo he alſo worſhippeth. His converſation and his devotion are both of the ſame ſtrein and temper.

Secondly, Obſerve, Idolatry is the giving of divine honour to the Creature.

Thus the Apoſtle deſcribes the Idolatrous Gentiles (Rom. 1. 23.) Who changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like unto corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſts and creeping things. Man was at firſt created in the image of God after his likeneſs (Gen. 1. 26.) But woe unto thoſe who change the glory (that is, the inviſibility, ſimplicity, eternity, and incomprehenſibility) of God into an image or the likeneſs of man; yet Idolaters do worſe and go lower than this, They change the glory of God into the likeneſs of a beaſt; The Iſraelites did ſo (Pſal. 106. 20.) They changed their Glory (that is, God who indeed was and ſhould have been by them accounted their glory) into the likeneſs of an Oxe that eateth Graſs. The Idolater changes the glory of the living the ever-living God into the likeneſs of liveleſs things, or into things which are themſelves as liveleſs, as an Image or likeneſs is, The Sun and Moon.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Idolatry is a very great ſin.

The firſt Commandment forbids it (Exod. 20. 2, 3.) Thou ſhalt have none other gods but me; That is, Thou ſhalt not ſet up a falſe God to worſhip; nor ſhalt thou ſet up a falſe worſhip of the true God, that's forbidden in the ſecond Commandment; Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven image. As we are to worſhip none but God, ſo God will not indure to be worſhipped in any other way or by any other means than himſelf is pleaſed to appoint. Idolaters poſſibly think themſelves full of zeal for God while they deviſe a worſhip for God, yet indeed they are haters of God, and ſo they are called in the ſame law, (v. 5.) For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me. We can ſhew no love to God but in keeping his Commandments; therefore they that ſet up falſe gods to worſhip, or worſhip the true God in a falſe manner, are haters of God, ſeeing while they pretend to worſhip God, they diſhonour him by breaking his Commandments. (Iſa. 42. 8.) My glory will I not give to another, neither my praiſe to graven images. It is the Glory of God that he is ſo free in giving, yet he will not give away his glory, neither to any thing of our making by art, ſuch are graven Images, nor to any thing of his own making in nature, ſuch are the Sun and Moon. The glory of God is ſuch a flower of his Crown, as God will not part with in the leaſt to any Creature. Idolatry is the higheſt ſacriledg, It ſteals that from God which all men do or ought to dedicate unto him, the Glory of his Being.

Fourthly, Obſerve, The Sun and Moon have been Idoliz'd or Idolatrouſly adored and worſhipped as gods by many Nations.

That the old Gentiles worſhipped thoſe two great luminaries the Sun and Moon, is as clear from Antiquity as the ſhining of the Sun at noon, or of the Moon at full. Macrobius teſtifieth that the Sun was accounted and adored as a God under the name of Adonis by the Aſſyrians and Phenicians. The ſame Author tells us, that the Egyptians worſhipped the Sun under the name of Oſiris, whom they repreſented in the form of an Eye, expreſſed upon a regal Scepter, thereby ſignifying the ruling and all-ſeeing power of the Sun, which is called by Antiquity, The eye of the world. Another of the Ancients ſaith, that the Egyptians beholding and admiring the beautiful furniture and array of the world, concluded that there were two Gods, and thoſe Eternal, The Sun and the Moon, The former of the two they called Oſiris, the latter Iſis. The ſame Author reports again, That the Perſians worſhipped the Sun, and the the Grecians the Moon. Pliny alſo informs us, that the Egyptian Kings conſecrated certain Obelisks, figured with the rayes of the Sun, and inſcribed with Letters or Mottoes of their own deviſing in Honour of the Sun. And that the Egyptians worſhipped the Sun, we have a greater witneſs than any of theſe, even the holy Scriptures or Word of God. (Iſa. 19. 18.) In that day ſhall five Cities in the land of Egypt ſpeak the language of Canaan, and ſwear to the Lord of hoſts (that is, they ſhall be converted to the knowledg and pure worſhip of the true God) and one ſhall be called the City of deſtruction; So we tranſlate the text, and put in the Margin; Or of Heres or of the Sun, As if he had ſaid, even that Idolatrous City which was dedicated to the Sun, or where the Sun was eſpecially worſhipped, ſhall be converted. Again, the Prophet Jeremie (Chap. 43.) fore-telling the deſtruction of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar and his Babylonians, concludes thus (v. 13.) He ſhall break alſo the images of Bethſhemeſh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houſes of the gods of the Egyptians ſhall he burn with fire. Bethſhemeſh (as our Margin hath it) ſignifieth, The Houſe of the Sun; which was alſo called by the Grecians Heliopolis, the City of the Sun. And as the Sun was worſhipped in thoſe remoter Nations, ſo alſo nearer home by our Anceſtors before the light of the Goſpel ſhined to them. The learned Verſtegan in his deſcription of the manners and cuſtoms of the old pagan Saxons, ſaith, Unto the day dedicated to the eſpecial Adoration of the Idol of the Sun, They gave the name of Sunday, as much as to ſay, The Suns day, or the day of the Sun. The next to this according to the courſe of the days of the week, was the Idol of the Moon, from whence our ſecond day of the week yet retains the name of Monday, or Moons-day. And (by the way) I conceive it a needful piece of reformation in theſe times to expreſs the days of the week by ſome other names, than by thoſe (which are in common uſe among us) borrowed from the practices of groſſeſt Idolaters.

And as the old Heathen Gentiles were deeply infected with this kind of Idolatry; ſo the Jews (who were the peculiar people of God) did not forbear to imitate them in it (Judg. 2. 13.) They forſook the Lord, and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth. Baal ſignifieth Lord, or Maſter, and it was a common name applyed to Idol Gods, but eminently to the Sun; This was the God of the Zidonians (1 Kings 16. 31.) As alſo was Aſhtaroth (1 Kings 11.5, 33.) This Aſhtaroth was the ſame which the Greeks worſhipped under the Title of Diana, or the Moon; And how famous an Idol that was, read (Acts 19. 27.) which is ſuppoſed to be meant by The Queen of heaven (Jer. 7. 18. Jer. 44. 17, 25.) The horrible Apoſtacy and defection of the Jews to this abominable worſhip is often and often reproved by the Prophets: And their extream zeal about it is expreſſed by ſuch a Rhetorical accumulation of words, as we ſcarce find the like all the Bible over (Jer. 8.) where the Lord threatneth all degrees of men in the Jewiſh Nation from the King to the common people, that their enemies ſhould pull their bones out of their Graves; And ſaith he (v. 2.) They ſhall ſpread them before the Sun, and the Moon, and all the hoſt of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have ſerved, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have ſought, and whom they have worſhipped. And whereas the Church ſaith (Cant. 1. 6.) Look not upon me becauſe I am black, becauſe the Sun hath looked upon me (which is generally expounded of the blackneſs of the Church by reaſon of perſecution) The Chaldee Paraphraſe gives this ſence of it; The Congregation of Iſrael ſaid before the Heathen, do not deſpiſe me, becauſe I am blacker than you, having according to your cuſtoms, worſhipped the Sun and Moon. Falſe Prophets have been the cauſe that the hot diſpleaſure of God hath fallen upon me; they taught me to ſerve your Idols, and walk in your ways; I beholding the Sun have adored it, and am become black. I find one of the Jewiſh Rabbins joyning with this interpretation, and thus gloſſing the Churches ſad complaint; I am black, while I worſhip creatures (forgetting the Creator) and this viſible Sun for the Sun of righteouſneſs.

Denigrata ſum dum creaturas adoro, (omiſſo creatore) & ſolem hunc aſpectabilem adoro pro ſole Juſtitiæ. Rab. Sol.

Thus we ſee how the very Jews were mad upon the worſhip of the Sun and Moon, though they were not only ſhewed the vanity of ſuch worſhip, but warned not to do it, and threatned in caſe they ſhould do it. (Deut. 4. 15, 19.) Take ye therefore good heed unto your ſelves (for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb out of the midſt of the fire) leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make you a graven Image, the ſimilitude of any figure, the likeneſs of male or female, &c. And having caution'd them againſt making the figure of any living thing, whether on the earth, or in the air and waters, he proceeds to give them caution againſt the Adoration of the hoſt of heaven. (v. 19.) And leſt thou lift up thine eyes to heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, which the Lord thy God hath divided (or imparted) to all Nations under heaven. As if he had ſaid, Will you ſerve the Sun and Moon in ſtead of God, when as God hath made them to ſerve you and all Nations? What is the Sun? your ſervant. What is the Moon? your ſervant. Wherefore do the Sun and Moon ſhine but to give you light, and to influence the earth, that it may be fruitful, and bring forth what is neceſſary both for your uſe and delight?

Nor doth it ſeem to be without the ſpecial direction of the moſt wiſe God, That the Sun which many have doted upon and worſhipped as a God, ſhould be expreſſed in the Hebrew language by the word Shemeſh, a ſervant, whoſe root is Shamaſh, which ſignifieth to ſerve; as if the Lord would imply in the very name of the Sun, how improper it is for any in the world to worſhip that as a god, which God hath made a ſervant to all men in the world, holding as it were the Candle to them in all the labours of the day. The Creatures how high or noble ſoever were made for man's ſervice, and ſhall man at once both degrade himſelf and diſhonour God by ſerving and worſhipping the creatures in the place of God, or as if they were Gods? O Take heed, that ye do not this great evil; which is indeed two great evils (Jer. 2. 13.) A forſaking of the fountain of living waters, and a digging to your ſelves Ciſterns, broken Ciſterns which can hold no water. Hence that ſevere threatning (Deut. 17. 3, 4.) If there be found among you man or woman, &c. that hath gone and ſerved other gods and worſhipped them, either the Sun or Moon, or any of the hoſt of heaven which I have not commanded, &c. Then (v. 5.) Thou ſhalt bring forth that man or that woman (which hath committed that wicked thing) unto thy gates, and ſhalt ſtone them with ſtones till they die. And when the Magiſtrate did not puniſh this ſin, God himſelf (in due time) did. (2 Kings 17. 16, 17, 18. 2 Kings 21. 3. Jer. 7. 18, 19, 20. Ezek. 8. 16, 17, 18.)

If any queſtion what ſhould move either Jew or Gentile to worſhip the Sun, Moon and Stars; I anſwer, Firſt, the ſtupendious greatneſs, or vaſtneſs rather, of thoſe heavenly bodies; Secondly, the exact order in which they move and have moved (in their natural courſe) from the beginning until now; Thirdly, the unwearied conſtancy of their motion; Fourthly, the incredible ſwiftneſs of their motion; Fifthly, their beauty and brightneſs; Whence David ſpeaking of the heavens, ſaith (Pſal. 19. 5.) In them hath he ſet a Tabernacle for the Sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his Chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a race. The Sun comes forth like a Bridegroom, as if he would make all the world in love with him, and therefore no great wonder if many are. Sixthly, their power, operations, and influences, whence; Seventhly, their beneficialneſs and uſefulneſs to the world, eſpecially to mankind (there's no living without them) may with all the former conſiderations eaſily entice worldly men to worſhip them. Yea ſome were perſwaded that there was a kind of divinity in them; at leaſt that God would never have endowed them with ſuch admirable beauty, vertue, and efficacy, but that he intended ſome honour and reſpect ſhould be done to them by the ſons of men. Yea ſome of the Stoical Philoſophers were of opinion, that thoſe heavenly bodies were endued with life, and that their motion was rational and voluntary. He that will may read Lactantius both reporting and refuting the vanity of theſe imaginations concerning the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and of that Divine worſhip which thereupon was beſtowed upon them.

Lactantius libr. 2. de Origine erroris, cap. 5.

And ſurely this is one and not the leaſt part of that vanity to which the creature is made ſubject by reaſon of ſin (Rom. 8. 20.) That vanity conſiſts chiefly (I conceive) in two things; Firſt, when the creature is afflicted by the rigour and cruelty of men, or abuſed to ſerve their luſts, their pride, their wantonneſs and luxury; This is the vanity to which the creature is made ſubject in defect, or by ſetting it lower than it ought to be. Secondly, the creature is made ſubject to vanity in exceſs, or by ſetting it too high, and by aſcribing that honour to it, which is alone due to God the Creator. Thus the Papiſts ſubject the Bleſſed Virgin Mary to vanity, as alſo other Saints, and the Angels, when they pray to them and uſe them as Mediators of interceſſion unto God. And when man gives any creature the Sun or Moon divine Adoration, or adoreth God by them, he abuſeth them to vanity.

Here it may be queſtioned, that for as much as Job in this place purgeth himſelf from the ſuſpition and imputation of all falſe worſhip, why doth he inſtance onely in his not-worſhipping the Sun and Moon? There having been almoſt innumerable Idols or falſe gods worſhipped in the world, why doth he not diſclaim the worſhip of all thoſe?

I anſwer, Becauſe the Sun and Moon with the hoſt of heaven, have the greateſt power to attract the heart into an admiration and over-eſtimation of them. So that when Job ſaith he did not worſhip the Sun and Moon, it is a diſclaimer of all Idolatrous worſhip. He that is not overcome by that which hath the greateſt power to draw him from the living and true God to falſe worſhip, declares himſelf untoucht of all falſe or Idolatrous worſhip. There's no danger that he will worſhip any inferior creature, who refrains the worſhip of thoſe nobler creatures the Sun and Moon.

Further, the worſhip of images, which are the work of mens hands, was of much a latter date than the worſhip of the Sun. How Image-worſhip crept into the world, we find well reported in that Apocryphal book of Wiſdom (Chap. 14. v. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. 20.) When a father mourned grievouſly for his Son that was taken away ſuddenly, he made an image for him that was once dead, whom now he worſhipped as a god, and ordained to his ſervants ceremonies and ſacrifices, &c. One of the Ancients gives an example, which may make a good Commentary upon that text of Wiſdom. There was (ſaith he) one Syrophanes an Egyptian by birth, and in ſubſtance very rich, who begat a Son, whom he paſſionately loved and doated on, intending to make him heir of his vaſt eſtate. But death quickly ſnatcht him away and leſt his Father overwhelm'd with ſorrow, becauſe having ſo great an inheritance, he had none to inherit it; and the only eaſe he could give his troubled mind, was to enjoy him in a ſhadow, whom he had loſt as to the ſubſtance; and therefore he ſets up the ſtatue or image of his Son in his houſe, and ſo ſeeking a remedy of his grief, he found a ſeminary yea a reſurrection of it; his ſorrow being renewed every day by that ſight. Now (ſaith my Author) all the family obſerving how their Lord was affected with this ſtatue of his Son, began to make garlands for it, and put ornaments upon it, to pleaſe and flatter the humour of their Maſter, yea ſometimes a ſervant having committed a fault would run to this image as to a Sanctuary to avoid the fury of his Maſter, and there to ask his pardon. Thus the worſhip of images crept into the world long after the worſhip of the Sun, and therefore Job having quit himſelf from that, might well think he had ſufficiently acquitted himſelf from all the reſt.

Triſtitiæ remedium quærens ſeminarium potius doloris invenit neſciensquod ſola ſit medicina miſeriarum oblivio. Fecerat enim ille unde luctus reſurrectionem aſſidueacquireret, non in quo luctus ſolatium inveniret. Fulg. lib. 1. Mythol.

Fifthly, Whereas Job ſaith, If I beheld the Sun, &c.

Obſerve, We may quickly over-act our ſences upon the Creature.

'Tis dangerous to look much, and long upon that which may inſnare us; Solomon gives warning (Prov. 23. 31.) Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it gives its colour in the cup. As if he had ſaid, Wink and drink. Not that it is unlawful to look upon the wine in the Cup, but there is a ſnare, a danger in it; we may be catcht with the beauty of it; and if we are ſo, it will bite like a Serpent. Looking curiouſly invites to drinking inordinately. Therefore as Solomon ſaith, Look not on the wine; ſo Job durſt not look upon the Sun; he beheld not the Sun when it ſhined, nor the Moon walking in brightneſs. As we muſt not at all look upon the creature as the end of our actions, or as aiming meerly at their attainment and enjoyment in what we do; So we ſhould not make them over-much our object, nor feed our ſences too liberally upon them.

Hence Sixthly, Note, The Eye is both a provocation and an inlet to Idolatry as well as to Adultery.

In the firſt verſe of this Chapter Job intimates that the Eye is an inlet to Adultery, and here that it is an inlet to Idolatry: That Caution given by Moſes expreſſeth it fully (Deut. 4. 15, 16, 19.) Take ye therefore good heed unto your ſelves (for ye ſaw no manner of ſimilitude on the day that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb out of the midſt of the fire) leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make you a graven image, &c. And leſt thou lift up thine eyes to heaven; and when thou ſeeſt the Sun and the Moon and the Stars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldeſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, &c. While the Lord forbids them the worſhip of graven images the work of man's hand, he alſo forbids them to worſhip the Sun, Moon, and Stars, the work of his hands, and for prevention of all ſuch abominable worſhip, he admoniſheth them not to lift up their eyes to heaven (in the ſence formerly opened) leſt when they behold the Sun, Moon, and the Stars, they ſhould be driven to worſhip them, that is, leſt their minds ſhould be inſnared by the ſight of their eyes, and driven by ſome ſecret impulſe upon their hearts to commit that groſs Idolatry; for as there is a ſecret impulſe upon the ſoul of a godly man to the doing of good; as Paul ſaith (2 Cor. 5. 14.) The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us; that is, we are preſt in Spirit to lay out our ſelves to the utmoſt for Chriſt, who laid down his life for us; So there is a ſecret impulſe upon the ſoul of a natural man to evil, and that works moſt ſtrongly when 'tis ſet a work from without, eſpecially by the ſight of the eye. Behold not the Sun and Moon, &c. too intently, ſaith Moſes, leſt thou be driven to worſhip them; thou haſt not the Command of thy ſelf, therefore do not unneceſſarily or willingly venture upon the occaſions of that ſin, leſt thou be carried to it (upon the matter) whether thou wilt or no. Beware of heart-inticing objects.

Seventhly, If we conſider how induſtriouſly Job acquits himſelf from this practice, the worſhipping of the Sun and Moon, as a great wickedneſs, though very commonly and very anciently practiſed;

We may note from it, Antiquity and Univerſality will not bear us out in Errour, or in Idolatrous worſhip.

It is no excuſe to us, when we do evil, to ſay many do it, or our fore-fathers did it. The worſhip of the Sun and Moon had ſpread it ſelf almoſt over the face of the whole earth, and was become an Epidemical infection, yet Job durſt not bear himſelf upon that; A godly man dares not follow a multitude to do evil; he will not take up ſuperſtitious cuſtoms upon truſt, either becauſe they have been long uſed, or are uſed univerſally. Example is no plea againſt a rule, nor antiquity againſt truth. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, &c.

Verſ. 27. And my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand.

Job in the former verſe diſclaimed Idolatrous worſhip, as to the object of it; In this he denies it as to the manner of it; and that either inward or outward.

If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed; there he denies Internal adoration; or if my mouth hath kiſſed my hand; there he denies External adoration, both heart and hand were free.

If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed.] The heart is here put for the whole inner man; There is a threefold reading of theſe words; Some thus; If my heart hath rejoyced in ſecret. Truly (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 11. 7.) the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun; yet we may quickly take too much pleaſure in ſeeing it. And according to this tranſlation Job was very moderate in taking that pleaſure; If my heart (ſaith he) hath rejoyced in ſecret. Joy is Internal worſhip, to rejoyce in God is to worſhip him in ſpirit, and 'tis the moſt ſpiritual part of true worſhip. To rejoyce in the Creature, is to worſhip it, and becauſe it is the moſt ſpiritual, therefore 'tis the worſt part of falſe worſhip. Job diſclaimed joy in reference to wealth at the 25 verſe;

Si lætatum eſt in abſcondito cor meum. Vulg.

If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great. And here, according to this reading he diſclaims it in reference to Idols. And hence I conceive.

Symmachus.

Secondly, One of the Greek tranſlations hath it, If my heart hath been enlarged, or opened (that is, with joy, that's heart-enlargement) when I ſaw the Sun ſhine, and the Moon walking in brightneſs. The Hebrew word is rendered to Enlarge. (Gen. 9. 27.) God ſhall Enlarge Japheth, and he ſhall dwell in the Tents of Shem; that is, God ſhall convert the Gentiles to the true worſhip of his Name, they ſhall be brought into the Tents of Shem, that is, into the true Church, and for that end he will enlarge their hearts. They ſhall not have a narrow heart, as now they have, while they worſhip poor Creatures, ſtocks and ſtones, Sun and Moon, but they ſhall have a heart widened and truly greatned to worſhip the true the great God. Thus Job might ſay, If my heart hath been Enlarged at the ſight of the Sun, &c. When a pleaſing object is preſented to the eye, the heart opens to receive it, as when an unpleaſing object is preſented, the heart locks or ſhuts it ſelf againſt it. Both theſe are good readings, If my heart hath rejoyced, or if my heart hath opened and been enlarged when I beheld the Sun.

But the moſt common and moſt clear reading is, If my heart hath been ſecretly Enticed, or tempted with the fair beauty of the Sun and Moon; if I have been ſeduced with a vain or eaſie Credulity, to put the Sun or Moon in the place of God, and to give them reverence, this were a groſs iniquity. As children are enticed with a nut, or an apple, with a bable or a toy, ſo are ſuperſtitious perſons. What are Idols but toys and bables, fitter by far for children to play with, then for men to worſhip? nor are any children (upon a true account) ſo childiſh and toyiſh as the moſt aged and ſerious Idolaters; And indeed the more ſerious any are at it, the more childiſh they are at it. Job proteſts againſt all ſuch levity, If my heart hath been Enticed, if I have been taken with the goodly appearances, with the ſhining and glittering outſide of theſe Excellent Creatures, Sun and Moon, then, &c. If my heart hath been Enticed

In ſecret.] The heart of man, even of every man is a ſecret, 'tis a peculiar to God alone, and therefore it might ſeem enough to have ſaid, If my heart hath been Enticed, but Job adds, If my heart hath been Enticed in ſecret, that is, if my heart hath been enticed to worſhip the Sun or Moon ſecretly. God is to be worſhipped not only publiquely but ſecretly. So the words ſtand in oppoſition to open or profeſt Idolatry. There is a two-fold ſecrecy of worſhip, whether true or falſe.

Firſt, When it is acted wholly in the heart; as there is adultery in the heart, and theſt in the heart, ſo there is Idolatry in the heart, which never appears outwardly at all; that's one way of ſecret worſhip, when we worſhip in the heart only.

Secondly, Worſhip performed by an outward voyce or geſture, may yet be in ſecret too, that is, out of the ſight and view of others, in a private place or Cloſet; as Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 6. 6.) When thou prayeſt enter into thy Cloſet, and when thou haſt ſhut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in ſecret, &c. There is a ſecretneſs of place as well as of ſpirit in worſhip, God ſeeth ſecret heart-worſhip (which we may give him every where) & he ſeeth ſecret place-worſhip which the eye of man ſeeth not. The Lord calls Ezekiel (Chap. 8. 7, 8.) to behold the Idolatry of that people committed in this kind of ſecrecy, they were not only Idolaters in the ſecret of their hearts (or hearty Idolaters) but in ſecret places. And he brought me to the door of the Court, and when I looked behold a door in the wall; Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall, and when I had digged, behold a door (they were immur'd, they were ſhut up) and he ſaid unto me, go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here; So I went in and ſaw, &c. Then ſaid he unto me (Ver. 12.) Son of man, haſt thou ſeen what the Ancients of the houſe of Iſrael do in the dark? Every man in the Chambers of his Imagery, for they ſay, the Lord ſeeth us not. When Job ſaith, If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed; we may take it both ways. If I have been enticed to Idolatrous ſecret heart-worſhip, or ſecret place-worſhip, where there was none to ſee me, &c.

Hence Obſerve; Firſt, Idolatry begins at the heart.

As Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 15. 19.) Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murthers, adulteries, blaſphemies (which are the higheſt diſhonours put upon the true God) ſo I may ſay Idolatries (which are honours put upon falſe Gods) proceed out of the heart alſo. Thus the Law ſpake to the Jews (Deut. 11. 16.) Take heed to your ſelves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aſide, and ſerve other gods, and worſhip them. Though the occaſions of ſin may be from without, or before us, yet the ſource and original of it is in the heart. When the Prophet Iſaiah had at large deſcribed the folly and madneſs of Idolaters in the 44. Chapter, from the 9. Verſe incluſively to the 20. Verſe, he concludes, He feedeth of aſhes, a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his Soul, nor ſay, is there not a lie in my right hand? Idols give a great provocation to the eye, as was ſhewed before, but they can do us no hurt till the heart be catcht and infected by them.

Secondly, Obſerve, Man is not forced, but cozened, enticed, and flattered into ſinful, eſpecially into Idolatrous wayes.

The Apoſtle James ſaith (Chap. 1. 14.) Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed. 'Tis luſt in the heart which draws away both eye and knee and hand to joyn with the temptation. A godly man is not forced but perſwaded and enticed to that which is good (ſo we expreſs it in the Margin of Gen. 9. 27.) God ſhall perſwade Japheth to dwell in the Tents of Shem; he ſhall not thruſt him in by force, nor compel him by Club-law (as we ſay) but his heart being toucht, as it were, with that bleſſed Loadſtone of divine love, ſhall freely receive the faith of the Goſpel, and follow Chriſt. Thus a wicked man is not driven (though the Devil would be a Driver and they muſt needs run whom the Devil drives) but drawn to ſin by the prevailing enticements of that luſt which dwelleth in his heart, and hath got the hand of him.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, If my heart hath been ſecretly enticed;

Obſerve, The moſt ſecret acts of ſin are both obvious to and odious in the ſight of God.

He ſeeth in ſecret, and cannot but hate (ſuch is his Holineſs) the ſin which he ſeeth; though evil be done out of the Eye of all the world, yet it is naked and manifeſt in his ſight, with whom we have to do. The cloſeſt heart-ſin is as clear to God as that which is written in the forehead, and 'tis as hateful always, ſometimes more; For though open ſins as to the danger of Infecting others are worſe then ſecret ſins, yet if we conſider the ſpirit of the ſinner, ſecret ſins are the worſt. How greatly do they provoke God who while they ſin againſt him, would alſo impoſe upon him; ſo thoſe Idolaters in ſecret hoped they ſhould (Ezek. 8. 12.) when they ſaid, God ſhall not ſee it, he hath forſaken the earth: If we can but keep our ſelves from the Eye of man (ſaid they) we need not fear the Eye of God, we can eaſily put a blind upon him. As he that hides his ſin by not confeſſing it, ſo he that thinks it hidden while he is committing it, ſhall not proſper. A good deed the more ſecret it is, the better it is in the ſight of God; And an evil deed the more ſecret it is, the worſe it is in the ſight of God.

Fourthly, In that Job adds in the next verſe (ſuppoſing his ſin were ſecret) it were an Iniquity to be puniſhed;

Note, Secret ſins ſhall not go unpuniſhed.

A human Judg can puniſh no ſin but what is proved by witneſs. Heart-iniquities fall not under any human ſentence. But heart-ſins the moſt hidden ſins ſhall not eſcape a divine ſentence. As the moſt ſecret good works done by man to man, and the moſt ſecret holy worſhip of God, ſhall receive a reward from God (Matth. 6. 46.) When thou doſt alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth; that thine alms may be in ſecret: And thy Father which ſeeth in ſecret, himſelf ſhall reward thee openly. And when thou prayeſt enter into thy Cloſet and ſhut thy door, &c.

And thy Father that ſeeth in ſecret, he ſhall reward thee openly. Now, I ſay, as good, ſo evil workers in ſecret ſhall be rewarded (each in their kind) openly by God who ſeeth in ſecret.

Fifthly, Obſerve, The heart is ſpecially to be looked to in worſhip.

As we are not accepted by God in true worſhip, though we draw neer to him with our lips, if our hearts are far from him; Iſa. 29. 13. (many give outward worſhip to God, but there's no heart in it) ſo they are abominable in the ſight of God who draw neer to Idols with their hearts in falſe worſhip, though their lips and knees be far from them. I grant, God will not bear it if we give ſo much as corporal reverence to Idols (as Naaman the Aſſyrian ſeemed to deſire a diſpenſation to do in the houſe of Rimmon, 2 Kings 5. 18.) though we profeſs to to reſerve our hearts to him; But he will leſs bear it, if we give our hearts to Idols, though we refrain all corporal reverence. Outward acts alone or without the heart in falſe worſhip are abominable in the ſight of God, yet inward acts though alone or without the bodily, are much more abominable. When we worſhip God in ſecret places, and in the ſecret of our heart we give him the trueſt acknowledgment of his Godhead. God is moſt honoured by Congregational or publick worſhip, but he is moſt pleaſed with private worſhip, with private family-worſhip, and private Cloſet-worſhip, yet with none of theſe without heart-worſhip which is the moſt private worſhip of all. When we at once approve and pour out our hearts in ſecret, this is pure worſhip indeed. And though we act no Idolatrous worſhip openly, yet if our heart be in it, his Soul abhors us. Outward falſe worſhip diſhonours God moſt, but inward falſe worſhip diſpleaſeth him moſt. Job was careful to worſhip God with his heart both ſecretly and openly; and he was as careful not to give any ſecret, or heart-worſhip to Idols, as he was to avoid their open worſhip; If my heart hath been ſecretly Enticed

And my mouth hath kiſſed my hand.

In theſe words Job denies the giving of any outward worſhip to the Sun and Moon; As if he had ſaid, I have been ſo far from giving them my heart, that I have not ſo much as given them my hand, or as ſome explain it, with reference to the former part of the verſe, I never had any inward heart-motion, or it was never ſo much as in my thoughts to perform any outward act of adoration to the Sun and Moon. More particularly;

There is a three-fold Interpretation of this Clauſe; Mr. Broughton renders the whole verſe in connexion with the former; If I admired the Sun when it ſhined; and the Moon walking precious; That my heart was cloſely deceived; no, my hand kiſſed my mouth; He gives his ſence in this ſhort gloſs upon it, I ſtopped all Idolatrous ſpeech of Star-worſhip; for which Babel bred confuſion. As if he had ſaid, I have not ſo much as entertained diſpute or changed a word about falſe worſhip. One of the Rabbins taketh the Text in the ſame ſence, as if Job had cloſed up his mouth with his hand againſt all ſuch diſcourſes.

Ben Peritſel.

Secondly, Others following our tranſlation give the ſence thus; If my hand hath kiſſed my mouth, that is, if I have been wrapped up or amus'd in a ſilent wonder when I beheld the Sun and Moon. The putting of the hand to the mouth hath been uſed as an Emblem of ſilence; and ſome ſilence is a kind of reverence or worſhip. According to this interpretation, Job ſeems to ſay, I have not been ſtruck ſilent with any admiration of the ſhining Sun or of the Moon walking in brightneſs.

Paræmiacum illud eſt, Deum coli ſilentio. Sanct.

Thirdly, rather, as our reading imports, the words are a denial of any outward act of Idolatrous worſhip; and ſo the phraſe is uſed both in Scripture, and among ancient Authors. There is a two-fold kiſſing; Firſt, in way of ſalutation among friends and familiars; Secondly, in a way of homage and ſubmiſſion, or at leaſt in a way of honour and reſpect towards ſuperiors. (Gen. 41. 40.) Pharaoh ſaith to Joſeph, Thou ſhalt be over my houſe, and according to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled, or (as we put in the Margin) be armed or kiſs; that is, they ſhall ſubmit to thy order and commands. Such was the kiſs which Samuel gave Saul when he had anointed him King (1 Sam. 10. 1.) Then Samuel took a vial of Oyl, and poured it upon his head, and kiſſed him, and ſaid, is it not becauſe the Lord hath anointed thee to be Captain over his Inheritance? As if he had ſaid, I, by the Lords appointment, have anointed thee King, and in token of my ſubjection to thee as my Soveraign Lord, I have kiſſed thee. So (Pro. 24. 26.) Every man ſhall kiſs his lips that giveth a right anſwer; that is, every man ſhall love, honour, and reſpect him. And to ſhew that kiſſing implieth ſubjection to Kings and Princes, the Kings and Princes of the earth are commanded to kiſs the Son (Pſal. 2. 7.) with what kiſs? not only with a kiſs of love and affection, but with a kiſs of homage and ſubjection; the Kings of the Earth to whom all do homage, even they muſt do homage to Chriſt the King of Kings. This kiſſing of the Son is oppoſed to the breaking of his bands, and caſting away his Cords from them in the beginning of the Pſalm: and as this kiſſing doth note homage, reverence, and reſpect in general; ſo eſpecially it notes the reverence or worſhip given to Idols (1 Kings 19. 18.) when the Prophet Elijah complained that there were no pure worſhippers left, the Lord anſwered; Yet I have left me ſeven thouſand in Iſrael, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kiſſed him. Baal as I ſhewed upon the former verſe was the Sun. So (Hoſ. 13. 2.) And now they ſin more and more, and have made them molten Images of their ſilver, and Idols according to their own underſtanding, all of it the work of the Craftſmen: they ſay of them let the men that ſacrifice kiſs the Calves (that is, worſhip them) in Dan and in Bethel.

Pleriq; veſtrum affectione aliquando cœleſtia adorandi ad ſolis ortum labia vibratis. Tertul. Apol. cap. 16.

Beſides theſe Scripture evidences; ſeveral of the Ancient both Fathers and Hiſtorians make mention of this worſhip-geſture. That is moſt remarkable which Minutius Fœlix reports of Cæcilius, who looking upon the Image of Serapis (ſignifying the Sun) according to the uſe of the ſuperſtitious vulgar, he put his hand to his lips and kiſſed it. And Tertullian directing his ſpeech to the Heathen, tells them, Moſt of you, out of a devotion to the heavenly bodies, uſe at the riſing of the Sun to greet it with a kiſs. And becauſe they were not able to reach the Sun and Moon in the firmament, therefore they uſed to lift up their hands to them, and then put them to their mouths in token of Adoration, or that they received their breath and life from them; and ſometimes they did not kiſs their hand at all, but only drawing their lips into the form of a kiſs bowed themſelves. But when they adored artificial Idols or Images of any matter made with hands, then they uſed to kiſs the Image it ſelf, if it ſtood within reach. Cicero in one of his Orations tells us how The Brazen Statue of Hercules was had in ſo much veneration among the Agrigentines, (a people inhabiting a City ſo called in Sicily,) that the opening of its mouth and chin, were much worn by their frequent kiſſing of it when they came to worſhip. From all theſe teſtimonies it appears that the old heathen nations were wont either to kiſs the Idol it ſelf which they Adored, or as a ſymbol and token of adoration to kiſs their hands and make obeyſance towards it. And doubtleſs Job had either ſeen or been informed of the like cuſtom in thoſe elder times, and therefore by way of denyal ſaid, If my mouth hath kiſſed my hand.

We may give reverence to men, but we muſt not adore them, how great ſoever; how much leſs may we adore ſenceleſs things, whether natural or artificial. As we muſt not give them our hearts, ſo not our hands, not our mouths. God requires the heart eſpecially in worſhip; but he muſt have our bodies alſo. When the Apoſtle calls to the worſhip of God, he expreſſeth it by the body (Rom. 12. 1.) I beſeech you brethren by the mercies of God, preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice, or (as ſome render it) your ſervice according to the word. As if he had ſaid, If you would worſhip according to the word, preſent your bodies, that is, your whole man, ſoul and body to God. Now where the body only is expreſt as the ſubject of worſhip, it implies at leaſt that it muſt not be left out in holy worſhip, nor allowed to any falſe or Idolatrous worſhip. There is a generation who ſay they ſerve God with their ſpirits, and then what though they be at Idolatrous worſhip with their bodies, and bow their knees to Baal? what though their hand kiſs their mouth, or they do any outward act according to the cuſtom of the place where they are? ſo their hearts be with God; but God will have the hand as well as the heart, he will have the body as well as the ſoul dedicated to him. As a prophane wretch once ſaid, I have ſworn with my tongue, but I have reſerved my heart unſworn. So ſome go to falſe worſhip with their bodies, and ſay they will keep their heart to God. Let ſuch remember that of the Apoſtle (1 Cor.6.20.) Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body and in your ſpirit which are Gods. God is to be glorified in all our ways, eſpecially in his worſhip, with all that which he hath redeemed or bought. Take heed of giving ſo much as a kiſs or a bow to Idols. Many of the perſecuting Heathens in the primitive Church were ſatisfied if a Chriſtian would but take a little frankincenſe and throw it upon their Altar; yet the faithful profeſſors of thoſe times choſe rather to die then to do any thing, though never ſo little, which might carry the leaſt ſignification ſo much as by a meer external act of compliance with them.

Lingua juravi, mentem gero injuratam.

Secondly, Note, Superſtition is very Ceremonious.

Superſtitious worſhip is a kind of Antick worſhip; what bowings, what cringings are uſed at it? how ridiculous are many at it, while they would be thought moſt zealous? He that reads the Popiſh rituals might think they intended rather to court it and complement it with God, then humble themſelves before him, Or that they came to his worſhip rather to ſhew themſelves mannerly, then to be made more holy. The ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and the worſhip of God in ſpirit, knows none of theſe faſhions; And the beſt acceptance which ſuch will find with God will be ſignified to them in that chiding Queſtion; Who required theſe things at your hands?

Verſ. 28. This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg: for I ſhould have denied the God that is above.

In opening the 26. verſe, we have ſeen both the proneneſs of mans nature to the ſin of Idolatry, and the nature of Idolatry; And in opening the 27. verſe, we have ſeen the manner how Idolatry works, both internally inticing the heart, and externally by kiſſing the hand, or by outward adoration, and proſtration of the body: In this verſe Job proceeds to ſet forth the hainous ſinfulneſs of Idolatry.

This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg; Or, This is an iniquity for the Judg.

Etiam hoc eſt peccatum Grande. Tharg. Quæ eſt iniquitas maxima. Vulg. ϗ τῦτο μοὶ ἆρα ἀνομία μεγίϛη λογισθεῖν. Sept. Hæc eſt iniquitas Judicata. Mont. Etiam hæc eſt iniquitas judicialis. i. e. ad Judices pertinens, in quam ipſi animadvertere debent. Druſ. Ut ſupra de Adulterio dixerat, ſed pluraliter, עון פלילים iniquitas judicum, hic peleli, Judicis, i. e. digna quæ a judice puniatur. Merc.

There are three readings of theſe words.

Firſt, Some conceive them only importing the ſinfulneſs of this ſinful practice. So the Chaldee Paraphraſe, and ſo the Vulgar Latin; This is a grand or the greateſt iniquity. The Septuagint give the ſame ſence, Tranſlating; And this verily is in my opinion the greateſt ſin: All theſe ſpeak nothing at all of the penalneſs of the ſin, or as it is a ſin to be puniſhed by the Judg, but all three agree with one conſent that Idolatry is a grievous Sin.

A ſecond reading alſo ſaith nothing of this ſin, as a matter to be puniſhed by the Judg, but ſaith only, This is a Judged ſin; as if the meaning of Job were, This ſin of Idolatry is in the Judgment of many, if not of the moſt, a very great wickedneſs.

Thirdly, The Original is tranſlated ſtrictly to the letter; This is an iniquity for the Judg; that is, as we ſupply the Text, This is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. Mr. Broughton falls in with this reading; So this had been a ſin to be judged; that is ſuch a ſin as the Judg ought to take notice of, and to puniſh. From theſe three readings of the Text, I ſhall give you theſe three notes or obſervations, and intend but to touch upon the two former; my ſtay will be upon the latter.

From the firſt, which makes theſe words ſignifie nothing elſe, but an aggravation of the ſinfulneſs of Idolatry.

And it is ſo becauſe it ſtrikes ſo directly at God; As old Eli ſaid to his ſons (1Sam. 2. 25.) If one man ſin againſt another, the Judg ſhall judg him (the Hebrew is, The Gods ſhall judg him; that is, The Magiſtrates ſhall judg him, who in Scripture are called Gods) but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? There is no ſin which man commits againſt man, but God is concerned in it, and wronged by it. But ſome ſins are committed immediately againſt God, and fly directly in his face, among which Idolatry is a chief one. Now if a man ſin againſt the Lord, that is, preſumptuouſly and knowingly, who ſhall intreat for him? that is, what man can mediate a reconciliation or make up the breach between man and the offended Majeſty of God? None but Chriſt can heal this breach; And to ſhew how exceedingly God is offended and prophaned by Idolatry, the Scripture calls it a provocation of the eyes of his Glory (Iſa. 3. 8.) which that it refers to their Idol-worſhip is clear from the 20. verſe of the ſecond Chapter. There are many provoking ſins, but we may place Idolatry in the head of them. God cannot abide to behold that ſin, it is even a pain to the eyes of his glory, or to his moſt glorious eyes. Can a husband endure to ſee his wife go into the embraces of a ſtranger? Idolatry is a going a-whoring from God, and an unchaſt following of other lovers. God is of purer eyes then to behold any iniquity (Hab. 1. 13.) There is no ſin that he takes any pleaſure in, leaſt of all in Idolatry. How can he with patience behold that impurity wherein he ſeeth his own glory darkned, his love ſlighted, and his name ſo immediately abuſed? The Scripture calls it alſo an abomination, which refers to the burdenſomneſs of any thing to the ſtomach; As Idolatry is a moſt unpleaſant ſpectacle to the eye of God, ſo 'tis loathſom to his ſtomach he cannot bear it; His own people the Jews turned his ſtomach (as I may ſay) when they turned to it, and he ſpewed them out of his mouth for it. Idolatry is that Gall and Wormwood, ſpoken of (Deut. 29. 18.) which how offenſive they are to the taſt or palate every one knows. Thus Idolatry is every way offenſive, it is a pain to the eyes of God, a burden to his ſtomach, bitterneſs to his palate; all which are ſpoken in a figure to ſet forth the greatneſs of this ſin; and the Lords great diſpleaſure againſt it.

Beſides, to ſhew how great this ſin is, the greateſt ſins are in Scripture but ſhadowed by, likened or compared to Idolatry; we cannot put a worſer Title upon any ſin then to call it Idolatry; as if the ſinfulneſs of Idolatry were the meaſure of all other ſins; and as any ſin comes neerer to that, ſo much the more ſinful it were (1 Sam. 15. 23.) when Samuel reproved Saul for his half obedience (which was indeed a non-obedience, yea a Rebellion) in executing his Commiſſion againſt the Amalekites, he ſaith at the 23. verſe; For rebellion is as the ſin of witch-craft, and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and Idolatry. Saul did not properly commit that ſin of Idolatry, when he failed in the execution of the command of God againſt the Amalekites; yet to ſhew the hainouſneſs of that ſin, Samuel told him, his Stubborneſs was as iniquity and Idolatry. As all thoſe ſins which are againſt our neighbour, are ſumm'd up in that one ſin of blood or murder (Iſa. 1. 15. Ezek. 9. 9.) becauſe that is the height of all the evil that a man commits againſt, or can inflict upon his neighbour; ſo that all impieties againſt God, are included in Idolatry. And we find theſe two mentioned in one verſe, as the heads to which all the ſins of Jeruſalem were reducible (Ezek. 22. 2, 3, 4.) Now thou ſon of man, wilt thou judg, wilt thou judg the bloody City: Yea thou ſhalt ſhew her all her abominations, Then ſay thou, thus ſaith the Lord God, The City ſheddeth blood in the midſt of it, that her time may come, and maketh Idols againſt her ſelf to defile her ſelf. Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou haſt ſhed, and haſt defiled thy ſelf in thine Idols which thou haſt made. Thus Idolatry is matcht with murder, being indeed a pair of matchleſs ſins; The one fighting in chief againſt God, the other againſt man.

From the ſecond Reading; Note, Idolatry or creature-worſhip is a practice which in all times hath been judged ſinful and wicked: 'tis a judged iniquity.

In the worſt of times ſome have appeared againſt it.

Gideon was called Jerub-baal (Judg.6.32.) becauſe he caſt down the Idolatrous Altar of Baal. In all times ſome Jerub-baals have riſen up and both pleaded and acted againſt Idol-worſhip. It were eaſie both from Scripture as alſo from the Hiſtory of the Church to give an account that as in every age Idolatry hath found Patrons and Advocates, ſo oppoſers and impleaders, who have accuſed, arraigned and judged it for one of the fouleſt abominations: but to engage ſo far in that way, would be out of mine.

> From the third Reading, Obſerve, Idolatry is a ſin, not only great in it ſelf, and which hath been great in the account and judgment of Godly men in all ages, But a ſin which falls under the cognizance, and ſo under the ſentence of the Judg; this alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg.

I grant that thoſe words, to be puniſhed by, are not expreſſed in the Hebrew Text, which is conciſe, according to the Idiom of that Language; and ſo gives it only thus; This alſo is an iniquity for the Judg. David ſpake in ſuch a brief (Pſal. 120.7.) I am peace, or I peace, that is, I am for peace, I am a lover and liker of peace. So here, This alſo is an iniquity for the Judg; that is, (as we render) an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. This ſupplement or gloſs is no corrupting of the Text, (as it hath been overboldly charged) but a fair expoſition of it.

Yet here a queſtion ariſeth about the Judg that is to puniſh this iniquity. For there are ſome, who admitting this reading for good and fair, yet will not admit that the Judg here intended as the puniſher of Idolatry, is an ordinary, no nor any human Judg; but ſay the Judg who is to puniſh this iniquity is God, the Judg of all the world; as if Job's meaning were only this, God the Judg of all men will judg and puniſh Idolaters. There is no Queſtion but Idolatry is a ſin which God will judg, but whether it be a truth taken excluſively as to all other Judges, that is a Queſtion. God will puniſh Idolaters, and he will puniſh them ſorely and ſeverely; yet to reſtrain the Text to God alone ſhutting out any other from having cogniſance in this matter, I ſee no reaſon for it, but rather much reaſon to the contrary.

Firſt, Job ſeems to put it as a ſpecialty upon this ſin of Idolatry beyond many other ſins, that it is a ſin to be puniſhed by the Judg; now if by the Judg we underſtand God alone, excluding all other Judges, then there is no more ſaid of this ſin then of any other. For God will judg all the ſins of all men all the world over (Eccl. 12.14.) He ſhall bring every work into Judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil; and as a Judg he will puniſh the ſins of all thoſe who go on impenitently in them, yea they ſhall be under the everlaſting puniſhment of that Judg; let the ſin be what it will, let it be the leaſt ſin imaginable, if any one live and die in it without repentance, without taking hold of Chriſt by faith for the pardon of it, God will judg and puniſh that man for it eternally. So that, I ſay, there is no more ſpoken of this ſin, in that ſence, then is competent with or common to any other ſin whatſoever. Yet Job in this place ſeems to ſpeak ſomewhat more of it then falls upon every other ſin; and we know there are a number of ſins puniſhable by God, which yet neither can nor ought to be puniſhed by man; Man cannot puniſh many ſins becauſe he doth not know them; and there are many ſins which he ought not to puniſh, though he do know them; becauſe they are not in his commiſſion to take notice of.

Further, Secondly, there are ſome ſins puniſhable by man, of which the Scripture ſpeaks as if God only did puniſh them. (Heb. 13.4.) Marriage is honourable among all, and the bed undefiled, but whoremongers and adulterers God will judg. And it hath been ſhewed in opening the 24. Chapter of this Book, how eminently God appears in Judgment, even in this life againſt that ſort of ſinners. Yet though God is ſpoken of in that Scripture as the only Judg of Whoremongers and Adulterers, yet no man will deny but that Adulterers are to be puniſhed by man alſo.

Thirdly, I conceive, Job gives a diſtinction of ſins in this Chapter, whereof ſome are puniſhed by God alone, and others both by God and man; and ſo much the word Alſo at the beginning of the verſe ſeemeth to intimate; This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. The word alſo connects and couples this ſin of Idolatry with ſome other ſin which Job had inſtanc'd in before, falling (as all acknowledg) within the cognizance and under the puniſhment of human Judges: and that is the ſin of Adultery at the eleventh verſe, where Job purging himſelf from that filthineſs, ſaith, If mine heart hath been deceived by a woman, if I have laid wait at my neighbours door, then, &c. for this is an hainous crime, yea it is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges. Job paſſing from this ſin to ſeveral others, from all which he acquitted himſelf by ſevere imprecations, he proceeds to do the like as to the ſin of Idolatry, concluding, This alſo is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg; As if he had ſaid, Look what I concluded before of Adultery, the ſame I conclude again of Idolatry, This alſo is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. I have ſpoken of many ſins which God will judg, though they never come nor can come under the Judgment of men. Magiſtrates have nothing to do with thoſe ſins; but as for the ſin of Adultery, and this alſo of Idolatry, theſe are ſins to be puniſhed by the Judg.

I know ſome make the connection with the verſe immediately fore-going, and thence gather an argument that this 28. verſe cannot be expounded of any human, but of the divine Judg alone, God himſelf. There Job ſpake of covetouſneſs, If I ſaid to the Gold, thou art my hope, and to the fine Gold, thou art my confidence; or if I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great, &c. And then proceeds to the ſin of Idolatry, This alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. As if Job joyned this ſin of Idolatry, with that of covetouſneſs. Now becauſe it is agreed on all hands, that covetouſneſs, or the inordinate deſire of riches, is a ſin which earthly Judges cannot puniſh, it is not under any Legal cenſure. For though covetouſneſs or the love of money, is puniſhed every day in the effects of it, ſtealing, oppreſſion, and wrong dealing, yet covetouſneſs in it ſelf, in its own name, or in perſon (as we ſay) is never puniſhed by any human Judg. Covetouſneſs is an inward tranſgreſſion, and ſo cannot be brought to an outward Tryal; we may have vehement ſuſpitions of a man that he is covetous, yet no man knows the heart, which is the proper ſeat of covetouſneſs. And if it were infallibly known that a man were covetous, yet the civil Magiſtrate cannot puniſh any man for it; ſeeing covetouſneſs wrongs no man but the covetous perſon himſelf, till it breaks forth into unrighteous and oppreſſive acts. Now becauſe Job connects Idolatry with a ſin that cannot fall under the ſentence of an earthly Judg, therefore ſome conclude that Idolatry doth not.

But there is no neceſſity at all that thoſe coupling or connecting words this alſo ſhould refer to the words immediately foregoing, and not to the words of that other context beginning at the 11. verſe of this Chapter, wherein Job had ſpoken of a ſin by name, which is to be puniſhed by the Judg. As if he had ſaid, what I ſpake of Adultery (Ver. 11.) that it is a ſin to be puniſhed by the Judg, the ſame I affirm alſo of Idolatry, It is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. And if we peruſe all the former part of the Chapter, yea and the latter too, we ſhall find all the ſins that Job diſclaimeth and purgeth himſelf from to be ſuch as fall under the puniſhment of God only, except theſe two of Adultery (Ver. 11.) and of Idolatry (Ver. 28.) as alſo that mentioned (Ver. 39.) which, I ſuppoſe, will appear upon examination, to be a ſin of this ſort alſo, the forceable or violent taking away the life of a man.

For theſe reaſons and conſiderations, I cannot incline to their opinion, who reſtrain the Text, to God alone as Judg; though no doubt God will moſt eminently judg this iniquity of Idolatry; and therefore I ſhall joyn with thoſe in the expoſition of this Scripture, who put Idolatry under the Judgment of man, as well as the Judgment of God; and ſo the point is plainly this;

It is the Magiſtrates duty to puniſh Idolatry.

It is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg.] As the great Judg in Heaven will certainly do it, ſo earthly Judges may and ought to do it. There are not a few (I know) who urge it as the Magiſtrates duty to puniſh almoſt upon every diſſent in Religion, and to drive men by his ſword to an orthodoxneſs in opinion; or that the Magiſtrate muſt draw his ſword upon every one who doth not comply with that which is publickly owned for truth: They would have all men who diſſent from what is ſo held forth taught not only as Gideon did the men of Succoth, (Judg. 8. 16.) with the briers and thorns of the wilderneſs, but with bonds and impriſonment, with fines and confiſcations, yea in ſome caſes puniſhed with death. Such a ſpirit hath appeared even in this age, as was in Paul, when Saul (Act. 9. 1.) breathing out threatnings and ſlaughters againſt all who believe not as they believe, or who diſſent from their opinion and practice, ſo making room or cutting a way for what they call Religion into the hearts and heads of men, with the Magiſtrates ſword. Now, as I utterly diſlike an univerſal or wild toleration, for every one to do and ſpeak, act and vent what they pleaſe in matters of Religion, or in the worſhip of God; ſo I do as much diſlike their univerſal non-toleration, who ſay, the Magiſtrate muſt by force and power reſtrain whatſoever is contrary, or different from the common tenet, or what is generally owned within his dominion or Juriſdiction.

And therefore I conceive that the matter lieth between theſe two extreams: and to give my own ſence upon the occaſion offered in this Text, I ſhall take a little liberty beyond my ordinary way of expoſition, to ſhew two things.

Firſt, In reference unto all men, what they ought to do in caſe of difference from their brethren in opinion about the things of God.

Secondly, What the Magiſtrate is to do in that caſe.

Firſt, For Brethren, I ſay, indifferency of ſpirit in matters of faith and worſhip, as if it matter'd not, or were not worth the while to ſtand upon it, what opinions, and perſwaſions men are of, or what way of Religion they are in, this, I ſay, is hateful to God, and ſhould be the abomination of every good man. Every man ought to pray and labour for a ſpirit of diſcerning about and of zeal for the truths and holy appointments of God.

Secondly, The means which the Scripture holds out to all for the reducing of erroneous perſons, is to perſwade and argue with them. That's the contention which the Apoſtle Jude means (Ver. 3.) Contend earneſtly for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints; he would have every one contend and contend with all the weapons of this holy War, which the authority of God allows and furniſheth us with, even with Scripture demonſtrations, and divine reaſonings, to confute and repel errors, and ſtop the mouth of Gain-ſaiers.

Thirdly, The more pernicious any falſe doctrin or practice in Religion is, the more earneſtly it ought to be contended againſt. Thus far every error in opinion and ſinful practice in worſhip, ſhould be judged by all men.

Further, as to the Magiſtrate, I ſhall lay down theſe four Concluſions.

Firſt, All thoſe evil opinions, and hereſies, which tend in their own nature to the diſturbance of the civil peace and good government of mankind, ought to be ſuppreſſed by the Magiſtrate, and the owners of them to be puniſhed by all ſuch means as are ſutable to the conſervation of the publick ſafety.

Secondly, All ſuch opinions and erroneous doctrins as are accompanied with any notorious ſins in practice, (which ſins are alſo actually practiſed by the followers and abetters of thoſe opinions, like that of the Nicolaitans of old, or the Ranters among us) tending to or teaching uncleanneſs, and opening a door for luſt, and removing the ancient Landmarks of good and evil, and ſo letting in a flood of wickedneſs. Theſe, doubtleſs, the Magiſtrate ought to take notice of, and to ſuppreſs.

Thirdly, All profeſſed Atheiſm and open blaſphemy againſt God, ought to be puniſhed by the Magiſtrate; I do not ſay that every opinion which hath blaſphemy in it by deduction or remote conſequences, but that which is bare-faced and profeſſed blaſphemy againſt God, the Magiſtrate ought to puniſh. The reaſon is, becauſe ſuch cannot ſay that the Magiſtrate puniſheth them for their conſcience, ſeeing they cannot ſo much as pretend conſcience for what they ſay or hold; conſcience being that power of the Soul, which hath immediate communion or converſe with God; and therefore ſuppoſeth God to be, and to be ſuch a one as he hath (according to their apprehenſion of him, though not always according to the truth of his being) revealed himſelf to be: and therefore they who deny God to be, or blaſpheme him in his being, can never pretend any thing of conſcience for it. Conſcience is a tenderneſs to offend God, now for a man to blaſpheme God, and to profeſs atheiſtical principles, this takes away all colour of conſcience in tenderneſs to offend God; and how can he complain that he ſuffers for his conſcience, who hath no conſcience to ſuffer for?

Fourthly, That Idolatry is to be puniſhed by the Magiſtrate, I need not go any further for a proof then the Text, though I do not reſtrain all puniſhable Idolatry to that particular way mentioned in the Text, the worſhipping of the Sun, Moon, and Stars; but I ſay, any Idolatry of that rank, and rate, is to be puniſhed by the Judg. To clear my meaning in this we may diſtinguiſh of Idolatry.

Firſt, There is Idolatry improperly ſo called; which is the inordinate going forth of the Soul to any creature, in love, in deſire, in delight, in truſt or confidence; this kind of Idolatry was ſpoken of at the 24. Verſe; If I have made Gold my hope, or have ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art my confidence. Thus the Apoſtle (Eph. 5. 5.) calleth a covetous man an Idolater. Now when I ſay Idolatry is a ſin to be puniſhed by the Judg, I do not mean this kind of Idolatry, which is ſo called in a metaphorical ſence, though the fulneſs of that ſin be in it in a ſpiritual way, yet that's not the Idolatry here intended.

Secondly, There is Idolatry properly ſo called, and that is two-fold.

Firſt, The worſhipping the true God by falſe means, or in a wrong way; which is ſtrictly the Idolatry of the ſecond Commandment; Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, &c. That is, thou ſhalt not worſhip God in a way of thy own deviſing: Though thou pretendeſt to worſhip the true God, yet if thou uſe means of thy own to help on thy devotion, thou art an Idolater. What the Magiſtrate may do as to the puniſhing of this ſort of Idolatry, I ſhall not meddle with it, ſeeing it belongeth not to this Text.

Secondly, Proper Idolatry is the ſetting up, and worſhipping of a falſe God; This is, ſtrictly, Idolatry againſt the firſt Commandment; And this is not only a worſhipping of the creator by the creature, but a worſhipping of the creature for the creator. Of this the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 1. 25.) Who change the truth of God into a lie, and worſhip and ſerve the creature more then the creator, who is bleſſed for evermore. Some are of opinion that there was never any Idolatry (eſpecially not among the profeſſing people of God) but of the firſt ſort; And that all their Idols, even Baal and Aſhtaroth were only falſe means of worſhipping the true God; Yet I doubt not but there is an Idolatry ſpoken of in Scripture, and uſed in the world, which is the ſetting up of the creature for God; and of this Idolatry the Text and point I am upon is chiefly intended; If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs, &c. That is, if I have fallen down to theſe creatures, and given them adoration, then &c. To clear it a little further, we may diſtinguiſh of this Idolatry.

Firſt, In its internal acts, when the heart is inticed.

Secondly, In its external acts; when as Job ſaith, the mouth kiſſeth the hand; that is, when by outward practices and proſtrations towards the creature a man declares his worſhip of it, or that he attributes a divine power thereunto. Of the former Idolatry, that of the heart, the Magiſtrate can have no proof, and therefore cannot puniſh it. But when Idolatry holdeth up its head avowedly, then the Magiſtrate may and ought to take notice of it, and puniſh it. That the Magiſtrate did puniſh ſuch Idolatry among the Jews is without controverſie, the Law is expreſs for it (Deut. 13. 6, 7, 8, 9, &c. to the ſixteenth Verſe) when any man ſaid, Come let us go ſerve other Gods, he was to be ſtoned with ſtones till he died. And that the Magiſtrate may puniſh ſuch kind of Idolatry at this day, beſides the authority of this Text. We may argue thus;

Such evil acts committed by man as are contrary to the light of nature, or which a man guided only by the light of nature might ſhun and avoid, the Magiſtrate may puniſh, or they are puniſhable by the Magiſtrate;

But this kind of Idolatry we are ſpeaking of, is an evil act againſt the light of nature;

Therefore the Magiſtrate may puniſh it. The major or firſt propoſition is agreed by all, whatſoever is againſt the light of nature the Magiſtrate may puniſh; the light of nature is the ſphere of the Magiſtrates activity. And for the minor or ſecond propoſition, that ſuch Idolatry is againſt the light of nature, is proved at large (Rom. 1.19,20,21,22.) where the Apoſtles drift or ſcope is to ſhew that the old Gentiles ſinned againſt the light of nature when they committed that groſs Idolatry; For (ſaith he) that which may be known of God, is manifeſt in or to them, (who are meerly in nature) for God hath ſhewed it unto them; how hath God ſhewed it unto them? not by the light of Scripture, nor by the light of the Spirit, or divine Revelation, but by the frame or fabrick of the world, as it followeth plainly in that place; For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things which are made, even his eternal power, and God-head, ſo that they are without excuſe. The reaſon why ſuch Idolaters were without excuſe, was becauſe the very light of nature might teach them, that there is an eternal power and God-head, who made the world, or that the world was made by ſome eternal power; It could not make it ſelf; And therefore they muſt needs be inexcuſable who worſhipped the things that are made in the place of their maker. Seeing then, this kind of Idolatry is a ſin againſt the light of nature, and the Magiſtrate hath power to puniſh ſins againſt the light of nature, it follows that where ſuch Idolatry breaks forth, and proof is made of it, the Magiſtrate may puniſh it. This alſo is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg. The ground why it is ſo is alſo aſſigned by Job in the next words.

For I ſhould have denied the God that is above.

As if he had ſaid, If any require an account of my opinion, why I aſſert, that Idolatry is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg, my anſwer is this, Idolatry is a God-denying ſin. And I in adoring the Sun and Moon as Gods, ſhould have denied the God that is above.

The word rendred to deny, is taken firſt metaphorically for any kind of deceiving our expectation. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, or lie, that is, yeeld no oyl; and when the harveſt comes ſhort of hope, the Latins ſay, the Harveſt lies, That is, it deceives the hope of the husbandman.

Spem mentita ſeges.

Secondly, Taken properly it notes a direct denial of what is asked (Gen. 18.15) Then Sarah denied, ſaying, I did not laugh.

Thirdly, It ſignifies to be-lie, which is to report a matter otherwiſe of another then it is (Jer. 5. 11,12.) They have belied the Lord, and ſaid, it is not he, neither ſhall evil come upon us, we ſhall not ſee Sword, nor Famine.

Fourthly, It notes the yielding of feigned or falſe ſubjection (Pſal. 18.44.) Thine Enemies ſhould have ſubmitted themſelves (or lied) to thee; that is, (as we put in the Margin) yielded feigned ſubmiſſion. So (Pſal. 66. 3. Pſal. 81. 15.) The providences of God do ſometimes ſo overpower the enemies of his people, that they are compelled to pretend ſubmiſſion, though their hearts be far from it. There is much of this kind of lying in Idolatry, a pretending of ſubjection, and ſubmiſſion to God, when indeed there is nothing in the heart but ſtubbornneſs and rebellion againſt him.

I ſhould have denied the God that is above.] What it is to deny God, may further appear by its contrary, confeſſing (John 1.14,20.) He confeſſed and denied not but confeſſed; confeſſion is oppoſed to denial. There is a two-fold confeſſion; Firſt, a confeſſion of repentance; Secondly, of praiſe. (*Gen.*49.8.) Judah thy Brethren ſhall confeſs or praiſe thee, that is, they ſhall make confeſſion of thee to thy praiſe; they ſhall not be aſhamed of thee, but acknowledg thee, and readily give themſelves up to be governed by thee. Our confeſſion of God ſtands in direct oppoſition to the denial of him; And it is a confeſſion of praiſe, and honour, which we give to God; ſo Chriſt ſpeaketh of himſelf (Math. 10. 32,33,) Whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs alſo before my Father which is in Heaven; But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo deny before my Father which is in Heaven. And again (Mark 8. 38.) Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words in this adulterous and ſinful generation; of him alſo ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels. From theſe Scriptures compared together, we ſee firſt, that, not to confeſs Chriſt is to deny him, and that to deny Chriſt is to be aſhamed of him, as if he were not worth the owning. When Job ſaith, I ſhould have denied the God that is above, we may underſtand him in every ſence of denial. Some Idolatry is a flat denial of God, and all Idolatry is but a feigned ſubjection to or a flattering of God, a belying of God and a ſhameful diſowning of him. Yet I conceive, the denial here intended is ſpecially a flat and plain denial of him, I ſhould have denied the God that is above.

Non pudebit illos tui, tuum ſe dicent, conſentient in tuū imperium.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, To deny God is a hainous wickedneſs.

'Tis all ſin bound up in one, God is denied many ways; Firſt, in regard of his being, or that he is. This is the groſſeſt denial of him; Secondly, in reference to the manner of his being, or that he is ſuch as he hath indeed declared himſelf to be. Thus God is denied when we form up ſuch notions of him in our brain as are unbecoming his glorious Majeſty. When we have apprehenſions of God unſutable to his Holineſs, his mercy, his juſtice, and his power, we deny the God who is, and ſet up a God who is not.

Again, there is a two-fold denying of God. Firſt, in words expreſly and openly; Secondly, in practice, cloſely and conſequentially. The Apoſtle gives us the ground of this diſtinction (*Tit.*1.16.) They confeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him. There may be at once a profeſſing of God, and a denial of him. Many a mans practice ſpeaks aloud that there is no God, when he makes a fair confeſſion and profeſſion of him with his tongue.

This practical denial of God may be run into five ways.

Firſt, To live in a profeſſed courſe of ſin, is a denying of God; For, firſt, ſuch deny their obligation to obey God, or the abſolute dominion of God to command them; Secondly, they deny, much more, any willingneſs (which is our duty) to be ſubject to the will of God. Thirdly, they deny the Juſtice and goodneſs of that Law under which they are, and by which they ought to walk. An obſtinate ſinner bears his teſtimony boldly againſt God in all that he is, and in all that he hath ſpoken.

Secondly, They may be ſaid to deny God in their practice, who do not, Firſt, hope for the reward of obedience promiſed; nor Secondly, fear the puniſhment of diſobedience threatned. If any man ſhall ſay in his heart, what doth it profit, or what good ſhall I get by walking holily and humbly with God? and what hurt ſhall I get if I take liberty to walk unholily, and proudly againſt God? This is not only a denying, but a defying of God, who is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him (Heb. 11. 6.) and will take vengeance of all them that wilfully and reſolvedly diſobey him. They (ſaith the Prophet, Zeph. 1. 12.) are men ſetled on their lees (that is, hardned in ſin) that ſay in their heart, the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; that is, he will neither reward nor puniſh. It matters not whether we do good or evil, for he will do neither to us.

Thirdly, They that ſwear falſly deny God eminently, though they do it never ſo covertly. Such either ſuppoſe that God doth not know they ſwear falſly, or that God will not puniſh nor be a ſwift witneſs (as he hath ſaid he will, Mal. 3. 5.) againſt falſe ſwearers.

Fourthly, Not to love God is to deny him, for he that doth not love God, doth not acknowledg him to be good, and ſo denieth him to be. We love that which we judg to be good, therefore they who do not love God, deny his goodneſs, and ſo (upon the matter) his very being; ſeeing God can no more ceaſe to be good, then he can ceaſe to be.

Fifthly, (which is the ſpecial way of denying God intended in this Text) The worſhip of a falſe or Idol God, is a denial of the true, of the living God. And the Idolater may well be ſaid to deny God with a lie; becauſe he that doth not acknowledg and reverence God but the creature, goeth againſt the dictates of his own mind; ſeeing man by nature may not only ſee God in the creature, but diſtinguiſh him from the creature.

At beſt, Idolaters deny God by attributing that honour to creatures which God never gave them, nor alloweth us to give to any but himſelf. The nobleſt creatures in the world, the holy Angels in Heaven, are but our fellow-ſervants. When John would needs fall down before the Angel, and worſhip him, he ſaid, See thou do it not, I am thy fellow ſervant; and as the higheſt creatures are our fellow ſervants, ſo all other creatures are our ſervants; God made the whole hoſt of Heaven, and all things here below to ſerve man, as hath been ſhewed before: therefore to worſhip them, though we ſhould ſay we do not terminate our worſhip in them, but offer our worſhip by them, yet that is a denying of God. Idolaters put a worſhip upon God inſtead of worſhipping him; Will-worſhip is the worſhip of our own will, not the worſhip of God, who will be worſhipped only as himſelf willeth.

Impietas horrenda eſt, pro domino ſervos colere, pro creatore creaturas.

But as for thoſe who not only worſhip God by the creature, but the creature for or as God, they deny God moſt groſly; for though they deny not that God is, yet they deny what God is; They either deny that God is but one, or that he is ſuch a one as he hath manifeſted himſelf to be, both in his word, and works. Indeed to ſet up another God, or to ſay, there are many gods, is to ſay, there is no God. Polytheiſm is Atheiſm. And therefore the Apoſtle concludes of Idolaters (Rom. 1. 15.) They change the truth of God into a lie; that is, into an Idol. Idols are a lie, either firſt, becauſe they promiſe, or pretend what they are not in truth; or Secondly, becauſe they are a plain denial of the true God. If I (ſaith Job) had Adored the Sun, I ſhould have denied the God that is above, yea though I ſhould notwithſtanding that, acknowledg him to be above all gods; and that my humbling or bowing my ſelf to the creature, was not to abate but rather to exalt my worſhip of him, that being only (as I might pretend) a help to my devotion. For he that boweth before or to a creature in worſhip, whether he ſaith he doth it only as a means to draw up his heart to God, or as a ſign of the preſence of God, or as to a Mediator between God and him, (in the former ſence Papiſts worſhip Images, and in the latter Saints and Angels, he I ſay, that doth any of theſe) will be found a denier of God, how much ſoever he boaſteth of the worſhip of the one true God, and denieth that he worſhippeth the creature as God. I ſhould have denied the God,

Non aſſeri poteſt Deus alius, ſine veri Dei negatione, cum nequeunt plures dii eſſe.

Numinum multitudinem, numinum eſſe nullitatem aſſerit Athanaſius. Orat. contra Idololat.

That is above.] Job uſeth that word above ſignificantly, having ſpoken of the Sun and Moon before, which are above us, or on high, he adds, If I had worſhipped Sun, and Moon, I had denied the God that is above, not only above the earth, but above the Sun and Moon, and all the hoſt of Heaven. The Sun is below in compariſon of the God above; this God who is above all in power, and above all in place, above all in glory, above all in dignity. Should I have denied.

Hence Note, God is above by a more eminent and ſpecial preſence.

God is neither above nor below as circumſcribed in any place, God is both above & below as filling all places; God is not more above then he is below as to his real preſence, but God is more above then he is below as to the manifeſtation of his preſence. In this ſence Job ſpeaks of God as above; and we find throughout the Scripture, that all prayers, and ſpeeches, directed to God, are directed to him as above. As letters ſent to a Prince, are directed to him at his Court, which is the place of his uſual reſidence, and where he moſt declares his power and greatneſs; ſo all the prayers, ſpeeches, addreſſes made to God in Scripture, are made to him as above, or in Heaven. Chriſt giving us that pattern of prayer (Matth. 6.) directs us to God above, Say, Our Father which art in Heaven; Chriſt knew that, God our Father is as much on earth as in Heaven, in regard of his eſſential and real preſence, yet he bids us pray, Our Father which art in Heaven, not our Father which art on Earth. And when Chriſt himſelf prayed to his Father, (*Joh.*17.1.) He lift up his eyes to Heaven, and ſaid, Father glorifie thy Son. Heaven is the habitation of Gods holineſs, and of his glory; And therefore they who in theſe times decry ſuch ſpeeches as theſe, and will let us know they know nothing of Heaven or Hell, neither what they are, nor where they are, let ſuch know it is enough for us to know, what the Scripture ſaith, that Heaven is above, and Hell below; and why ſhould not we ſpeak as the Scripture ſpeaks, let above and below be what they will. Therefore when we ſpeak to God, let us remember that he is above, and let us get our hearts up to him, let us (as the Church ſpeaks in her low and deſolate condition, Lam. 3.41.) Lift up our hearts and our hands unto God in the Heavens. How uncomely as well as ſinful were it, if while we pray to the God that is above, our hearts ſhould be groveling here below?

VERS. 29, 30.

If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or lift up my ſelf when evil found him:

(Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin, by wiſhing a curſe to his Soul.)

IN this context Job ſtill affirms the clearneſs of his own Integrity, and in ſpecial, his clearneſs from any boyling deſire of revenge upon his foreſt and moſt profeſſed Adverſaries, which he proves,

Firſt, Becauſe he had not expreſſed, no nor been affected with that paſſion of joy at the downfal of his adverſary, or in the day of his ſorrow. Thus he ſpeaks in the former part of the 29. Verſe.

If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me; that is, I did not rejoyce at his deſtruction.

Secondly, He proves it by his avoydance of ſuch actions, as teſtifie a ſpirit of revenge, and thoſe are two.

Firſt, He had not uſed any proud geſture, or inſulting behaviour toward his Enemy, when ſuppreſſed and brought underfoot. This he intends in the latter part of the 29. Verſe, where he ſaith, or lift up my ſelf when evil found him.

Secondly, He profeſſeth that he did not vent any ſpiteful words, or evil wiſhes againſt his perſon, (Ver. 30.) Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin by wiſhing a curſe to his Soul.

Yet further, Job proves his innocence as to this ſin of revenge, by ſhewing his abſtinence from and forbearance of all thoſe actings, whether ſecret or open, though greatly provoked and preſſed thereunto; though he wanted not thoſe about him, who were continually blowing the coals, and urging him to right himſelf to the utmoſt upon thoſe who had wronged him, yet he was not moved. This I conceive to be the ſence of the 31. Verſe. If the men of my tabernacle ſaid not, O that we had of his fleſh! we cannot be ſatisfied. Of which hereafter.

Thus you have the ſum and aim of theſe two Verſes; I ſhall now proceed to the particular explication of them.

Verſ. 29. If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me.

Joy is a paſſion of the mind, ariſing from the apprehenſion of ſome preſent or neer approaching good. Holy Job (it ſeems) never looked upon the evil which befel his enemy, as a good to himſelf, and ſo it was not to him a matter or occaſion of joy.

If I rejoyced.] The word notes a very freſh and active Joy, ſuch as appears in men upon the liberal drinking of Wine (Pſal. 104. 15.) Wine maketh glad the heart of man; That is, it makes him heartily glad. And to ſome, the tears, yea the blood of their Enemies taſt as ſweetly, go down as pleaſantly, and are as refreſhing as a Cup of the moſt delicious and richeſt Wine: It puts (as it were) a new life into them, to ſee their enemies in the ſnares of death. Job was of another ſpirit; If I rejoyced (ſaith he) as one refreſht with Wine, when I ſaw the blood of mine enemies; If I took content in their ſorrows, or comfort in their grones, Then let my ſorrows be multiplied. If I rejoyced

At the deſtruction of him that hated me.] The word which we render deſtruction, notes utter ruin, or ruin without remedy, ſuch a ruin as is not capable of relief; or as the Lord threatens Babylon by the Prophet (Iſa. 47. 9.) Judgment

פיד tale exitium denotat unde quis redimi non poteſt Bold.

Judgment in its perfection of it; that is, a compleat and irrecoverable overthrow. The beſom of deſtruction (ſpoken of Iſa. 14. 23.) ſweeps all away at once, even the moſt precious Jewels and richeſt treaſure of ſinners are but as dirt and rubbiſh before it. Its ſuch a clean riddance, that (as another Prophet, Nah. 1. 9. expreſſeth it) Affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time. Some deſtructions leave ſome work for a ſecond, yea for a third deſtruction; but there may be a deſtruction which leaves nothing to be deſtroyed, not a ſtone upon a ſtone, as Chriſt propheſied of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. When Job ſaw his enemy thus deſtroyed, and thoſe that hated him broken with a breach that could not be healed, and which utterly diſabled them for ever to do him a miſchief, or revenge themſelves upon him, Yet he rejoyced not at it. If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him

odio habuit contempſit neglexit.

That hated me.] The root of the word rendred to hate, ſignifies both to hate and to neglect, yea to contemn; and thoſe whom we hate, we always neglect, and often contemn too. So the word is uſed Gen. 26. 27. as alſo 2 Sam. 13. 22. And Abſalom ſpake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad (that is, he ſlighted and contemned him) for Abſalom hated Amnon becauſe he had forced his ſiſter Tamar. As he ſpake nothing at all to him about that matter, the abuſe of his ſiſter, ſo doubtleſs he grew more reſerved then formerly towards him in all other matters, becauſe he hated him. Job's haters were alſo his deriders and deſpiſers, as was ſhewed at the firſt, ninth and tenth verſes of the former Chapter. If I have rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me.

To clear how much Job ſaid, when he ſaid, the men at whoſe ruin he did not rejoyce, were ſuch as hated him, let us conſider what he did not ſay of them.

Firſt, He did not ſay, If I have rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that was not my friend, or benefactor; and yet not to do another good when we have power, and opportunity in our hands, is a degree of hatred; he that withholds a favour from him who needs it, is a negative Enemy.

Secondly, He did not ſay, If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that never wrong'd me, nor did me harm; And yet there are many who do ſo, yea who rejoyce at the deſtruction of thoſe who either have, or would have done them good.

Thirdly, He did not ſay, If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hath taken diſtaſt, and diſpleaſure at me; not a few are ready to do ſo upon every light occaſion, yea though we may be under the preſent diſpleaſure of a man as well as of God, who yet really loves us.

But Job ſaith plainly (and what could he ſay more to prove the truth or highten the degrees of his charity) If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, even with a deadly hatred; If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of my worſt enemy, my inward enemy, my hearty enemy, whoſe ſpirit was ſteept in bitterneſs, in the gall and wormwood of implacable malice againſt me, who as he hath often ſought to deſtroy me, ſo he would have rejoyced to purpoſe, and clapt his hands for joy at my deſtruction. Such as this, was the Character of the man that hated Job, of the man at whoſe deſtruction he did not rejoyce.

Quid aliud ageret ſi evangelii tempore natus eſſet. Sanct.

Thus we ſee of what temper Job was, Job lived in dark times, in times far remote from the fulneſs of Goſpel light, yet how full was his heart of Goſpel love. He lived long before Chriſt in the world, yet how like was his love to the love of Chriſt? who not only did good to, but dyed for thoſe that hated him. Job's charity might well become, yea it was ſuch as is rarely found among thoſe who live in the cleareſt Goſpel light. Certainly he far exceeded the light and learning of the Jewiſh Rabbines, and underſtood the meaning of the Law of love in thoſe times better then the Phariſees did in Chriſts time. What greater evidence of love (except that of Chriſt himſelf, who, as was ſaid before, dyed for thoſe that hated him) could be given then this, not to rejoyce at the death or deſtruction of him that hated him?

Yet, Some poſſibly may object; Had it not been a greater evidence of love, if Job had done good to him that hated him, then only not to Rejoyce at the deſtruction of him that hated him? Is it not more charity to do good to an enemy, then not to rejoyce at the evil which he ſuffers?

Some have ſaid, The reaſon why Job ſaid not, he did good to or loved his enemies, or thoſe that hated him, was becauſe the law of loving an enemy was not in force in his time, and ſo he was not obliged to ſuch a duty. For proof of which opinion they alledg that of Chriſt in his Sermon upon the Mount (Matth. 5. 43.) Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid of old, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. Which they Interpret as if this were the rule given by God for thoſe elder times, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. Whereas when Chriſt ſaith, It hath been ſaid, he doth not mean, that this was the rule given out by God to them of old, but this was the Gloſs given by man: God ſaid in the Law, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour; but he never ſaid, Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy; that was the expoſition or comment which the Phariſees made upon the Text, and it was indeed a groſs corruption of it. As if that Commandment, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, implied, Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy. Thus they interpreted the Law by the rule of Contraries; As if becauſe we muſt love our neighbour, therefore we might hate our enemies; and poſſibly they were miſled to that Interpretation, by thoſe charges which the Children of Iſrael received, to root out the old Inhabitants of the Land of Canaan, the Jebuſites, the Pereſites, &c. Whence they drew down this falſe concluſion, as if they might hate all ſorts of Enemies, even private perſonal enemies. But though the Law of loving our enemies be, in ſpecial, a Goſpel Law both publiſhed and practiſed by Chriſt in a more clear and excellent way then ever before; yet the Law of loving an enemy (as to the matter and ſubſtance of it) was from the beginning, as will appear further in the proſecution of this point, therefore that was not the Reaſon.

The true reaſon why Job did not expreſs the Integrity of his ſpirit in this matter, by ſaying, he did good to his enemies, but by ſaying, he did not rejoyce at their deſtruction, was, Becauſe not to rejoyce at the deſtruction of an enemy, doth ſhew a very great degree of love and goodneſs to them, yea in ſome caſes it is all that love which we are to ſhew, and all the good we are bound to do to an enemy; For though we are to love Enemies, yet we muſt not give out all our love to thim. There is a love of Pity, and there is a love of delight; A love of Complacency, and a love of Compaſſion. The love which we are to give out to enemies, is a love of Pity and Compaſſion, not a love of Complacency and delight; For no man is bound to take his enemy into his boſom, and to give him an opportunity to ruin him, nor is any man bound ſo to do good to his enemy, as to enable him to do him hurt. So that, Not to rejoyce at the deſtruction of an enemy, may carry the full ſence of the Law, commanding us to love our enemies.

Again, I anſwer, That, often through the ſhews and ſhadows of pretended love and doing good to an enemy, the heart of man is deceived. For while he ſaith he loves his enemy, he doth only ſay ſo. And whereas ſome think they love an enemy, becauſe they do not actually attempt to revenge themſelves upon him, or to take away his life; this alſo may fall ſhort of any the leaſt degree of love to him: but not to rejoyce at the deſtruction of an enemy, is a convincing argument of love to him and ſignifies much more then meerly to abſtain from hurting or deſtroying him. So that, both the ſincerity and the ſtrength of our love to an enemy is moſt diſcernable in our not rejoycing at his fall. Thus one of the Ancients determines this queſtion; The proſperity (ſaith he) or the fall of an enemy, is that which puts us indeed to the tryal of our love. The proſperity of an enemy tryeth us whether we can bear it & not be ſurprized with envy; his fall tryeth us, whether we can ſee it, or hear of it, and not be ſurprized with joy. And doubtleſs, He that is troubled at his enemies proſperity, will alſo rejoyce at his calamity. So that the greateſt tryal of true Goſpel love to an enemy, lieth in the mortification of all ſuch Joys. And how hard it is not to rejoyce at the hurt of an enemy, or of one that hates us, no man knows but he that hath been hated and hurt by an enemy. A man may for ever forbear to hurt his enemy, or to lay violent hands on him, and yet he may heartily wiſh his deſtruction by the hand of others. And he that rejoyceth at the hurt of another, may rather be judged to want power then a will to hurt him himſelf; or that he forbears to hurt him that hated him rather becauſe he was afraid of hurting and endangering himſelf by doing it, then becauſe he had had no mind to do it. And therefore Job puts himſelf upon the higheſt and ſureſt tryal, whether his heart were right in this thing, while he ſaith, If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me.

Further, Conſider how love riſeth by ſeveral ſteps or degrees.

Firſt, To do a Friend good is a great act of love; yet it is not ſo great a curteſie to do good to a Friend, as it is a wickedneſs to do him hurt. Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend?

Secondly, It is a great act of love to bear wrong done by an enemy patiently; yet not ſo great as freely to forgive him that wrong.

Thirdly, It is a great act of love, not to hurt an enemy when we have power to do it; yet it is a greater to do him good; or to repair, in what we may, his honour. When Cæſar commanded the Statues of Pompey, which ſome had pul'd down, to be ſet up again; Cicero told him, That in reſtoring the Statues of Pompey he had erected his own.

Cæſari cum ſtatuas Pompeii dejectas erigi juſſit, Cicero dixit; Pompeii ſtatuas reſtituendo, tuas defixiſti.

Fourthly, Not to rejoyce at the miſery of an enemy, is an act of perfect charity.

Fifthly, To mourn at the fall of an enemy, is an act of pureſt pity.

From theſe ſeveral ſteps of love, the queſtion receives a clearer anſwer, why Job doth not expreſs his Integrity in this point, by ſaying he loved or did good to him that hated him, but by ſaying, he rejoyced not at his deſtruction.

Here Firſt, If we duly conſider what kind of man Job was (as appears both by the teſtimony which was given him by God (Chap. 1. 1.) and by that which he gave of himſelf, as in the preſence and fear of God in the 29. Chap. of this Book) we may well ſtand and wonder how he could have an enemy, or why any man ſhould hate him, Job, both as a man, and as a Magiſtrate, deſerved to be (as a Great Prince was once called) The delight of Mankind. He was to the poor ſo curteous, ſo merciful to his friends, ſo juſt to all, that ſurely all men had reaſon to delight in him, yea to make him their delight, yet he had enemies, and ſuch as maligned him; If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me.

Hence Obſerve, Good men, even the beſt of men, they who love God, and are loved of God, are often hated, extreamly hated among men.

David, A man after Gods own heart, complains of that hearty hatred which he found in and from the world (Pſal. 69.4.) They that hate me without cauſe, are more then the hairs of my head; How many they are no man can tell, neither could David tell how many enemies he had, not only becauſe he had many ſecret enemies whom he knew not, but becauſe his very known enemies were ſo many, that (according to common language) they were innumerable.

Enmity is rooted and fixt in the hearts of all natural men againſt holy men; And though it be not always ſeen working, yet it is always at work. Thus the Lord told the Serpent, that is the Devil, who had abuſed the Serpent to be inſtrumental for the fall of man (Gen. 3. 15.) I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between her ſeed and thy ſeed; that is, between the Godly and the wicked: The ſpiritual ſeed of the Serpent, hates, and they cannot but hate the ſpiritual ſeed of the woman; 'tis their nature to do it, and therefore they muſt needs do it. The fire ſhall as ſoon loſe its heat, or a ſtone its weight, as a natural man his hatred of thoſe that are ſpiritual. God himſelf is hated by all ungodly men; They are enemies to him in their mind by wicked works (Col. 1. 21.) and ſo they are to all thoſe who bear his image. The Apoſtle puts theſe two together (Rom. 1. 30.) Back-biters, haters of God; No wonder it they back-bite men, who hate God. And as Chriſt hath forewarn'd (Matth. 10. 25.) If they have called the Maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more ſhall they call them of his houſhold? All true Believers are of the houſhold of Jeſus Chriſt; yea they are his members. Chriſt our head was hated by the world; and therefore his members muſt look for hatred while they are in the world. This enmity brake forth into act as early as it could; The ſecond man that ever was born in the world was hated by him who in nature was the Firſt born; Cain hated his Brother, and his hatred concluded in the murder of his Brother (Gen. 4. 5, 8.) The Apoſtle John ſheweth us of what linage Cain was, while he exhorts to love (1 Epiſt. 3. 11, 12.) This is the meſſage that ye have heard from the beginning, that we ſhould love one another. Not as Cain who was of that wicked one and ſlew his Brother. Cain who hated and ſlew his brother, was not ſo much Adams ſon as the Devils ſon; and that he was ſo, is clear by the reaſon which the Apoſtle aſſigns why he ſlew him, even becauſe his own works were evil, and his Brothers righteous. That was all the reaſon which he had to hate him; and no other appearing reaſon had Job given any man to hate him, but becauſe he was perfect and upright, a man that feared God and eſchewed evil. As the Fleſh which is in a Believer hates (wherefore elſe doth it luſt againſt and continually oppoſe) the Spirit (Gal. 5. 17.) ſo they who are only fleſh, luſt againſt thoſe who are ſpiritual, or who (as 'tis ſaid of Iſaac in oppoſition to Iſmael, who was born after the fleſh) are born after the Spirit. For theſe alſo are contrary one to the other, (which is the reaſon given by the Apoſtle in the other Text, why there is ſuch an endleſs War between Fleſh and Spirit in a Believer) yea, There is a five-fold contrariety between a Godly and a wicked man.

Firſt, They are contrary in their nature; unholineſs (by reaſon of ſin) is the nature of a wicked man, and holineſs (through grace) is the nature of a godly man; He not only eſcapeth the corruption which is in the world through luſt, but is made a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1. 4.)

Secondly, They have a contrary pedegree and Original. It's ſaid of Cain, he was of the wicked one, that is, the Devil; but Saints are born of God, he is their Father.

Thirdly, They are contrary in their courſe; The Godly walk in the way of Gods Commandments, in the narrow way; the wicked walk in the way of their own hearts, in the broad way.

Fourthly, They are contrary not only as to their external courſe, but as to their internal motions, their hopes and their fears, their joyes and their ſorrows (theſe are the motions of the Soul) are as contrary as their natures are, or as the four winds of Heaven are.

Fifthly, and laſtly, They are contrary in their ends; taking the end in a double notion.

Firſt, As end imports our aim and deſign; A godly mans chief aim is the glory of God; A wicked man aims at himſelf chiefly, or at ſelf-advancement in all he doth; God is not in all his thoughts (Pſal. 10. 4.) that is, not at all in his thoughts, either to mind his word as his rule, or his glory as his end.

Secondly, They are contrary in their end, as end notes the upſhot and concluſion of all. Mark the perfect man (ſaith David Pſal. 37. 37, 38.) and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace. But the tranſgreſſors ſhall be deſtroyed together, the end of the wicked ſhall be cut off; that is, This ſhall be their end (and 'tis a ſad one) they ſhall be cut off and deſtroyed. Now they who differ in all theſe reſpects, and are under a contrariety of nature, of pedegree, of way, of motion, of end how; is it poſſible but there muſt be enmity and hatred between them? The one is light, the other darkneſs, now as the Apoſtle argues it (2 Cor. 6. 14.) What Communion hath light with darkneſs? No more hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs. What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? No more hath he that believeth with an Infidel. The wicked are called Serpents, Wolves, Lyons, theſe names are not ſpit out of a rayling mouth, or from a ſpleeniſh ſpirit, they are not the evaporations of an angry man, but they are dictates of the holy Spirit, and beſtowed upon them by the moſt wiſe God, who knows unerringly how to call every thing and perſon by a name, moſt ſignificative both of their nature and temper. On the other hand the Godly are called by the ſame Spirit of God, Sheep, Lambs, Doves. And there is not only a difference between theſe, but a contrariety, yea an antipathy as to qualities and principles. Now antipathies are not againſt this or that Individual only, but againſt the whole kind, and eſpecially againſt the moſt eminent individuals of any kind. And therefore becauſe Job was a man ſo eminent and exemplary, both for piety and for Juſtice, he was hated the more. 'Tis the nature of evil men, to hate thoſe that are good, and 'tis their cuſtom the better they are the more to hate them.

Secondly, Whereas Job ſaith, If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me.

Obſerve, Man is very apt to rejoyce in the hurt, or at the fall of thoſe that hate him.

At vindicta bonum vita jucundius ipſa.

Some Heathens have found the revengeful taking away of an enemies life more ſweet to them then their own lives; and while Job profeſſeth he did not, doubtleſs he found a great Combat in himſelf not to do it; 'tis no eaſie thing, not to rejoyce when an enemy falls. Deſire of revenge either upon an apprehenſion of wrong received, or of hatred expreſſed by others againſt us, doth ſo deeply poſſeſs the minds of many, that there's nothing more difficult then to reſtrain it, how difficult then is it to remove and heal it? And ſurely if the beſt men examin their hearts honeſtly and thoroughly, they ſhall find a great deal of this old leven lie hidden in them, even while they are profeſſing againſt it, and think they have purged it out. Who is there that hath not ſome ſecret rejoycings and pleaſing motions within, when he hears of the death or hurt of his enemy? and how hardly can ſome, who are great Maſters at the art of diſſimulation, diſſemble it? As for the groſſer ſort of Mankind they declare this ſin (as Sodom did her other ſins) they hide it not. Yea they proclaim it to all the world, how ſweet revenge is to them, and how much they rejoyce at the deſtruction of thoſe that hate them, and of thoſe whom they themſelves hate. And the Church of God ſaw or rather fore-ſaw thoſe who hated her, ſo forward to triumph in her ruins that ſhe ſends this check and cooler of their paſſion (Mich. 7.8.) Rejoyce not againſt me O mine enemy, when I fall I ſhall ariſe; As if ſhe had ſaid, I know as ſoon as you ſee me down, or hear of my down-fall, you will be rejoycing preſently, but don't rejoyce at my fall; For I ſhall ariſe to your fall. David complains of ſuch malignants (Pſal. 35.15.) In my adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together, yea the abjects gathered themſelves together. It is ſaid (Rev. 11.10.) when the two witneſſes ſhall be ſlain, then they that dwelt upon earth (that is, meer earthly men) ſhall rejoyce over them, and make merry, and ſhall ſend gifts one to another, becauſe theſe two Prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. Now as the wicked ſet themſelves and provoke others to rejoyce at the deſtruction of thoſe they hate; So a godly man hath ſomewhat to do to keep himſelf from rejoycing, when they who hate him are deſtroyed. 'Tis an argument of much grace and holy moderation, when the heart is not lifted up at the fall of an enemy. The paſſion of revenge hath not prevailed ſo far over many as to compel them to contrive and plot evil againſt their enemies, or to lie in wait to act and execute it; yet they can be well enough pleaſed and inwardly delighted when they hear of any evil befalling them: yea ſome think they have diſcharged and paid the whole debt of love to an enemy very fully, if they do neither deviſe nor act miſchief againſt him, when as in the mean time they nouriſh ſecret riſings in their Souls againſt him; and upon reports of his deſtruction ſecret rejoycings at it; yet revenge in the affections is altogether as ſinful before God (though not at all pœnal among men) as that which breaks out into open violence; yea, they who rejoyce at the deſtruction of their enemy are ſelf-avengers, as well as they who deſtroy him. And therefore Thirdly, Obſerve, To rejoyce at the deſtruction of an enemy, is to take revenge upon an enemy, 'tis an act of revenge.

Thus the Lord threatned Edom by his Prophet (Obad. Ver. 10.11,12.) For thy violence againſt thy brother Jacob ſhame ſhall cover thee, and thou ſhalt be cut off for ever. But what was this violence, which Edom, the poſterity of Eſau did to the deſcendants of Jacob? It doth not appear in this context of the Prophet that they actually did them violence, but they conſented to and were well pleaſed with the violence which was done them by the Babylonians, and ſo 'tis explained in the next verſe, In the day that thou ſtoodeſt on the other ſide, in the day that ſtrangers carried away his forces, and forreiners entred into his gates, and caſt lots upon Jeruſalem, even thou waſt as one of them; that is, Thou waſt as one of them that had a hand in his ruin. And hence that prayer of the Church (Pſal. 137.7.) Remember O Lord, the children of Edom, in the day of Jeruſalem; who ſaid, raſe it, raſe it, even to the foundation thereof; They did not raſe it themſelves, but they encouraged thoſe who did it. Thus they were as one of them; And the Prophet ſhews further, how they were as one of them, by rejoycing, and by being well pleaſed to ſee their brethren carried into captivity (Ver. 12.) Thou ſhouldeſt not have rejoyced over the children of Judah in the day of their deſtruction. This their rejoycing rendred them ſelf-revengers, though they did not ſo much as touch their brethren. To be enviouſly troubled at the good of others, and to be rejoycingly pleaſed at the hurt of others, are alike ſinful. David prophecied the deſtruction of Saul his enemy (1 Sam. 26. 10.) As the Lord liveth, the Lord ſhall ſmite him, or his day ſhall come to die, or he ſhall deſcend into battel and periſh; that is, He ſhall either die a natural death, or a violent death, either by ſome immediate hand of God upon him, or by the ſword of the enemy. But, that David was not pleaſed nor rejoyced at the deſtruction of Saul, the Funeral elegy or lamentation which he made at the report of his death, and the ſevere puniſhment of him who hoped for a reward for reporting himſelf (though only in curteſie and commiſeration) the Author of it, do ſufficiently declare (2 Sam. 1.)

But you will ſay, May we not rejoyce at the deſtruction of an Enemy, why not? Did not Moſes and all Iſrael rejoyce with ſinging at the deſtruction of Pharaoh (Exod. 15.) Then ſang Moſes and the children of Iſrael this ſong unto the Lord, and ſpake, ſaying, I will ſing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed glorioſly: the Horſe and his Rider hath he caſt into the Sea. And David himſelf (1 Sam. 25.39.) bleſſeth God for the death of Nabal, who had only been uncivil to him; Bleſſed be the Lord (ſaith he) that hath pleaded the cauſe of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his ſervant from evil, for the Lord hath returned the wickedneſs of Nabal upon his own head. Now to bleſs God for any thing, is to put it among our bleſſings, which is an argument of ſome kind of rejoycing in it. And (Heſt. 8. 15, 16.) When the plot of Haman againſt the Jews was diſcovered and defeated, and Haman, who hated them, hanged; The Text ſaith, That the City of Shuſhan rejoyced; that is, the Jews in Shuſhan rejoyced, they had light and gladneſs and joy and honour; and it was a good day, a day of feaſting quite through all the Provinces, upon the account of the fall of their enemies. Further, ſaith not Solomon (Pro. 11.10.) When the wicked periſh there is ſhouting; that is, ſhouting for Joy; How then can it be concluded ſinful to rejoyce at the fall or deſtruction of an Enemy, or of thoſe who hate us.

For anſwer to this objection, we muſt diſtinguiſh; Firſt, of Enemies; Secondly, of Joy.

Enemies are of two ſorts; either private, or publick, either enemies to a man, or (as I may ſay) enemies to mankind, eſpecially to a ſort of mankind.

Again, Some are not only publick, but reſolved and incorrigible enemies, they are fixt in their wrath and hatred, in their plottings and deſignings againſt the peace and proſperity of the people of God. Now when we affirm, that 'tis ſinful to rejoyce at the deſtruction of thoſe that hate us, or of our enemies, we are eſpecially to underſtand it of private and perſonal enemies, and not of the enemies of our publick peace, or of Sions proſperity. And yet we may exceed in our rejoycings even at their deſtruction, we muſt therefore diſtinguiſh, as about enemies, ſo about Joy.

Firſt then, there is a joy meerly at the miſchief fallen upon our enemies.

Secondly, There is a joy, becauſe by their fall ſome good or benefit redounds to the publick, as namely, Freedom from civil bondage and bloody perſecution for conſcience ſake, the free paſſage of the Goſpel, and the pure adminiſtrations of worſhip. It is not lawful to rejoyce at the deſtruction of the greateſt or worſt publick Enemies, as it is a miſchief to them, but as it is a good to others, and as their cutting off, cuts them off from an opportunity to do miſchief. With theſe limitations, we may without breach of charity, both be grieved at the proſperity, and rejoyce at the ruin of an Adverſary; Or when God raiſeth up Inſtruments to pull down cruel oppreſſors, or pulls them down himſelf, if we grieve at their miſery, and only rejoyce in and bleſs God for our own mercies and deliverances, we ſin not in our rejoycings. Thus we may be both innocently troubled at the riſing, & glad at the ruin of thoſe who hate us.

Evenire plerumq; ſolet, ut non amiſſa charitate & inimici nos ruina lætificet & rurſum ejus gloria ſine invidiæ culpa nos contriſtet. Greg.

Or take it thus; We muſt not rejoyce, no not at the deſtruction of the worſt enemies, out of a deſire of revenge upon them, or wrath againſt them. But we may rejoyce, Firſt, Becauſe in their fall Glory ariſeth to the name of God.

Secondly, Becauſe the downfal of our oppreſſors, may terrifie others from oppreſſing us.

Thirdly, Becauſe it is a Conviction upon all, that God governs, rules and orders the world (Pſal. 58. 10, 11.) The righteous ſhall rejoyce when he ſeeth the vengeance, ſo that a man ſhall ſay, Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth. When God ſmites the wicked, we ſhould grieve at the miſery of him that is ſmitten, and congratulate the Juſtice of him that ſmote him; that ſo we may neither ſhew our ſelves revengeful towards man, nor unthankful towards God.

Cum perverſum omnipotens percuſſit, condolendum eſt miſeriæ pereuntis, & congaudendum juſtitiæ judicis; ut nec pereunti homini exiſtimemus adverſarii, nec judicanti Deo inveniamur ingrati. Greg. lib. 22. cap. 11.

Fourthly, Becauſe hereby good men are Incouraged in the ſervice of God. Thus Zachary prayed in his Song (Luke 1. 74.) That God would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of all our Enemies, might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our life. Free liberty to ſerve God is one of the choiceſt fruits of the deſtruction of evil men. When the enemies were either appeaſed or ſuppreſſed (Acts 9. 31.) Then had the Churches reſt throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the holy Ghoſt, were multiplied. When theſe ſweet and bleſſed mercies accrew to the Church and people of God, by the fall of Enemies, there's matter of great Joy.

Laſtly, We may rejoyce at the deſtruction of common enemies, becauſe by the viſible demonſtrations of divine diſpleaſure againſt them, ſome may be not only (as was toucht before) convinced of the righteouſneſs of Gods ways, but converted from the error of their own ways. This effect was eminent in the deſtruction of Haman, that profeſſeth enemy of the Jewiſh Nation (Heſt. 8. 17.) Many of the people of the land became Jews, for the fear of the Jews fell upon them. And (which is more matter of rejoycing) ſuch common enemies whoſe perſons ſurvive the deſtruction of their eſtates and powers, may poſſibly be converted themſelves, as perſecuting Saul was (Acts 9.) Affliction and trouble upon ſome enemies hath (through the gracious working of God by it) been a means to humble their hearts, and open their eyes to ſee the hand of God, and his power, againſt which they have ſo long contended, and ſo no longer to kick againſt the pricks. Upon theſe or the like Conſiderations we may rejoyce at the deſtruction of an Enemy, and not otherwiſe, eſpecially not upon any private quarrel or wrong received whatſoever.

And that any other rejoycing in that caſe is not good, appears many ways; But I ſhall only add, that the Law of Moſes (Exod. 23. 4, 5.) commanded the Jews to bring back an enemies beaſt that was gon aſtray; and if they ſaw the Aſs of him that hated them lying under a burden, they might not forbear to help him. Surely, that Law which commanded a charity to the fallen or ſtrayed beaſt of an enemy, did alſo forbid ſuch rejoycing when an enemy himſelf fell, or was deſtroyed. David (Pſal. 35. 13.) was ſo far from rejoycing at the fall of his enemies, that in their ſickneſs and adverſity, He wept and put on ſackcloth; he was as one that mourned. Heathens have done ſomewhat like this of David, though not with Davids ſpirit. The Hiſtory ſaith, Scipio wept at the burning of Carthage: And Titus wept for the miſery brought upon the Jews his enemies, at the ſiege and ſackage of Jeruſalem. Indeed nature ſeems to prompt us a little this way; It being engraven upon the hearts of all men; Not to do that to others which themſelves would not have others do to them: Who would not take it ill, if when his houſe is on fire, or his Ship wrackt at Sea, his neighbour ſhould look on it, or hear of it, laughing and ſaying, I am glad of this, this is as I would have it? If when a Father chaſtens a ſtubborn child, his other children ſhould inſult over him, how unnatural were it? It is much more unnatural for Chriſtians to rejoyce over the ſevere diſpenſations of God towards ſtubborn men, or the deſtruction of their enemies. He hath not the heart of a man in him, much leſs of a Chriſtian, whoſe heart is glad at the miſery of any man. Chriſtian love never acts to the full, but when we love our friends in God, and our enemies for God.

And to keep down rejoycing at the deſtruction of an enemy, remember there are none ſo neer deſtruction as they who rejoyce unduely at the deſtruction of others, though enemies. Upon this ground Solomon prohibits all ſuch joyes (Pro. 24. 17, 18.) Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he ſtumbleth, leſt the Lord ſee it, and it diſpleaſe him, and he turn away his wrath from him. To be glad at the ſtumbling, or to rejoyce at the falling of an enemy, is to be an enemy to our ſelves. He that is glad when his enemy ſtumbles, and rejoyceth at his fall, ſtumbles and falls far worſe himſelf. For as in doing ſo he falls into ſin, which is the worſt kind of falling, ſo he is in danger of falling into ſome worſer miſery then he. God who righteth us by the fall of an enemy, will alſo right himſelf upon us, if we diſpleaſe him by any ſinful rejoycing at his fall. When the Lord (as Solomon here ſaith) turns away his wrath from that enemy in whoſe fall he ſees any rejoyce, he will turn it upon thoſe who rejoyce at his fall. The turning away of Gods wrath from that enemy in whoſe fall any rejoyce, doth not ſignifie that God is reconciled to or well pleaſed with him, but that he is angry and diſpleaſed with thoſe who ſo rejoyce. As he that doth good to his enemy, in ſo doing ſhall heap coals of fire on his head (Rom. 12. 20.) ſo he that is glad at the harms of his enemy, may quickly heap coals of fire upon his own. The whole 25. and 26. Chapters of the Prophecy of Ezekiel are ſpent in ſhewing how God did take vengeance on thoſe who rejoyced at the deſtruction of his people, whom they counted enemies, as you may ſee in reading but the contents of thoſe two Chapters. For a further prevention of ſuch dangerous joys, take this advice; When thine enemy falleth, think thus; I my ſelf am either like him or worſe or better then he. If thou art better, then conſider who made thee to differ. If thou art but ſuch a one as he, much more if thou art worſe then he, remember, that thou haſt cauſe rather to bleſs God, and wonder, that thou art ſpared and ſtandeſt; then to rejoyce that he is ſmitten and fallen.

I ſhall conclude this obſervation, with one inference or Corollary from it.

If it be ſinful to rejoyce at the hurt of thoſe, who have or would do us hurt, what is it then to rejoyce at the hurt of thoſe who either have or would do us good. And if it be ſo ſinful to rejoyce at the hurt of ſuch, what is it to do them hurt? What a wickedneſs is it to vex and moleſt thoſe, who are our friends, and have ſought our peace?

Fourthly, Obſerve, A godly man keeps a ſtrict hand over, and makes a Conſcience of his paſſions, as well as he keeps a ſtrict hand over his actions, and makes a Conſcience of his Converſation.

If but a thought ſtir amiſs he checks it, and will bring it in ſubjection. He watches the motions of his mind as much as or more then the motions of his outward man: This is ſpiritual walking indeed, when we look to our joys, and to our ſorrows, when we look to our hopes, and to our fears, when we look to regulate and moderate theſe inward workings; this is an Argument of a ſpiritual man indeed. Such a one was Job, he would profeſs that he was clear, not only from any revengeful deſtruction of his enemy, but from rejoycing at his deſtruction. If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or (as it follows in the Text.)

Liſt up my ſelf when evil found him.

Here Job diſclaims any uncomely external actings towards a ſuffering enemy. I (ſaith he) did not lift up my ſelf, or as Mr. Broughton tranſlates, beſtir me; that is, in pride or boaſting, as if I would preſently advance upon his ruins, and raiſe my ſelf by his fall.

Καὶ εἶπεν ἡ καρδία μου Εὖγε; & dixit cor meum Euge. 70. In commentariis Græcis repetitur Euge, Euge.

The Septuagint render this part of the verſe as the former, denying all ſecret complacency at the deſtruction of his enemy. If my heart hath ſaid, O well, or this pleaſeth me wonderouſly well. Some of the Greek Commentators double the word; If mine heart hath ſaid, O well, O well, or as it is ſaid in the Pſalm, Aha, aha, ſo would I have it. Thus read, the words are both a continuation and a fuller explication of what he ſaid before, his denial of any cloſe content he took at the ruin of his enemy.

Si Jubilavi cum occurret ei malum Targ. Καὶ ἐπανέστην ὅτι κατέλαβεν αὐτὸν κάκωσις. Si inſurrexi quando apprehendit eum afflictio Sym. Aliquid hoſtile affert illa exultatio.

But I rather underſtand theſe words, Or lift up my ſelf, &c. Of that which is external; As if Job had ſaid, If I have uſed any vaunting behaviour, or triumphing geſtures when I heard of or ſaw that evil had found my enemy.

Though evil in this latter part of the verſe, and deſtruction in the former, be the ſame for the matter or kind, yet ſome conceive they are not the ſame for degree, every deſtruction is an evil, but every evil is not a deſtruction; and if we take evil here for ſome leſſer trouble or loſs (Mr. Broughton renders the Hebrew, by that word, when he found loſs) this greatens and increaſes Job's charity, who as he did not rejoyce at the utter ruin of him that hated him, ſo he did not ſo much as give himſelf a liberty (which ſome good men in like caſes take) to make himſelf merry with (as we ſpeak) any ſhrewd turn which was done to his enemy. Thus Job clears himſelf within from rejoycing, and without from inſulting when miſchief of any kind or degree befel or found him, who ſought to do him a miſchief. The ſignificancy of theſe words, when evil found him, deſerves to be a little enquired into before I give the notes. If I lifted up my ſelf,

When evil found him.] 'Tis an uſual Scripture phraſe, to ſay evil finds a man when he falls into it. (Deut. 31. 17.) The Lord telling the people of Iſrael what they muſt expect in caſe of diſobedience, concludes in general, That many evils and troubles ſhall befal them; The Hebrew is, Many evils and troubles ſhall find them (Pſal. 116. 3.) The pains of Hell gat hold upon me; the Hebrew is, found me: this Finding may have a three-fold interpretation.

Firſt, A thing is found (as we ſay) by accident; ſo that is found which was never ſought for: A man travelling upon the high way, may find a purſe of Gold, or a piece of money, he went not out to ſeek it, but he found it; though there be a providence of God in all ſuch findings, yet, as to man, they are accidental. Thus it is ſaid (Deut. 19. 5.) When a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour, to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a ſtroak with the Axe to cut down the Tree, and the head ſlippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, &c. The Hebrew is, it findeth his neighbour: The man did not go out with a murtherous purpoſe or an intent to kill his neighbour, but the head found him and ſlew him beſides his intention.

Secondly, Finding notes an earneſt purſuit of, or ſearching for a thing which we either once had but have loſt, or have a deſire to enjoy. This is Finding upon enquiry, and is as the moſt common ſence of the word in other places, ſo the ſpecial ſence of it in this; If I have lift up my ſelf when evil purſued and found him: As if Job had ſaid, When divine vengeance followed and overtook mine enemy, I did not lift up my ſelf.

Hence Note, Judgment will ſeek after ungodly men, till it finds and overtakes them.

Let a man hide his ſin as much as he can, God will find it out, and let a ſinner hide himſelf as much as he can, puniſhment will find him out; Though he goeth into the clefts of the Rock, though he deſcends to the depths of the Sea, yet puniſhment will find him out (Pſal. 140. 11.) Evil ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. 'Tis an alluſion to hounds that are of a quick ſent, and purſue the game with pleaſure; they do not ſee the deer, or the hare, yet they follow upon the ſent. And though ſometimes they have a very cold and dead ſent, yet they will follow and work it out; Thus evil ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him: and though ſometimes he hath as it were, got out of the view or ſight of evil, and thinks himſelf under covert, yet theſe evils like a company of greedy hounds, will purſue, till they have overtaken and overthrown him. That of Moſes to the two Tribes and a half, is full to this purpoſe, when they deſir'd to ſtay on the other ſide of Jordan; he there gave them a grave exhortation to ſearch their own hearts, and then concluded, If ye will not do ſo (according to my counſel) then, (ſaith he) Behold ye have ſinned againſt the Lord, and be ſure your ſin will find you out (Numb. 32. 23.) As if he had ſaid, You may make fair pretences to me, but if you do not as I have counſelled you, to go over Jordan armed to help ſettle your Brethren in their poſſeſſions: You have ſinned againſt the Lord, and though I find you not out, yet your ſin will, what excuſes ſoever you make, what colours ſoever you put upon it, you will find this to be your ſin; And your ſin (in the effects or puniſhments of it) will find you out. The Lord threaten'd his ancient people the Jews by the Prophet, That he would take a courſe with them, notwithſtanding all their Refuges and hiding places; And therefore he gives it under thoſe elegant metaphors of fiſhing and hunting (Jer. 16. 16.) Behold I will ſend Fiſhers among you, and they ſhall fiſh you; And after that I will ſend for many hunters, and they ſhall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the Rocks; That is, you think your ſelves ſafe as a Fiſh under water, but I will ſend ſuch among you as ſhall caſt in their hooks and nets to take you; And though you get to your Coverts as wild beaſts, yet I will ſend hunters to you, that ſhall purſue you, and overtake you, and find you out.

Thirdly, This manner of ſpeech (when evil found him) notes the ſecurity and careleſneſs of a ſinner; He is often without ſo much as the leaſt ſuſpition, or thought of evil, when evil is ready to catch hold of him; evil finds the ſinner when he doth not think of it, or when he leaſt expects it.

Quod inveniſſet eum malum. i. e. ex inſperato ei ſuperveniſſet. Aquin.

Hence Note, Unlookt for evils overtake them ſooneſt who run on faſteſt in doing evil.

They ſhall ſay as Ahab to Eliah, Haſt thou found me O mine enemy? yea, Eliah found him; Ahab had been ſeeking Eliah, but could not find him; But Eliah found Ahab. Thus will every ſecure ſinner be forced at laſt to ſay of the evils which God ſends upon him, Have you found me? They who have moſt cauſe to expect evil, expect it leaſt; And they who are always doing evil, put the evil day, and the evil of the day furtheſt from themſelves. Whenſoever evil comes and finds them, it finds them unprepared, it finds them unfitted, it finds them (as that Text in Luke which ſpeaks of the evil ſervant) eating, and drinking, and beating their fellow-ſervants; they are quite upon another buſineſs, they are hot in doing evil, and they little think, much leſs, fear that evil will find them. If I lift up my ſelf when evil found him.

Laſtly, From this whole verſe we may Obſerve, how much the patience of Beleevers differs from the patience of the beſt of heathens, whether in bearing troubles, or forgiving injuries. It is granted that ſeveral of them have acted very high to appearance in the exerciſe of that vertue. Ariſtotle adviſed Alexander the Great, that he looking upon himſelf as a man above all men, ſhould never take notice of or be moved at the ill words and reproachful ſpeeches of any, but neglect them. When one ſtruck Cato unawares in a bath, and preſently askt his pardon; Cato anſwered, I do not remember that any man ſtruck me. He thought it better not to acknowledg that he had been ſtrucken, then condeſcend to pardon him that did it. And when a boiſterous perſon abuſed Socrates, beating his face (as we ſay) black and blew, all the revenge he took was to write upon his own Forehead, Such a man did it. Yet theſe were but Heatheniſh boaſts and ſhadows of patience, not the true vertue, much leſs the grace of patience. Here was no real ſubmiſſion to the hand of God who permitted theſe diſpenſations, as there was in David when Shimei reviled and curſed him; here was no ſence or acknowledgment of their own vileneſs, no ſign of chariay, but a deep contempt of thoſe who wronged them, joyned with a ſwelling prid and an inſuperable height of ſpirit in their own ſuppoſed worthineſs or greatneſs.

All which are at the furtheſt diſtance and remove from that patience and charity which appeared actually in Job, and ſhould be the temper of every Chriſtian under ſuch incivilities and enmities acted towards him by his enemies, or thoſe that hate him.

Verſe 30. (Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin by wiſhing a curſe to his Soul)

We (which ſome other tranſlaters do not) read theſe words in a parentheſis; and I grant there is a full ſence without them; yet they make the ſence much fuller. For as in the former verſe Job proteſted that he neither ſecretly rejoyced, nor outwardly boaſted either at the total ruin and deſtruction which befel, or at any leſſer evil which found him that hated him; ſo in this verſe he proceeds to purge himſelf from all revengeful ſpeeches, or from venting his heart at his mouth, by wiſhing either deſtruction or any evil to him that hated him; as if he had ſaid, Both my heart and my tongue is clean in this matter, I have not rejoyced when trouble came upon my enemy, much leſs did I deſire or wiſh that it might come upon him.

Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin.

We tranſlate mouth, the Text is, palate, which is a part of the mouth; and ſo Mr. Broughton renders, No, I let not my palate ſin; The tongue and palate are parts of the mouth, and as all of them joined are the inſtruments of ſpeech, ſo any of them alone are expreſſed to be ſo in Scripture; Neither have I Suffered my palate or mouth to ſin.

ולא נתתי Non dedi; i.e. non ſivi, non permiſi ſic paſſim ſumitur verbum נתן dedit, quando cum infinitivo aut Gerundio conſtruitur. Druſ.

The Hebrew is, Neither have I given my mouth to ſin, that is, I have not given way to my mouth, nor indulged this liberty to my tongue; I have not taken off the bridle of a watchful reſtraint from my lips, nor let my words run at random without controul. So this form of ſpeech is uſed in the 9. Chapter of this Book (v. 18.) where Job complaining of the preſſures, the continual preſſures that burdned him, ſaith he (that is, God) will not ſuffer me to take my breath; the Hebrew is, he will not give me, (that is, leave) to take my breath. Thus (*Gen.*20.6.) when Abraham by diſſembling (at leaſt) that Sarah was his wife put her into a danger of being abuſed by Abimelech, who yet being rebuked by God in a dream, could plead, In the integrity of my heart and innocency of my hands have I done this; yea (ſaith the Lord) I know thou didſt this in the integrity of my heart; for I with-held thee from ſinning againſt me; therefore ſuffered I thee not to touch her; As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou waſt ready to have given way to thy affections, but I would not; I would not ſuffer thee to run into that error. In this manner Moſes (Numb. 21.23.) expreſſeth that unkind ſtop which the King of the Amorites gave the Children of Iſrael in their march to Canaan, And Sihon would not ſuffer Iſrael to paſs through his border; the Hebrew is, Sihon would not give Iſrael (that is, freedom) to paſs through his border. And thus 'tis ſaid in that propheſie concerning Chriſt (*Pſal.*16.10.) Neither wilt thou ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption, or, thou wilt not give corruption any power over thy holy one; corruption (had it been let alone to take its courſe) would have ſeiſed upon the body of Chriſt, as well as upon the body of any other man, but God did not give corruption leave to do ſo, he would not ſuffer it to take its courſe againſt him. To die was enough to ſatisfie the penalty of the Law; there was no neceſſity that the body of Chriſt ſhould corrupt to do it; yea if the body of Chriſt had corrupted in the grave, his ſatisfaction had not appeared. The ſame language is uſed in another Pſalm, to ſignifie preſervation from civil corruption (Pſal. 121. 3.) He will not ſuffer thy foot to be moved; that is, none ſhall be able to diſturb thy peace; the Text is, He will not give thy foot to be moved; as if he had ſaid, Many will endeavour to caſt thee down, but by the power and providence of God, thou ſhalt be upheld and maintain'd firm in thy place or ſtanding. This word is uſed again (Ezek. 14 8.) where the Lord tells his people, that if any of them coming to a Prophet to enquire of him, ſhould yet ſet up Idols in his heart, and put the ſtumbling block of his iniquity before his face, he would ſet his face againſt that man, and make him a ſign and a proverb; the Hebrew is, I will give my face againſt him, that is, I will give leave to my wrath and fierce indignation to proceed in full force againſt him. The face in Scripture ſignifies, as love and favour, ſo wrath and anger, becauſe there is uſually a diſcovery or an image of theſe paſſions printed upon and diſcernable in the face. Once more, the Prophet Daniel ſpeaks in this form (Chap. 9. 3.) to ſhew how he put out all the powers of his Soul wreſtling in prayer with God, When I underſtood by Books the number of the Years whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the Prophet that he would accompliſh Seventy Years in the deſolations of Jeruſalem. Then I ſet my face unto the Lord God to ſeek by prayers and ſupplications, with faſting and ſack-cloth and aſhes. The Text is, I gave my face, that is, I gave my ſelf wholly up to theſe duties of prayer and faſting, I put no reſtraint no ſtop nor check at all upon my Spirit, but let it go forth with all its might, ſtriving and working with God for the accompliſhment of that gracious promiſe to and propheſie concerning his captivated people.

Thus we ſee the force and uſage of the word throughout the Scriptures of the old Teſtament; and in this ſence we are to underſtand Job's profeſſion here, neither have I ſuffered (or given) my mouth to ſin; as if he hed ſaid, my mouth was forward and ready enough, if it might have had leave, or if I would have given it liberty to have wiſhed ill to my enemy, but I did not ſuffer my mouth to run into that ſin.

Dare gutture ad peccandum eſt Hebraiſmus, pro peccare gutture ſive ore ſive lingua, quæ ſunt formandæ vocis inſtrumenta; vel eſt quicquid in buccam venit ſine fræno effundere.

I grant it is a harder matter not to ſuffer the heart to ſin, then not to ſuffer the mouth to ſin, and therefore when Job had ſaid in the former verſe, that he had put a ſtop upon his heart, he did more then ſay (which he ſaith here) that he had put a ſtop upon his tongue; the motions of the Soul are leſs in our power then thoſe of the bodily members; yet to ſhew that he was compleat in this point of love even towards his enemies, Job expreſſeth it by both. It is uſual in Scripture to ſpeak of that firſt, which is hardeſt to be done, or not to be done, and then of that which is eaſieſt; making the latter a ſign of the former, or making the latter which is eaſieſt more credible, when we have overcome that which is more difficult. When Job had once aſſured us that his heart did not run over in rejoycing, we may eaſily believe, that his mouth did not break out in evil ſpeaking; Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin.

Solet Scriptura non ſemel, quod difficilius eſt præmittere, & quæ minora ſunt poſtponere ut ſignum ſint præcedentium aut ex præcedentibus facilius credantur. Sanct.

Firſt, In that he ſaith he did not ſuffer or give way to any paſſion, or diſtemper of his Spirit to vent it ſelf at his tongue.

> Obſerve, the corruptions of a good man may preſs him, and preſs him ſore, both to do and ſpeak ſinfully.

Job was hard put to it, when he ſaith, he did not ſuffer his mouth to ſin: He had much ado to lock up his lips. Moſes was a very holy and a meek man, the meekeſt man on the face of the Earth, yet corruption was ſo ſtirred in him, that once it prevailed over him, and foiled him ſorely; he could not hold his tongue, but (being vext and angry) ſpake unadviſedly with his lips (Pſal. 106.33.) The power of innate corruption is chiefly ſeen in two things.

Firſt, In the oppoſition that it makes againſt our doing of good; this the Apoſtle treats of at large (Rom. 7. 18, 23.) When I would do good evil is preſent with me: When to will is preſent, how to perform I know not; why not? What hindred? His corruptions ſtood up in oppoſition and rebelled againſt the good he was about to do, as he confeſſed at the 23. verſe; I ſee another law in my members warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law (that is, the power) of ſin, which is in my members. His corruptions brought ſuch an Army againſt him, that (as 'tis ſaid Gal. 5. 17. upon the ſame conſideration of the luſtings of the fleſh againſt the Spirit) he could not do the thing that he would. Luſt would always ſtop us wholly and it uſually clogs us extreamly when we are addreſſing our ſelves to any holy duty. And therefore we are exhorted (Heb. 12. 1.) as to lay aſide every weight (of worldly encumbrance) ſo, the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us (any ſpecial indwelling corruption) that ſo we may run with patience the race that is ſet before us; as a man that hath a burthen at his back, or a long garment dangling about his heels is unfit to run a race, ſo are they for the ſpiritual race who are entangled with the love of the World, or with any ſinful compliances.

Secondly, Natural corruption beſtirs it ſelf, and ſhews its power by provoking and preſſing us, by goading and moving us to that which is evil. Of this the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 1. 14.) Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man; that is, he doth not tempt any man to the evil of ſin; God doth not provoke nor blow up any mans luſts or paſſions, his pride or covetouſneſs. He tempts many by putting them to the harder exerciſes and ſervices of grace; but he tempts no man by drawing out or ſtirring up his corruptions. How then is man tempted? The Apoſtle anſwers in the next words; But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away with his own luſt and inticed. 'Tis luſt which inticeth, and by inticement draws man to ſin. Uſually the Devil ſets luſt a work, and luſt ſets man a-work, yet luſt doth often ſet man a-work, though the Devil ſtand by and do nothing. Our luſts, that is, our luſtful and deceitful hearts are a fountain of ſin, 'tis no eaſie matter to reſiſt, and 'tis extreamly hard to conquer the motions of them. Thus the power of luſt is great, both in oppoſing us when we would do good, and in provoking us to do evil. Job's mouth would fain have been ſpeaking unduly, but he did not ſuffer it.

Secondly, Obſerve, Moſt men, that I ſay not all men, ſuffer themſelves to run into, more evils or ſins, both by ſpeech and practice, then they are neceſſitated unto, or, they commit many ſins which they might avoid.

As ſome do even invite temptations and provoke their luſts to activeneſs, ſo there are none ſo active as they ought and might to reſiſt temptations, and repel their luſtful provocations. Though a man in his natural ſtate hath no power to do that which is properly and ſpiritually good, yet man even in a natural ſtate hath a power to ſtop himſelf in ſomewhat that is evil; a natural man may put ſome check upon his luſts and corruptions, he may bridle and bind them more then he doth. And as there is no natural man that gives himſelf ſuch a ſtop as he might againſt ſin; ſo there are very few (if any) godly men who do it. They that have grace, rarely improve their grace to the utmoſt in hindering and checking the torrent of their corrupt affections. As natural men are led captive by the Devil at his will, ſo the beſt of men fail in ſetting their renewed will reſolutely againſt the Devil. The Apoſtle doth more then imply the deficiency of believers, both in reſiſting luſtful motions from within, and ſatanical ſolicitations from without, while he ſaith (Rom. 6. 12, 13.) Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal bodies, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof. Neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin; but yield your ſelves unto God; As if he had ſaid, Your corruptions will move, and Satan will ſolicit you, they will be calling upon you to give up the members of your Bodies, and the powers of your Soul as inſtruments or weapons of unrighteouſneſs, but I exhort you to turn a deaf ear to them, and hearken only to the call of God, who commands you to yield your ſelves unto him, as they are alive from the dead, and your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God; that is, make it appear that you have received a new ſpiritual life, by your yielding to God, and by your not yielding to the Devil: Do not give up any of your members at his ſummons, let not any luſt have your tongue, or hand, or eye, or foot. As Moſes would not yield Pharaoh a Hoof to ſtay behind from the ſervice of God, ſo let us yield a hair of our head to be an inſtrument of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin, how ſtrongly ſoever Satan or luſt move for it; and to be ſure they will not be wanting in moving. Let a man (which is the particular caſe of the Text) be wronged, or at leaſt think he is, preſently he hears the Devil who is a revengeful Spirit, or his own Spirit of revenge calling for his underſtanding to plot ſome way of revenge, for his heart to wiſh it, for his tongue to threaten it, or for his hand to act and execute it. In all ſuch caſes we ſhould peremptorily deny to yield ſo much as a little finger to ſuch a ſervice. And he that doth ſo, is indeed (through grace) a Maſter of himſelf, and a Conqueror over Satan. But we may lament that there are ſo few of theſe Conquerors and Maſters of themſelves, ſo few watchful keepers of theſe Inſtruments, of theſe weapons of unrighteouſneſs; moſt quickly and eaſily yield them up and let them out, to the ſervice either of this Spirit of revenge, or of ſome other evil Spirit. Where are the men that can ſay (as Job here did) in truth, we have not ſuffered our mouth to ſin, when we have been tempted to ſpeak ſinfully; we have not ſuffered our eye to ſin, when we have been tempted to look wantonly; we have not ſuffered our hand to ſin, when we have been tempted to act unrighteouſly. A truely godly man can ſay, that he ſuffers when he ſins, that is, he is rather paſſive then active in ſinning, being buried and violently over-born by temptation, but this will be the charge and condemnation of the World, that they have ſuffered themſelves to ſin. Peter rebuked Ananias (Acts 5. 3.) becauſe he had yielded up his tongue, an inſtrument unto ſin, Why hath Satan filled thine heart, to lie to the Holy Ghoſt, and to keep back part of the price of the land? Why didſt thou yield up thy tongue at the command of thy covetous, or thy unbelieving heart? Why hath Satan filled thy heart? Thou mighteſt have denied Satan when he tempted thee to deny part of the price. Thus the Lord may ſay to moſt ſinners, why hath Satan ſo prevailed? Why have you yielded your hearts and Conſciences as Slave and Captives to him, without ever ſtriking ſtroak for it? Conſider this thing, it is matter of great glory not to yield our ſelves at the call or command of corruption, and it is not only the ſin but the ſhame of man, to ſuffer himſelf to be captivated by the command, or to be at the beck and diſpoſal of his luſts.

To clear this a little further, I ſhall ſhew by what ſteps or degrees the Judgment of God acts towards ſinners in this thing, as alſo by what ſteps or degrees the luſts of men work towards the enſlaving of themſelves in this moſt miſerable bondage of corruption.

Firſt, God in way of puniſhment ſuffers men to be overcome and drawn away by their luſts. Thus the Apoſtle ſaith (Acts 14 16.) God ſuffered all Nations (except the Jewiſh Nation) to walk in their own ways; that is, he did not check or ſtop them in their ſinful ways and workings, as he did his own people the Jews (for we are not to underſtand the Apoſtle abſolutely, but comparatively) there never was any man, much leſs a Nation of men in the world, who had not ſome ſtop againſt ſin, the ſtop of the light of nature at leaſt; but every Nation hath not had the ſtop of Ordinances, the preaching of the Word, the motions of the Spirit, theſe the Jews God's peculiar people had when the old Gentiles had them not; they were ſuffered to go on in their own ways without the light of the Word, or help of holy Ordinances. Thus it is ſaid (Pſal. 147. 19, 20.) He ſheweth his word unto Jacob, his Statutes and his Judgments unto Iſrael: He hath not dealt ſo with any Nation, and as for his Judgments they have not known them. In this ſence God ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own ways; he gave them not his Word, his Statutes, his Judgments, to ſhew them his ways, or to hinder them in their own, and this was a ſore Judgment.

Secondly, God doth not only ſuffer Nations and Perſons to walk in their own ways, but ſometimes (when his wrath is boiled up to the higheſt) he gives up Nations and Perſons to their own hearts luſt (Rom. 1. 26.) For this cauſe God gave them up to vile affections: For even their Women did change the natural uſe into that which is againſt nature; and (verſ. 28.) God gave them over to a reprobate mind (or a mind void of Judgment) to do thoſe things which are not convenient. God did not only leave them to their luſts, but let them work wickedneſs without check and control, but in a Judiciary way he put them into the hand of their luſt, and (as 'tis ſaid in that dreadful prophetical threat, Pſal. 69. 27.) He added iniquity to their iniquity; that is, he gave them full ſcope in ſin, making their latter iniquity the puniſhment of their former iniquity. The fulfilling of which threat upon the Jews, who maliciouſly perſecuted and crucified Chriſt, is ſet down at large by the Apoſtle (1 Theſ. 2. 15, 16.) Who both killed the Lord Jeſus, and their own Prophets, and have perſecuted us: And they pleaſe not God, and are contrary to all men; forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved, to fill up their ſins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the utmoſt. The Apoſtle ſaith not, wrath is come upon them, but (not anter) the wrath is come upon them to the utmoſt; that is, the wrath threatned in the Pſalm laſt cited, Add iniquity to their iniquity; for thus the Jews were given up to the wrathfulneſs of their own Spirits againſt Chriſt and the Goſpel, to fill up their ſins alway, as the Apoſtle there ſpeaks. And ſo God added iniquity to their iniquity, and did not let them come (as it follows in that place of the Pſalm) into his righteouſneſs; that is, into the righteouſneſs of Chriſt by faith, but left them as to the pollution of their own luſts, ſo to a Juſtification by their own works (Rom. 10.3.) which was a greater judgment then the other, and the perfecting of the threatning to the utmoſt.

Thus we ſee how God in his ſecret but moſt righteous Judgment, firſt ſuffers men to walk in their own ways, and then, ſecondly, gives them up to their own hearts luſt. Now conſider alſo how and by what ſteps the luſts of men work to the enthralling of themſelves unto ſin.

Firſt, Moſt men ſuffer themſelves to be carried away by every temptation; they never check any ſinful motion, they ſay not to their hearts, what are you thinking? Nor to their mouths, what are you ſpeaking? nor to your hands, are you doing? Nor to their feet, whither are ye walking? But ſuffer heart, and tongue, hand, and foot, to run what courſe they will, and the beſt of Saints take not ſuch a ſtrict courſe, either with their hearts or tongues, hands and feet, as they ought.

Secondly, Many do not only ſuffer themſelves to ſin, but give themſelves up to ſin. That's the word which the Pſalmiſt uſeth, while he ſpeaks of ſinning by word (Pſal. 50. 19.) Thou giveſt thy tongue to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit. And that's the Apoſtles word (Eph. 4. 19.) while he ſpeaks of ſinfull works, Who being paſt feeling, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. They who give themſelves to ſin, do more then ſuffer themſelves to ſin; they as 'tis ſaid (Pſal. 36. 4.) Set themſelves in a way that is not good; that is, in an evil way, or in the worſt of ways; yea they (in direct oppoſition to that of the Apoſtle, (Rom. 12. 1.) preſent their bodies a dead ſacrifice, unholy and abominable unto God, acceptable to the Devil, which is their unreaſonable or unworldly ſervice.

Thirdly, There are ſome who do more then give, they ſell themſelves to do evil; as 'tis ſaid of Ahab (1 Kings 21. 20.) There was none like Ahab (he was a wicked man by himſelf) who ſold himſelf to work wickedneſs in the ſight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife ſtirred up. And ſo the Lord ſpeaks of thoſe Apoſtatizing Idolatrizing Jews (2 Kings 17. 17.) They cauſed their Sons and their Daughters to paſs through the fire, and uſed divination and inchantments, and ſold themſelves to do evil in the ſight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger. How divinely contrary was Job's practice to the practice of all theſe! He did not ſuffer himſelf to ſin, theſe not only ſuffered, but gave up and ſold themſelves to do evil. All men are given to ſin by nature, but ſome do by a kind of covenant give up themſelves unto ſin; men are given to this or that ſin by their temper, thus one is given to anger, another to wantonneſs; this is bad enough, but for any to give themſelves to ſin is far worſe, and they who ſell themſelves to do wickedly, do worſt of all. 'Tis the affliction of Saints that they are ſold under ſin (Rom. 7. 14.) and 'tis the joy and affectation of ſome wicked men to ſell themſelves unto ſin. They do ill enough who ſuffer themſelves to do evil, but they are extreamly wicked who devote and dedicate themſelves to it, eſpecially they who make a compact with the Devil, who make a bargain and ſale of themſelves to do it. Bleſſed and holy is that man who can ſay and ſay truly what Job here did, I have not ſuffered my mouth to ſin.

Thirdly, Obſerve, A godly man watcheth over himſelf, over his mouth eſpecially, leſt ſin break out there.

David gave this counſel to others (Pſal. 34. 13.) Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from ſpeaking guile. And he took this courſe and counſel himſelf (Pſal. 39. 1,2.) I ſaid I will take heed to my ways, that I ſin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. I was dumb with ſilence, I held my peace, even from good, and my ſorrow was ſtirred. Thus David, religious David (as Job) did not ſuffer his mouth to ſin. And the Apoſtle James tells us (Chap. 1. 26.) If any man ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that mans Religion is vain. That, ſuch a mans Religion is vain, may be underſtood two ways. Firſt, that he hath no Religion, nothing but a ſhew of it, that which hath nothing but a ſhew, ſhews it ſelf to be nothing. Meer appearances are nullities. Some who ſeem Religious, ſpeak ſo vainly, that their Religion is as vain as their ſpeech, and we may argue that the one is nothing, becauſe the other is worſe then nothing. Secondly, ſuch a mans Religion is vain, becauſe his Religion doth not perform its office, which is, to bridle up his tongue from ſinful ſpeakings, and all the members of his body from ſinful actings. That which doth not reach the end to which it was appointed and deſigned is a vain thing. Surely David was afraid his Religion might fall under this ſentence of vanity, when he prayed ſo heartily (Pſ. 141. 3.) Set a watch (O Lord) before my mouth, keep the door of my lips. God who is infinitely glorious will yet condeſcend to be our door-keeper, to be a door-keeper to our hearts, yea to keep the door of our lips, he will not diſdain that office, when we humbly ſue unto him to undertake it. As a godly man begs of God to open his mouth for holy uſes (Pſal. 51. 15.) Open thou my lips, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe (we cannot open our lips to the praiſe of God, unleſs God come with his key and unlock them) ſo he begs of God to ſhut his mouth, and keep the door of his lips for him, that he ſin not with his tongue.

Fourthly, 'Tis remarkable, that Job did not ſay I endeavoured that my mouth ſhould not ſin, but he ſaith, Neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin.

Hence Obſerve, A godly man carefully watching over himſelf, keeps his mouth from ſinful ſpeakings.

He doth not only attempt this reſtraint, but he may attain it; this labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. Yet we are not to underſtand the point, as if a godly man might attain to ſuch a conqueſt over corruption as never to ſin at all by word, but as to this or that temptation he may. Thus Job prevailed over his heart and tongue not to curſe man, his real enemy as before he did, not to curſe God when he acted towards him in appearance like an enemy. But ſaith not the Apoſtle James (Chap. 3. 8.) The tongue no man can tame, it is an unruly evil. This ſome underſtand with reference to the tongues of other men, who can tame his intemperate tongue that boaſteth, my tongue is my own, who is Lord over me? But we may better underſtand it of a mans own tongue; the tongue is often too hard for the whole man; no man can tame it; that is, no man can tame it of himſelf; but a man may obtain power of God to tame it. This unruly evil may be ruled and brought under good government by the ſtrength of grace. The tongue is an unruly evil, but not an unconquerable evil. A godly man may come off with victory, and be more then a conqueror (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) over all thoſe temptations which would ſet the tongue a fire in evil ſpeaking, or by evil ſpeaking kindle a fire among others. The tongue is a fire, and 'tis bellows alſo, from both ill tongued perſons are juſtly called incendiaries, yet this fire may be quench't, and theſe bellows may be broken and made breath-leſs as to the kindling of the flames of contention.

Indeed the oppoſition of moſt as againſt other corruptions, ſo againſt this of evil ſpeaking is not to conqueſt; though they make ſome offers to bridle their tongues, and ſay they will not ſuffer their mouth to ſin, yet their tongues are their Maſters. I will give you a twofold reaſon why the oppoſition which many make againſt this evil of the tongue, or any other evil is not to victory.

Firſt, Becauſe 'tis weak and ſlight; a carnal mans reſiſting of evil is like his deſiring of good; he deſireth good, but attains it not, becauſe his deſires are weak and cold, there is no ſtrength, no heat in them: Thus alſo he oppoſeth evil but cannot prevail, becauſe he oppoſeth it faintly.

Secondly, 'Tis not only weak but falſe and treacherous; he is not real or hearty in it; Job ſet himſelf in good earneſt againſt his tongue, when it was ready to break out ſinfully, and he did it prevailingly. His was a hearty, and therefore an effectual reſiſtance. While ſome decry both evil works and evil words, they delight in them, and hold ſecret correſpondence with them. Job oppoſed his tongue really, and he had his will of it; He ſuffered not his mouth to ſin.

Fifthly, Obſerve, The mouth or tongue of man, is a very great and common inſtrument of ſin.

That's the general truth of this verſe. The tongue is an engin of more miſchief both to our ſelves and others then any other member of the body. The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 3. 13.) of natural men, Their throat is an open Sepulcher. Which ſimilitude ſtands in two things; firſt, becauſe there comes a ſtench out of their throats by filthy ill-ſented and unſavory words; ſecondly, becauſe they gape after and devour the credit and good name of their Neighbours. The tongue of man being rightly uſed is his glory. When David ſaith (Pſal. 57.8.) Awake my glory, he calls his tongue to awake. The tongue is mans glory, becauſe it lifteth up the glory of God; and as the tongue of a godly man is his glory, ſo the tongues of wicked men are their ſhame, they proclaim their own ſin, and hide it not. We are ſuch as our words are; ſuch, I mean, as our words ordinarily are. No good man can ſpeak much evil, and how little ſoever he ſpeaks (being convinced of it) he repents of it. And though a bad man may ſpeak good words, yet his words (except in ſound) are no better then he is. For while he ſpeaks what he is not, or means not, or believes not, or practiſes not, though what he ſpeaks be good in it ſelf, and may do good to others, yet as ſpoken by him, 'tis as bad as he is; he is hypocritical, and ſo are his words. Therefore the Apoſtle James concludes (Chap. 3. 2.) If any man offend not in word he is a perfect man; not only perfect, as perfection is oppoſed to hypocriſie and notes ſincerity, but perfect as perfection is oppoſed to a leſſer degree of grace, and notes our growth and progreſs in holineſs. He is not only a beginner, but a great proficient in grace who offends not in word. That man hath a great command of his thoughts, who can command his tongue; and ſo declars himſelf a perfect man. And when the Apoſtle ſaith; If any man offend not in word, he intimates that there are very few, but do offend, and offend greatly in word. The tongue is much and often imployed in the ſervice of ſin; there is no member in the body that Satan makes ſo much uſe of, as he doth of this, and ill words are as bad work as any he ſets us about. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 18. 21.) Death and life are in the power of the tongue; that is, according to the right or ill uſing of the tongue, we may collect whether men are dead or alive as to God, and whether they are bound for death or for life, for Heaven or Hell. That's the meaning of Chriſt (Matth. 12. 37.) By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned; we are not juſtified in a ſtrict ſence, either by our words or works; nothing but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt received and applyed by faith can do that, yet according to the uſage of the tongue the ſentence of condemnation and juſtification will be pronounced in that great day. Chriſt will ſpeak of men according to what they have ſpoken; and as others have heard them ſpeaking, ſo they ſhall hear Chriſt ſpeaking.

Undique nobis diabolus inſidias parare conſuevit, ſed facilius ore peccante; nullum illi æquè cõgruum organum eſt in miniſterium interitus. Chryſoſt.

Again, As we uſually fall into tongue-ſins, ſo we eaſily fall into them. For, firſt, there is a ſpeedy paſſage between the heart and tongue, the heart is quickly at the tongues end; evil thoughts are ſoon formed up into evil words. Secondly, ſpeech is a natural and humane act flowing from the light and life of reaſon, there is no labour, no ſtudy for it; words are at hand preſently, and eaſie to be had, and therefore we ſay, good or kind words are good cheap; good words are worth much, but, as words, they coſt us little. We do that readily which we do naturally. Gracious good words are not natural to us, but to ſpeak even them is a work of nature. Thirdly, corrupt ſpeaking is very pleaſing to our corrupt nature; evil words are as muſick to an evil mind. 'Tis a grief to the Spirit of God to hear bad words come out of a good mans mouth (*Eph.*4.29,30.) but bad words are beſt (I mean delightfully beſt) to the Spirit of a bad man. Rotten words ſavour ſweetly to a rotten heart. Fourthly, evil ſpeaking is very advantageous, and gainful to many (as they count gain) 'tis not only pleaſant but profitable. Many a mans tongue brings him in a preſent revenue; ſome trade in lies as much as in wares, or they trade off their wares with lies. Solomon (Prov. 21.6.) calls the getting of treaſure by a lying tongue, a vanity toſſed to and fro, of them that ſeek death. Where he ſhews, firſt, that there's much gaining by lying; when a man is buying and ſelling, when he is driving a bargain, how apt is he to make an ill uſe of his tongue? Secondly, that, what is got by lying, profits little, yea hurts much; for thirdly, they who ſpeaks lies ſeek death. But do any one ſeek death? No man ſeeks death in it ſelf, or directly, but many ſeek death conſequentially; they ſeek death, when they think they only ſeek a livelihood; the way of lying is the way to death, even to eternal death. Thus the getting of treaſure by a lying tongue, is a vanity toſſed to and fro, of them that ſeek death; that is, the wealth and treaſure which they get by bandying words upon a lying tongue, is not like to ſtay long in their hands, nor to prove durable ſubſtance, either to themſelves or their heirs. In this ſence alſo that of the Apoſtle (James 3.6.) is a truth; The tongue is a fire (it ſets that on fire which is got by ſinful words) and the tongue is a world of iniquity (that is, there is a world of iniquity in it) ſo is the tongue amongſt our members, that it defileth the whole body, and ſetteth on fire the whole courſe of nature, and (would you know whence the tongue takes fire? The next words tell us) it is ſet on fire of Hell; that is, by the Devil, who is the father of lies and ſlanders. As an evil tongue ſets on fire the whole courſe of nature, that is, all the powers and faculties of Soul and Body, by which nature moves and makes its courſe; ſo it ſelf is ſet on fire by him who hath diſordered the whole courſe of nature. The fire of Hell kindles this fire.

To conclude this point, and ſo to paſs to the latter part of the verſe; I ſhall briefly enumerate the ſeveral ways by which the mouth ſins, or what kind of words are ſinful; and then it will appear how ſoon we may miſs our duty in ſpeaking, when we ſee how many ways we may ſpeak amiſs.

Firſt, All idle or workleſs words, that is, words which work to no good end (ſo they are expreſſed in the Greek, Matth. 12. 37.) all ſuch words (I ſay) are ſinful. Thoſe are evil words which do no good as well as thoſe which do hurt. Eliphaz ſaith to Job (*Chap.*15.3.) Should a wiſe man reaſon with unprofitable talk? Or with ſpeeches wherewith he can do no good? While we ſpeak that which doth not profit others, we ſpeak to our own loſs. Many are troubled at thoſe words by which they have done hurt to, or infected others, but few are troubled for thoſe words by which they have done no good, or not edified others.

Secondly, Unſeaſonable words are offenſive words (Eccl. 3.7.) There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak. A word fitly (that is opportunely) ſpoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver, that is, 'tis pleaſant and unprofitable, (Prov. 25.11.) But a word unfitly or unſeaſonably ſpoken, is always unacceptable, and troubleſome, and 'tis ſometimes ſinful.

Thirdly, As the mouth ſins by unſeaſonable words, ſo ſpecially by unſeaſoned words (*Col.*4.6.) Let your ſpeech be always with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt. Words are ſeaſoned with a two-fold ſalt. Firſt, with the ſalt of truth; and that of a double truth; firſt, the truth of doctrine or aſſertion oppoſed to error and falſhood; ſecondly, the truth of heart or ſincerity, oppoſed to hypocriſie and diſſimulation. Secondly, with the ſalt of grace and holineſs. As grace is poured into the lips (Pſ. 45. 2.) that is, miniſter'd to the ſpeaker, ſo 'tis poured out of the lips, that is, miniſter'd to the hearer. Thoſe muſt needs be unſeaſoned words that have neither grace nor truth in them. The people wonder'd at the gracious words which came out of the mouth of Chriſt, and we may lament the ungracious words which proceed from the mouths of ſome who are called Chriſtians.

Fourthly, Harſh, uncharitable and cenſorious words, are the ſins of the mouth. Chriſt will come to judg the ungodly for the hard ſpeeches which they have ſpoken againſt him (Jude v. 15.) either immediately againſt his perſon, or mediately againſt his ſervants. As there are ſoft words, ſo hard words. Some ſpeak words as hard as ſtones, yea they ſtone their Brethren with words.

Fifthly, Haſty inconſiderate words, ſpoken to men, but eſpecially to God, are ſins of the mouth; hence Solomon's caution (Eccleſ. 5. 2.) Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be haſty to utter any thing before God. All raſh words ſpoken to God are ſinful, ſo alſo are thoſe which we ſpeak to one another; we ſhould conſider our words before we utter them, and deliver them both by weight and by tale.

Sixthly, Obſcene wanton words are very ſinful; theſe the Apoſtle forbids with much ſeverity (Eph. 5.4.) Neither filthineſs nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, which are not convenient (that is, which are altogether uncomely) but rather ther giving of thanks. Let your tongues be imployed in the praiſes of God, not in poiſoning one another; filthy words are poiſon taken in at the ear, and they defile and infect the heart.

Seventhly, Boaſting proud words are ſinful. They that ſwell in their own thoughts, are apt to ſpeak ſwelling words of themſelves; it is beſt both to think and ſpeak of our ſelves, below our ſelves.

Eighthly, Detracting leſſening words concerning others are ſinful; as proud men make more of themſelves then they are, ſo they uſually diminiſh the worth of others. It is immodeſty to ſpeak all the truth or the moſt of our ſelves, and it is diſhoneſty to ſpeak leſs then the truth of others, eſpecially when we do it with a deſire to hide what they are, or to render them unacceptable.

Ninthly, Flattering words are ſins of the mouth, theſe are directly contrary to the former, the detractor takes away from the due praiſe of another; but the flatterer gives him more then is due, and puffs him up with undeſerved praiſes. And as all flattering words in all men are ſinful; ſo thoſe and theirs eſpecially that flatter others into a better opinion of their ſpiritual eſtate, or that they are better God-wards then indeed they are, are exceeding ſinful, and no leſs dangerous. Faithful are the wounds of a friend (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 27.6.) but the kiſſes of an enemy are deceitful. The wounding friend is a juſt reprover; the kiſſing enemy is a flatterer, and the truth is, every flatterer is an enemy, how near a friend ſo ever he is either by relation or profeſſion,

Tenthly, Slandering and reproaching words, which caſt dirt in the face of a mans credit, and are as dead flies thrown into that which is better then the moſt precious ointment, are extreamly ſinful.

Eleventhly, Prophane and blaſpheming words, when any ſpeak ſlightly and lightly of God or of the things of God, of his word and ways, his truths, ordinances, and people, O how abominable are they?

Twelfthly, Provoking quarrelling words, ſuch as ſtir up wrath and contention, ſuch as kindle paſſion, and widen breaches, in ſtead of healing, cloſing, and cementing them, are altogether contrary to the law of love.

To all theſe we may add, ſcoffing, and jearing words; grieving, cutting, and vexing words; ſpiteful and malicious words, lying, falſe, and deceitful words, of what kind ſoever, and for what end ſoever ſpoken. Now if all theſe, and more which might be named, are ſins of the mouth, then conſider how great an inſtrument of ſin the mouth is; and remember you will have ſomewhat to do, (to do as this good man did) not to ſuffer your mouth to ſin.

Job having affirmed, that he did not ſuffer his mouth to ſin, proceeds in the latter part of this verſe, to ſhew the particular ſin that he kept his mouth from, neither have I ſuffered my mouth to ſin

By wiſhing a curſe to his Soul.

That is, to the Soul of my moſt profeſſed and wretched enemy. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, to wiſh his Soul under a curſe.

שאל. Eſt poſtulare, cupere, orare vel petere more mendicorũ.

The word which we render to wiſh, ſignifieth, firſt, to demand or require a thing as our due in point of juſtice; ſecondly, to aſk a thing as a favour in way of courteſie, as a poor man aſks for an alms, or begs for relief (Prov. 20. 4.) The ſluggard will not plow by reaſon of the cold (or winter) therefore he begs in Harveſt and hath nothing. And again (Pſal. 109. 10.) Let his Children be continual vagabonds, and beg, let them ſeek their bread alſo out of their deſolate places. Thirdly, as here in the Text, it is often uſed to note the requeſting or asking of any thing of God in prayer; I did not wiſh, that is, pray for a curſe upon his Soul (2 Chron. 20.4.) And Judah gathered themſelves together to aſk help of the Lord; that is, to pray for help. And ſo the word is uſed (1 Sam. 1. 17, 20, 27.) And hence both the Grave and Hell are ſignified by this word, becauſe they are ever craving and never have enough.

The word rendred, A curſe, ſignifieth in the verb, to lament, to cry out (Joel. 1. 8.) as alſo to ſwear and curſe (Judges 17. 2.) And he ſaid unto his mother, the eleven Hundred ſhekels of Silver that were taken from thee, about which thou curſedſt, and ſpakeſt of alſo in mine ears, &c. So in Solomon's prayer (1 Kings 8. 31.) If any man treſpaſs againſt his Brother, and an Oath be laid upon him to cauſe him to ſwear, and the Oath came before thine Altar in this Houſe, then &c. Thus here the noun notes an Oath with an execration or a curſe. (Deut. 29. 21.) And the Lord ſhall ſeparate him (that is, the reſolved ſinner) unto evil out of all the Tribes of Iſrael, according to all the curſes of the Covenant that are written in this Book of the Law. And the reaſon why the ſame word ſignifieth both an Oath and a Curſe was becauſe in taking an Oath, they bound and burdened themſelves with a curſe, ſometimes explicitly, always implicitly in caſe they did not ſwear truly, or not perform the Oath which they had truly ſworn. To wiſh a curſe upon our ſelves or others, is to wiſh the worſt we can either upon our ſelves or others. The firſt ſentence of wrath that ever God pronounced in this World, was in this form of words, though not in the formal Original word of this preſent Text (Gen. 3. 14.) And the Lord God ſaid unto the Serpent (whom the Devil uſed as the inſtrument of mans fall, therein alſo ſpecially intending the Devil himſelf, who had both contrived the fall of man, and uſed the Serpent as the inſtrument of it) thou art curſed above all Cattel, and above every Beaſt of the field, As to wiſh or pronounce a bleſſing, includes a deſire of all good; ſo to wiſh or pronounce a curſe, includes a deſire of all evil. Six of the twelve Tribes of Iſrael were command to ſtand upon Mount Gerizim to bleſs, and ſix of them upon Mount Ebal to curſe (Deut. 27. 12, 13.) that is, to wiſh and pray for all good or all evil, according as the people were or did good or evil. Balack was confident he ſhould have brought miſchief enough upon the Children of Iſrael, if he could have got Balaam to curſe them. The curſe is ſuch a miſchief as opens a door to let in all other miſchiefs with it. That man is miſerable enough who is under a curſe; and therefore whatſoever miſery Job's enemies attempted to bring upon him, he never wiſhed this miſery, a curſe upon them.

Verbum proprie execrari ſignificat, & per Metonymiam jurare, quia Jusjurandum cum execratione jungi ſolet.

Further, Job doth not ſay, I did not wiſh a curſe upon his eſtate, or upon his Children and family; he doth not ſay, I did not wiſh a curſe upon his labours and undertakings, nor doth he ſay, I did not wiſh a curſe upon his body; but he ſaith, I did wiſh a curſe

Upon his Soul] What the Soul is, hath been ſhewed at the 15. verſe of the former Chapter, and the ſeveral ſignifications of the word in Scripture was ſhewed at the 16. verſe of the ſame Chapter; here we may take it,

Firſt, Strictly, in oppoſition to the body: Now as to wiſh a curſe is to wiſh the greateſt evil, ſo to wiſh a curſe upon the Soul is to wiſh the greateſt curſe. A man may bear a curſe any where better and eaſier then upon his Soul. Better have a curſe upon our eſtate, or name, upon the Children of our bodys, or upon our own bodys, then upon our Souls. Theſe the curſe goes deepeſt, ann lyeth heavieſt. 'Tis ſaid of Joſeph when a Captive and a Priſoner (Pſal. 105. 18.) His feet they hurt with fetters, he was laid in Iron, our Margin hath it, his Soul came into Iron, or as the old tranſlation ſaith, The Iron entred into his Soul; Not that Iron or any material thing can hurt the Soul; no Tyrants weapon, no inſtruments of cruelty could ever touch that; when they have hurt and killed the body they have gone their utmoſt length; after that (as Chriſt ſpeaks, Luke 12. 4.) they have no more that they can do. But the Iron was ſaid to enter into Joſeph's Soul, becauſe they put him to as much miſery as they could: The miſery of the Soul being the greateſt miſery. For as the health and proſperity of the Soul is the beſt health and proſperity, as the Apoſtle ſaith (3. Ep. John 1, 2.) Beloved, I wiſh above all things, that thou mayeſt proſper, and be in health, even as thy Soul proſpereth; So the Souls ſickneſſes, declinings and decayings, are the worſt ſickneſſes, declinings, and decayings. And hence it is, that while ſome are exceedingly heightned in wrath and reſolutions of revenge, it will not ſerve their turn, nor ſatisfie the paſſion of their vindictive Spirits to wiſh a curſe upon the bodys of their enemies, but they wiſh a curſe upon their very Souls; as that Italian who provoked one who had offended him to blaſpheme God, and then ſtabbed him to death, boaſting that he had taken a noble revenge, a revenge upon Soul and Body together, as he thought; revenge upon the Soul is the worſt and deepeſt revenge. Yet ſome are ſo wickedly ignorant, that they have not forborn to wiſh a curſe upon their own Souls, and even prayed God to damn them, little knowing or not all believing what the damnation either of Soul or Body is. In this firſt ſence of the word, Job ſurely, was at furtheſt diſtance from wiſhing a curſe upon the Soul of him that hated him.

Secondly, We may take Soul for the life; neither ſo did Job wiſh a curſe upon the Soul of his enemy; Job did not pray his enemy to death, nor beg of God to cut off the thread of his life. The Lord ſaid to Solomon (1 Kings 3. 11.) Becauſe thou haſt asked this thing (an underſtanding heart) and haſt not asked for thy ſelf long life: Neither haſt asked riches for thy ſelf, nor haſt asked the life of thine enemies; Behold &c. We are much tempted to wiſh every thing and perſon removed out of the way which we think ſtands in our way, and them wrapt up even in the darkneſs of death, whom we conceive hindring our light.

Thirdly, I conceive we may take the word Soul here in the largeſt ſence, as it ſignifies the whole man; I have not wiſhed a curſe upon his Soul; that is upon his perſon.

Hence Note, Firſt, The heart and mouth of man are naturally bent to wiſh and beſpeak evil to others.

The Apoſtle puts this among the other, the bad qualities of all thoſe who are under ſin, that is, all perſons unregenerate (who are under both the condemning and commanding power of ſin, Rom. 3. 9, 14.) Their mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs, that is, of bitter curſes. How ready are we to wiſh hurt unto thoſe who we believe would hurt us, eſpecially to thoſe who have actually done us hurt? Every man naturally deſires that wherein he delighteth, and he is apt to wiſh for that which he deſires. He that rejoiceth at the deſtruction of his enemy, can hardly forbear to wiſh it; they who can do no hurt to others can wiſh it, and uſually they who can do leaſt wiſh it moſt; and what their hands cannot reach to, they ſtrive to reach and effect with their tongues. Salvian found this curſed Spirit, the Spirit of curſing, much up in his days; Curſes (ſaith he) are the firſt inſtruments of anger, and that which we cannot do becauſe we are weak, we wiſh may be done, becauſe we are enraged. To pray for good to others; or to bleſs them, is one of the moſt proper works of grace; and to pray for evil upon others, or to curſe them, is one of the moſt proper works of unrenewed nature.

Naturaliter homo deſiderat ea de quibus gaudet, & deſiderium interius explicat verbis, &c. Aquin. in loc.

Prima ſēper irarum tela ſunt maledicta, quæ non poſſumus imbecilli, optamus irati. Salvian.

Secondly, Obſerve, To curſe or wiſh ill to another, though an enemy, is very ſinful.

Curſing is one of the worſt uſes or ſervices the tongue of man can be put to, as bleſſing is one of the beſt. He that wiſheth a curſe upon another, puts God to the doing of that, which either, firſt, he is not able to do, or ſecondly, is afraid to do, or thirdly, is aſhamed to do; now what a wickedneſs is it for man to deſire God to do that for him, which as himſelf cannot, ſo he is either afraid or aſhamed to do. Chriſt in his Sermon upon the Mount (Math. 5. 44.) commands us to love our enemies, and to bleſs thoſe that curſe us. And the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 12. 14.) Bleſs them that perſecute you, bleſs and curſe not. The Law of Goſpel-love doth not reſt in Negatives. 'Tis much to refrain from evil actings towards an enemy, 'tis more to refrain from wiſhing him evil, or curſing him, but 'tis moſt of all to bleſs him. And whereas ſome may wonder why the Apoſtle ſhould ſay, Bleſs and curſe not, and not rather curſe not but bleſs; for a man that abſtains from curſing may not yet proceed to bleſs, but it would be a ſtrange thing if when a man hath bleſſed his enemy he ſhould then proceed to curſe him. I anſwer, when the Apoſtle ſaith, Bleſs and curſe not, I conceive his meaning may be only this, that we ſhould carry it alike, firſt, to all perſecutors, and not bleſs ſome or curſe others, or ſecondly, that we ſhould carry it alike at all times; and not by any extremity which they uſe to us, turn our ſelves from bleſſing to curſing.

Qui maledictionibus inimicum impetunt, quid aliud in eum Deum facere volunt, niſi quod ipſi facere aut nequeunt aut erubeſcunt. Greg.

But ſome may ſay, it is altogether unlawful to curſe an enemy, or to wiſh him evil, have we not many examples of dreadful curſes in Scripture; David pours down a whole ſhower of them upon the heads of the Jews, whom he foreſhewed crucifying Chriſt (Pſal. 69. 22, 23, 24.) Let their Table become a ſnare before them, and that which ſhould have been for their welfare let it become a trap; let their eyes be darkned that they ſee not, and make their loins continually to ſhake, pour out thy indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them. Theſe curſes are repeated by the Apoſtle (Rom. 11. 9.) And David ſaith, let their Table become a ſnare, and a trap, and a ſtumbling block, and a recompence unto them; let their eyes be darkned that they may not ſee, and bow down their back alway. We read alſo, that when a Captain was ſent up with his fifty to apprehend Eliah (2 Kings 1. 10, 11.) He prayed, and ſaid, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from Heaven, and conſume thee and thy fifty; and there came down fire from Heaven and conſumed him and his fifty. And when Children mocked Eliſha his ſucceſſor, and ſaid, Go up thou bald-head, go up thou bald-head; he turned back and looked upon them, and curſed them in the name of the Lord, and preſently there came forth two ſhe-Bears out of the wood and tare forty and two Children of them (2 Kings 2. 24.) Doth not Paul curſe falſe teachers (Gal. 5. 12.) I would they were even cut off that trouble you. And we have an irrecoverable curſe pronounced by the ſame Apoſtle upon all falſe-hearted profeſſors (1 Cor. 16. 22.) If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be Anathema Maranatha; that is, let him be accurſed till the Lord come, let him be ever laſtingly accurſed, then ſurely it is not unlawful to curſe.

I anſwer; Firſt, That place in the Pſalm is rather a propheſie then an imprecation, or 'tis a prophetical imprecation, fore-telling from God what evil ſhould fall upon the Jews, not a wiſh from himſelf that evil ſhould fall upon them. The Spirit of God fore-ſeeing how the obſtinate unbelieving Jews would be hardned againſt, and act their malice to the utmoſt upon Chriſt when he ſhould come in the fleſh, ſtirred up and directed the Spirit of David to declare this heavy doom againſt them.

Secondly, The Prophets and holy men, mentioned in Scripture, who curſed others, may be conſidered either as private perſons, and as to their perſonal concernments, and in that capacity they uſed all meekneſs of ſpeech, and curſed none; or they may be conſidered as publick perſons, imployed in Gods work, or called to make known his mind to the ſons of men; and in that capacity as they were not to fear any man, ſo not to ſpare any man; they being charged at their own peril to tell others what peril they were in. And therefore they boldly declared the curſe of God (not their own) againſt thoſe who deſerved it.

Thirdly, I anſwer; theſe curſes proceeded not from a Spirit of revenge, or from any impulſe of wrath in the Prophets themſelves, but were ſpoken, Firſt, to terrifie the wicked, and leave monitory examples of the righteous judgments of God before the eyes of all men. Secondly, to confirm and incourage the faithful, by letting them ſee how ſuddainly and how eaſily, even with a word of his mouth, God could deſtroy their ſtrongeſt enemies, yea that they are already blaſted by, and withering under a curſe. Thirdly, thoſe curſes were denounced in a heat of zeal, for the glory of God, and the good of the Church, they had not the leaſt heat of private revenge in them. When the Prophets and Apoſtles breathed out curſes, like the fumes and flames of Hell it ſelf, againſt ſinners, their minds were calm, ſerene, and Heavenly. Laſtly, thoſe curſes were pronounced (not as carnal men curſe one another in a ſtorm of paſſion, but) by vertue of their office and commiſſion. As the civil Magiſtrate gives ſentence of death upon a malefactor, who diſturbs the publick peace, and offers violence to the life of his fellow Citizens; ſo did the Prophets and holy men of God, pronounce the ſentence of ſome fearful curſe upon the known and incorrigible enemies of God, and of his people.

So then thoſe Scripture examples before mentioned, are no warrant or ground at all for any to belch out Curſes againſt the Soul, State, Life, or Perſon of another upon perſonal reſpects. Job proteſted his innocency in this, towards his enemy, I have not ſuffered my mouth to ſin, by wiſhing a curſe to his Soul.

VERS. 31, 32.

If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not, O that we had of his fleſh! we cannot be ſatisfied.

The ſtranger did not lodge in the ſtreet: But I opened my door to the Traveller.

THE former of theſe two verſes comes under a twofold conſideration.

Firſt, As referring to the words going before at the 30. verſe.

Secondly, As referring to the words following after at the 32. verſe.

Firſt, as referring to the words going before, wherein Job having diſclaimed all ſecret content in, and open Inſultation at the fall of his enemy; as alſo any wiſh or curſe upon him, which might cauſe him to fall. Here in this verſe, to ſhew the ſteadineſs and unmoveableneſs of his Spirit in that frame of love, he tells us, how he forbare the leaſt intimation of or inclination to revenge upon thoſe that hated him, yea, though there wanted not thoſe about him, who labour'd to provoke and fire his Spirit with revengeful ſuggeſtions. That's the general ſence of the 31. verſe, as it refers to the words going before; what ſence it bears as referring to the following verſe, ſhall be ſhewed in its place.

Verſ. 31. If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not.

We have a like form of ſpeech at the 19. verſe of the 19. Chapter, The men of my Secrets, which we render, All my inward friends abhorred me, that is, The men of my council, who knew my boſom, and were acquainted with my heart; ſuch are indeed inward friends, or, men of our ſecrets. Thus here, the men of my Tabernacle, that is, the men who lived neareſt to and about me, ſuch as were of my houſhold and family, So the words are a Periphraſis either of friends or ſervants; the latter dwell, the former uſe to frequent our Tabernacles, that is, our Houſes, for then they dwelt in Tabernacles, or moveable Houſes, which had a covering, but no foundation. And hence the Houſes and Palaces of Princes (ſuch we may ſuppoſe Job's to have been, even their Houſes) were called Tabernacles, becauſe in thoſe days men dwelt in Tabernacles, and not in founded and fixed Houſes; or Godly men called their fixed, founded and beſt built Houſes Tabernacles, becauſe they looked upon themſelves as pilgrims and ſtrangers in this World, or having here an abiding place, or (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 13.14.) A continuing City, but ſeeking one to come, even a City having foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God. If the men of my Tabernacle

Said not.] What ſaid they? If they ſaid not,

O that we had of his fleſh!] This was the wiſh or deſire of the men of Job's Tabernacle, O that we had of his fleſh! Two things are here to be examined for the opening of theſe words.

Firſt, Whoſe fleſh they meant, when they ſaid, O that we had of his fleſh!

Secondly, What is meant by that fleſh, which they had ſuch a mind to have?

To the firſt enquiry, whoſe fleſh did the men of Job's Tabernacle mean, when they ſaid, O that we had of his fleſh!

I anſwer, according to that line of Interpretation that I am now upon (and which I conceive the beſt) we are to underſtand the fleſh of Job's Enemies is here meant. As if he had ſaid, I have been ſtirred up by my domeſtick relations, both by my friends and ſervants, to take utmoſt revenge upon my Enemies; yea when they ſaw me ſilent and patient at my own wrong, they were ſo paſſionately and deeply affected with it, that they deſired to eat the very fleſh of my enemies, and to drink their blood; that is, for my ſake to ruine and deſtroy them. We commonly ſay of a man who is eagerly bent and ſet to revenge, he could eat his enemy without ſalt. There is nothing ſo hungry as revenge, nor can any thing ſatisfie the hunger of revenge, but the ruine of him who is ſuppoſed (though wrongfully) to have done the wrong. When Haman conceived himſelf affronted by Mordecai, who refuſed to give him reverence, or bow to him, he (ſaith the Scripture, Eſth. 3. 6.) thought ſcorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but ſought to deſtroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole Kingdom of Ahaſuerus, even the people of Mordecai. As if he had ſaid in the phraſe of of this Text, O that I had their fleſh, or I will have the fleſh of them all, I cannot elſe be ſatisfied. If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not (ſaith Job) O that we had of his fleſh!

Secondly, What meant theſe men by fleſh? For anſwer to that query, we may take notice, that fleſh is taken four ways in Scripture.

Firſt, Strictly, in oppoſition to the bones of the body (Gen. 2. 23.) This is fleſh of my fleſh, and bone of my bone, ſaid Adam when God preſented the woman to him for a wife.

Secondly, Fleſh is put for the whole body, oppoſed to the Soul (Gen. 2. 24.) They two ſhall be one fleſh, that is, one body, ſpeaking of Husband and Wife.

Thirdly, Fleſh is put in general for every Creature of the Earth, having a ſenſitive life. (Gen. 7.21.) All fleſh died that moved upon the Earth, both of Fowl, and of Cattel, and of Beaſt, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the Earth, and every man. Every living thing is all fleſh.

Fourthly, Fleſh is put for the whole man, both Soul and body, while we continue in this ſtate of frailty and mortality (Deut. 5. 26.) For who is there of all fleſh, who hath heard the voyce of the living God ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire as we have heard? That is, who of all mankind, or what Nation among all the Nations of the Earth, hath had this priviledg to hear the immediate voyce of God, but we of this Nation? We have had an unparallel'd favour. The Prophet makes Proclamation at the command of the Lord (Iſa. 40. 5, 6.) All fleſh is graſs; that is, man conſiſting of Soul and Body, whole man is a fading Creature, he withers quickly as to his preſent condition, he is but graſs: Sickneſs fades his beauty, and then death comes and mows him down, his body returns to the duſt from whence it came, and his Spirit returns to God that gave it. When Job's Houſhold Friends or Servants, the men of his Tabernacle deſired the fleſh of his enemies, we are not to underſtand it of the fleſh which they had in their grounds, their Beaſts and Cattel, nor ſtrictly of the fleſh of their Bodies oppoſed to bones; nor of the Body oppoſed to the Soul; but the meaning is, O that the men who hate Job our good friend and Maſter were in our power, and at our diſpoſe, O that we had the handling of them a while, we ſhould quickly make them ſee their error and miſtake in oppoſing or vexing him. And how eager they were to have the fleſh or perſons of his enemies in their power, appears in the laſt words of the verſe; for till then (ſay they)

We cannot be ſatisfied.] The word here tranſlated, to be ſatisfied, ſignifies alſo to ſwear, becauſe when a man ſwears to another, he ſhould reſt ſatisfied; there can be no greater, no higher ſatisfaction given then an Oath; therefore the Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 6.16.) An Oath for confirmation is the end of all ſtrife; that is, every man ſhould reſt ſatisfied in it, and ſtrive no more.

We (ſaid the men of Job's Tabernacle) cannot be ſatisfied.

That is, nothing will ſtay our hunger but the fleſh, nothing will ſtay our thirſt but the blood of thine enemies, unleſs we have them, or our will on them, we ſhall be reſtleſs; we cannot live comfortably if they live, nothing will pleaſe us but their death; without that we cannot be ſatisfied.

לא נשבע

The word ſignifies any kind of filling, whether to ſatisfaction, or to loathing; in the former ſignification the Prophet uſeth it (Hoſ. 13.6.) ſpeaks of bruitiſh men living like Epicures in Carnal contents; According to their Paſture, ſo were they filled; that is, they reſted in ſenſual injoyments with neglect of God, (as it follows) they were filled and their heart was exalted (not in faith and holineſs but) in pride and inſolence, therefore (ſaith God) they have forgotten me, I am no more minded nor thought of, their paſtures have filled them, and that's enough for them, they have no want of me, they are ſatisfied. And as they were filled with the fat Beaſt of their paſture, ſo was God too, but in a contrary ſence, they to ſatisfaction, he to loathing. (Iſa. 1. 11.) To what purpoſe is the multitude of your ſacrifices unto me, ſaith the Lord? I am full of the burnt offerings of Rams, and the fat of fed Beaſts; That is, I am cloyed with them, as the ſtomach of a man is with overmuch good meat, or loaths that which is diſtaſtful. That God was only thus filled or ſatisfied with the ſacrifices of that formal and hypocritical people, appears plainly from the words which follow in the ſame verſe, I delight not in the blood of Bullocks, &c. In the preſent Text it imports filling to ſatisfaction; the men of Job's Tabernacle could not be ſatisfied without the fleſh of his enemies.

Job complained of his friends ſeverity or cruelty rather to himſelf in this language (Chap. 19.21, 22.) Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me; and it ſeems, they had more then touched him, for it follows; Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh? In what ſence Job's friends were not ſatisfied with his fleſh, hath been ſhewed in the expoſition upon that Chapter, in what ſence the men of his Tabernacle ſaid, they could not be ſatisfied without the fleſh of his enemies, hath been ſhewed in the preſent expoſition, which we may recollect into this brief Paraphraſe. As if Job had ſaid, I never ſought revenge upon mine enemies, though I had thoſe near me who ceaſed not to urge me to it. The men of my Tabernacle, my truſtieſt ſervants and moſt intimate acquaintance were ſo enraged at my wrong, that they proffer'd their ſervice to right me, and if I have but given the word, or held up my finger, they would have done it to the full. I needed not to hire aſſaſſinates, nor bribe any with promiſes or rewards to undertake my quarrel; I had enow to appear for me unask'd and undeſired: Yea I had much ado to quiet their Spirits, and command them to hold their hands, when I heard them crying out, O that we had of his fleſh, we cannot be ſatisfied.

From this Interpretation of the Text, as it imports the incitement or provocation which Job had from the men of his Tabernacle, whether friends or ſervants to avenge himſelf by their hands upon thoſe that hated him, or had done him wrong;

> We may Obſerve, Firſt, Great men ſeldom want ſuch about them as are ready to provoke and ſet them on to do evil, eſpecally to pour out revenges upon their adverſaries.

As Satan is never wanting to ſtir up that paſſion himſelf, ſo he ſeldom wants Inſtruments to do it. David was a holy and a good man, and he, no doubt, made the beſt choyce he could both of friends and ſervants, yet he had thoſe about him who often provoked him to revenge, far beyond and againſt the temper of his own Spirit. We have two or three pregnant inſtances to this purpoſe; the firſt is reported (1 Sam. 24.) where when David had found or ſurprized Saul his profeſſed enemy in a cave, and ſo had him at an advantage; what ſaid his ſervants, or the men of his Tabernacle? The fourth verſe tells us; And the men of David ſaid unto him, behold the day in which the Lord hath delivered thine enemy into thy hand, that thou mayeſt do unto him as it ſhall ſeem good unto thee. As if he had ſaid to David, You have long waited for ſuch a day, now lay hold on this opportunity, let not him that hateth you ſlip out of your hand, if Saul get looſe from you, he may find you work enough, therefore behold the day in which the Lord hath delivered thine enemy into thy hand; but David would not hearken to them; he thought he had done too much when he cut off the lap of Sauls garment: He had not a Spirit of revenge moving in him, though moved to it. And how much David's ſervants were ſet upon this revenge appears fully at the 7. verſe; So David ſtayed his ſervants with theſe words, and ſuffered them not to riſe againſt Saul. He was put to uſe his beſt Rhetorick and Divinity too, to pacifie their minds and hold off their hands from proſecuting that attempt upon the fleſh or life of Saul. Again (1 Sam. 26.) when David came down to Saul's Camp and there found him aſleep, with his ſpear ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter, and Abner and the people lying round about him; Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy into thy hand this day: Now therefore let me ſmite him I pray thee with the ſpear even to the Earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time. As if he had ſaid, Now thou mayeſt rid thy ſelf of all thy troubles at one blow if thou wilt; but if thou wilt not do it, let me do it; I'le diſpatch him quickly, let me I pray thee ſmite him; I have an arm ſtrong enough to conclude thy troubles and his days with one ſtroak. Thus David was provoked a ſecond time by Abiſhai (a man of his Tabernacle) to take revenge upon Saul. Once more (2 Sam. 16. 9.) when Shimei curſed David fleeing from Jeruſalem at the riſing and rebellion of Abſolom; Then ſaid Abiſhai the Son of Zeruiah unto the King, Why ſhould this dead dog curſe my Lord the King, let me go over and take off his head. Here the ſame great man of David's Tabernacle ſtir'd him up to revenge a third time, and ſaid in effect, O that I had his fleſh! I cannot be ſatisfied till I have it; my fingers itch at him, pray Sir, let me fall upon him.

Yea we find the ſervants of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, very forward to ſtir him up to anger and revenge againſt thoſe that uſed him uncivilly and diſcourteouſly (Luke 9. 54, 55.) And when his Diſciples James and John ſaw this (that is, that they would not receive Chriſt) they ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from Heaven and conſume them even as Elias did? As if they had ſaid, Lord give effect to our prayers, and we will command fire from Heaven to deſtroy them. Thus in all ages men of power have had tempters near them, even in their boſoms, to provoke and ſtir them up to do evil, eſpecially this evil; to revenge themſelves upon their enemies.

Manſuetudinis Evangelicæ videtur Job expreſſa figura qui ſuos domeſticos adverſus hoſtes excandeſcentes placabat & leniebat. Mert.

Secondly, Conſider Job was far from any ſuch hunger or thirſt after revenge, as his ſervants provoked him to; indeed (as one ſaith) he ſhewed the expreſs image of Goſpel-meekneſs, while he pacified and mollified the anger of his domeſticks.

> Hence Note, A godly man is many times far leſs affected and troubled at his own wrongs, then others are in his behalf.

The men of Job's Tabernacle were ſo far from patience at their own wrongs, that they had no patience at his; they could not bear the affronts and injuries that were offered him, but he could. As Job's patience under the afflicting hand of God, ſo under the reviling and abuſive tongues and hands of men, had a perfect work. The hotteſt and higheſt flame of revenge in the men of his Tabernacle, could not heat his Spirit. Yet

Thirdly, No doubt Job was hard put to it to refrain his Paſſions when thus provoked.

> Hence Obſerve, Ill counſel from friends or ſervants about us, is very enſnaring and dangerous.

And therefore 'tis a great piece of Satans policy, to put it into the heart of near friends or ſervants, to blow up the coals of any paſſion. There was none like Ahab (ſaith the Scripture) whom Jezabel his wife ſtirred up. Ahab ſold himſelf to work wickedneſs; but his wife was the temptreſs, and bid him make the bargain. Solomons wives (as wiſe as he was) drew away his heart to Idolatry. And a ſervant ſometimes proves as ſtrong and as prevailing a tempter as a wife. The learned Sir Francis Bacon in his Eſſay about Marriage, concludes, 'Tis indifferent for Judges and Magiſtrates whether they marry or no; for (ſaith he) if they be facile and corrupt, you ſhall have a ſervant five times worſe then a wife. Let ſervants remember they cannot in any thing more diſſerve, nor diſoblige their Maſters, then by ſerving their ill humours and paſſions, when commanded by them; how wicked then are thoſe ſervants who nouriſh their ill humours, and add fewel to that fire which they ſhould labour to quench? We cannot do any man a worſe office, nor ſhew him more real diſaffection, then by abetting him in evil, and oyling his wheels by counſel or encouragement, when we ſee him in any ſinful motion. Such counſel hath often proved fatal, and ſuch encouragements do but haſten, yea precipitate men into ruine. The Apoſtle rule is (Heb. 10. 24.) Let us provoke another to love and to good works. The beſt need a ſpur to do well; he is the trueſt friend and the moſt faithful ſervant, who is fulleſt of theſe holy provocations; he loves his friend to purpoſe, who provokes him to love; and that ſervant works for his Maſter to purpoſe; who provokes him to good works. But to provoke to wrath, to revenge, or to any evil work, is to officiate for the Devil, or to do the Devils work, whoſe proper work it is to provoke us to evil, and to obſtruct us in all good works. And 'tis hard to determine who ſerves the Devils turn, and promotes his intereſt moſt, he that hinders and cools the Spirit of another that is about to do good, or he that thruſts him forward and furniſheth him with aſſiſtance to do evil.

> Fourthly, Note, Not to do, or to forbear the doing of that evil to which we are provoked, and greatly provoked, is an argument of much ſtrength of grace, or of a great meaſure of goodneſs.

It had been well if Job had not taken revenge upon his enemies, when friends (perceiving his Spirit bent that way) had adviſed him againſt it. 'Tis a good ſign of grace to be willingly ſtopt from doing any intended evil. David (1 Sam. 25.) was much reſolved to revenge himſelf upon Nabal, his heart was fired with fury enough to conſume him and all that he had; his fury (as the Lord ſpeaks of himſelf when Gog ſhall come up againſt the land of Iſrael, Ezek. 38. 18. His fury, (I ſay) was come up in his face; yet how meekly did he ſubmit, how ſoon was he taken off by the diſſwaſion of Abigail a diſcreet woman, who gave him advice and counſel to the contrary? Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael (ſaith he) which ſent thee this day to meet me, and bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou, which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging my ſelf with mine own hand. This (I ſay) was a great act of grace; but it is a far higher act of grace to forbear revenge when we are provoked and counſelled to it: When it ſhall be whiſpered in our ear; Will you endure this? Will you bear this? Will you be ſuch a fool? Will you ſtand like a ſtock or a ſtone? Surely for a man to be as deaf as a ſtock to ſuch whiſperers as theſe, is grace in the height of it. As it ſhews much ſtrength of grace when we are ſtrongly ſet upon by the temptation of Satan, to reſiſt and forbear, ſo when we are ſet upon by friends, by ſervants, or relations; who in ſuch caſes are as the Devils right hand, to aſſiſt us in doing miſchief. Again, as (on the other ſide) not to do that good which we are adviſed, and counſelled, yea provoked to, by friends and relations, who are (which is one of the beſt offices of a friend) like goads in our ſides to put us on in the ways of holineſs, (as, this I ſay) argues much ſtrength and prevalency of corruption; ſo it is an evidence that grace prevails mightily in the Soul, when being much perſwaded to any kind of evil, we ſtand firm as a Rock, and are as the deaf Adder that ſtops her ear againſt the voice of the Charmer, though he Charm never ſo wiſely: They have the beſt ears who cannot hear, and the beſt hearts who cannot bear ſuch Charmers. As they are bleſſed who hear good good counſel and receive it, ſo alſo are they, who hear bad counſel and refuſe it.

Fifthly, Obſerve, A godly man doth not only ſtop his ears when he is tempted to do evil, but he rebukes ſuch tempters and declares againſt them.

Acerrimè tale vindictæ ſtudium in illis reprehendebat. Merc.

We have great reaſon to believe (though it be not expreſſed) that Job did ſo, that he reproved his ſervants here, as he did his wife before when ſhe gave him evil counſel (Chap. 2. 10.) Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh: He did not only ſtop his ears againſt her counſel, but reproved her for it, and that with no eaſie reproof; Thou ſpeakeſt (ſaid he) as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh. What? Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil? And thus in that Scripture before mentioned concerning David, when Abiſhai begg'd leave to take off the head of Shimei who had reviled and curſed David, he turned with ſome paſſion, no doubt upon him, and ſaid, What have I to do with you, ye Sons of Zeruiah? (2 Sam. 16. 10.) He did not only deny him leave to take off Shimei's head, but checkt him for asking it. So (Luke 9. 55.) when the Diſciples would have called for fire from Heaven, Chriſt turned about angerly and ſaid, Ye know not what Spirit ye are of; ye ſpeak like fooliſh men; A vindictive Spirit is not a Goſpel Spirit. As a godly man will not endure that others ſhould flatter him up into pride for the good that is in him, or hath been done by him; ſo he will not endure thoſe that provoke him to evil, but declares his utter deteſtation and ill opinion of them; he tells them (as indeed they are) ye are the hand of the Devil, ye are but his agents. A godly man ſays when any give him ill counſel in one kind or other, the hand of the Devil is in all this; as Chriſt told Peter plainly, though a good man, and an eminent Diſciple, when he diſſwaded him from ſufferings. Job's ſervants moved him to put his enemies to hardeſt ſufferings; and Chriſts ſervant diſcouraged or diſſwaded him from venturing upon hard or ſuffering ſervices: Maſter, this ſhall not be unto thee: But Chriſt was not only not taken off from his purpoſe of ſuffering, but (Matth. 16. 22, 23.) turned about and ſaid, get thee behind me Satan, thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men; I hear the Devil ſpeaking in thee. Chriſt would not call him Peter, but Satan, though but a litttle before (verſ. 18.) he ſaid; Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock (upon this Confeſſion which thou haſt made) will I build my Church. Jeſus Chriſt reſented the ill counſel of Peter (a Diſciple, a man of his Tabernacle) with greateſt Indignation; we ſhould not only not do the evil we are adviſed to, but make the adviſer know that we take it ill at his hands to be ſo adviſed.

Sixthly, What ſaid the men of Job's Tabernacle? O that we had of his fleſh!

Hence Obſerve, Revenge is cruel, it would eat up and devour all.

Old Jacob upon his death-bed (remembring what his Sons Simeon and Levi had done to the Shechemites) gave this character of wrathful anger, Curſed be their anger for it was fierce, and their wrath for it was cruel (Gen. 49. 7.) When the Spirit of revenge was upon them, they cared not what blood they drank, what fleſh they devoured. David deſcribeth the like cruel temper of his enemies (Pſal. 27. 2.) When the wicked even mine enemies came upon me to eat up my fleſh, they ſtumbled and fell. What were theſe enemies? Were they Canibals? Men-eaters? No! But to ſhew their cruelty, he ſaith, They would even eat my fleſh. The Church ſaith the ſame (Pſal. 124. 3.) Except the Lord had been on our ſide when men roſe up againſt us, they had ſwallowed us down quick; they had even eaten us up at a morſel, they would have eaten us without ſalt as we ſay. That's a dreadful Propheſie (Zach. 11. 9.) And the reſt ſhall every one eat the fleſh of another: Which was fulfilled when the Romans beſieged and took Jeruſalem; for then, not only ſome through extream hunger did eat the fleſh of others, but ſuch was their malice, that they did eat one anothers fleſh thorough revenge. Joſephus their Hiſtorian reports what deadly feuds and factions there were among themſelves, within their own Walls, when the Roman Army had begirt them round about and was ready every moment to devour them all; even then they were ſo full of Indignation, of Wrath, of Jealouſies, of unholy Emulations one againſt another, that they could even have eaten one another. Some have ſaid of revenge, O how ſweet is it! Every thing pleaſeth us, which ſuits our principle, and therefore nothing is more pleaſing to a revengeful mind then revenge. Nero being enraged againſt the Citizens of Rome, could not be ſatisfied without their fleſh, or the hardeſt ſufferings of it. He ſet the City on fire, and then to ſhew what content he took in it, betook himſelf to mirth and Muſick.

Laſtly, Whereas the men of his Tabernacle ſaid, O that we had of his fleſh! We cannot be ſatisfied.

Obſerve, Malice is unſatisfied till it hath got the utmoſt or fulleſt revenge; it is not well, till it hath done its worſt.

Love is not ſatisfied till we have the higheſt enjoyment of the thing or perſon loved; 'tis thus in the real love we have one to another, eſpecially in the real love we have to Chriſt, O how unſatisfied are believers till they enjoy him perſonally as now they do ſpiritually! nothing can ſatiſfie a Saint, but the fleſh or perſon of Chriſt; and therefore as Communion with him at his Table is ſweet to them where his broken fleſh is fed on by faith, ſo they can never be fully ſatisfied till they behold his glorified fleſh in Heaven. One of the Ancients ſaid, Lord my heart is unquiet till I return to thee. Now as love finds no full ſatisfaction till it attains full fruition, ſo wrath is unſatisfied till it hath gotten full revenge. I muſt have his fleſh (ſaith the wrathful man) I cannot be ſatisfied elſe; 'tis a death to me (ſaith revenge) to ſee my enemy live. Haman having conceived wrath againſt Mordecai (Heſt. 3. 5.) nothing would ſatisfie him but his fleſh; yea he could eat up the fleſh not only of Mordecai, but of the whole Jewiſh Nation, as was toucht before, Haman thought ſcorn to lay his hand upon Mordecai alone (he was not a mouthfull for him) he muſt ſtretch it out upon all the Jews. Thus Heſter in her ſupplication, repreſents their caſe to King Ahaſhuerus (Chap 7. 3, 4.) We are ſold to be ſlaves to be deſtroyed and to periſh: Here are three hard words; firſt, we are ſold to be ſlaves; yet, ſaith ſhe, if his malice and revenge had gone no further then our liberty, I ſhould have held my peace; but the malice of this man knows no bounds; we are not only ſold to be ſlaves; but ſecondly, to be deſtroyed; and, thirdly, to periſh; he will ſuffer no remains, no more remembrance of us in the world. Haman's was a reaching revenge. As nothing will ſatisfie the holy revenge which Saints take upon ſin, but the ruine of it. The Apoſtle ſetting down the effects of godly ſorrow in a Church (which holds alſo in every truely penitent perſon) reckons up, among ſeveral others, theſe two (2 Cor. 7. 11.) Indignation and Revenge: Godly ſorrow working repentance not to be repented of, fills the Soul with indignation againſt ſin, whether in our ſelves or others, nor will the repenting Soul put up the matter till it hath both plotted and graciouſly acted the higheſt revenge. It will not ſatisfie a godly man to have corruption a little reſtrain'd or abated, to have the horns and nails of it cut and pared, or to have (in this ſence) the ſuperfluity of his naughtineſs, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, removed and laid aſide, but he muſt pull it up root and branch, and get it utterly mortified. For though a gracious Soul bleſſeth God for any leſſer power obtained againſt corruption, or that it doth not King and Lord it over him; yet he is not ſatisfied with this, his deſign is the ruine of it; and he never leaves praying and ſtriving with Chriſt till every thought be brought into ſubjection. Thus we ſee how far holy revenge goes, and unholy revenge would go as far in its own way, nor will it ſit down and be ſatisfied till it hath gone thus far. Covetouſneſs is a very ſwallowing and an unſatiable luſt; yet I know not whether revenge be not more unſatiable then covetouſneſs; it will never have done where there is any thing to be done; this is certain, a covetous man cannot be more inſatiable then a malicious or revengeful man.

And ſeeing the revenges of enraged enemies are ſo unſatiable, that nothing will ſatisfie them but our fleſh, what cauſe have we to bleſs God who keeps us out of their hands; we may well ſay as the Church in the Pſalm, Many a time had we been ſwallowed up, if the Lord had not been on our ſide when men roſe up againſt us. Our enemies are as far enraged as ever, and as they wiſh in ſecret, O that we had of their fleſh! So where they may be bold they will adventure to ſay it openly. What cauſe then have we to bleſs God that we have been kept from the power of bloody minded men, who would act if they had opportunity with a rage as high as Heaven, or rather with a rage as low as Hell; it would be a rage as high as Heaven not only in that proverbial ſence, becauſe it would be exceeding high, or as high as it could, but in plain ſence becauſe reflexively it would be againſt God himſelf, who is in Heaven, though poſſibly they might pretend for God; and it would be a rage as low as Hell Originally, for thence it comes; a Spirit of Implacability is Earthly, Senſual, Deviliſh (James 3. 15.) O that we had their fleſh! we cannot be ſatisfied.

There is yet another apprehenſion of the ſcope of this verſe as it refers to the former, which I ſhall but repreſent and paſs from it. The ſum of it may be thus conceived; as if Job here were proving how far he was from a deſire of revenge upon his enemies, by ſhewing his patience under the wrongs and unworthy behaviour of his domeſtick friends or ſervants. As if he had ſaid, If the men of my Houſe did at any time expreſs paſſion againſt me, and break out into ſo much boldneſs, as not only ſecretly to wiſh, but openly to ſay, O that we had our Maſters fleſh to eat! yet I reſrain'd my ſelf towards them, and did not break out in diſpleaſure againſt them. Solomon gives counſel to Maſters or Governours of families in ſuch caſes (Eccleſ. 7. 21.) Do not give heed to every word that is ſpoken; leſt thou hear thy ſervant curſe thee. As if he had ſaid, Do not take too much notice of every paſſage and word ſpoken in thy family; though poſſibly thou mayeſt hear a ſervant curſe thee, that is, ſpeak undutifully of thee, or wiſh thee evil, yet do not hear what thou heareſt; as 'tis good to bear injuries patiently from thoſe who are without doors, or from ſtrangers, ſo it is our wiſeſt courſe, not to examine over-ſtrictly all that is ſpoken or done within doors, or by thoſe who are near about us. And the Preacher gives a good reaſon for this prudent connivence in the next verſe; For oftentimes thine own heart knoweth, that thou thy ſelf likewiſe haſt curſed others. That is, ſpoken unduely of them; 'tis a good conſideration and a neceſſary one to keep us off from ſeverity towards others, often to remember what we have done to or ſpoken of others. And he will never bear injuries from enemies abroad, who cannot in ſome meaſure bear evil words and unhandſome carriages from the men of his own Houſe. That, Job received many incivilities even from his own ſervants, appears by his complaint at the 19. Chapter (verſ. 15.) And how much David was preſſed with the wrongs which he received from his friends and familiars, beyond what ever his open and profeſſed enemies had done or could do againſt him, we may read very paſſionately expreſſed (Pſal. 55. 12, 13, 14, 15.) It was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have born it, neither was it he that hated me, that did magnifie himſelf againſt me, but it was thou, a man, mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance, we took ſweet counſel together, and walked to the Houſe of God as friends; we joined as one both in civil converſe, and holy worſhip.

So much of the interpretation of theſe words as they bear reference to the former verſe.

There is another vein of interpretation which carrieth their ſence forward to the verſe following, If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not, O that we had of his fleſh! The ſtranger did not lodg in the ſtreets, &c. Thus they bear a two-fold expoſition.

First, As expreſſing extream anger againſt Job.

Secondly, As expreſſing extream love to Job; both theſe which are the greateſt contraries are wrought out from theſe words. I will touch at each of them.

Firſt, Some expound theſe words as implying the greateſt anger againſt Job; as if, the men of his Tabernacle, his ſervants had been dayly vext with Job becauſe of the trouble he put them to by the continual entertainment of ſo many ſtrangers, of whom he ſpeaks at the 32. verſe, or as if Job kept ſo much hoſpitality for ſtrangers, that his family fared the worſe for it, and were ſo incenſed againſt their Maſter for it, that they would ſometimes cry out, O that we had of his fleſh! That is, of our Maſters fleſh; that we might eat him in revenge for that trouble which he puts us to, by bringing or admitting ſo many ſtrangers to his Houſe, that we either have no time to eat our meat, or no meat left to eat, we cannot be ſatisfied. Mr. Broughton renders the Text thus; Have not the folk of my Houſe ſaid, O that we had his fleſh! and he gives a two-fold gloſs upon it; Firſt, as to the former Interpretation, A ſpeech of hatred to the Enemy; Secondly, as to the latter, Or for hoſpitality, that the ſervants dinner was given to ſtrangers, that they tarried to roaſt more; which ſo troubled his ſervants, as theſe expoſitors ſuppoſe, that they could even have eaten their Maſter. But, firſt, there is no probability that Job who was ſo liberal and kind to ſtrangers, ſhould be any way hard or unjuſt to his own ſervant, eſpecially not ſo hard as to draw out their Spirits in ſuch bitter language againſt him; how he dealt with his ſervants we have under his own Oath at the 13. verſe of this Chapter; and can we think that Job who was ſo equal and benign to his ſervants, could be (upon any account) thus diſtaſted by them? Nor, ſecondly, it is probable that Job's ſervants were not willing to do the beſt offices to ſtrangers, and to ſhew reſpect where their Maſter ſhewed love? Nor, thirdly, is it to be ſuppoſed that he would keep ſuch ill-bred and ill-condition'd ſervants, as would look ſourly upon thoſe whom he their Maſter had invited to his Houſe, or ſpeak ill of him for inviting them. One of the Ancients diſcourſing about Abraham's hoſpitality, ſaith, No man living in a wiſe mans family is backward to offices of humanity; both men and women, free men and ſervants are free to beſtow their labour in miniſtring to ſtrangers. Upon theſe conſiderations, I cannot judg this expoſition commodious or agreeing to this place.

Nemo ad humanitatis officia ſegnis eſt in ſapientis familia; tam mulieres quàm viri, tàm ſervi quam ingenui promptè miniſtrant hoſpitibus. Philo de Hoſpital. Abra.

But there is another reaſon why at leaſt ſome of Job's ſervants might be angry with him, namely, the ſtrictneſs of his Houſhold diſcipline. Doubtleſs, was a ſevere obſerver of family duties; he would not endure diſorderly perſons in his Houſe, who kept not to the rules of Godlineſs and ſobriety. We may parallel Job with David in this thing, whoſe reſolutions about the choice and government of his family are ſet down (Pſal. 101. 6.) Mine eyes ſhall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me, he that walketh in a perfect way he ſhall ſerve me; he that worketh deceit ſhall not dwell within my Houſe: He that telleth lyes, ſhall not tarry in my ſight. It ſeems David looked all the land over among his Subjects, to find choice perſons whom he might make his ſervants. And here he gives us an exact character of them, both in the affirmative and in the negative, or whom he admitted into, and whom he expelled from and caſt out of his family; the faithful and ſuch as walked in a perfect way were admitted, deceitful workers and lye-tellers (under which two all ſorts of wicked perſons are comprehended, theſe I ſay) either were not at all received into his family, or upon diſcovery of their naughtineſs they were diſcharged and caſt out. Now Job exerciſing ſuch a ſtrict diſcipline as this in his family, did poſſibly ſo torment ſome of his ſervants, that they counted his Houſe a Priſon, and even wiſht his death, or could have eaten him up alive. Thus the interpretation of theſe words carrieth an expreſſion of extreameſt anger in Job's ſervants at the ſtrictneſs of his Houſhold-government.

Secondly, Others expound them as an argument of the extream love and good will which his ſervants bare him. As Job was not revengeful to his enemies, ſo he was very kind and ſweet to thoſe of his own family, both to his ſervants and friends; this gained ſo far upon their affections, that they wiſht to be always in his ſight; they could not be ſatisfied without his fleſh, that is, his preſence, or himſelf in perſon. 'Tis a great evidence of a mans juſtice, kindneſs, and goodneſs in his family, when there is a ſtrong deſire in his ſervants to have him always with them.

Again, Others inſiſting upon this general ſence of theſe words, O that we had of his fleſh, give out their meaning yet more ſpecially; that as Job was ready to entertain ſtrangers in his Houſe, ſo he made ſuch plentiful proviſion for his ſervants, that they had no mind to change their Maſter, nor remove to any other ſervice. He kept ſo good a Table, that they deſired no mans fleſh, or dyet but his.

We ſee how the apprehenſions of learned men have varied about the intendment of Job in this verſe; but I rather incline to the firſt Interpretation, as holding out the moſt proper ſcope of the place; and therefore it ſhall ſuffice only to have touched at theſe things, leaving the reader (undetermined) to his own underſtanding about them.

Job having declared himſelf free and far from revenge to enemies, though provoked by his own ſervants, proceeds to declare how ready and free he was to ſhew love and reſpect to any that needed it, and by name to ſtrangers and travellers.

Verſe 32. The ſtranger did not lodg in the ſtreet: but I opened my door to the traveller.

A ſtranger, is a perſon abſent from his own home, and place of abode or birth, and here he is not only ſo but deſtitute of lodging and neceſſaries. And in thoſe days moſt ſtrangers were deſtitute of conveniency for lodging, there being no common Inns to lodg ſtrangers in; and there are few at this day in the Eaſtern Countries, ſo that ſtrangers muſt lodg in the ſtreets, if none will open to them. But then (ſaith Job) the ſtranger did not lodg in the ſtreet,

But I opened my door to the traveller.

The former part of the verſe was negative, this latter is affirmative. And as the negative Commandments include an affirmative, while the Law ſaith, Thou ſhalt do no murder, it teacheth us to cheriſh and preſerve the life of our brother; ſo Job's negative propoſition, The ſtranger did not lodg in the ſtreets, includes this affirmative, I opened my door to the traveller; yet to ſhew the compleatneſs of his hoſpitality, he expreſſeth both, The ſtranger did not lodg in the ſtreet; but I opened my door to the traveller; that is, I cauſed my door to ſtand open, or my doors were readily opened when ſtrangers came by. The Hebrew is, I opened my door to the way: As if Job had ſaid, I built my Houſe toward the high-way, that ſtrangers who paſſed by, might ſee it and come in. I was not afraid my Houſe ſhould ſtand open to view. Some build in a corner, or in a covert of Trees and Woods out of the common Road, that they may be out of the danger of entertainment. But (ſaith Job) I opened my door to the way; we tranſlate, to the traveller, that is, to the way-faring man, or the man that travels by the way. The ſtranger in the former part of the verſe, and the traveller here are the ſame; he that travels from his own home is a ſtranger wherefoever he comes; We call our neareſt friends and relations ſtrangers when they travel from their own Houſes to ours. I opened my door to the traveller.

Hence Note, Firſt, Strangers and travellers are ſubject to hardſhip, even to lodg in the ſtreets and open air, unleſs ſome open their doors and give them lodging.

When Jacob travel'd from his fathers Houſe, he lodged under the Canopy of Heaven, and had nothing but the Earth for his bed, and a Stone for his pillow. The Hebrew word which ſignifies a ſtranger, comes from a Root, ſignifying to fear, and the reaſon of it is aſſigned from the condition of ſtrangers, they being ſubject to many dangers, and ſo by many conſequence to fears. Doubtleſs, the Spirit of God foreſaw that ſtrangers were expoſed to many inconveniences, and therefore gave caution to his ancient people the Jews to treat thoſe fairly who being ſtrangers by birth and Nation, ſhould deſire to dwell among them (Exod. 22. 21.) Thou ſhalt neither vex a ſtranger, nor oppreſs him, for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt. And again (Levit. 19. 33, 34.) If a ſtranger ſojourn with thee in your land, ye ſhall not vex him, but the ſtranger that dwelleth with you ſhall be as one born amongſt you, that thou ſhalt love him as thy ſelf, &c. Theſe cautionary Laws made for ſtrangers (that is, for proſelytes of other Nations converted to the Jewiſh Religion) do more then intimate what hard meaſure ſtrangers uſe to find and meet with in the World.

And therefore the people of God who (though dwelling in their native Country) are all ſtrangers in this world, ſhould not think much if they meet with hardſhip ſometimes, but be always prepared and armed for it, as their preſent condition forewarns them of it. The old Patriarchs confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the Earth (Heb. 11. 13.) As this kept their hearts looſe from expecting or ſeeking their contents here below, ſo it bore up and ſupported their Spirits with much contentation, when they found trouble and ill uſages here below. They who remember that they are not at home, and that they are not far from home, or that it cannot be long before they ſhall be at home, will eaſily digeſt or lightly paſs over the bad and coarſe entertainment which they have abroad. The Apoſtle Peter (1 Eph. 2. 11.) Beſeecheth all believers as ſtrangers and pilgrims to abſtain from fleſhly luſts which war againſt the Soul. How unſutable as well as ſinful is it for them to luſt after worldly things (ſuch are all the luſtings of the fleſh) who are themſelves but ſtrangers in the World. 'Tis both the honour and the ſafety of thoſe who are ſtrangers in the World, to be ſtrangers to it; and becauſe they have but a little while to ſtay in it, to look but little after it, and for little from it. The ſame Apoſtle exhorts us (Chap. 1. 17.) to paſs the time of our ſojourning here in fear; He doth not mean in a diſtracting much leſs in a tormenting fear of what evils we may ſuffer here, but in a holy filil fear of doing any evil, or in the fear of God, which alone keeps us from the fear of man, which as ſpiritual pilgrims and ſtrangers, we are ſubject to.

Secondly, From Job's profeſſed practice in opening his door to ſtrangers and travellers.

Obſerve, It is a duty to ſhew kindneſs to ſtrangers.

The Apoſtle gives warning (Heb. 13. 2.) Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers (that is, remember it well) for thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares. Yea (which is a more bleſſed ſurpriſal) we may entertain Chriſt unawares; and indeed in every entertainment of a poor godly ſtranger, Chriſt himſelf is entertained. Job did not (nor ſhould any good man) make tipling entertainments, or entertainment for tiplers. Some uſe much exceſs in their Houſes, but no true hoſpitality: Some open their doors ſo much to riotous friends, that they have not a bed nor a morſel for true ſtrangers. The duty of hoſpitality is often urged in Scripture; ſober hoſpitality is good between neighbour and neighbour, but 'tis beſt when exerciſed toward the traveller and the ſtranger. The Heathen had a very great zeal, and a kind of religiouſneſs in the entertainment of ſtrangers; therefore they ſurnamed their Jupiter by a Title which ſignifies reſpect to ſtrangers: Surely Goſpel-

Ethnici veteres ſanctè jus hoſpitii, coluerunt eiq; Jovem, quem propterea ξένιον vocarunt tuendo & conſervando præeſſe crediderunt. Sanct.

Goſpel-grace ſhould ſpiritualize us in that duty which Heathens were ſo naturalized unto: And we find that Jeſus Chriſt in the great day of Judgment puts in this good work by name (Matth. 25. 35.) I was a ſtranger and ye took me in. Jeſus Chriſt is a ſtranger in his members; Chriſt in believers is in want and deſtitute. A Goſpel Miniſter muſt be given to hoſpitality (1 Tim. 3. 2.) and a lover of hoſpitality (Tit. 1. 8.) of ſuch hoſpitality as I here ſpeak of, and ſo muſt they who receive the Goſpel. The Apoſtle gives the rule about the widow (1 Tim. 5. 10.) If ſhe have lodged ſtrangers; as implying, that elſe ſhe will never be fit to look to the weak and ſick of the Church.

Thirdly, In that Job opened his door to ſtrangers.

> Note, A good man is ready to entertain ſtrangers; as he is ready for other good works ſo for this.

The ſtranger needs not ſtand knocking long at his door to get in, he openeth his door to him; Job in this ſence, kept open Houſe. So did Abraham before him (Gen. 18. 1, 2, 3.) who ſtood in his Tent door, and when he ſaw ſtrangers a good way off, he went out and brought them in. Lot (Gen. 19.) readily entertained thoſe that came to Sodom, he invited them into his Houſe. And in the 19. of Judges, we have a like example of hoſpitality.

Laſtly, Note in general, from this carriage of Job who being a man of a free Spirit opened his door to the traveller,

> That which we are ready and willing to do, we put all things in a readineſs to do.

Job did not lock up his doors, but open'd them, he open'd them to the way; Job had a free Spirit, and he kept a free Houſe for good purpoſes; if we have a mind to a duty, our door will be open that way, that is, we will put all things in poſture for it; as becauſe the Lord is ready to pardon ſin. he keeps as it were blank pardons by him, it is but putting a name to them, and all's done preſently; ſo a Soul that is willing to honour Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel, puts all things in a readineſs, he puts off his cooling company, and his buſineſs; he will have nothing to hinder him. Martha though a good woman in the main, yet was not ſo ready to hear Chriſt as her ſiſter Mary, and therefore was cumbred with many things. When the heart is ready to hear or pray, impediments are removed, the door of the Soul is unlockt and ſtands open for thoſe duties. If once the Lord by any providence or opportunity ſaith, Seek ye my face, the heart of ſuch a man ſaith to the Lord, thy face will I ſeek (Pſal. 27. 8.) Indeed when once the heart is ready all is ready, and till the heart be ready nothing is. Evil men (Tit. 1. 16.) are to every good work Reprobate, or unready, they cannot come off clearly nor freely to them, many ſtops and difficulties are in the way, this rub and 'tother rub, ſometimes a Lion is in the way; upon one account or other they are unready to every good work: But a godly man hath his heart open firſt, and then his door to every good work. O how ſhould our everlaſting doors ſtand always open, that the King of glory way to enter in (Pſal. 24. 9.) Chriſt ſtands at the door and knocks (Rev. 3. 20. Cant. 5. 3.) Let not the door of your hearts be ſhut againſt him, ſhut it only againſt the World in which you are ſtrangers, and againſt Satan who is that ſtranger.

Verſe 33. If I covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam: By hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

Job having ſpoken much in many particulars for the vindication of his own integrity; ſeems in this 33. verſe to prevent an objection which his friends or others might make againſt that diſcourſe. As if he had ſaid, We have heard you ſpeaking your own praiſes much and long; we ſee you are very tender of your own honour, and cannot endure that ſhould be toucht. You have given us a Catalogue of your good works, and ſhewed us your light ſide, your ſhining vertues: But have you no ſins? Is your life indeed free from faults and errors? Have not you a dark ſide alſo? Are you a man, above all men, without ſpot and blameleſs? Are you abſolutely perfect, and without your failing? To this heap of reflecting queries, we may ſuppoſe Job giving anſwer, in the word of this Text; as if he had ſaid, I readily acknowledge that I have ſinned, and have had my failings as well as other men, for I alſo am a Son of Adam; I have no perfection to boaſt of, but that of uprightneſs and of an honeſt bent to pleaſe God in all things. I am far from ſaying I have not ſinned; only thus much I can ſay for my ſelf, (through grace) that I have neither as Adam the firſt man once did, nor as moſt men the Sons of Adam ſtill do, ſtudied to conceal my ſins; but I have humbly confeſſed them unto God, and believingly begged their pardon at his hands. That's (I conceive) Job's ſcope in theſe words. He did not ſay, I have not tranſgreſſed; but he ſaid, I have not covered my tranſgreſſions.

Verſ. 33. If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam.

The words are of a Negative ſence; I have not covered my tranſgreſſions; yet the Negative hath a reſtriction in it; he doth not ſay abſolutely, I have not covered my tranſgreſſions, but, I have not covered them as Adam; and how Adam covered them is implyed, if not expreſſed in the latter part of the verſe, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

If I have covered my tranſgreſſions.] The Original word ſignifieth properly to cover with a garment or vail, with any thing, which gives ſhadow or is a means of concealment. Yet ſome diſtinguiſh the native ſignification of this word from another in the Hebrew tongue ſomewhat near it in the letter; that ſignifying to cover as Houſes or Tents cover us (and from thence the word Succoth ſignifying Tents or Booths, is derived) which cover us by being over us, or we being in them, whereas this word ſignifies to cover as cloths or garments cover us, by being put upon us or by our putting them on. But not to ſtay upon that ſtrictneſs of the word in its proper ſence; here we are to underſtand it metaphorically, and ſo 'tis applyed two ways in Scripture; firſt, to that gracious act of God in pardoning our tranſgreſſions; ſecondly, to that ungracious act of man in denying or excuſing his tranſgreſſions. 'Tis an act of greateſt grace in God to cover our tranſgreſſions by a pardon. He never ſhews himſelf more as God, then when he thus hides the ſin of man. And 'tis an act moſt oppoſite to grace, for man to cover his ſin by denying or excuſing it; man never ſhews himſelf more a man, a ſinful man, then when he covers his ſin. That act of divine pardoning grace David expreſſeth in the language of Job's Text (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered. By whom covered? Not by himſelf but by God. That which is called the forgiveneſs of ſin in the former part of the verſe, is called covering of it in the latter part. Solomon ſpeaks the ſame thing of God, though he uſed another word (Prov. 25. 2.) It is the glory of God to conceal (or cover) a thing; he means a ſinful thing, or that which is worſe then nothing, ſin. To clear this a little further; we read in Scripture of a four-fold covering of ſin for good.

Firſt, There is a covering of ſin, by mercy or free love; that indeed is the fountain from whence this tranſcendent favour, the forgiveneſs of ſin floweth to us. I, even I am he (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 43. 25.) that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions for my names ſake, and will not remember thy ſins. That is, the riſe and firſt moving cauſe of this is in my ſelf, it proceeds out of my own boſom. There is no moving cauſe antecedent to the love of God, why ſinners are pardoned, though there be a firſt or chief working cauſe of the pardoning or covering of our ſins; and that is the next way of covering ſin.

Secondly, Sin is covered as by the free favour and mercy of God, ſo by the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt; God covers ſin from his juſtice, yet he will ſuffer no damage in point of juſtice; though he ſtop the proceedings of juſtice, he loſeth nothing by it, becauſe as ſin is covered by his own mercy, ſo by the meritorious obedience of Chriſt, which gives full ſatisfaction to all the demands of juſtice. The mercy-ſeat or propitiatory (which was an illuſtrious type of Chriſt) covered the Ark in which the Law was kept (Exod. 25. 10, 17.) This mercy ſeat was of the ſame length and breadth with the Ark. And Moſes was commanded to put the Mercy ſeat upon the Ark, implying that all our tranſgreſſions of the law of God, are covered by the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, who is both our propitiatory (Rom. 3. 25.) and our propitiation (1 Joh. 2. 2.) that is, who by the ſacrifice of himſelf hath made our atonement or agreement with God, which was figured by the propitiatory or mercy-ſeat, covering all thoſe tranſgreſſions which we were any way chargeable with by the Law.

Thirdly, Sins are covered as by the mercy of God, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſo by the charity of man. Thus any godly man may and ought to cover the ſin of his brother (1 Pet. 4. 8.) Above all things have perfect charity among your ſelves; for charity ſhall cover the multitude of ſins. True charity hath a garment long and large enough to cover many, yea a multitude of ſins. Charity cannot cover our own ſins as to the juſtification of our perſons before God, 'tis a garment too thin and too narrow for that purpoſe, nor was it ever cut out and appointed by God to ſuch a uſe; but charity ſhould and may cover the ſins of others, as to the preſervation of their credit among men, and the maintaining of our peace and correſpondence with them. 'Tis dangerous as well as unwarrantable to cover the ſins of others by flattery (ſuch a covering of ſin is not only an encouragement to ſin, but may prove the utter undoing of the ſinner) but to cover a ſin by charity, that is, while we are admoniſhing or wiſely reproving our brother our ſelves, to conceal it from others, or not to publiſh and blaze it abroad to his ſhame, or the provocation of paſſion in him, is a great piece of Chriſtian duty, and may be a means of recovering him from the power and practice of his ſin. Thus Solomon ſaith (Prov. 10. 12.) Hatred ſtirreth up ſtrife, but love covereth all ſins; That is, the love of man to man prevents wrath by covering ſin for the ſinners good, not to cloak and harden him in his ſin, but to win him out of it; or love covereth, that is, pardoneth all the ſins of others ſo far as they concern any injury done to us; thus Chriſt teacheth us to forgive thoſe that treſpaſs againſt us (Matth. 6. 12. 15.) yea love cauſeth others to forgive us the wrongs which we have done them; whereas hatred (that is, any expreſſion of hatred either by words or actions) doth but ſtir up ſtrife, and make the breach wider. Hatred always increaſeth ſtrife where it is, and often begins it where it is not; love always looks upon great wrongs as ſmall, and upon ſmall ones as none at all. The Church Hiſtory reports of Conſtantine the Great and firſt Chriſtian Emperor, that when ſeveral accuſations were brought againſt ſome of the Biſhops aſſembled at the Councel of Nice, He would not ſuffer them to be urged in publick, but profeſſed he would rather cover them with his royal robes, than let them break out to the hinderance of the work, and the ſcandal of thoſe perſons who were concerned in them.

Fourthly, Man alſo is ſaid in Scripture to cover ſin by the converſion of the ſinner (James 5. 19. 20.) Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he which converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins; That is, if any one among you who hath made an outward profeſſion of the truth, ſhall turn aſide from the rule of the Goſpel, whether in matters of faith or of a holy life, in this caſe take notice that whoſoever ſhall be bleſſed as an inſtrument in God's hand, by prayer or reproof, by counſels or any endeavours to recover him out of that wandering and backſliding condition, This man ſhall have the honour (be he who he will, Miniſter or brother) to ſave a ſoul from death, and hide a multitude of ſins. Some, I know, underſtand theſe words of the Apoſtle, as referring to the ſalvation of the perſon who is the inſtrument of this converſion; his ſoul ſhall be ſaved and his ſins ſhall be hidden how many ſoever they are; and the Apoſtle Paul joyns both for the encouragement of Timothy in his Miniſtry (1 Tim. 4. 16.) In ſo doing, thou ſhalt ſave thy ſelf and them that hear thee. But the current of this Text runs clearly to the perſon reduced from the error of his way; Thou ſhalt ſave a ſoul, that is, his ſoul, and hide a multitude of ſins, that is, of his ſins; as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt be a means of bringing him to a ſight of his ſin, and ſo to humble himſelf before God and ſeek the pardon of them, which is the only true and happy hiding and covering of them.

Thus I have ſhewed four coverings of ſin, and in all theſe ſences, it is good for us, to have our ſins covered. Bleſſed are they whoſe ſins are covered by the free favour of God, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and by the wiſe charity of their brethren, either not divulging them, or converting the ſinner from them.

But there is a ſinful way in which ſin is covered, or there is a covering of ſin, which is both the ſin and miſery of man, ſuch a covering of ſin as will cover him with ſhame and confuſion of face for ever. And that's it which Job diſclaims. He ſought and ſought doubtleſs with all his ſoul to get his ſin covered with the mercy of God, with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt the redeemer, but he durſt not make a cover for ſin himſelf; If I covered

My tranſgreſſions.] The word notes great or greateſt ſins, even rebellions and blaſphemy: by both which that ſpeech of Elihu (Chap. 34. 37.) is rendred, and our tranſlation takes the former, For he addeth rebellion unto his ſin. To rebel is more than barely to ſin, Rebellion is impudent and pertinacious ſinning. Many ſin, who (in ſtrict ſence) do not rebel; they that rebel ſin with all their might. They not only do evil, but do it againſt the light of good counſel given by others, and againſt the light of their own conſciences. How ſinful are they, who add rebellion to their ſin? Some take it thus here, I have not covered my tranſgreſſions or my great ſins; as if Job had ſaid, I have not hid the worſt of my ſelf, I have not only not ſought to conceal my common frailties, but not my fouleſt ſpots, and greateſt rebellions againſt God. Many are free to confeſs leſſer ſins, but they prepare coverings for their groſs enormities. So that if we take the word tranſgreſſions, in this peculiar ſignification, it much advanceth and advantageth the ſincerity of Job's heart in this profeſſion.

Vox Hebræa פשע latiſſimè patet, ut etiam leviora crimina comprehendat. Druſ.

Yet I ſuppoſe we are not tied to that ſtrictneſs of the word in this place. And we find it ſometimes uſed to expreſs ordinary ſins and common failings in other places of Scripture. (Prov. 10. 19.) In the multitude of words there wanteth not ſin; That is, there is uſually ſtore of ſin in ſtore of words; yet we know a ſlip of the tongue (for we cannot probably interpret that Scripture of meditated evil ſpeaking, a ſlip of the tongue I ſay) is not reckoned among great ſins, though no ſin conſidered in it ſelf be little. So here I conceive Job intends that he did not cover any ſin, whether great or little, when he ſaith, If I covered my tranſgreſſions

As Adam.] There's the reſtriction or modification of the act denyed. Yet this word Adam may be taken two ways; Firſt, more narrowly as a proper name. The firſt man was called Adam from Adamah, red earth, out of which the Lord made or created him. (Gen. 2. 7.) And the Lord God formed man of the duſt of the ground, and breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life. As Adam was formed out of the duſt of the earth, ſo from that he took his name. And this ſutes elegantly with Job's purpoſe; and is alſo an argument that Job was well acquainted with, and inſtructed about, thoſe neceſſary principles of religion, the ſtate of the firſt man in his innocency, as alſo with his fall from that ſtate, and the ſad effects and conſequents of it. Adam having ſinned, imployed that little wit or vain ſubtlety he had left to cover his ſin, and hide it from God, as I ſhall have occaſion to ſhew more particularly, in the proſecution of this Scripture. Therefore ſaith Job, If I covered my tranſgreſſion as Adam, the firſt man Adam. Whether Moſes had written his five books before Job's time is a querie of a difficult, if at all of a poſſible, reſolution; yet however, God was not wanting to his Church, but either by tradition from man to man, or by immediate revelation from himſelf, continued the doctrine of the creation and fall of man, with the neceſſary truths depending thereupon among his people from Adam to Moſes, which might give Job light enough to ſay even with reſpect to that perſonal act of Adam, If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam.

Secondly, We may take the word Adam more largely, that is, Appellatively, or as a common name applicable to all men; for every man, ſince the firſt man Adam, is an Adam. There are three words by which man is expreſſed in Scripture.

Firſt, Iſh, which ſignifieth man in his higheſt excellency and dignity, in the quickneſs of his parts and gifts, in the beſt dreſs or habit of Nature or of Grace.

Secondly, Enoſh, which notes man compaſſed about with infirmity, even weakly, ſickly, ſad and ſorrowful man, or man (though poſſibly renewed by grace, yet) cloathed and burdened with the troubleſom iſſues of a ſinful nature.

The third word is that of the Text, Adam, and this belongs to all mankind, or to man as man, whether great or ſmall, ſtrong or weak, every man is Adam, his body being of the earth earthly. If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam; That is, as men uſually do. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks (Hoſea 6. 7.) But they, like men, have tranſgreſſed the Covenant. We put in the Margin, like Adam. And in the Margin of this Text in Job, we put, after the manner of men, If I covered my tranſgreſſions after the manner of men; That is, as the race and generality of mankind have heretofore done and do to this day. As if he had ſaid, I have not trod the path, nor followed the courſe of the world, who make it their firſt buſineſs to ſin, and their next to cover and hide their ſins. Mr. Broughton tranſlates fully to this ſence of the word, If I have covered my ſin as every man doth; implying that this is an epidemical practical diſeaſe, infecting all ſorts and degrees of men. If I covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam,

Si texi ſicut reliqui homines. Merc.

By hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

In theſe words Job further explains how he did not cover his ſin, He did not hide it in his boſom. The word tranſlated to hide, notes a cunning artificial hiding, ſuch as hunters or fowlers uſe when they would take their prey, Theſe lay their nets very cloſely (for as Solomon ſaith (Prov. 1. 17.) Surely in vain is the net ſpread in the ſight of any bird) and ſo the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth it in the ſame alluſion (Pſal. 9. 15.) The heathen are ſunk down in the pit that they made, in the net which they hid is their own foot taken; Such a hiding of his iniquity Job denieth, a cloſe cunning hiding; or like that of the ſlothful man (Prov. 19. 24.) who hideth his hand in his boſom, and will not bring it to his mouth again, he had rather ſtarve than work, and periſh rather than be at the pains to feed himſelf. Thus the ſinner hideth his iniquity in his boſom, and will not bring it to his mouth again; that is, he had rather be, at leaſt he will venture to be damned than confeſs or diſcover it; He will not bring his boſom-ſin to his mouth in a holy confeſſion either to God or man. I (ſaith Job) have not hid

Mine iniquity.] That is, the iniquity which I am moſt prone to, and which my heart goeth moſt after; every man hath ſome iniquity, which he may call his ſpecial iniquity more than any other iniquity. The word iniquity in this latter part of the verſe, and tranſgreſſion in the former are the ſame in ſubſtance; yet this word properly ſignifieth that which is crooked or bowed. Holy actions are ſtraight right, and tend upward; ſinful actions are crooked and bend downward. Cain the firſt-born ſinner applyed this word to his ſin, or to the fruit of it, his puniſhment, or to both (Gen. 4. 13.) My puniſhment is greater than I can bear; we put in the Margin, Mine iniquity is greater, than that it may be forgiven. And as it notes the crookedneſs of our actions, ſo the vicioſity of our natures, or original ſin (Pſal. 51. 5.) Behold (ſaith repenting David) I was ſhapen in (that moſt crooked and miſhapen thing called) iniquity. This original iniquity as well as any actual (though the former lyes cloſeſt and deepeſt there) muſt not be hidden in our boſom; and we may well conceive that Job had an aim at this, when he ſaid, I have not covered my tranſgreſſions, by hiding mine iniquity

Hebræi בחבי in ſinu meo, fere expoſuit בסתרי in occulto meo & latibulo, inter ſcrinia ſc. & cogitationes cordis mei; non dubium eſt quin tranſlatitiè ad mentis receſſum & conſcientiæ arcanum res hæc pertineat. Merc. Kimhi petit ab חבב quod eſt deligere deduci quaſi

In my boſom.] This phraſe, To hide iniquity in the boſom, imports the neareſt cloſing with and loving imbraces of any iniquity. The boſom is a ſecret place, and to put a thing in the boſom, is to keep it as ſecret as we can. Thus ſome tranſlate the Text, by hiding my iniquity in ſecret, or in ſecreſie; that is, in the remoteſt retirements, in the moſt privy boxes and contrivements of the heart and conſcience. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who was manifeſted in the fulneſs of time, and had been hid all the time or rather eternity before from the world, is ſaid to come out of the boſom of the Father (Joh. 1. 18.) And John the beloved Diſciple leaned in Chriſts boſom (Joh. 13. 23.) that is, he had moſt intimate converſe with Chriſt, and knew more of his heart than moſt of the other Diſciples; We commonly call a very near friend, a Boſom friend.

Yet further, Some of the Jewiſh Rabbins tranſlate, thus; If I have hid my ſin in my ſelf-love, or in the love of my ſelf, or as Mr. Broughton, of a ſelf-love. With which reading other late learned Interpreters agree; Some thus; Hiding my ſin becauſe I loved it, or out of love to my ſelf. As ſelf love is a ſin, ſo many hide their ſins out of love to ſelf. Thoſe things that we love dearly and have a precious eſteem of, we hide ſafely; That's the emphaſis of theſe latter tranſlations; If I have hid my iniquity becauſe I loved it, or, Becauſe of my ſelf-love; As if Job had aſſigned two things, which might have prevailed with him to conceal his ſin, if he had not feared God; Firſt, the pattern he had from Adam, or from the daily practice of moſt men. Secondly, the love which man naturally bears to ſin. I have not covered my tranſgreſſions like Adam, nor hath my love to them overcome me to hide them.

באהבתי in amore mei & φιλαυτίᾳ, qua homines natura laborant, ſe & ſua vel peccata amantes. Abdendo ex dilectione mea iniquitatem meam. Jun.

Again, When Job ſaith, he did not cover his tranſgreſſions, nor hide his iniquity in his boſom. We muſt underſtand him in the full latitude of theſe words; And ſo more is intended than expreſſed; even that he acknowledged and confeſſed his ſin. As he did not proclaim his ſin in the market-place, ſo he did diſcover it, as in duty he ought, that is, in time, place, and manner convenient. He not only did not hide his ſin, but he acknowledged and confeſſed it. As all the negative precepts include their affirmatives, ſo ſome negative practices include their affirmatives. According to which rule of Scripture-interpretation, we may conclude, that when Job ſaid, I have not covered my tranſgreſſions, &c. his meaning was, he did confeſs and declare them with ſorrow and brokenneſs of heart, that he might give glory to God under a ſence of his own vileneſs, and of the riches of his free grace in the pardon of them. Thus much for the explication and underſtanding of this verſe; If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

From the whole, obſerve, Firſt, Man loves to hide and ſeek coverings for his ſin.

Satan and our corrupt hearts have no ſooner prevailed with us to do evil, but they preſently counſel and perſwade us to conceal the evil we have done. Sin enters ſecretly and ſuddainly. It comes like a thief to rob and ſpoil us of our beſt treaſure. Moſt ſins are committed in the dark, that is, ſecretly; and all ſins ſo committed would be kept in the darkneſs of concealment and ſecrecy. Sin is darkneſs, and a work of darkneſs; Now darkneſs being ſo congenial to ſin, ſinners muſt needs love darkneſs. Moſt of our ſins are unknown to others, yea many of our ſins are unknown to our ſelves. Therefore David had no ſooner put this queſtion (Pſal. 19. 12.) Who can underſtand his errours? But he preſently puts up this petition, Cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults. And theſe ſecret faults by him intended in that prayer, were not ſuch as he had committed out of the eye or ſight of others, but ſuch as had eſcaped or were not at all diſcerned by the eye of his own obſervation. Now, as moſt of our ſins are unknown to other men, and many of our ſins are unknown to our ſelves, ſo it is the deſire of ſinful man, that all his ſins might be unknown to God. Man, as man, that is, as ſinful man deſireth that there might be a ſeal ſet or a veil put upon all his ſins. It is as natural to man to be a ſin-coverer as a ſin-committer; And he had rather make ſome poor ſhift of his own to cover it than go to God (whoſe priviledg and glory it is to cover ſin) to have his ſin covered. It was ſo with Adam the firſt man; when he had ſinned, how buſie was he to hide his ſin? It was ſo with Cain the ſecond man; when he had ſinned, how willing was he to hide his ſin? Cain ſpilt his brother's innocent blood like water upon the ground, but he would fain have ſtopped the mouth of his brother's blood from crying up to heaven. And when God came to make inquiſition for blood, and put the queſtion to him, Where is Abel thy brother? He anſwered the Lord firſt, with a plain lye, I know not; and, ſecondly, with a preſumptuous querie, Am I my brothers keeper? What have I to do with him? he is old enough to look to himſelf. Thus it was with the firſt, thus with the ſecond ſinner, and ſo it hath been with ſinners ever ſince. Do not our own hearts tell us that it is ſo? Have not the ſons of men been buſie in all generations to prepare coverings for their tranſgreſſions? and are they not upon the ſame buſineſs at this day? If any ſhall enquire, whence it cometh to paſs that men are thus ſinfully diligent in providing covers for their ſin? I anſwer, the reaſon of it ariſeth chiefly two ways.

Firſt, From pride; man hath an high ſpirit though he do low things, things as low as hell; ſuch a thing is ſin, even the beſt or leaſt of it, a low helliſh thing, a thing as low as hell; hel; yet ſinners riſe up to heaven in high and proud thoughts of themſelves; and therefore they will hide their ſin if they can, and when they have done any foul work, cover it. The ſeeming profits and vain pleaſures of ſin, they like well, but they are too proud to love the ſhame and diſgrace that uſually attends it. As ſin hath that in the effects of it which may cauſe a ſtout man to tremble, ſo it hath that in the nature of it, which may cauſe an impudent man to bluſh. It is a blot, a reproach and a diſhonour; It debaſeth man in the eye and opinion of all godly wiſe and holy men. And the more wiſe, holy, and godly any man is, the more are ſinners debaſed in his eye. That's one part of his character that ſhall abide in the tabernacle, and dwell in the holy hill of God (Pſal. 15. 4.) In his eyes a vile (not a poor but a wicked) perſon is contemned. And hence it is, that a wicked perſon will hide his ſin as much as he can; He likes his ſin well enough, but he likes not the contempt and ſhame that it expoſeth him unto. He hath ſome care of his credit, though none of his conſcience; and would preſerve his own honour, while he diſhonoureth God. And therefore had rather run the hazzard of being covered with everlaſting ſhame by covering his ſin, than take any preſent ſhame to himſelf by confeſſing it.

Secondly, This covering of ſin ariſeth from want of faith; He that cannot believe his ſin ſhall be covered by God, will cover it himſelf. True confeſſion proceeds from faith, and is one of the bleſſed fruits of it. He that ſaith he hath ſinned. and knows what he ſaith, ſees wrath due to ſin, and himſelf obnoxious to eternal death; unbelief as to pardon cauſeth fear of puniſhment: and no marvail if an unbeliever labour to hide that, which he ſees will be his death. The unbeliever will never be a confeſſor, either of God's truth or of his own ſin. Shame and fear cauſe men to hide both their ſins and themſelves; ſhame bids the proud man cover his ſin, and fear the unbeliever. Or pride at once bids the ſame man cover his ſin for fear of ſhame, and unbelief bids him cover it for fear of puniſhment.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam; he intimates that Adam framed covers for his ſin, or that it is the manner of men to do ſo.

Hence obſerve, The ſinful heart of man ſuggeſts and finds out many ways to cover ſin.

As man hath a mind to hide his ſin, ſo he is daily imagining how to hide it. Man's natural corruption hath not ſhewed it ſelf more pregnant or fruitful in any thing than in this (Eccl. 7. 26.) God hath made man upright (or right, God is rightneſs it ſelf, and as he extendeth himſelf into his works, they are all right, man eſpecially had the image of God's rightneſs ſtampt upon him in his firſt creation) but they (not only the firſt, or this or that man, but all men) have ſought out many inventions; and thoſe bad ones, very bad ones. There are many honeſt inventions reſpecting uſeful Arts and Sciences, which man hath found out by the common light which God hath given: But here Solomon ſpeaks of inventions oppoſed to uprightneſs; and what are they but evil inventions? And this is one of man's worſt inventions to hide that which is evil, and to make blinds for the covering of his ſin. He hath been moſt unhappily witty in theſe inventions. Man's trade ſince the fall of Adam, is like that of Adam; What was his? Moſes tells us of man's firſt invention to hide his bodily nakedneſs (Gen. 3. 7.) The eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked, and they ſewed fig-leaves together, and made themſelves aprons. Before they ſinned they were cloathed with the robe of innocency, but when they had ſinned they cloathed themſelves with fig-leaves. A little after he tells us of man's ſecond invention (upon which I ſhall inſiſt further hereafter) to cover the nakedneſs of his ſoul. And ever ſince it hath been man's moſt natural trade to make fig-leaf-coverings, poor ſhifts and ſhaddows to hide his ſoul-nakedneſs from the eyes of men, and if it were poſſible from the eyes of God too. We read in Scripture of ſome very witty inventions which women have uſed to cover and hide their purpoſes. I will inſtance in three, which are very remarkable. Firſt, was not that a witty invention of Rachel, who having taken away her father's images, hid them in the Camels furniture? (Gen. 31. 34.) And the holy ſtory tells us, how her wit wrought to keep the Camels furniture from being ſearcht, when her father came into her tent. The ſecond inſtance ſhall be that of Rahab, who to hide the Spies carried them up and covered them up with flax ſtalks on the roof of the houſe (Joſh. 2. 6.) Take a third in the woman of Bahurim, who uſed a notable invention to ſecure the meſſengers that went to carry tidings to David, cauſing them to go down into a well (2 Sam. 17. 18.) And the woman took and ſpread a covering over the wells mouth; and ſpread ground corn thereon, and the thing was not known. And indeed ſuſpition it ſelf could hardly ſuſpect that well, which had ſuch a covering. I mention theſe, to ſhew what ſtrange inventions have been uſed to cover things, perſons and deſigns. Yet theſe were but groſs, coarſe, and dull pieces of invention compared with thoſe which the heart of man daily finds out to cover his tranſgreſſions. O how cunning are ſinners grown to cover their ſin! What falſe doors? what trapdoors? what turnings and windings? what labyrinths and Meanders? what ſhadows and vails, hath the heart of man invented and made to keep, conveigh or cover ſin out of ſight? The heart of man is ſtrangely engaged in theſe devices, yet of them all we may ſay as the Prophet Iſaiah doth of their attempts and devices who would hide themſelves from the judgments of God (Iſa. 28. 20.) The bed is ſhorter then that a man can ſtretch himſelf on it, and the covering narrower then that he can wrap himſelf in it. When ſinners have ſtretcht their wits upon the very tenters to deviſe new covers and cloaks for ſin, both they and their ſins ſtand naked in the ſight of God, or (as we ſay) they do all the while but dance in a net; yea they lay themſelves the more open to the juſtice of God, by how much they think themſelves more concealed from his knowledg. And therefore as the ſame Prophet denounced a ſevere threatning againſt the Jews, for ſeeking to ſhelter themſelves from thoſe ſtorms which hung over their heads and were ready to fall upon them by going to Egypt or any foraign nation for ſuccour. (Iſa. 30. 1.) Woe to the rebellious children, ſaith the Lord, that take counſel but not of me, and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may adde ſin to ſin, or thereby adding ſin to ſin, that is, adding this ſin of truſting in the creature, particularly in the ſhadow of Egypt, in a day of diſtreſs, to all their other ſins; Now, I ſay, as the Jews were threatned for ſeeking ſuch a cover from troubles, ſo their caſe is as dangerous, who ſeek or make vain coverings for their ſin. The Spirit of God hath provided a covering for all our ſins, yet few have an heart to make uſe of it. But how mad are the moſt of men to cover one ſin with another, to cover ſin by that which is it ſelf more ſinful. To all ſuch the Lord ſaith, Woe to them that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit; that is, not with ſuch a covering as my Spirit hath ſhewed them and directed them unto; Theſe indeed add ſin to ſin; The covering is as ſinful as the ſin which they would cover.

But what are thoſe coverings (diſclaimed here by Job) and which are uſually made by the ſons of men to keep their tranſgreſſions out of ſight, or ſecret?

For anſwer to this querie, I ſhall ſhew you ſix covers of ſin, all invented and uſed by ſinful man, and the ſixth will give occaſion to ſpeak further to this point.

Firſt, Sin is covered when 'tis not confeſſed, or by bare concealment; When Achan had taken the accurſed thing, the goodly Babyloniſh garment, the wedg of gold, and the two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, he hid them and never ſaid 'twas he, till the lot ſaid 'twas he. The lot told the tribe, the lot told the family, the lot told the houſhold, yea the lot came upon his own head, and yet he ſtood mute and ſpake not a word of his ſin, till Joſhua ſaid unto him (Joſh. 7. 19.) My ſon give I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him, and tell me now, what haſt thou done? hide it not; As if he had ſaid, hitherto thou haſt hid thy ſin by not confeſſing it, but let me adviſe thee, hide it no longer. Some malefactors ſtand mute before the Judg, they conceal their ſin, and they have a judgment ſutable, they ſtand ſilent like a ſtone, and are covered and preſſed to death with ſtones. He that doth not diſcover his ſin when and as he ought, covers it. 'Tis dangerous enough to do that which needs confeſſion, but not to confeſs what we have ſo done is deſperate.

Secondly, There is a covering of ſin by putting the act done upon others, or by cauſing them to own it as if we had done nothing. David, a holy man, laboured to make this covering, for his great tranſgreſſions. When he had committed adultery with Bathſhebah, and ſhe having conceived, ſent and told David, ſaying, I am with child; he preſently in all haſte ſent for Uriah her husband home out of the Army, and uſed all the means his hardned heart and ſubtle head could invent to make him go home and converſe with his wife (2 Sam. 11.6, 7, &c.) that ſo it might be ſuppoſed the child was his. But the man was of a gallant ſpirit, and diſdained to take any private contentment in his family and home relations, while the Army was abroad in the field upon publick ſervice. Now David being diſappointed and his ſinful project failing for this firſt covering of his ſin, he projects a ſecond and that a far worſe one than the firſt. He will make murder the covering of his Adultery; and becauſe murder was too foul a ſin to appear openly; therefore being (in that hurry of paſſions and temptations) reſolved to take away the life of Uriah, he provided a covering for that ſin before he committed it (except in his heart) giving order to his General Joab to put him upon a hot and hazardous ſervice, that he might fall by the ſword of the children of Ammon, and yet not ſo much by their ſword as by the commanded treachery of his own party. How deceitful, how deſperately wicked was David's heart (in this particular act) though (in his general ſtate) a man after God's own heart! How many ſins did he commit to make a covering for that one ſin! His Adulterous act muſt be covered with a conjugal one by Uriah, and becauſe Uriah would not do that ſober, he made him drunk to do it; and becauſe that would not take, Uriah muſt dye, that he might take the widdow for his wiſe and ſo by a conjugal act of his own cover his former Adulterous act; and to make the ſyſteme of this ſin compleat, the plotted deſigned death of Uriah muſt be covered by the common fate of Mankind, and the chance of war. The ſword (ſaith he) devoured ſo and ſuch (as we put in the Margin) or one as well as another (as we put in the Text) (2 Sam. 11.26.) when as David wiſhed and intended it ſhould devour Uriah rather than any other.

The third cover of ſin is lying, which is the knowing and direct affirmation of that which is not true, or the denyal of that which is. Ananias and Saphira ſinned greatly by keeping back part of the price for which they ſold their poſſeſſion, having dedicated the whole to publick uſe. And when Peter put the queſtion to the woman (Acts 5. 8.) Tell me whether ye ſold the land for ſo much, and ſhe ſaid, yea for ſo much, as both ſinned by keeping back part of the price, ſo ſhe covered their ſin by affirming they brought in the whole; We ſold it for juſt ſo much (as we brought in, that was her meaning) we had not a penny more for it; Then Peter ſaid unto her, how is it that ye have agreed to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and ſhall carry thee out. A dreadful Judgment! They who covered their ſin with a lie, are themſelves covered with the earth. And as ſin is often covered by a lie in the firſt notion of it, The affirmation of that which is not, or is falſe, ſo alſo by a lie in the ſecond notion of it, the flat and peremptory denyal of that which is, or is true. Thus when Gehazi had gone covetouſly after Naaman for a gift; as he got it by framing a lie, ſo he covered it with a lie (2 Kings 5.25.) Whence comeſt thou Gehazi? ſaid Eliſha, And he ſaid, thy ſervant went (not hither or thither, that is, as we tranſlate) no whither. This covering of his tranſgreſſion coſt Gehazi dear too, He having got gifts from Naaman by a lie, to ſatisfie his covetouſneſs, and having told his Maſter another groſs lie to cover it, is himſelf covered with the leproſie of Naaman. He having committed and ſinfully covered a ſin as red as ſcarlet (as the Prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks Chap. 1.18.) went out (being ſtrucken with his Maſters ſentence) from his preſence a leper as white as ſnow.

Fourthly, Others cover their tranſgreſſions by Juſtifying and maintaining them. What they have done ill they ſay is well done. They are ſo far from denying what they have done, that they applaud it, and will needs cover their ſinful acts by a high perſwaſion of their ſinleſsneſs, yea of their praiſe-worthineſs. When the Lord ſaid to Jonah, to angry, pettiſh Jonah (Chap. 4. 9.) Doeſt thou well to be angry for the gourd? He was ſo far from ſaying, Lord I am ſorry for my paſſion, I confeſs I have a fooliſh and a froward heart, which will not acquieſce in thy diſpenſations; I find and feel my proud ſpirit troubled becauſe I have not the honour to have my Propheſies fulfilled and made good; Jonah, I ſay, was ſo far from any of theſe acknowledgments that he had done ill in being ſo paſſionate about the gourd, that he juſtifieth his paſſion with this moſt confident aſſertion, I do well to be angry even unto death. Thus he ſet up his will againſt the will of God, and thought he had reaſon enough to be angry at what God had done, both in ſparing the repenting City of Niniveh, and in ſmiting a periſhing gourd. And as there are ſome who cover their ſins by a real, though not by an intentional juſtifying of them (they think they have done very well when they have done exceeding ill; as Chriſt foretells his Diſciples (Joh. 16. 2.) The time cometh that whoſoever killeth you will think he doth God ſervice.) So there are many who cover their ſins by an intentional Juſtification of them; that is, though they know they have done evil, yet they will juſtifie it, and put a fair colour upon it. Hypocrites will juſtifie their own perſons, how bad ſoever they are, and prophane perſons will juſtifie many of their actions how bad ſoever they are. As there is a ſpirit in man luſting continually to do evil, and not good, ſo there is a ſpirit in man to uphold an evil act as if it were good. The Prophet tells us there are ſuch, while he denounceth a woe againſt them, that call evil good and good evil, that put light for darkneſs and darkneſs for light, that put bitter for ſweet and ſweet for bitter (Iſa. 5. 20.) which cannot be underſtood of thoſe who do it ignorantly (though even ſuch are in a worſe caſe) but of thoſe who do it ſtudiedly and purpoſely; or we are not to underſtand it of thoſe who do it by miſtake, but of thoſe who would have other miſtake what they have done, and therefore they will juſtifie that which is evil, as if it were good. For as many juſtifie thoſe who are ungodly, ſo there are others who juſtifie their own ungodlineſs. There are none ſo proper objects of God's condemnation as they who, to cover, juſtifie their ſins. And to clear this a little further, I ſhall touch upon a threefold Juſtification of ſin.

Firſt, Some juſtifie their ſins by unbelief, ſo giving them a power to condemn them; For whereas God ſent his Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin (or as we put in the Margin, by a ſacrifice for ſin) condemned ſin in the fleſh (Rom. 8. 3.) They through their own unbelief, not taking hold of that ſacrifice of Chriſt for the condemning of ſin (that is, for diſabling of ſin (as a condemned perſon is diſabled in Law) to bring in evidence or bear witneſs againſt them) juſtifie ſin, and ſuffer it to take its full courſe for their utter condemnation.

Secondly, Others juſtifie ſin by giving it a liberty to rule, command, and maſter them, even to do what it will with them; Theſe letting their luſts carry them to the committing of any evil without rebuke, controul or check, juſtifie their ſin.

Thirdly (which is the point in hand) not a few juſtifie their ſins by defending them; They who inſtead of repenting of and judging themſelves for their ſins, are Patrons and Advocates for them, putting a fair gloſs upon a foul matter, and making thoſe actions which are as black as hell, look beautiful as the heavens, what do they elſe in all they do but juſtifie their ſins, and acquit them from any charge of evil? Of ſuch the Apoſtle Paul ſaith, They glory in their ſhame (Phil. 3. 19.) that is, in thoſe things whereof they ought to be aſhamed, they boaſt and glory. No man glorieth in that which he apprehends to be his ſhame. But many glory in that, which is indeed their ſhame, and will appear to be ſo in the iſſue.

Fifthly, They who dare not cover ſin by juſtifying it (they go not ſo far) yet they cover it by extenuating and leſſening it; While they acknowledg it to be a ſin, they ſay it is but a ſmall one. They confeſs the fact to be a fault, but cover much of the faultineſs of it. As a godly man when he confeſſeth the goodneſs of God heightens and aggravates it; He ſaith, how wonderfully good hath the Lord been to me! So when he confeſſeth his ſin he heightens and greatens it, he ſaith, O how exceeding ſinful is my ſin! But as a carnal man makes light of the goodneſs of God to him, ſo he doth alſo of his ſin againſt God. He is not ſenſible of the evil of his ſin, though he confeſſeth he hath done evil in ſinning; or (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 5.20.) Sin doth not abound to him, though he hath abounded in ſin; The law entred that the offence might abound; That is, in the ſinfulneſs of it as to our apprehenſion; Whereas a natural man littles and leſſens his ſin, 'tis but a ſmall matter in his eyes. He extenuates or makes it little; Firſt, in the nature of it; Secondly, in the circumſtances of it.

Sixthly and laſtly, Many cover their tranſgreſſions by excuſing them; or making apologies for themſelves, though they have tranſgreſſed. When a ſin is ſo plain and barefaced, that it cannot be denied, and ſo groſs that it can neither be defended nor extenuated in it ſelf; yet the heart of man will find ſomewhat to cover the evil of it with, either in part or in whole as done by him. The ſinner will ſay, I am very far from Juſtifying this act; I do not ſay, nor think it is well done, I dare not ſo much as extenuate it, I confeſs it is a ſin, and a great ſin, but pray conſider, I am to be excuſed, if not altogether, yet almoſt or in a great meaſure I am excuſable. What I have done is blameworthy, yet I am not worthy of ſo much, no nor of any ſuch blame as you imagine for doing it. The blame lyeth upon ſome other perſon, or upon ſome other thing. Pray put the ſaddle upon the right horſe, and let that bear the blame, which deſerves it. As ſome make excuſes when they ſhould either do or receive good: when the great offer of grace by Chriſt is made in the Goſpel, moſt excuſe themſelves from receiving it; The parable of the Supper (Luke 14. 18.) ſhews that plainly; And they all with one conſent began to make excuſe: the firſt ſaid I have bought a piece of ground and I muſt needs go and ſee it, I pray thee have me excuſed, &c. They did not rudely and uncivilly deny to come, but their buſineſs would not permit them, they had other occaſions at that time, they were not at leiſure to look after ſuch poor things as ſoul matters. Now as many plead excuſes for their not receiving that which is good, ſo others plead excuſes for the evil which they have done; and will needs lay the blame ſomewhere elſe. This was the covering which Adam our firſt parent made for his ſin; when God called him to queſtion about eating the forbidden fruit, he did not deny it, he did not go about to juſtifie himſelf in it, he did not ſo much as extenuate or leſſen it; all that he did, was this, he excuſed himſelf about it; It was a great ſin, but he was not ſo much in fault as the woman; The woman which thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat. And when the Lord dealt with the woman and call'd her to account: what ſay you woman? ſhe did not deny it, but ſhe had her excuſe too, ſhe hoped to eaſe and unburden her ſelf of the fault, it ſhould not ſtick upon her, nor lye at her door, ſhe had this to plead for her ſelf, The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. I did not tranſgreſs of my own accord, nor was this a ſin of my ſeeking. If the Serpent had not couſen'd me, I might have been long enough before I had medled with or toucht the forbidden fruit. Neither Adam nor the woman denied what they had done; but both of them thought they were very pardonable in doing it. Both made a confeſſion of the fault, yet theirs was a faulty confeſſion. They covered their ſin while they did acknowledg it, and hid it in their boſoms while they held it out upon their tongues. Thus did Adam the firſt man, and thus do the ſons of Adam daily cover their ſins. And I ſhall (on this occaſion) yet a little further open the ſubtlety of Adam the firſt man, and of all men naturally deſcending from him, in covering their tranſgreſſions; for as much as Job doth ſo expreſly diſavow the imitation of either in covering his, while his purpoſe was boldly to affirm, that he had not covered them at all.

Nor is it improper or impertinent for the further clearing and expoſition of this Scripture, and it may be very profitable and uſeful in our daily converſation to conſider, if not all, yet at leaſt ſome of the principal of thoſe ways by which Adam at firſt, and his poſterity ever ſince, have laboured to excuſe, and ſo to cover or to make excuſes, coverings of their tranſgreſſions.

I ſhall begin with that of Adam in perſon, and then give inſtances of Adam in his poſterity. If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam, that is, as the firſt Adam.

What Adam's covering was, hath been ſhewed in general before, as we find it expreſſed (Gen. 3. 12.) where the Lord having called him to account for eating of the tree of knowledg, he made this plea for himſelf; The woman whom thou gaveſt me, to be with me; ſhe gave me of the tree and I did eat; Adam confeſſed the fact, I did eat, but he excuſed himſelf as to the fault; and by what did he excuſe himſelf? He did it by the perſwaſion of his wife, as the Lord tells him at the 17. verſe, Becauſe thou haſt harkened to the voice of thy wife, and haſt eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt not eat of it, curſed be the ground for thy ſake, &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, I ſpake to thee and thou wouldeſt not harken unto me, thy wife hath ſpoken, and thou haſt harkned unto her; yea thou haſt preſumed that thy harkning unto her, will excuſe thy not harkning unto me.

Thus it was with Adam; And is it not thus with the ſons of Adam? How often have the perſwaſions of others been pleaded as a covering for their tranſgreſſions. Saul being ſent forth cloathed with a Commiſſion from God himſelf, in the miniſtry of Samuel, to ſlay the Amalekites, to make an utter end of them, not to ſpare man, woman, or child, nor ſheep, nor oxen, nor camels, nor aſſes (1 Sam. 15. 3.) Accordingly he undertook the war, and upon his return meeting Samuel, ſaluted him with this aſſurance of his good ſervice and ſucceſs, Bleſſed be thou of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord (v. 13.) To whom when Samuel anſwered, What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in my ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear, Saul replyed at the 15. verſe, They have brought them from the Amalekites, for the people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, to ſacrifice to the Lord thy God, and the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed; They (ſaith he) have brought them, that is, they moved or perſwaded me to ſpare and bring them, and I was overwrought by their perſwaſion, Saul was King, it was Saul's place to command, and the peoples to obey; but he was willing to ſpeak of himſelf as obeying the people, that he might excuſe his own ſin in diſobeying God. It was the perſwading voice of the people which prevailed with him, and by that he thought himſelf excuſable, yea and ſtood it out a great while with Samuel (verſ. 20, 21.) I have (ſaith he) obeyed the voyce of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord ſent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly deſtroyed the Amalekites. But the people took of the ſpoil, &c. to ſacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal. As if he had ſaid, Why doeſt thou charge this ſin ſo ſtrictly upon me? if the act be evil, yet it can ſcarce be called mine, I did it at the deſire of the people, I only yielded to them, and was born down by their importunity. And thus Aaron, the High-Prieſt being challenged by Moſes for making the golden Calf (Exod. 32. 21.) put it upon the people (verſ. 22.) And Aaron ſaid, let not the anger of my Lord wax hot: thou kneweſt this people, that they are ſet on miſchief; for they ſaid unto me, make us gods which ſhall go before us; for as for this Moſes, we wot not what is become of him: As if Aaron had ſaid, The ſin is theirs, and not mine, it was not my will, but their wilfulneſs which forged this Calf. Again, when Pilate had awarded an unjuſt ſentence againſt Chriſt, it ſeems his conſcience checked him for it, yet he had this help, this plaiſter for the ſore, he hoped to eaſe himſelf by caſting it upon the people, and therefore (Matth. 27. 24.) he called for water, and waſhed his hands, by which ceremony, he would declare his own integrity, ſaying, I am innocent of the blood of this juſt perſon, ſee ye to it; I have condemned him indeed, but it was upon your perſwaſion. Thus we ſee, how Adam firſt, and the ſons of Adam all along have taken up this plea. But was Adam excuſed, becauſe he ſinned by the perſwaſion of his wife? was Saul acquitted, becauſe he diſobeyed God upon the perſwaſion of the people? was Aaron held faultleſs, becauſe he made the Calf upon the urgency of the Iſraelites? or Pilate, becauſe he condemned Chriſt upon the out-cry of the Jews? were any of theſe held guiltleſs as to their tranſgreſſions, becauſe they had this plea, the importunity of others? The Scripture tells us theſe were coverings too ſhort and too narrow to hide their tranſgreſſions; yea Samuel handled Saul ſo plainly, and brought his ſin ſo home to his conſcience, that he was forced to confeſs (verſ. 24.) I have ſinned, for I have tranſgreſſed the Commandment of the Lord, and thy word, becauſe I feared the people and obeyed their voice. And therefore remember, we muſt act according to the voice of God, and not according to the votes of men; yea, remember, this plea doth rather aggravate our ſin, than any way abate it; what? ſhall we do more upon the perſwaſions of men, than upon the command of God, and think to be excuſed by it? ſhall mens intreaties give check to the law of God? ſhall the word of friends or relations be more forcible, than the direct rule of his Word? Solomon ſaith (Prov. 1. 10.) My ſon, if ſinners intice thee conſent thou not; As if he had ſaid, It will be no boot for thee to plead, when thou haſt ſinned, that thou didſt it by the inticement of ſinners. In the ſame book (Chap. 7.21.) we read of a young man inſnared by a harlot. With much fair ſpeech ſhe cauſed him to yield, and with the flattery of her lips (or by her ſmooth tongue) ſhe forced him; as if the young man's will were ſcarce in the thing, yet this did not help him; for away he goes like an oxe to the ſlaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks. That's a moſt remarkable inſtance (1 Kings 13. verſ. 18,20,21.) where we read of a Prophet that had received a commandment from the Lord to do a meſſage to Jeroboam, and he performed it fully, denouncing a curſe againſt his Altar. But upon his return another Prophet met him, and ſaid unto him (verſ. 18.) I am a Prophet alſo as thou art, and an Angel ſpake unto me by the word of the Lord, ſaying, bring him back with thee into thine houſe, that he may eat bread, and drink water, but he lyed unto him; This Prophet was perſwaded by a Prophet, who avouched divine authority; an Angel (ſaith he) ſpake unto me in the name of the Lord to bring thee back; yet though he came back upon this ſtrong perſwaſion he is doom'd to an untimely death for it by that pretended Prophet, who preſently cryed out to the man of God that came from Judah (verſ. 21.) Saying, thus ſaith the Lord, for as much as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the Lord, and haſt not kept his commandment, which the Lord thy God commanded thee, thy carcaſs ſhall not come into the ſepulcher of thy fathers; and ſoon after a Lion met him by the way and ſlew him. This (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of many other dreadful providences, 1 Cor. 10. 11.) happened to him for an enſample, and is written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come, that we may for ever ſhut our ears againſt the voice of a man, yea againſt the voice of an Angel from heaven perſwading to do any thing contrary or contradictory to the known voice of God.

Secondly, Say others we have done amiſs indeed, but we did it upon the command of our ſuperiors, and is not that enough to ſave us harmleſs?

I anſwer, Though a Maſter command his Servant, or a Parent his Child, or a Prince his Subject, that which is ſinful, yet if either ſervant, or child, or ſubject do it, the ſin will reſt upon their own ſouls; yea though poſſibly the ſuperior ſhould explicitly take the ſin upon himſelf, and when the inferior ſcruples or boggles at the thing, ſhould ſay, let the blame be upon me, only do as I command you, and be obedient to my voice, yet neither will this excuſe the ſinner. He that commands unlawful things is doubly guilty, but this doth not make him guiltleſs that obeyeth. The ſin will lye upon the doer as well as the commander. The warranty of the greateſt man in the world, cannot ſecure us againſt the wrath of God. The ſoul that ſins muſt bear it, how much ſoever others engage to bear it. Puniſhment will fall where God appoints it, not where man; God will not be at our direction whom to puniſh when his Law is broken. Rebeckah ſpake thus to her ſon, when ſhe drew him into that ſubtle practice for the obtaining of the bleſſing (Gen. 27. 8.) Now therefore my Son, obey my voice, according to that which I command thee; yet Jacob was afraid of obeying his mothers voice, commanding him to get the bleſſing in a diſguiſe or by a fraud, and therefore ſaid (verſ. 12.) My father peradventure will feel me, and I ſhall ſeem to him as a deceiver, and I ſhall receive a curſe, and not a bleſſing; He had miſgiving thoughts, that the matter would not end well, which ſhould be ſo begun; And therefore his mother to relieve him out of thoſe fears, ſaith to them (verſ. 13.) Upon me be the curſe my ſon, only obey my voice; ſcruple not what I command, I am your mother; Jacob obeyed and really got the bleſſing, yet his ſinful way of getting it (notwithſtanding his mother undertaking for him) got him many a knock and cold blaſt all his days, ſo that at laſt he gave this account or ſhort hiſtory of his life, Few and evil have the dayes of the years of my life been (Gen. 47. 9.) which he ſpake not only (as every man may do) upon the common conſideration of humane frailty, but upon conſideration of thoſe ſpecial and eminent afflictions, which he met with all the days of his life above othee men. All which were after-reckonings (in way of chaſtiſement, not at all of ſatisfaction) for that former ſin. The bleſſing which he got was an ineſtimable benefit, yet he was ſoundly paid, or he paid ſoundly for his fraudulent getting of it, though his mother promiſed to ſtand between him and harms-way. As alſo (which is another Scripture-inſtance in this caſe) did Abſalom to his ſervants, when he was reſolved, and had plotted to take away his brother Amnon's life (2 Sam. 13. 28.) Now Abſalom (ſaith that Scripture) had commanded his ſervants, ſaying, mark ye now when Amnon's heart is merry with wine, and when I ſay unto you, ſmite Amnon, then kill him, fear not, have not I commanded you? be couragious, and be valiant. As if he had ſaid, Never queſtion the matter, is it not enough that I bid you do it, I will excuſe you to the king my father, if he ſhould be diſpleaſed at what is done, nor need you fear the diſpleaſure of God, ſeeing you have done it not as your own act, but as my command. Proud men will not only give wicked commands, but undertake to ſave the inſtruments of their wickedneſs harmleſs, and ſee them indemnified, who ſhall obey them: they will take the ſin and the curſe upon themſelves; and they ſhall be ſure enough of it, and ſo ſhall they alſo who obey them. Therefore let ſervants, children, and all inferiors, beware of doing that upon the command of man which God hath not commanded. Children, ſervants, and ſubjects muſt obey, but 'tis in the Lord, they muſt not obey againſt the Lord. The Apoſtle ſaith to ſervants, Obey your Maſters in all things (Col. 3. 22.) that is, in all lawful things, as the next words expound his meaning, not with eye-ſervice as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſs of heart fearing God; obey your Maſters, but fear God, that is, obey them ſo far as is conſiſtent with the fear of God. No Maſter hath power to command his ſervant againſt the Lord, nor hath any ſervant liberty to obey his Maſter againſt the Lord; no man hath power either in commanding or obeying, beyond the Law. We muſt ſo pleaſe men, as not to diſpleaſe God; if the ſuperior tranſgreſſeth the bounds of his power in commanding, the inferior tranſgreſſeth the limits of his duty in obeying. Neither do we in this at all let looſe the bonds of duty; To clear which, conſider there are two things in which the duty of an inferior doth conſiſt.

Id tantum poſſumus quod Jure poſſumus.

First, Subjection to the power of his ſuperior.

Secondly, Obedience to the command of his ſuperior; now in all things which are lawful and anſwerable to the mind of God, ſervants ought both to be ſubject to the power, and to obey the commands of thoſe that are over them; but in unlawful things they muſt only be ſubject to their power, not obey their commands. There is a great difference between theſe two, we may yield ſubjection, and yet refuſe obedience, as Caſuiſts determine; or which is the ſame, There may be paſſive obedience to the full, where active obedience is not at all; they who are always ſubject to the power of others, are not always ſubject to their commands. The Apoſtle Peter (1 Ep. 2. 18, 20.) bids ſervants be ſubject to their Maſters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward; but he doth not teach them to obey their Maſters in all things, but rather to ſuffer for conſcience ſake towards God (verſ. 19.) Servants are to ſuffer not only when they have committed a fault, but they are to ſuffer rather than commit a fault, or ſin againſt God. We muſt ſerve men for God's ſake, we muſt not forſake God to ſerve men; conſcience bids inferiors to be obedient, but they muſt not be obedient againſt conſcience; if it were not ſometimes lawful to refuſe obedience to the commands of thoſe who are above us, the world might quickly be ruined in duty. There lyes no duty to obey by doing, when commands are againſt duty, or of things unlawful to be done. There is no diſputing the commands of God, and there are no commands but his, which may not be diſputed; nor can we be charged with diſobeying any commands (though we do them not) but thoſe which we are bound to obey by doing them, and thoſe are only the commands of God, and ſuch as ſubſerve his commands.

Subjectio poteſt eſſe ubi non eſt obedientia.

Peccat ſervus obtemperando, ubi peccat dominus imperando.

Thirdly, ſaith another, If I had only a bare command I confeſs that would not excuſe me, but the truth is, I was not only commanded, but threatned, and greatly threatned; if I had not done it I muſt have ſuffered deeply; and ſurely, God will not hold a poor creature to ſo hard a law, as to condemn him for doing that which he had no mind to do, but was threatned to do it, and muſt needs be undone if he did it not; it ſeems not only unreaſonable, but incompatible, not only with the goodneſs of God, but with his Juſtice, to put that ſin upon any man's ſcore, which he did, not as delighted but as terrified. Yet to the pretenders of this plea, I muſt ſay as the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 5. 10.) Knowing the terror of the Lord we perſwade men. Remember the Lord threatens if you do ill, and what are all the evils which man threatens or can inflict, if you do it not? If the wrath of man terrifieth you to do evil, ſhould not the wrath of God terrifie you much more from doing evil? One of the Ancients brings in a perſon making this excuſe, when urged to exceſſive drinking; I did it indeed, but a great man in the company compelled me to it, a dagger was ſet at my breaſt, with this word, drink or die. But the Anſwer given in that particular caſe may ſerve for all caſes. Although (ſaith he) the matter be brought to this hard iſſue, that it be ſaid to thee, either drink or die, it were better for thee that in preſervation and defence of thy own temperance and ſobriety, thou ſhouldſt die, than that thou ſhould ſave thy life by thy intemperance; or it were much more eligible that thy body ſhould be ſlain ſober, than that thy ſoul ſhould be damn'd drunken. The Apoſtles were ſtraitly threatned (Acts 4. 17.) not to ſpeak any more, nor to teach in the name of Jeſus, but did they ſatisfie themſelves and ſit down in ſilence, becauſe threatned to forbear ſpeaking? read their anſwer (verſ. 19, 20.) Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judg ye; for we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard. Now if threatnings be no excuſe to us for the forbearing of a good duty, or obedience to an affirmative command, (which though it oblige (ſemper) always, yet not (ad ſemper) to all times; now, I ſay, if they would not forbear to do good when men threatned) much leſs will mens threatnings excuſe us, if we for fear of them do evil or tranſgreſs a negative command, which as it is always binding, ſo it binds always or at all times; There's no moment much leſs ſeaſon for the doing of evil, though there may be a ſeaſon of forbearing to do that which is good. There is no neceſſity of ſinning, nor can any extremity excuſe for doing evil; but there may be a neceſſity of our forbearance at this or that time to do this or that good duty, and that neceſſity will be admitted by God as a pleadable excuſe of our forbearance. Elihu chargeth Job (Chap. 36. 21.) Thou haſt choſen iniquity rather than affliction, whereas indeed when theſe two are propoſed to our choice, affliction and tranſgreſſion, whether to ſin or to ſuffer, we ſhould without any deliberation or conſult upon the point, chuſe afflictions and ſufferings, yea death it ſelf rather than iniquity. Therefore ſay not, I ſinned for fear being threatned with utmoſt penalties and extremities; remember who threatens from heaven, and then you will not much regard who threatens on earth. The three children were threatned with a fiery furnace (Dan. 3. 16.) Daniel himſelf was threatned to be caſt into the Lions den (Dan. 6. 10.) yet as the former would not do that evil, the worſhipping of the golden image, ſo the latter would not forbear to do that good, the praying to and worſhipping the true God, for all their threatnings.

Perſona potens me cogit ut amplius biberem, &c. Etiamſi veniretur ad hoc ut tibi diceretur aut bibas aut morieris; melius erit ut caro tua ſobria occideretur, quam præ ebrietate anima moreretur. Auguſt. Ser. 232. de Tempore.

Fourthly, ſaith another of the ſons of Adam, true, I have ſinned, I have ſworn raſhly, but ſuch a man provoked me; if I have done any man wrong or given him ill language, it was upon ill language firſt received from him, or upon wrong firſt done to me; and if I have requited him in his kind, I hope this is no great matter; In this I may be excuſed, ſeeing he began with me, and urged me to it: I had not wronged him, if he had not wronged me, nor had I given him an ill word, if he had not reviled me. Thus many wrap up the matter, and cover their tranſgreſſions.

I anſwer, Can that which was ſinful in another, make the ſame act done by thee ſinleſs? was it ſinful in him to give thee ill language, or was it ſinful in him to do thee wrong, and will it not be ſinful in thee alſo to give ill language, or do wrong! the law given us of God muſt be the guide of our actings towards men not the actings of other men towards us. That's a good rule; Do to others as you would be done to by others; that rule will carry us quite through the world. But this is a falſe and a moſt perverſe rule; Do to others, as they have done to you; this is a moſt unſcriptural rule. Thou ſhalt not give railing for railing, and when thou art curſed thou ſhalt bleſs; that's the command of Chriſt; and ſhall any look to be excuſed for railing on another, becauſe he railed upon him firſt? or ſhall he think to be excuſed for curſing another becauſe himſelf was curſed. Take heed of theſe pretendings, 'tis the will of God we ſhould do good againſt evil, Can it then be good to return evil for evil?

Fifthly, Another will ſay, true, I have done it, but are there not many who do the like or worſe? I am ſo far from being alone in it, that almoſt all men are with me in it. And I hope that which all men do, no man ſhall be blamed for? This is a common practice.

It was the error of the old Pelagians, that corruption was not traduced into the nature of man by the fall of the firſt man, but that ſin is continued by imitation; Children (ſay they) ſeeing their parents or others do evil, take it up by example: Now, though this hath been juſtly condemned as a groſs error; and the contrary aſſerted both as a Scriptural and as an experimental truth that the whole maſs of mankind by nature is ſteeped in ſin, and that we have the root of every evil matter in our ſelves; yet 'tis a truth alſo, that we do ill by example, and that ſin is mightily increaſed by imitation. What one doth others are apt to do, and the moſt of men go where they ſee others go, rather than where they ought to go! yea they begin to conclude they may go ſafely enough in a bad way, if they ſee others go before them in it.

But what though many go in wrong ways, and do unrighteous things? yea what though all ſhould go and do ſo, yet that would not excuſe any one that goeth or doth ſo. Would it have been any excuſe, think you, for Noah to have complyed with that wicked generation, when all fleſh had corrupted their way before God; Noah might have ſaid, I follow the track, I do as the reſt, all go this way, and ſhould I ſtand alone? ſhould I be ſingular? Noah had no ſuch reaſonings, he followed the rule, not the example of that age. Thus ſaith the text (Gen. 6. 9.) Noah was a juſt man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God; That is, he kept cloſe communion with God, let the world go whither it would; He was not led away with the courſe, nor carried down with the current of the times, nor would he write after their crooked and blotted copy. Lot dwelt in Sodom, where ten righteous perſons were not to be found, though the preſervation of the whole City, and the pardon of them all from preſent periſhing lay upon it; Yet Lot preſerved himſelf pure, and his righteous ſoul was vexed from day to day, with their unlawful deeds. The Lord gave a ſpecial Law by Moſes to obviate this miſchief (Exod. 23. 2.) Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to do evil: Which law doth more than imply, that many would encourage, and ſome even warrant themſelves in doing evil by the example of the multitude. It is ſomewhat difficult to break the ice, and begin; But when many have begun to us in a way of ſin, O how hard is it not to follow? To follow the moſt is to follow the worſt, for ſo the moſt are; and to follow them as far as they go, is to go to hell, for thither they moſt go. It will be but cold comfort to periſh with a great company.

Nor is it any whit ſafer or better to follow the mighty than to follow the many, yet ſome think themſelves very ſafe, while they walk in their way, how bad ſoever the way be. Had we (ſay they) only the multitude to follow, they being rude, and vain, it were not ſo excuſable; but we ſee great men do it, yea the wiſe and learned men of the world do it, and ſhall not we be excuſed for doing that which the great and wiſe and learned men of the world do? No doubt we ſhall. Thus they plead to their own perdition; 'Tis indeed the unhappy priviledg of great ones to have more followers of their worſt actions, than of their perſons. Many ſin as it were (cum privilegio) under the cloak of great mens ſinnings. The very errors and miſtakes of Rulers may prove a rule for others to erre and miſtake by, and the Authority of their perſons puts a kind of authentickneſs upon their moſt unwarrantable practices. And therefore (to note that by the way) it much concerns thoſe that are above others in place, to take heed what they do, eſpecially before their inferiors, becauſe they are apt to bear themſelves high upon the example of thoſe that are above them. It hath been ſaid, Much reverence is due to children; we ſay (and we ſay truely) children owe great reverence to their parents, and elders; And 'tis as true, Parents and Elders ſhould carry it reverently towards their children, becauſe the example of a parent, or ſuperior, emboldens children to do the like, even to a likeneſs in vanity, whether in ſpeech or behaviour; And as children are ready to take up the example of parents, ſo are all inferiors, the example of thoſe above them. What? (ſay they) do not our Lords and Maſters do theſe things, and ſhall we ſtick at them, are we wiſer than they? Do they ſwear and ſhall we ſcruple an oath? Are they drunken, and ſhall not we freely take our cups? are they wantons and fornicators, and ſhall we poor underlings forbear? Do they prophane the Sabbath, and may not we break it? Surely, we may, and be blameleſs. O how deſperately are many ſervants and mean men hardned and deboiſt by example of their Lords and Maſters! The Phariſees checkt thoſe Officers in the Goſpel when they had not attached and brought Chriſt to them, becauſe they ſeemed to have better thoughts of him than the rulers had (Joh. 7. 47, 48, 49.) Are ye alſo deceived? have any of the rulers or of the Phariſees believed on him? but this people, who knoweth not the Law are curſed. As if they had ſaid, What will you take upon you to be better, or to underſtand better than your rulers? Will you take upon you to believe or be religious beyond their example? Now as ſome think the faith of inferior perſons muſt be pinn'd upon the rulers ſleeve, and that they muſt believe as their great Maſters believe, ſo, many inferior perſons are perſwaded they may well enough pin the practice of their ſuperiors upon their ſleeve, and in all things without danger do as they do.

Maxima debetur pueris reverentia.

There are others who bear themſelves out in an evil matter beyond all reproof, if they ſee any that profeſs godlineſs to do ſuch things; As they embolden themſelves by the falls of good men recorded in the holy Scriptures, by the drunkenneſs of Noah, and by the uncleanneſs of David, &c. The cloud of Scripture-witneſſes hath a bright ſide, that is, the gracious actings of the Saints, and a dark ſide, that is, the weakneſſes and failings of the Saints; Now as they go to the dark ſide of the Saints departed, ſo alſo of the living Saints to ſtrengthen themſelves in their wickedneſs. But remember the Lord hath not left us to live by example, but by rule, therefore never plead example againſt rule, neither the example of the multitude; nor of the great, nor of the wiſe and learned, no nor of the godly and holy in their departures from the rule. The Apoſtle himſelf when he would be imitated, durſt not propoſe himſelf univerſally to be imitated, Be ye followers of me as I alſo am of Chriſt: if I go a ſtep out of the way follow me not there, ſay not becauſe an Apoſtle did it, therefore I may do it; We cannot be excuſed in following the unholy actings of any man, how holy ſoever he is.

Thus upon the occaſion of Adam's firſt excuſe, laying his ſin upon his wives perſwaſion, I have ſhewed you many other wayes wherein the ſons of Adam treading in his ſteps, make ſuch like coverings and excuſes for their ſin; and from them all it hath appeared, that neither perſwaſions, nor commands, nor threats, nor injuries and provocations received, nor examples given, will ſerve for a covering of our tranſgreſſions. All ſuch pleas are invalid, nor ſhall any man be accepted in them; yea we do but ſo much the more uncover the ſhame of our nakedneſs, by how much we are the more ſubtle and induſtrious to provide ſuch coverings for it.

Further, (if we look into the Hiſtory of Geneſis) we may find another excuſe which Adam made for his ſin, which I ſhall a little conſider, for a fuller confirmation of the point in hand. Several of the learned both ancient and modern, have noted it as a ſecond unſafe and altogether unprofitable covering of tranſgreſſion.

If I covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam.

As Adam laid his ſin upon his wives perſwaſion, ſo upon the diſpenſation of God; The woman (ſaith he, verſ. 12.) whom thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave me of the tree, and I did eat; As if he had ſaid, Why am I ſo preſt with this act, as my fault, the eating the forbidden tree? for, Lord if thou hadſt not given me this woman, I had never done it, the woman which thou gaveſt to be with me, ſhe gave it me, and I did eat; Lord, why didſt thou put ſuch a ſnare upon me, why didſt thou leave me to ſuch a temptation by the woman which thou gaveſt me; if any fault be in eating of this tree, I muſt lay it at thy door; had it not been for this woman, I might have done well enough, ſurely I had not fallen into this great tranſgreſſion, if thou hadſt not made this woman my companion. Thus Adam hoped to cover his ſin, and leave the blame of it upon God himſelf.

Factum quod nequit negare, frigide fatetur, comedi ſed culpam in mulierem & deum removet. Par. in loc.

And as Adam then, ſo many at this day cover their tranſgreſſions, and excuſe their ſins, by putting them upon God. That preventing Admonition of the Apoſtle (James 1. 13.) doth more than intimate ſuch a curſed plea, always at hand in the heart of man, Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, the mind of man is very apt to conceive this bad plea for himſelf, and his tongue is as ready to utter it, even to ſay, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, if God had not brought me into ſuch a condition, if God had not ſet things in ſuch a way, I had never been intangled, much leſs overcome by this or that temptation. The Apoſtle in that place gives warning to all, that they make no ſuch vain Apologies, nor go about to eaſe themſelves, when they have ſinned, by caſting their ſin upon God, or by accuſing his providence, as the cauſe of it; yet this warning hath not prevented the doing of it. One of the Ancients obſerved and reproved this practice as a common error in his time; Many (ſaith he) when they are detected in any ſin, ſay preſently, God hath willed this, or he would have things go thus; what have I done? where is my fault? this thing could not have been, unleſs it had been the will of God; for all things fall out according to his will, that is, he might hinder and ſtop them if he would, or he might put them into another courſe if he pleaſed; if he work none can let, if he let none can work.

Videtur fuiſſe inter fideles Hebræos, qui de peccatis ſuis reprehenſi providentiam dei omnia gubernantis prætendere ſolerent. Par. in primum Cap. Epiſt. Jacob.

Multi quando inveniuntur in peccatis, dicunt, deus hoc voluit, quid ergo feci? hoc eſt pronunciare adverſus deum. Auguſt. in Pſal. 32.

Thus men, preſumptuous men are not afraid to charge God himſelf with their ſins, that they may diſcharge themſelves. I ſhall give you two reaſons why they do ſo.

Firſt, Man hath a natural deſire to juſtifie himſelf, and that deſire is ſo ſtrong, that he cares not much whom he beſpattereth, or whom he burdens, ſo he may but eaſe and acquit himſelf, nor cares he whom he wrongs, ſo he may make his own ways appear upright.

Secondly, Sin is ſuch an ugly monſter that no man will own it, if he can chuſe, but had rather lay this child of darkneſs at any man's door, yea at God's door than father it himſelf. And though there are but few who will ſay this plainly, yet many ſpeak it in parables, or by conſequences and inferences. I ſhall therefore clear what I mean and aim at by giving a few inſtances.

Firſt, Saith one, it is my ill fortune, or my fate, that I have done this evil; ſuch Heathen language is often heard from their mouths, who profeſs Chriſtianity. Now, what is this deſtiny, chance, fortune, or fate, which they babble about? what do all theſe uncouth words import, but that order into which God hath put all things, or that iſſue unto which his infinite wiſdom hath diſpoſed all actions and events in this world? There is no other chance nor fate, but that which is indeed the counſel and diſpenſation of God; and therefore when any cry out, this was our ill fortune, this was our ill hap, what do they accuſe but the holy counſels and moſt righteous diſpenſations of God?

Secondly, Saith another, it was the unlucky or malignant aſpect of the Stars when I was born, which drew yea and neceſſitated me to take and engage in this wicked courſe. Many have a great itch in this age to conſult Aſtrologers, to find out the poſitions or conjunctions of the Planets in their nativity, or to conſider the influences whether good or bad, promiſing or threatning of thoſe Stars under whoſe predominance they were born, and from thence to receive Prophetical concluſions, what their croſſes, and what their comforts, what their way, and what their end in this world ſhall probably (ſay ſome) or certainly (ſay others) be. That ancient father in the place before cited, having reproved thoſe in general who charge their ſins upon God, brings them in making this objection. Poſſibly you who ſay this, will alſo ſay, who chargeth his ſin upon God? He anſwers; Firſt, by a direct affirmation; Yea (ſaith he) ſome there are that ſpeak this openly; As reverend Mr. Calvin and his followers have been falſely charged by the Papiſts for making God the Author of ſin by their opinions and aſſertions about prædeſtination; ſo others from a prophane ſpirit and principle ſpeak it out broadly; and are not afraid to affront God himſelf with theſe blaſphemous imputations. But what though ſome be not ſo groſs? yet, ſecondly, there are too too many, who weave the ſame web with a finer thred; and therefore his ſecond anſwer is; They who ſay not this, what ſay they? even this; It was my fate to do it, the Stars cauſed me to do it; I could not help it, I was unavoidably carried to it. And thus (ſaith he) by a circuit they fetch it about, and accuſe God as the cauſe of their ſins, to whom they will not come directly and confeſs their ſins, that by Chriſt they may obtain the pardon of them, and peace for their own poor ſouls. That worthy of Elder days comes up yet cloſer to them in ſome following paſſages; Thou ſayſt thy unlucky ſtars have done it; their ill aſpects have inclined thy heart to ſuch ſins; but what are the ſtars? who made them? did not God? are they not the work of his hands? and who orders them and their motions? doth not God? there is not a ſtar moves but by his appointment. The ſtars are God's militia, his hoſt; They ſtir not, but by the commandment of God; now if God made the ſtars, and orders the motion of the ſtars, and thou ſayſt the ſtars have cauſed thee to ſin; conſider, doſt thou not ſay, God made thee to ſin? And therefore ſurely God is unjuſt, and thou art juſt, becauſe unleſs he had placed the ſtars ſo, thou hadſt not ſinned ſo. Thus man blaſphemouſly turns his ſin upon God; and while he will not accuſe himſelf for that which he hath done very ill, he accuſes God who made him and all things very good.

Thirdly, Others accuſe the times and places in which they live; I (ſaid one that was ſtark naught) live in Rome, where no man can be better; I live in times ſo univerſally infected, that no man can eſcape the infection, nor be innocent. Is not this to accuſe God alſo? who was it that caſt thy lot to live at ſuch a time, and in ſuch a place in the world? did not God? hath not he (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Acts 17. 26.) made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations: therefore he that chargeth the place where he lives with his ſin, chargeth God with his ſin, who diſpoſeth of all men both as to time and place, or who hath both their times and places in his hand, or diſpoſe.

Fourthly, Not a few charge their ſin upon their callings; as if they could not do or live honeſtly in them; I know there are ſome ſinful or diſhoneſt callings; Therefore as the Apoſtle exhorts (Tit. 3. 14.) Let all learn to maintain good works (or as we put in the Margin, profeſs honeſt trades) for neceſſary uſes, and avoid thoſe that are uſeleſs and unneceſſary. As for lawful callings, God hath appointed man to live and labour in them. Now for any man (when he hath done amiſs) to ſay, my calling put me upon it, or was the cauſe of my miſcarriage, is as much as to ſay, God put him upon it. The Apoſtle gives this rule to the converted Corinthians (1 Cor. 7. 20.) Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called. Some it ſeems, being called to the knowledg of Chriſt, thought they muſt leave their worldly callings, and imployments, as if they were ſinful ſnares to them, or unneceſſary diverſions from better things. Nay, ſaith Paul, abide in the calling wherein ye were called, that is, look in what honeſt civil calling the ſpiritual call of God hath found you, keep to that calling ſtill; God doth not call us off from our imployments and buſineſs, but he calls us to be juſt and holy in them. The grace of God doth not ſet us above commerce with men, nor doth our entrance into God's ſervice, any way acquit us from ſerving one another in our lawful callings; And therefore for any man to ſay, his calling makes him ſin, either by doing what he ought not, or by neglecting what he ought, is to caſt his ſin upon God, and to blame God's ordinance with his own diſobedience.

Fifthly, Some complain of their poverty, or of the ſtreights into which the providence of God hath caſt them, as the cauſe of their ſin, of their ſtealing or murmuring and diſcontent. Theſe alſo riſe up againſt God, and lay the dirt of their filthy hearts and ways at the gates of heaven. For though there be indeed a great temptation in ſuch a ſtraitned and afflicted condition (as both Agur's Prayer, Prov. 30. 8, 9. and the experiences of many have taught us) yet it doth not at all neceſſitate any man to ſin; and ſuch a condition is appointed us as an occaſion for the tryal of our patience, and dependance upon God in the exerciſe of all other graces, not to ſet our corruptions awork, or to excuſe us when we are overcome by them.

Thus we ſee, that though moſt forbear to ſpeak this broadly and openly, that God is the cauſe of their ſin, yet they do it by inferences, as Adam did, the woman which thou gaveſt to be with me (ſaid he) was the means of my fall; and, ſay they, if we had been born under a better planet, if we had lived in better times and places, or had not been brought into a low condition, wherein we knew not what to do, we had never done this. O learn to accuſe the naughtineſs and corruption that is in your hearts, as the fountain of all your ſinful actings; for know, it is not any ſtar, it is neither time, nor place, nor calling, but the wickedneſs of your own hearts, which hath led you into ſin, and undone you.

There is yet a third head of excuſe, by which that firſt tranſgreſſion of Adam was intended to be covered; And I may call it, The woman a covering; For, when the Lord ſaw what ſad ſhifts the man had made to cover his ſin, inſtead of confeſſing it; then he put the Queſtion to the woman alſo in the 13. verſe; And the Lord God ſaid to the woman, what is this that thou haſt done? and the woman ſaid, the Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. Here is no denial of the fact, the woman confeſs'd ſhe had eaten the forbidden fruit, but the Serpent beguiled me (ſaid ſhe) alas, if I had been let alone I ſhould not have eaten, but there was a cunning Serpent, he came upon me unawares and inticed me with fair promiſes, and ſo I did eat. This was a truth, the Serpent had indeed beguiled her; What the woman ſaid, was true enough, that the Serpent had beguiled her, but what ſhe intended in ſaying ſo, was not true. Namely, that ſhe was therefore to be excuſed becauſe ſo beguiled. Yea this very excuſe accuſed her, and ſhe was defiled by that which ſhe thought would purge her.

Now as I ſhewed before, that there is ſuch a ſinful principle in man to charge his ſin on God, ſo I ſhall now ſhew that there is a common practice among men to charge their ſin upon the Devil. The meer act of charging ſin upon God is abominable, and the intent with which ſome charge ſin upon the Devil is very ſinful. I do not ſay that it is ſinful, for any one that hath ſinned to charge his ſin upon the Devil; for the Devil is, in ſome ſence, the author of all ſin, as having brought it firſt into the world; he is the father of lies, and the furtherer of lies, as alſo of all other ſins, to the utmoſt that he can. Now becauſe the Devil hath ſo near and ſo ſtrong a relation to every ſin, we may therefore charge all our ſins upon him, and do him no wrong at all; but the intent of charging ſin upon the Devil may be very ſinful. To do it as the woman did it, and as many at this day do it with hope to diſcharge themſelves, this is a ſin, this is to cover our tranſgreſſions as Eve, and while we ſeek thus to clear our ſelves from the guilt of ſin, we faſten and fix it the more upon our conſciences, and the more provoke God to wrath againſt us for it. There are many (as hath been anciently noted) who wave or avoid the confeſſion of their ſins, and make it their buſineſs to accuſe, and cry out of the Devil, O the Devil, this ſubtle Serpent, this roaring Lion, he, he hath deceived us, he hath prevailed upon us. We were neither wiſe enough to diſcern his wiles, nor ſtrong enough to reſiſt his force. Thus they ſpeak, hoping to unburden themſelves by it.

Multi confeſſionem peccati fugiunt, ut ipſum Satanam accuſent; ſe autem nihil mali feciſſe dicant. Aug.

But let no man think to excuſe himſelf by accuſing the Devil; For though Sathan doth much in cauſing every man to ſin, yet he cannot force any man to ſin; though Sathan tempt us to ſin, and allures the will ſtrongly to it, yet he cannot make any man ſin whether he will or no. Though Satan may tempt us whether we will or no, yet he cannot overcome us in any temptation unleſs we our ſelves will. And until we yield our conſent (which is an act of the will) the temptations of the Devil, and his aſſaults defile us not; they are indeed our afflictions, and our troubles, but not our ſins, till they are accepted of, and embraced by us. So then, the fault is every man's own; Sathan hath beguiled you, but did not you conſent? did not you accept of the temptation? it is not his temptation which makes you guilty, but your admittance of it. As it was ſaid long ago, and may much more in this ſlandering age; If to accuſe another did make him guilty, none could be innocent. So, I may ſay in this caſe alſo, If to be tempted by the Devil would make a man guilty, no man ſhould be long guiltleſs, even of the moſt horrid crimes that ever the Sun beheld. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf had not been without guilt, if to be tempted makes a man guilty. How did the Devil tempt and aſſault Chriſt! How did he follow him in one hour (as we may conceive) with a threefold temptation! beſides all the temptations which probably followed, the holy Text ſaying, he left him for a ſeaſon. Yet Jeſus Chriſt came off from thoſe three and all other temptations without any touch, without any the leaſt ſpot of ſin; He kept himſelf (ſo do believers, by him, themſelves, 1 Jo. 5. 18) And that wicked one toucht him not, that is, left no evil impreſſion upon him, how much ſoever he preſſed him to evil. The Prince of this world came, but found nothing in him; he had malice ſufficient in his heart againſt Chriſt, but he found nothing in Chriſt, to take with his temptation. There being not the leaſt motion in the heart of Jeſus Chriſt towards a complyance with the Devil, but an utter abomination and deteſtation of him, he was not at all hurt with any of his temptations: and ſo far as we keep off our conſent to the Devil, his temptations cannot hurt us. Ill thoughts ſpringing up in us are our ſins, though we conſent not to them; but evil thoughts ſuggeſted by Sathan are not our ſins till conſented to. Therefore take heed of excuſing your ſelves by charging your ſin upon the Devil, and his temptations; charge it rather upon your ſelves, and your own in dwelling corruptions; the Devil doth only ſtrike the fire, your hearts are the tinder, if your hearts were not tinder, his ſparks could not kindle upon you; Sathan doth not prevail over us by force, but by guile, he inſnares us, and wins our hearts; he vexeth us by his wiles, as Moſes ſaid the Midianites did the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs. Were the Devil left to himſelf he would break us with his power, but he is reſtrained there, and hath only wiles and tricks to vex us with. He deals with us like a Machiavel or an Achitophel, not like a Goliah, or an Alexander. And hence it is ſaid in the Revelation, He deceiveth the whole earth; He doth all by craſt, he cunningly inſnares our affections, and being a Spirit can inſinuate ſtrongly into ours. The Apoſtle Peter dealing with Ananias (Acts 5. 3.) expoſtulates the matter with him thus; Why hath Sathan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt? As if he had ſaid, Sathan tempted thee indeed, but why haſt thou given up thy conſent? why haſt thou yielded ſo eaſily to do ſuch an abomination? Sathan in a ſpecial manner takes ſome men captive at his will (2 Tim. 2. 26.) But he leads no man captive againſt his will; Sathan leads many captive at his own will and beck, he finds them ready, they are free to come at the firſt call of a temptation, yea poſſibly they are ready to call for a temptation; but Sathan leads none captive againſt their own wills: or, take it thus, many are taken captive by Sathan at his will, but Sathan cannot captivate the will of any man; whenſoever any man ſins, he ſins freely. Therefore Sathan's temptation cannot be an excuſe to any man, and the hearts of moſt men are as much in the temptation, as Sathan himſelf was, and they riſe to the bait as willingly as he caſts in the hook.

Thus I have opened the ſecond obſervation, wherein it appears that the heart of man is very pregnant in finding out and ſuggeſting variety of coverings for the hiding of ſin. And by inſiſting upon theſe three grand heads of excuſes practiſed by our firſt parents (the man excuſing his ſin by the perſwaſion of the woman, as alſo by the diſpenſation of God, and the woman excuſing her ſin by the temptation of the Devil, by theſe I ſay) it appears what Job meant in this Scripture when he ſaid, If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam. And I might ſhew you many other coverings of tranſgreſſions, taking Adam Appellatively, If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as men, that is, as the common ſort of men generally do, who have ſeveral coverings induſtriouſly, and artificially framed, and wrought to hide their ſins with; but poſſibly I have gone too far already from my method of expoſition: yet this diſcovery was ſo proper to the expreſs words of the Text, that I could not well paſs it by, though it ſhould be called a digreſſion.

There are yet other obſervations which I ſhall give from this Text, when I have added only this one word of Caution from all that I have ſaid.

Beware of this practice, the covering of ſin, as much as of committing it; and know that to cover a ſin committed, is to commit a new one; yea they who make cob-web coverings for their tranſgreſſions (ſuch are theſe and all ſuch-like excuſes) will be forced at laſt as they (Rev. 6. 16.) to call to the rock to cover them, and to the mountains to hide them (but all in vain) from the preſence of him that ſits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. There is but one covering of tranſgreſſion which can ſtand us in any ſtead, Jeſus Chriſt our real Propitiatory. Go to Chriſt, and make him your covering, cover your ſelves with his righteouſneſs, that's a garment large enough and clean enough to hide all your ſins, and to keep off all that wrath which ſin hath deſerved, and calls for; cover your ſins with the ſecond Adam, but do not cover your ſins as the firſt Adam; either by the excuſes mentioned, or by any other; they are all deceitful, and too narrow for the purpoſe. This holy and good man Job, proteſted he never made ſuch ſinful artifices the hidings of his ſin.

If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

From Job's ſcope and deſign in making this proteſtation, that he had not covered his tranſgreſſions.

Obſerve, Thirdly, To cover and hide ſin is ſin; 'tis the adding of ſin to ſin.

Job is purging himſelf from this as well as from any of thoſe Enormities mentioned and profeſſed againſt in the foregoing paſſages of this Chapter; he doth not only ſay, I have not luſted after my neighbours wife, nor wrong'd my ſervants, nor oppreſſed the poor, nor put confidence in gold, nor worſhipped the Sun, he (I ſay) doth not only ſay, I have not committed theſe foul tranſgreſſions, but I have not put a fair covering upon any of my tranſgreſſions; thereby intimating that to have done ſo, had been to commit a greater ſin then any of thoſe which he had not committed. And ſurely neither our own ſinful hearts, nor Sathan would be ſo buſie to provoke us to cover our ſins, were it not very ſinful. That great enemy ſets us about no work but bad work, black work, helliſh work: he knows well enough that to hide a ſin committed is to commit a freſh ſin, yea to commit a greater ſin than that which we would hide, why elſe ſhould he tempt us to hide it? and this is one of the great depths of Sathan, he perſwades us to hide evil done, pretending our good by it, or as if he would befriend us; but indeed he aſſaults us as an enemy, and intends us a further miſchief. The concealing of ſin is the keeping of the Devil's counſel, and the doubling of our tranſgreſſion. Sin is the diſeaſe of the ſoul, and there is no ſuch way to increaſe and make a diſeaſe deſperate as to conceal it: Silence feeds and cheriſheth the diſeaſes of the body; and ſo it doth the diſeaſes of our ſouls. Sin increaſeth two ways, by concealment, or by hiding.

Crimen tacendo ampliatur, ſi latet fit ex minimo magnum. Bern. Νόσον τρέφει σιωπή.

Firſt, In the guilt of it: The obligation to puniſhment takes ſtronger hold upon the ſoul, and every man is bound the faſter with thoſe chains of darkneſs, by how much the more he labours to keep his ſins in the dark: the longer a ſin remains upon the conſcience unpardoned, the more doth the guilt of it increaſe: now all the while ſin is hid, all the while ſin is artificially and intentionally covered, it remains unpardoned; and therefore the guilt of it muſt needs increaſe upon the ſoul.

Secondly, Sin being thus covered increaſeth in the filth and contagion of it, in the ſtrength and power of it; it gains more upon the ſoul, it grows more maſter, and more maſterly; luſt begins to rage, rave, it commands and carries all before it, while we are ſo fooliſh as to keep it cloſe and covered. Thus a concealed ſin is greatly increaſed both in the guilt and in the power of it.

If any ſay, Surely it is not ſo ſinful to cover and hide ſin; for doth not the Scripture condemn thoſe that did not hide it? why doth it rebuke any for not hiding their ſins, if to hide ſin be ſo ſinful? The Prophet ſeems to ſpeak that expreſly (Iſa. 3. 9.) The ſhew of their countenance teſtifieth againſt them (they were ſo far from hiding their ſins in their boſom, that they did even print them in their foreheads, The ſhew of their countenance doth witneſs againſt them) they declare their ſin as Sodom, they hide it not. Thus the Prophet reproves them, and makes this a very great aggravation of their ſins, that they did not hide their ſins?

I anſwer, There is a twofold not hiding of ſin; Firſt, there is a not hiding which proceeds from repentance; Secondly, there is another ſort of not hiding of ſin, which proceeds from impudence; or there is a not hiding of ſin which proceeds from a broken heart, and there is a not hiding of ſin that proceeds from a brazen face, from a brow of braſs. That's the meaning of the Prophet when he reproves thoſe debauched Jews becauſe they did not hide their ſin, he reproves them for their impudence, that when they had done wickedly, they boaſted of it, and held it forth, they cared not who knew it; therefore ſaith the Text, they declare their ſin as Sodom; they did not declare their ſin as the mourners in Sion from an humbled heart and a contrite ſpirit; but they declared their ſins like the filthy Sodomites. We are like to have a goodly pattern of repentance from Sodom; where all were wicked, except Lot and his neareſt relations. By two ſorts of men the ſin of the world is mightily hightned; Firſt, Some are ſo deboyſt that they will not hide their ſins: Secondly, others are ſo hypocritical that they uſe all the courſes they can to hide their ſins; Not to hide our ſin through impudence, and to hide it in hypocriſie, are alike abominable in the ſight of God: and that's it which Job labours to purge himſelf from, as much as from uncleanneſs, oppreſſion, covetouſneſs, or any other act of ſin before ſpecified.

Fourthly, As Job in ſpeaking this would deny the hiding and covering of his ſin, ſo he affirms the Confeſſion of it, as was ſhewed in the explication of the Text. So that here is more intended then expreſt; when he ſaith he did not cover his meaning is, he diſcovered his ſin; when he ſaith he did not hide it, his meaning is, he did diſcloſe it.

Hence obſerve, A godly man doth not only not hide, but is ready to confeſs his ſin.

He makes confeſſion that he may be freed from condemnation; ſo ſome underſtand that (Iſa. 43. 26.) Put me in remembrance (ſaith the Lord, that is, mind me, both of my promiſed mercies, and of thy provoking tranſgreſſions) Let us plead together: declare thou that thou mayſt be juſtified. This is a great Goſpel truth, though it be queſtionable, whether intended in that place. A godly man hath ſecret ſins (that is, ſins which he knows not of) but he doth not keep his ſins ſecret, he is willing to make them known. He doth not cover them from the knowledg of God, no nor of men, when and as he is bound to give an account of them. Confeſſion of ſin is an indiſpenſable piece of true repentance. They who are indeed humbled in the ſight of their ſins will not hide them out of ſight; They declare them always to God, and are not aſhamed to declare them to man alſo in a Goſpel-way. As 'tis ſinful to blow a trumpet, or proclaim our good works, ſo we are not bound to publiſh our ſins or evil deeds to the world; but when we are called, and ſee it a duty to confeſs them, we muſt not hide, but confeſs them: 'Tis a great part of our holineſs to confeſs our Iniquities; and as the holieſt man in this world is imperfect and hath ſins to confeſs; ſo it is a good degree of his holineſs and perfection to confeſs his ſins. Our bleſſedneſs conſiſts in the remiſſion of ſin (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is covered. And therefore we cannot be bleſſed if our ſins be unconfeſs'd (Pſal. 32. 5.) I ſaid I will confeſs mine Iniquity, and thou forgaveſt me the iniquity of my ſin: the pardon was given out upon his Confeſſion (1 Joh. 1. 9.) If we confeſs our ſins, God is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins; And if he had ſaid, Sin unconfeſs'd ſhall not be forgiven; He that covereth his ſins ſhall not proſper; but whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh them (and only he) ſhall find mercy (Prov. 28. 13.)

But you will ſay, is this all that Job did, barely to confeſs his ſin, when he ſaith, he did not cover it?

I anſwer, The holy Confeſſion of ſin, which is oppoſed to the covering or hiding of ſin; hath three things in it.

Firſt, A confeſſion of the fact, or of the thing done; Joſhua ſaid to Achan (Joſh. 7. 19.) My Son, give glory to God, and tell me, what haſt thou done? tell me the ſtory, give me a narrative of thy ſin. And accordingly he declared the fact; When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment, and two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and a wedg of gold of fifty ſhekels weight: then I coveted them, and took them. Repentant confeſſion begins at the confeſſion of the fact.

Secondly, As there is a confeſſion of the fact, ſo of the fault, that is, that in doing ſo we have done amiſs, or done ſinfully and fooliſhly. When David made a confeſſion or acknowledgment of that ſin, his numbring the people, he doth not only ſay, I have done it, but he ſaith, I have done very fooliſhly, (2 Sam. 23. 10.) Nor did he only confeſs that great ſin of Adultery, but he confeſſed the fault (Pſal. 51. 4.) Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight: I have done this, and in doing this I have done evil. This is the life of Goſpel repentance. Some confeſs the fact, who yet are not humbled under the ſence of their own folly and faultineſs.

Thirdly, There is in Confeſſion not only an acknowledgment of the fact and fault, but a ſubmiſſion to the puniſhment; Confeſſion is a judging of our ſelves worthy of death; he that confeſſeth doth as it were put the rope about his own neck, and tells the Lord he is as a dead man before him. True Confeſſion is a ſubmitting to the ſentence of the Judg, yea a judging of our ſelves, and a juſtifying of God in all, even in his ſharpeſt and ſevereſt diſpenſations. Thus David (in Pſal. 51. 4.) I have done evil in thy ſight, that thou mayſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and be clear when thou Judgeſt; That is, when thou judgeſt me as a father, when thou correcteſt and chaſtiſeſt me (as God did wonderfully chaſtiſe him for thoſe ſins, the ſword never departed from his family) Lord I confeſs thou art juſt in all thoſe ſharp and ſevere judgments that I have been threatned with in reference to that ſin. Daniel's heart was in the ſame frame while he faſted and prayed, and confeſſed the ſins of the people of Iſrael (Dan. 9. 7, 8.) O Lord (ſaith he) Righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of faces, as at this day, to the men of Judah, &c. becauſe of their treſpaſs that they have treſpaſſed againſt thee, &c.

But ſome may ſay, Is there a neceſſity to make ſuch a confeſſion of ſin? ſeeing God is already acquainted with, and knows our ſins, with all the circumſtances and aggravations of them, what need we confeſs them? why ſhould we tell that to God which he knows already?

I anſwer, Firſt, we do not Confeſs, to inform God of what he knows not, but to give glory to God in that which he knows: So ſaith Joſhua to Achan, do not hide thy ſin, but confeſs it, and give glory to God; give him the glory of his juſtice and righteouſneſs in puniſhing, and the glory of his patience and mercy in pardoning. A true gracious confeſſion gives God the glory of all his attributes, and puts a Crown upon all his divine perfections. So then, we confeſs, not to inform God, but to honour and glorifie him.

Secondly, We are called to an acknowledgment and Confeſſion of our ſins to God, that we our ſelves may be the more deeply affected with them; we need not inform God, but we have need enough to affect our own ſouls: As we make confeſſion of the mercies and goodneſs of God, and repeat his kindneſſes to us, that our ſouls may be the more affected with thankfulneſs for them; So we are to make confeſſion of our own ſinfulneſs, that we may be the more affected with the vileneſs and filthineſs of them, and with godly ſorrow for them.

Thirdly, The knowledg which God hath of ſin in and by himſelf, may be a terror to ſinners; his knowing of them by us is only a ground of comfort; God hath no where promiſed to pardon ſin becauſe he knows it, but he hath if we make it known. Unleſs God know our ſins by our confeſſion, he knows them only to our condemnation: he knows them enough already to condemn us, though we do not confeſs them, but he will not know them ſo as to acquit us, unleſs we confeſs them. And indeed nothing is known properly to God in that capacity as he pardons and forgives, but that which is acknowledged by us. When a Judg is to give ſentence upon perſons or actions,

Nihil eſt notum judici niſi judicialiter ſit notum.

actions, he takes notice of nothing but what is made known to him as a Judg; what he knows in a private capacity is no ground for him to proceed to ſentence upon; every thing muſt be proved Judicially, or witneſſed openly in Court, before he gives Judgment, either to acquit or condemn. 'Tis ſo in this caſe; Though all our ſins are known to God, yet none of them are known to him as a Judg but what we confeſs; and therefore he will not pardon them or acquit us from them till they are confeſſed.

Further, That acknowledgment of ſin, oppoſed to covering and hiding of ſin, is Firſt, a confeſſion of all ſin; If I (ſaith Job) have hid my tranſgreſſions, that is, any of my tranſgreſſions; he doth not ſay this or that, but he intends them all together; If a man confeſs many, and cover but one, all are as if they were covered; as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks about tranſgreſſion, He that keeps the whole Law, and offends in any one point, is guilty of all (James 2. 10.) So he that confeſſeth all his ſins, and hides one, hath hid all and confeſs'd none.

But you will ſay, is it poſſible for a man to confeſs all his ſins?

I anſwer, We may confeſs them all as to kind, though not as to individual particular Acts; for indeed they are more in number than the hairs of our head; They are innumerable, we cannot reckon them up. As we cannot reckon up all the mercies of God in the particular acts of them towards us, yet we may reckon the ſpecies or kinds of the mercies of God to us; So 'tis in the confeſſion of ſin. Aaron was commanded (Lev. 16. 21.) to lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and to confeſs over him all the iniquities of the Children of Iſrael; and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins.

Secondly, We muſt not hide but confeſs our ſpecial ſins in a ſpecial manner (Exod. 32. 31.) And Moſes returned unto the Lord, and ſaid, O this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them gods of gold. We have a like form of confeſſion (1 Sam. 12. 19.) And all the people ſaid unto Samuel, Pray for thy ſervants unto the Lord thy God, that we dye not; for we have added to all our ſins, this evil, to ask us a king. So ſaith Job, If I have hid my tranſgreſſions, or, hid mine iniquity in my boſom, that is, thoſe tranſgreſſions, or that iniquity which may ſeem to bear a greater title to me, or I to it, than any other ſin committed by me; if I have not made ſpecial confeſſion of my ſpecial ſin, then, &c.

Thirdly, That Confeſſion which is oppoſed to the covering of ſin, takes in not only the body of ſin, or as I may ſay, the matter of it, but all the ſeveral Circumſtances and aggravations of it. There is an Iniquity of ſin, as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 32. 5.) Thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin; he doth not only ſay my ſin, but the Iniquity of my ſin, he ſpeaks of the ſinfulneſs of ſin; and the Prophet tells Iſrael, In thy filthineſs is lewdneſs (Ezek. 14. 13.) This lewdneſs or Iniquity of ſin ariſeth from the conſideration of thoſe circumſtances with which it is cloathed. Thus Ezra at once heightens both the mercy of God to the Jews, and their ſinfulneſs againſt God (Ezra 9. 13, 14.) And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities deſerve, and haſt given us ſuch deliverance as this. As he confeſſed not only that God had given them deliverance, but ſuch a deliverance, yea (ſaith he) ſuch a deliverance as this; ſo we ſhould confeſs not only that we have committed iniquity, but ſuch an iniquity, yea ſuch an iniquity as this, or an iniquity thus and thus circumſtantiated.

Further (to cloſe this obſervation) he that would confeſs ſin in oppoſition to that hiding and covering which Job here diſavows, muſt do it,

Firſt, Feelingly, as to the weight and ſmart of it; yea taſtingly, as to the bitterneſs and unſavorineſs of it, unleſs we have a taſt how bitter ſin is, unleſs we are preſſed and even ſweat in the agony of our ſpirits, under the weight and burden of it, we do not confeſs to purpoſe, but rather cover it.

Secondly, He that confeſſeth his ſin in oppoſition to this covering, confeſſeth it, ſincerely, as ſin, or he doth it in the uprightneſs of his ſoul: many confeſs ſin, only as 'tis an Inconveniency, or diſadvantage to them. Now thus to confeſs ſin, is to cover it. While we grow angry with ſin meerly as it is a trouble to us, and hath brought ſome Inconveniency upon us, we do no more than is natural. As Mariners throw out their wares in a ſtorm when they are afraid the veſſel will ſink, or be ſwallowed up of the waves, they'l do any thing then to ſave their lives; but when they are in a calm, or got ſafe to harbour, then they wiſh with all their hearts they had thoſe goods again; 'Tis juſt ſo with many ſinners, when ſome ſtorm or trouble is upon them, then they'l throw their ſins overboard; but when they are in a ſafe harbour, they wiſh and call for their old ſins again: ſuch confeſſion of ſin is indeed the covering of it.

Thirdly, Sin muſt be confeſs'd with ſelf-abhorrence, as well as ſin-abhorrence. Thus did Job (Chap. 42. 6.) I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes. They who ſay they repent of ſin, but do not abhor themſelves for ſin, ſeem only to repent; or theirs is tongue-repentance, not heart-repentance.

Laſtly, He that confeſſeth his ſin in oppoſition to this covering in the Text, confeſſeth it believingly, and hath as one eye upon ſin, ſo another upon Chriſt. Unleſs faith be mixed with our confeſſions of ſin, our ſins remain covered with that black veil of the wrath of God to condemnation, not with that bleſſed veil of the mercy of God in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt to Juſtification. Judas confeſs'd his ſin, I have done evil in betraying innocent blood (Matth. 27. 4.) and here's the money (ſaid he) take it among you, I'le not keep a peny of it; (many will vomit up their unjuſt gain, the gain of oppreſſion, when it burdens them, they'l throw it back as Judas did) but Judas had no faith to mingle with his confeſſion; he did not confeſs believingly, but deſpairingly, He went and hanged himſelf. As the Word of God which forbids the committing of ſin, doth not profit us, unleſs it be mingled with faith, ſo neither do our own words, by which we confeſs ſin, and profeſs our repentance for it, pleaſe God, unleſs they are mingled with faith. God never covered any ſin graciouſly, which was not confeſſed believingly. If I have covered my tranſgreſſions,

By hiding mine iniquity in my boſom.

Here it is mine iniquity, as before my tranſgreſſions. From theſe poſſeſſive and appropriating words in the Text, my, and mine, If I have covered My tranſgreſſions, and hid mine Iniquity.

Obſerve, Every man, even the beſt of men have ſome ſins more peculiar to them than other ſins are.

A good man, even a Job, hath ſome tranſgreſſion, ſome iniquity, of which he may ſay, This is my tranſgreſſion, this is mine Iniquity. David ſpake in the ſame language (Pſal. 18. 23.) I alſo was upright before him (that is, before the Lord) and I kept my ſelf from mine Iniquity. David had the ſeed of all ſin in him, but there was ſome ſin that was David's ſpecial ſin, there was ſome ſin that dogg'd, and haunted, and vext him more than many; now, ſaith he, my labour was, and in the uprightneſs of my ſoul it was my great labour, to keep my ſelf from mine Iniquity; that is, from that Iniquity to which my heart hath often been ſolicited, and by which I have been moſt endangered.

And as particular perſons, ſo whole Nations have been charged with their ſpecial ſins. The Characteriſtical ſin of the Iſraelites was Idolatry, they were a people extreamly prone to falſe worſhip. And the Apoſtle Paul (Tit. 1. 12.) gives this Character of the Cretians out of their own Poet; They are always lyars, evil beaſts, ſlow bellies: That Nation was extreamly given to lying and to ſloth. And it appears by the Epiſtles of Paul to the Corinthians, that they were extreamly given to uncleanneſs and wantonneſs. Why ſhould the Apoſtle ſo often touch upon that ſtring, and give counſel againſt that ſin, had it not been the ſpecial ſin of that people? The Germans have been taxed for drunkenneſs. The Spaniard with pride, avarice, and deſire of domination: other Nations have had their marks, and I might lay my hand alſo upon our own, though indeed many ſins appear ſo National among us, that it is hard to ſay which is our National ſin. The ſeed of all ſin (experience ſhews) is in every particular perſon; and the corruption of nature is procreative of any ſin whatſoever (there is not the blackeſt ſin that ever was committed in the world, but there is ſomewhat in the nature of every man out of which that ſin might be formed and produced) yet corruption acts in this man one way, in that another. As the earth hath a ſeminal vertue in it to bring forth any thing, yet one ground bears ſuch a fruit, ſuch a grain ſpecially; So though there be the ſame common ſinfulneſs in all men, yet that puts it ſelf forth in much variety, in ſome it appears moſt in pride, in others by covetouſneſs, in a third ſort by wrath, in a fourth by wantonneſs. The body of man hath in it the ſeed of all diſeaſes, yet one mans body is moſt ſubject to fevers, and another mans to the dropſie. 'Tis thus alſo with the ſoul or mind of man. And this proclivity of men to any ſpecial ſin ariſeth, Firſt, From the conſtitution of the body; there are ſome ſins which are ſpecial to thoſe that are melancholy, ſome to thoſe that are ſanguin, ſome to thoſe that are phlegmatick, ſome to thoſe that are cholerick; The temperament of the body hath a great influence upon the manners of the mind.

Secondly, Special ſins follow others from the courſe and condition of their lives; one calling leads to this ſin, and another to that. For though the fault be not in the calling, yet there are peculiar opportunities, occaſions, and temptations in every calling. Now as Aſtrologers tell us of bad Conjunctions of Planets, ſo it is a bad Conjunction when a mans inward Corruption and outward Condition joyn together, to lead him into the ſnare of any ſin. Upon theſe and ſuch like grounds every man hath ſome ſin or other more peculiarly his. As every godly man hath the root of all grace in him, yet he finds this or that grace more active in him then another, which may be called his ſpecial grace, as faith was Abraham's ſpecial grace, and patience Job's, &c. So it is likewiſe with reſpect to ſin.

Sixthly, Obſerve, Though Job, or any godly man may have ſome ſpecial ſin to which he is more ſubject then to any other ſin, yet he hath no beloved ſin.

There is a vaſt difference between theſe two; A ſpecial ſin and a beloved ſin. David had a ſin, and Job had a ſin, which was his ſpecial ſin, but neither of theſe had any ſin that was their beloved ſin; they had no ſin which they hid in their boſome. And therefore in this Text while Job calleth ſome ſin or other His iniquity, he denyeth that he had any beloved ſin; for, ſaith he, did I hide it in my boſome? Did I ſhew any favour to it? Did I cover it and keep it warm? No, I did not. A beloved ſin lieth in the boſome (as the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved leaned in his) and next the heart of a carnal man. A godly man hath many ſins, yet he hath not one beloved or boſome ſin; he may have a ſin to which his will inclines, and his affections run out ſtrongly, yet he hath no ſin which he bears any good will to, or doth affect. Yea that which is the ſpecial ſin of a godly man, is his ſpecial burden; it is not delighted in, but lamented; there is no ſin which coſts him ſo much ſorrow as that to which either the temper of his body, or the occaſions of his life lead him. That ſin which he finds his heart moſt ſet upon, he ſets his heart, his whole ſoul moſt againſt. The Scripture gives much evidence that David (though a man after Gods own heart) was very apt to fall into the ſin of lying: We read of his faultering in that kind, when he was in ſtraights and hard put to it, more then once; but it is as clear in Scripture, that his heart was ſet againſt lying, and that it was the grief and dayly burden of his ſoul: That ſin is a mans greateſt burden and grief, which he prayes moſt to be delivered from; how earneſtly did David pray to be deliver'd from the ſin of lying (Pſal. 119. 19.) Keep me from the way of lying, teach me thy Statutes: And as he prayed earneſtly againſt lying, ſo he as earneſtly deteſted it (verſ. 163.) I hate and abhor lying, but thy Law do I love. And he tells us how he was affected or afflicted rather with that ſin, whatſoever it was which was his iniquity (Pſal. 31. 10.) My life is ſpent with grief, and my years with ſighing: My ſtrength faileth, and my bones are conſumed; (here are deep expreſſions of a troubled ſpirit) and why all this? He gives us the reaſon of it in the ſame verſe, becauſe of mine iniquity; As if he had ſaid, there is a baſe corruption which ſo haunts and dogs me, that my life is ſpent with grief, and my years with ſighing: He found (it ſeems) his heart running out to ſome ſin, which yet was ſo far from being a beloved ſin that it was the breaking of his heart, and the conſumption of his bones.

But ſome will ſay, how may we diſtinguiſh a ſpecial ſin from a beloved ſin?

I anſwer; Firſt, That is a mans beloved ſin which he dayly feeds and nouriſheth, which he provides for, and to which all his other ſins are ſervants. The beloved ſin is that to which all a mans other ſins do miniſter, they attend upon that ſin, and all that he doth runs into it. The Phariſees had their beloved ſin, and that was vain glory, they loved to be highly eſteemed and cryed up in the world. Chriſt taking notice of that generation, tells us that whatever they did had a reſpect to the feeding of their vain glory, or deſire of being uppermoſt in the World (Matth. 6. 2.) they gave alms and ſeemed to be very charitable in feeding the poor, but the truth was, they only fed their own pride and vain glory, therefore they ſounded a Trumpet that they might have praiſe of men; they did not give alms ſo much to relieve poor men, as to get applauſe among rich men, or all men. And when they prayed (ver. 5.) they did it that they might be ſeen of men, their very prayers alſo were the nouriſhment of their vain glory: yea they fed that luſt when they faſted; For (ſaith Chriſt, ver. 10.) when they faſt they diſſigure their faces (that is, they uſe artificial devices to make their faces appear as it were in another form, they looked ſowr; and why?) That they may appear to men to faſt. Their very abſtinence from food fed their fleſh: Yea Chriſt concludes concerning the whole courſe of theſe Phariſees (Matth. 23. 5.) All their works they do to be ſeen of men; they ſet every wheel a going to draw a reputation upon themſelves. And thus all the Inordinate cares which a covetous man takes, all the wrongs and oppreſſions with which he afflicts others, and the frauds by which he circumvents them, are only for the ſatisfying of (though it be impoſſible to ſatisfie it) his covetouſneſs. And thus alſo if ambition be a mans beloved ſin, all that he doth is to aſcend the top of the ſtairs, to get into the ſaddle, or (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Jer. 49. 16.) to hold the height of the hill. Every ſin centers it ſelf in the beloved ſin. As if the body have a wound or bruiſe, all the humours run to that diſeaſed part; ſo a beloved ſin (which is our wound and diſeaſe) draws all the humours of the ſoul to it.

Secondly, That's a mans beloved or boſome ſin which his thoughts are moſt upon: David ſaith, O how I love thy Law! 'tis my meditation night and day (Pſal. 119. 97.) I cannot keep my thoughts off from it, becauſe I love it. So that ſin which hath moſt of our thoughts, hath moſt of our love and that which hath our chief thoughts is our chiefly beloved ſin.

Thirdly, That's a ſin in the boſome which we cannot endure ſhould be toucht, reproved, or ſpoken againſt. David had a darling Son, whom he had not diſpleaſed at any time, by ſaying why haſt thou done ſo? (1 Kings 1. 6.) He that hath a darling ſin will be diſpleaſed if it be ſaid to him, why do you ſo? He cannot love thoſe who ſmite the ſin which he loveth. The reaſon why the Phariſees were ſo angry with Chriſt and ſought his death, was becauſe he ſmote them in this tender part, and alwayes hit at the ſin in their boſome, or was alwayes pointing at their boſome ſin. Herod had a beloved ſin; and he could not bear the Baptiſt who warned him of it. Herod caſt John into priſon when he told him of Herodias, and checkt his inceſtuous love.

Fourthly, That's a ſin in the boſome which a man ſtands up for, and will maintain by argument. We defend that which is in our boſome; what lieth neer the heart, the ſeat of life, we protect as our lives; Sinners will ſtrain all the wit and reaſon they have to juſtifie their beloved ſin. How ſtrongly are they engaged in their affections to a ſin, who appear as Patrons and Advocates for it?

Laſtly, That's a beloved ſin which we would hide and cover, which we would keep cloſe and ſecret. To juſtifie ſin, when it is known or ſeen, and to hide it out of ſight, are evidences both clear and ſtrong, that 'tis a beloved one.

Again, From the Text, If I have covered my tranſgreſſion as Adam; that is, as the firſt man did.

UMI

Obſerve, All men are naturally infected with the ſin of the firſt man; there is the ſame ſinfulneſs in all men now as was in the firſt man after he had ſinned.

We are apt to ſin as Adam did, and to hide our ſin as he did. We have the ſame bad principle that he had. If I have covered my tranſgreſſion as Adam: Old-Adam is in our boſoms, and in our bowels, we carry him about us, and he is continually provoking and ſtirring us up both to do evil and to cover it.

Laſtly, As the word Adam is taken appellatively; If I have covered my ſin as other men; that is, as men commonly do.

Note, All men are alike in ſin and ſinful practices, till grace makes the difference.

What any one man doth, all men would do, did not God change their hearts, and new mould their ſpirits. It is common to man or mankind to cover his ſin, not proper to this or that particular man; As in water face anſwereth to face, ſo (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 27. 19.) the heart of man to man. The general corruption of nature is alike in all men; nor is there any ſpecial inclination to this or that ſin, or way of ſinning, in the heart of any man, but others may be found with anſwerable inclinations.

Did I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrifie me, that I kept ſilence, and went not out of the door?

THis holy man Job ſtill proceeds to aſſert and maintain his integrity: In the former verſe he hath ſhewed us, that he had not covered his tranſgreſſion as Adam, by hiding his iniquity in his boſom. And here he tells us, that he did not fear a great multitude, nor was he terrified with the contempt of families, into a ſinful ſilence or forbearance to appear when the duty of his place called him to come forth and ſpeak in a good cauſe. I ſhall open the particular terms, and then give out their ſcope and ſenſe more fully.

Verſe 34. Did I fear a great multitude?

ערץ Importat prævalentiã cum terrore.

The word notes more then ordinary fear, even a ſtrong prevailing fear, which puts the whole man into motion, or into a commotion rather, into a rout and concuſſion of the ſpirits and powers both of body and ſoul; ſuch are the effects of great fear.

Did I fear a great multitude?] We may expound it, Firſt, Paſſively, Did I fear? That is, Was I afraid of, was I put into a trembling fit for fear of a great multitude? Secondly, The word may be taken Actively, to make afraid, to oppreſs, and break with violence. He that can break and cruſh all that ſtand in his way is a man to be feared. And hence the Scripture ſaith (Pſal. 89. 7.) God is greatly to be feared in the Aſſembly of the Saints. God is ſuch a Majeſty, that all, even his own people have reaſon to quake and tremble at his preſence or appearance; and as he is dreadful in his eſſential Majeſty, ſo in the providential puttings forth and actings of that Majeſty. The Prophet tells us in what a woful plight the Inhabitants of the earth, the higheſt (not excepted) will be, when God deals with them (Iſa. 2. 19.) They ſhall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. Job uſing another word (Chap. 9. 34.) deprecates this dreadful Majeſty of God, or the puttings forth of his terrible power, Let him take away his rod from me, and let not his fear terrifie me; and he expoſtulates with God by the ſame word (Chap. 13. 25.) Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? And wilt thou purſue the dry ſtubble? Wilt thou break? Wilt thou ſhake terribly, or cruſh in pieces ſuch a poor creature as I am? Thus many of the moſt learned Interpreters tranſlate here; We ſay, Did I fear a great multitude afraid: They ſay, I could make a great multitude afraid: Or as Mr. Broughton renders it, I could oppreſs a great troop.

Did I fear a great multitude?] The word ſignifieth the common rout, the promiſcuous vulgar; who gather together like many waters, as they are deſcribed in Scripture (Ezek. 39. 11.) And the valley ſhall be called the valley of Hamon Gog; that is, the valley of the multitude of Gog. Did I fear a great multitude?

Or did the contempt of families terrifie me?

Contemptus Familiarũ i.e. contemptiſſimus vel abjectiſſimus inter eas. Druſ.

Certè fregiſſem multitudinem magnam ſed deſpectiſſimus familiarum terrebat me: & tacebam nec egrediebar ex oſtio. Bez.

Theſe words are taken two wayes; Firſt, Implying the anger and diſpleaſure of families againſt him. Did the contempt or the wrath and rage of families banding and conſpiring againſt me terrifie me? Secondly, According to the other reading of the former words, theſe latter are rendred thus, I could oppreſs a great multitude, but the contempt of families (that is, the meaneſt or moſt contemned of any family, the pooreſt and loweſt in the family) did terrifie me. Mr. Broughton's tranſlation carrieth the ſame ſenſe, But ſuch families as came to baſeneſs made me ſhrink, that I was dumb and went not out of doors. According to this rendring the Abſtract is put for the Concrete. The contempt of families, either for thoſe families which conſidered together are moſt contemptible, or for any ſingle perſon of a family, who either is by his place, or hath made himſelf by his folly the moſt contemptible among them. There are ſome in every family, who by their place are the contempt or loweſt of them; there are others, who though by their place they may be among the chief of the family, or principal branches of it, yet make themſelves the object of contempt.

There are three wayes in which men may become the contempt of the family.

Firſt, By their poverty, and the meanneſs of their condition; though it be ſinful to contemn the poor, yet uſually the poor of a family are the contempt of it.

Secondly, Others are the contempt of families, becauſe of the weakneſs of their parts and gifts, becauſe of their ignorance, and want of underſtanding. A mans abilities, whether natural or acquired, eſpecially gracious abilities raiſe him up in honour and reſpect.

Talem Tertullianus exprimens Græcam lectionem ἐξουθένημα vocat, nullifamen, & latine dicere ſolet fax plebis.

Thirdly, Some are the contempt of families for their ill manners, for their lewd, ſcandalous and wicked courſes; theſe are worthy of nothing but contempt, both by thoſe of their own families, and by thoſe who are ſtrangers to them. David a type of Chriſt ſpeaks of himſelf as the contempt of families (ſo low was Chriſt humbled for our ſakes, Pſal. 22. 6.) I am a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people. Chriſt was not only reproached among men, but a reproach of men; that is, under greateſt reproach. David complains again of ſuch a contemptible generation (Pſal. 35. 15.) But in mine adverſity they rejoyced and gathered themſelves together; yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me. The original word is not the ſame uſed here by Job, yet it comes up fully to his ſenſe, importing ſuch as well deſerved the whipping poſt, even theſe (ſaith he) gathered themſelves together againſt me.

Did the contempt of families, &c.] The word families, may be taken two wayes.

Significat ſe nunquam accepiſſe perſonam ſuorum propinquorum nec inordinatè erga ſanguine conjunctos jus dixiſſe. Pined.

Firſt, To note thoſe who were united to him in a nearneſs by blood or by alliance: As if he had ſaid, I was not afraid to diſpleaſe my neareſt Kindred and Allies for Righteouſneſs or Juſtice ſake.

Secondly, Families may be put for men of great power, for men of honour, note, and name. And ſo the word families, is oppoſed to the multitude, who are not taken notice of for name or family. So ſome conceive this latter part of the verſe oppoſed to the former; Did I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families, of the greateſt and higheſt families terrifie me? Thus according to that double notion of the word families, Job was not terrified, either by thoſe that were near him and of his kindred, nor by thoſe who were great in power, did either the one or the other (ſaith he)

חתת Territus, conſternatus fuit, mente jacuit.

Terrifie me?] Or did they make me amazed? Was I in a conſternation of ſpirit becauſe of the contempt of families? The word noteth any diſcouragement or failing of ſpirit (Deut. 1. 21.) The Lord God of thy fathers hath ſaid unto thee, fear not, neither be diſcouraged; let not thy ſpirits fail. Thus in the Prophet (Jer. 50. 2, 3.) Declare ye among the Nations, and publiſh and conceal not; Say Babylon is taken, taken, Bell is confounded, &c. That is, All the Adherents of Bell are creſt-fallen, and, like men in a confuſed amazement, know not what to do. Now (ſaith Job) was there ſuch a terror upon my ſpirit? Was I overwhelmed with the fear of the mighty? Did contempt of families terrifie me?

That I kept ſilence and went not out of the door.

As if he had ſaid, Was I ſo terrified that I kept ſilence, and durſt not ſhew either my head or mine opinion, or that I durſt not appear and engage againſt ſinful and evil wayes, or for the help of thoſe who were oppreſſed? The word notes ſilence or ſtilneſs, not only in ſpeech but in motion. Thus Joſhua, according to the Hebrew elegancy, bid the Sun be ſilent (Joſh. 10. 12.) Sun ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, or, Sun be thou ſilent. The Sun ſpeaks not but in a figure, as all inanimate Creatures do the glory and power of God. Yet ſaith Joſhua, Sun be ſilent; that is, move not. Silence puts a ſtop to motion; and things that have no motion are ſaid to be ſilent. The grave or death is called ſilence (Pſal. 115. 17.) and a people deſtroyed are ſaid to be ſilenced (Iſa. 15. 1.) Ar of Moab is laid waſte, and brought to ſilence, or cut off, as our Margin hath it. The word is alſo uſed for our waiting upon God in faith and patience (Pſal. 62. 1.) Truly my ſoul waiteth upon God; or, My ſoul is dumb and ſilent for God. I am quiet from baſe and unworthy fears, murmurings, or toſſings of mind. I was never ſo put to it (ſaith Job) that my tongue ſtirred not, or that my hand moved not when I ſaw a juſt occaſion, or reaſon for either. Was I ſilent

And went not out of the door.] When duty called me either to ſpeak or do? No, it was not thus with me, I was never ſo terrified that I kept ſilence and went not out of the door.

Again, as theſe words are taken by way of negation; I did not keep ſilence, or I did not keep within doors, though the multitude roſe upon me, or great families appeared againſt me; ſo they are taken alſo in the ſenſe of a grant or conceſſion, by thoſe who expound the former part of the verſe actively, I could have made a great multitude afraid, but the contempt (or meaneſt) of families terrified me ſo, that I neither ſpake a word, nor ſtirred a foot, but carried my ſelf as a man aſhamed and convinced when I ſaw the matter was not right.

Having thus opened the words diſtinctly, I ſhall propoſe a threefold interpretation of them as they ſtand together.

Firſt, From the connection with the verſe going before, where Job profeſſed that he did not cover his ſin; the ſenſe is given thus; Did I fear a great multitude? As if he had ſaid, I was ſo far from covering my tranſgreſſions, or hiding mine iniquity in my boſome, that if at any time I had done amiſs, I did confeſs my error, and was not afraid nor aſhamed to do it, no not before a great multitude. Nor did I cover my ſin as being terrified with the contempt that I might run into, if it were diſcovered and known. Shame from man did not trouble me; but if I had erred, I was free in the acknowledgment of my error; I kept not my ſin in ſilence, nor did I conceal my ſelf at home. I did more fear God then any ſhame men could caſt upon me, and had rather fall under the contempt of families by confeſſing my ſin, then that he ſhould not be glorified by my confeſſion. Or (as others render the meaning of the latter words in complyance with this interpretation) I was ſilent; that is, I did not excuſe my ſin; and I went not boldly out of my doors, but ſtayed at home, as aſhamed of my ſelf, for what I had done.

Tacui i. e. non excuſavi factum meum; Nec egreſſus ſum oſtiū, ut ſolent, quos pudet alicujus criminis. Druſ.

Hence Note, A godly man, a man of a tender conſcience and upright ſpirit, will not hide his ſin, no not for fear a multitude ſhould hear of it, or whole families ſhould contemn and reproach him for it.

He can give glory to God, and take ſhame to himſelf. Thus Joſhua counſell'd Achan (Joſh. 7. 19.) My Son, give I pray thee glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him, and tell me what haſt thou done, &c. As if he had ſaid, Be not afraid that the great multitude, or the families of Iſrael will deſpiſe thee, but give glory to God though thou lie in the duſt. There are two caſes eſpecially wherein we ought to acknowledge our ſin even before men.

Firſt, In trouble of conſcience, when we can get no eaſe, no ſatisfaction by prayer and ſelf-ſearching; when the ſoul finds no reſt, but the ſore runneth and putrifieth, the wound ſtinketh and is corrupt, as David ſpake in his own caſe (Pſal. 38. 5.) In this caſe it is a duty to lay open our ſin to man. I do not ſay, to the multitude, but unto thoſe who are wiſe and godly, either Miniſters or Chriſtians. In a troubled dark condition, 'tis dangerous to ſhut up ſorrow in our own breaſts; fear of reproach and ſhame from men ſhould not hinder us from diſcovering the plague of our heart to thoſe that are diſcreet and faithful.

Secondly, If many have taken offence at our ſin, if a multitude are ſcandalized at what we have done, it is a duty to acknowledge and confeſs it, even before the multitude; that ſo our repentance may be as publick as our ſin hath been, and ſpread as far as our failing hath done.

Secondly, Taking the former clauſe actively; I could have made a great multitude afraid, or I could oppreſs a great multitude (which reading (as I noted) is much inſiſted upon by ſome Interpreters) yet the moſt contemptible perſon of any family made me afraid, if he had Juſtice on his ſide, I durſt not (the fear of God was upon me) appear againſt him, or oppoſe him in his cauſe. This reading argues much holineſs, humility, and ſelf-denial in this righteous man.

And it may teach us, Firſt, How much power ſoever a juſt and good man hath in his hand, he will not uſe any of it to the wrong of any the pooreſt man.

He that is righteous knows he hath no power, and finds he hath no will but to do righteous things. Laban ſaid to Jacob (Gen. 31. 29.) It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt; ſo he bragg'd over Jacob: And we do not find that Laban's ſpirit or principle ſtopped him from hurting Jacob; for (ſaith he) The God of your Fathers ſpake unto me yeſternight, ſaying, Take thou heed, that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad: That is, Do not ſpeak to him good or bad as to this matter of his return to thee; do not allure him by promiſes, nor terrifie him by threatnings to deſiſt from his intended journey. Laban's ſpirit was checked by the Lord not to uſe his power againſt Jacob, but it is not clear that he had a principle of righteouſneſs and meekneſs in him to check himſelf from doing it. When a man can ſay, it is in the power of my hand to do you hurt, but the Lord hath given me another heart, I dare not do you wrong, nor will I oppreſs you in your right; this is an excellent and a gracious frame: And this appeared eminently in Joſeph (Gen. 50.) His Father Jacob being dead, his Brethren were afraid that he would take revenge upon them (ver. 15.) And when Joſeph's Brethren ſaw that their Father was dead, they ſaid, Joſeph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him. This Joſeph our Brother is a man in power, and having the command of all Egypt, he is able to break the whole multitude of us; and while we remember our unjuſt and ill uſage of him, what can we expect but hard uſage from him? And therefore they humbly addreſſed unto him (ver. 16, 17.) And they ſent a Meſſenger unto Joſeph, ſaying, thy Father did command before he dyed, ſaying, So ſhall ye ſay unto Joſeph, forgive, I pray thee, the treſpaſs of thy Brethren and their ſin; for they did unto thee evil: And now we pray thee, forgive the treſpaſs of the ſervants of the God of thy Father. And Joſeph wept when they ſpake unto him. (It troubled him to be ſuſpected of revengeful purpoſes towards them) And Joſeph ſaid unto them (ver. 19, 20.) Fear not, for am I in the place of God? As if he had ſaid, Vengeance belongs to God, not to me; and ſeeing God hath over-ruled your unkindneſs and ill dealing with me, for the good both of your ſelves and others, I am ſo far from meaning you any hurt, that I will ſtill do you good. Thus he reproved them for the evil which they had done, and relieved them againſt all fears, that he would do them any hurt, in the words following; As for you, ye thought evil againſt me, but God meant it unto good, to bring to paſs as it is this day to ſave much people alive: Now therefore fear ye not, I will nouriſh you and your little ones; and he comforted them, and ſpake kindly to them. A godly man is ſo ſenſible of the kindneſs of God to him, that he cannot return unkindneſs where he hath received it, though he could eaſily do it; They indeed know what it is to uſe power aright, who when they need not fear what a multitude can do againſt them, yet fear to do wrong to any ſingle perſon. As Paul ſpeaks of Church-power (2 Cor. 13. 8.) So ſaith any godly man (what magiſtratical or military power ſoever he hath) I can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth. I am for the truth (ſaith Paul) there I am a Gyant, but I can do nothing againſt the truth; I have neither ſtrength nor underſtanding for that work. So ſaith a godly man, though I could break a Troop, yet I will not break a bruiſed Reed againſt right; I cannot lift up my hand, nor open my mouth, nor ſtir a foot againſt a righteous man, though in rags, or under my feet. And indeed it is weakneſs, not power to do any thing againſt the truth or righteouſneſs (Ezek. 16. 30.) How weak art thou ſeeing thou doſt theſe things (what things were theſe, the doing whereof argued weakneſs? No good I warrant you; ſo it follows in the ſame place) The works of an imperious whoriſh woman.

Secondly, Note, It is a high commendation and a ſtrong proof of the truth and power of Grace, when we have a power to do evil and do it not, nor have any heart to do it.

Many want nothing but power to do miſchief; they have a heart for it, but they have not a hand. If they could but break a troop and oppreſs the multitude, whom would they not oppreſs? Whom would they not terrifie? The Lord reſtraineth them in their power, elſe they would uſe it to the utmoſt. Thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear (ſaith David, Pſal. 10. 18.) To judge the fatherleſs and the oppreſſed, that the man of the earth may no more oppreſs, or (as we put in the Margin) terrifie. The man of the earth (that is, the man who is great and ſtrong upon earth, or in earthly things) hath an heart to oppreſs, there is nothing wanting but leave and opportunity. When once he hath opportunity, he will not only oppreſs, but alwayes oppreſs, he will never make an end of oppreſſing; and therefore the Pſalmiſt prayes, that God would come and take order with him, that he may no more oppreſs: As if he had ſaid, Lord, if thou letteſt him alone, he will oppreſs more and more, even his evermore; yea, he will not only oppreſs, but triumph and pride himſelf in his oppreſſions, as he is deſcribed in another Scripture (Pſal. 52. 1.) Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, O mighty man? (That's a Pſalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and ſaid unto him, David is come to the houſe of Abimelech) Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, O mighty man? (ſaid David then) The goodneſs of God endureth continually. God hath all power in his hand, he could cruſh all men as a moth; He is God Almighty, able to deſtroy whom he pleaſeth, and when he pleaſeth, yet the goodneſs of God endureth continually. He is good, and he loveth to be doing good; whereas (ver. 3.) Thou loveſt evil more then good, and therefore exerciſeſt thy power in the doing of evil rather then good.

Si abjectiſſimæ ſortis homo ad me venit, & vitiorum meorum amicè admonuit æquo animo tuli, tacui nec contra eum contendi. Lavat.

Again, Taking this interpretation, I could break or terrifie a great multitude, yet the contempt of families terrified me: That is, If the meaneſt of the family did but advertiſe me wherein I had done wrong, I was afraid to proceed.

Hence Obſerve, A godly man is willing to receive counſel or reproof, where there is cauſe, from the meaneſt perſons.

He looks not upon the ſpeaker, but what is ſpoken; nor doth he contemn what the contempt of families telleth him, if he telleth truth. It is ſaid in that prophetical Promiſe (Iſa. 11. 6.) The Wolf ſhall dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard ſhall lye down with the Kid, and the Calf, and the young Lion, and the Fatling together, and a little Child ſhall lead them. Here's a gracious metamorphoſis; they who were wild and fierce as Lions, ſhall be turned into Lambs; they ſhall have ſuch a tameneſs and mildneſs of ſpirit, that a little Child may lead them. As if the Prophet had ſaid, If the leaſt (who are able) give counſel, if but a Child give counſel, they will follow him in the way of righteouſneſs. As he that is godly and rightly principled, will not be led out of the way of truth, holineſs, and righteouſneſs, by the dictates or directions of the moſt ancient Fathers (gray hairs command no reverence, but (where they are a Crown of glory,) as being found in the wayes of righteouſneſs) ſo if a little Child, or the greeneſt head ſhew him the way of righteouſneſs, he cannot but give reverence and follow it; or if a little Child ſhew him where he is gone out of the way, he is convinced and will not go one ſtep further. Job profeſſed at the thirteenth verſe of this Chapter; If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant or of my maid-ſervant when they contended with me, &c. Job was ready to hear not only his great Lords and Counſellers, but his common Servants; ſhe that ſwept the houſe, and he that rubb'd his horſe heels, was not refuſed nor rejected by him. There is much grace, a height of grace ſhewed in being willing to receive counſel or reproof from the leaſt and loweſt. Moſtly, rich and great men are a terror to all reprovers, and have this unhappineſs with their greatneſs, that they may ruine themſelves uncontroul'd. Poſſibly ſome may mutter at them in ſecret, but no man dares ſpeak openly or plainly to them. Job points at ſuch proud ones (Chap. 21. 30, 31.) The wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction, &c. Who ſhall declare his way to his face? And who ſhall repay him what he hath done? The man is paſt dealing with; you take a Lion by the beard, and a Bear by the tooth, when you reprove him. Job was a great man, yet if truth were ſpoken by a Child or a Servant, he hearkened to it; his example ſhould be our warning, not to deſpiſe neceſſary warnings, what hand ſoever brings them to us. If the Meſſage be of God, 'tis no great matter how little the Meſſenger is. And if our conſciences tell us he ſpeaks truth, and that his finger is upon our ſore, let us not caſt it away, nor reject it, leſt we be caſt away among thoſe who reject the counſel of God againſt themſelves, who often ſendeth ſuch meſſages, whether of counſel or reproof, to us, on purpoſe, by perſons of leaſt reſpect, that he may try whether we reſpect truth without reſpect of perſons. A godly man will not ſay, what's he that he ſhould be a Monitor, that he ſhould tell me of my faults, or undertake to teach me? If it be a ſin that we are told of, or a duty that we are taught, it is honourable for us to lay down our ſin and take up our duty, though he be (as to a worldly account) contemptible, who hath dealt with us about either.

There is a third interpretation of theſe words, which I conceive to be yet more clear unto the ſcope of this Text, and that ariſeth from the Text as it ſtands in our tranſlation. Job had been ſhewing before what he was, and how he had behaved himſelf in ſeveral of his Relations, as a Neighbour, as a Husband, as a Maſter, as a Magiſtrate; and as there he profeſſed his Magiſtratical integrity, ſo here the courage and undauntedneſs of his ſpirit, in the diſcharge of that office. Did I fear (ſaith he) a great multitude? Or did the contempt of families terrifie me, that I kept ſilence, and went not out of the door? As if he had ſaid, The violence of the people never hinder'd me from doing my duty, nor did I at any time go out of my way, leſt I ſhould diſpleaſe the neareſt of my own family, or the greateſt families. It never troubled me who oppoſed me, whether conſidered for number, nearneſs, or greatneſs, while I was for juſtice. The contempt of any man did not make me keep ſilence, nor ſtay me in the leaſt from doing what was right and equal to all men.

Excludit à ſe inordinatum timorem corporalium periculorum, qui quidem maxime ſolet procedere ex multitudine contra hominem inſurgente. Aquin.

No man can do good but he ſhall have croſs motions, both from the fleſh within him, and from fleſh without him. We meet with moſt rubs when we would walk in an even way. It ſeems Job in the diſcharge of his office, met with many, even with a multitude of oppoſers, eſpecially with oppoſition from the multitude, and therefore ſaith, Did I fear a great multitude?

Hence Note, Firſt, The multitude, or generality of men, are prone to oppoſe that which is good, and thoſe who do good.

There is a principle of unrighteouſneſs in all men by nature, and moſt men in their practice oppoſe that which is righteous. We find the multitude oppoſing the greateſt good work that ever the Lord did, the ſetting his Son upon his holy hill of Sion. The whole world of ungodly men, both Princes and people were up in arms to oppoſe this glorious work of God (Pſal. 2. 1, 2.) Why do the Heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The Kings of the earth ſet themſelves, and the Princes take counſel together, againſt the Lord and againſt his Anointed, ſaying, let us break their bands aſunder. Obedience to Chriſt is the worlds bondage, and they will get looſe if they can. And as in that, ſo in other caſes, the people rage and imagine vain things, when the beſt things are in doing. They that follow the multitude ſhall ſeldom do any thing that is good. When Moſes came down from the Mount and charged Aaron with making that Idol; Aaron by way of excuſe tells him the people had preſſed him to make it (Exod. 32. 22.) And Aaron ſaid, let not the anger of my Lord wax hot; thou knoweſt the people that they are ſet on miſchief; for they ſaid unto me, make us gods, &c. Aaron ſhould not have heard, much leſs feared the multitude, but he did. Sometimes (I grant) The voice of the people is the voice of God; that is, God moves the multitude by a ſecret over-powering influence upon their ſpirits, to cry up and call alowd for that to be done which himſelf (in his wonderful providences, and according to his eternal counſels) is about to do. But in moſt caſes, we may ſay, The voice of the people is the voice of the Devil. And if you will pleaſe the moſt of men, or The many, you ſhall never do any thing that is pleaſing to God, or profitable unto men. The multitude is an unruly beaſt, hurried by paſſion, not guided by rule or reaſon. And as ſome excuſe their doing evil by the urgency of the people; ſo others are kept from doing good by the oppoſition of the people. Saul (as was ſhewed more largely upon the former verſe) would needs excuſe the miſcarriage of that ſervice which God called him to, by the cry of the people (1 Sam. 15. 21.) The people took of the ſpoil, &c. As if Saul had ſaid, Could I turn ſuch a torrent, could I fully execute the Commiſſion which God gave me when the people would not conſent and cleave to me? They who fear the people, or reſolve to pleaſe the people, ſhall, at beſt, do the work of God to halves, and uſually they leave it quite undone, or do that which is juſt contrary to it. Job could ſay, Did I fear a great multitude? This was not ſo much a gallant, as a truly gracious reſolution; and there are but few who have acted up to it. The ſtream of the multitude doth often carry even Magiſtrates and great ones down with it, to the doing of unworthy and unrighteous things, or ſtops them from doing thoſe things which are honourable and righteous. Every Magiſtrate is not cloathed with Job's ſpirit, to be above the ſway of a great multitude. Pilate was carried to one of the worſt actions in the world (though it had the beſt and moſt bleſſed iſſue) to paſs an unjuſt ſentence upon Chriſt (who was as innocent as innocency it ſelf) meerly becauſe he feared the multitude (Matth. 27. 24.) When Pilate ſaw that he could prevail nothing, but rather a tumult was made, he took water and waſhed his hands before the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent from the blood of this juſt perſon: ſee ye to it. It is your cry and your rage that hath prevailed with me, I offered you Barabbas to be crucified and Jeſus to be releaſed, but nothing (I perceive) will content you except Jeſus die, therefore take him. See how this Roman Judge was baffled and overcome by the multitude, to condemn a righteous perſon againſt the dictate of his own conſcience, and the light of his judgment. And we read (Acts 12. 2.) How Herod had killed James the Brother of John with the ſword; and becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter alſo, &c. Thus ſome do injuſtice for fear of the multitude, and others to gain the love and good will of the multitude, care not to be both bloody and unjuſt.

Vox populi vox Dei.

Secondly, Note, A godly man, eſpecially a godly Magiſtrate, will do juſt and righteous things, though all the world riſe up againſt him.

This is the honour of Magiſtracy, and by this they ſhew themſelves Gods indeed, men acted by the Spirit of God, and acting in the power of God. Magiſtrates ſhould not yield no not an hairs breadth through the importunity of a multitude. It is againſt the duty of a private Chriſtian to have fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, much more for thoſe that are in power. It is beſt to get and keep the heart ſo eſtabliſhed, as neither to do nor forbear to do for fear of the multitude, or for fear we bring (as we ſay) fiſts about our ears, and an old houſe upon our heads. We ſhould be reſolute in a good cauſe, though we purchaſe to our ſelves the hatred of the whole world. And it is but needful that we ſhould caſt up our account aforehand about this thing; for while we ſet our ſelves to reſiſt evil (the moſt being every where the worſt) we are like to have the whole world of evil men our enemies. While ſo many flatter themſelves, few or none can digeſt reproof, and but a few Juſtice, from others.

Again, Conſider the ſecond branch of this verſe according to the ſecond acceptation of the word families, The contempt of families did not terrifie me. I (ſaith Job) neither feared whole families, nor the heads or chiefs of families. Some poſſibly can trample upon the multitude, and ſlight the common ſort, but they fear the great ones.

Hence Note, Righteous men will do righteous things, both in their publick and private capacities, though they provoke the mighty, and run the hazzard of their hotteſt diſpleaſure.

Zimri was a Prince of a chief houſe among the Simeonites (Numb. 25. 15.) yet Phineas was not afraid to provoke that great family in Iſrael, but in his zeal for the Lord thruſt both him and Cozbi his Harlot through the belly, and ſlew them, and received high commendation from the Lord for doing it. The day of mans Juſtice ſhould be like that of the Lords ſpoken of by the Prophet (Iſa. 2. 12, 13.) The day of the Lord of hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he ſhall be brought low; and upon all the Cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the Oaks of Baſhan; and upon all high Mountains, and upon all the Hills that are lifted up: That is, Upon thoſe perſons who are greateſt, higheſt, and ſtrongeſt, like Mountains and Hills, like Cedars and Oaks in the world. God in the execution of his Judgments regardeth not the greatneſs of men, but impartially poureth vengeance upon them; nor ſhould men where Juſtice and Righteouſneſs call for it: He is not worthy the name or office of a Magiſtrate, who cannot (in this ſenſe) contemn the contempt of families.

Secondly, As the word families, ſignifieth ſuch as are of near relation to us, as ſome here interpret.

Note, The fear of diſpleaſing Kindred, and thoſe in relation, often proves a great obſtruction to Juſtice.

Some would do right, but there is a Kinſman, a Brother in the caſe. We ſay, It is hard to love and to be wiſe. Affections pervert the judgment. And therefore by an ancient Law it was provided, that no man ſhould be choſen to exerciſe the office of a Magiſtrate in the Province where he was bred and born; leſt he ſhould be tempted to favour his Kindred and Allies in the forbearance of Juſtice, or might ſeem harſh and rigorous in doing Juſtice, either againſt or upon them. It is not eaſie to ſee a fault and puniſh it in thoſe that are near us; and 'tis hardeſt to ſee faults in our ſelves, becauſe we are neareſt our ſelves. Naturaliſts obſerve, that when a ſenſible object is laid near the ſenſe, the operation is hindred. There is no man can ſee himſelf well till he get quite out of himſelf. And our nearneſs to others makes it ſomewhat difficult for us to diſcern their faults, but more to cenſure and puniſh them. How hard was it for David to ſee treaſon in a Son? We are loth to diſpleaſe Kindred, or to be diſpleaſed with them. It was the commendation of the Tribe of Levi, (and the Lord honoured them with the Prieſthood for it) that they took no notice of Relations in the Lord cauſe (Deut. 33. 8, 9.) And of Levi he ſaid, let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one whom thou didſt prove at Maſſah, and with whom thou didſt ſtrive at the waters of Meribah. Who ſaid unto his Father, and to his Mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his Brethren, nor knew his own Children: they obſerved thy Word, and kept thy Covenant. Had theſe Levites caſt off all natural affection? How is it then ſaid, they did not know Father or Mother? It was in executing the Lords Command, as appears (Exod. 32. 27.) And he (that is, Moſes) ſaid unto them, thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, Put every man his ſword by his ſide, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the Camp, and ſlay every man his Brother, and every man his Companion, and every man his Neighbour. Now, when the other Tribes were unwilling to execute this ſentence of God upon their Kindred and near Relations, Levi did it, as is reported in the next words (ver. 28.) And the Children of Levi did according to the word of Moſes, and there fell of the people that day about

In ea provincia ex qua quis originem traxit officium fiſcale adminiſtrare prohibitum fuit, ne aut gratioſus aut calumnioſus apud ſuos eſſe videatur. Paulus Juriſc. lib. 5 Sent.

Senſibile poſitum ſuper ſenſum tollit ſenſationem.

three thouſand men; for Moſes had ſaid, Conſecrate your ſelves to day to the Lord, even every man upon his ſon, and upon his Brother, that he may beſtow upon you a bleſſing this day. Levi did not know Father or Mother or Child ſo, as to be partial in or neglect the execution of the Decree aud ſentence of God. It is a great point of holy knowledge in ſuch caſes not to know Father or Mother or any Relations; and it is a truth, that the knowledge of Relations often byaſſeth us from duty in many caſes. When a Kinſman is in the caſe, the Law (in ſome mens opinion) is otherwiſe. If David s heart had not been ſtrongly as well as ſincerely ſet for God, The contempt of his Wife had cooled his zeal, and made him aſhamed of his Dancing before the Ark (1 Sam. 6. 16.) That was a noble reſolution of Saul, if it had been well grounded, when he caſt Lots to find out who had eaten contrary to the Oath wherein he had raſhly engaged the Army (1 Sam. 14. 24, 39.) For as the Lord liveth which ſaveth Iſrael, though it be Jonathan my Son, he ſhall ſurely die. Had Saul done well in adjuring the people not to eat till the Evening, he had done eminently well in reſolving not to ſpare his own Son for eating; but the former being bad, the latter was worſe. Be ſure you are upon a right matter, and then the more ſtiff and reſolved you are againſt reſpect to Relations, the better are your reſolutions. Perſonal Relations ſhould ſway nothing in a publick cauſe, nor ſhould any notice of perſons turn us aſide from doing right. The Lord ſaid (Jer. 22. 24.) Though Coniah the Son of Jehoiakim King of Judah, were the Signet npon my right hand, yet would I pluck him thence; that is, though he were as near to me and as uſeful as a Signet is to man (for this is ſpoken only after the manner of men) yet he ſhall bear his puniſhment, and know that he hath grievouſly ſinned againſt me. This (in proportion) was Job's honour, he would not ſpare Signet-Friends, he had rather provoke all the Relations he had in the World, then depart from the rule, and ſo provoke his firſt beſt Friend the Lord, and his next beſt Friend his own conſcience; God is our beſt Friend, and ſhall we adventure a contempt from God to avoid the contempt of Friends? How good and ſweet a Friend a good conſcience is, none know but they that have it, nor all they neither: But to be ſure, 'tis better and eaſier being under the diſpleaſure of a thouſand Families and Kindreds and Relations then under the diſpleaſure either of God above, or of our conſcience in onr boſome. Here's our duty both in publick and private tranſactions, never be over-born by Families, either not to do right, or to do unrighteouſly. How upright a man was Job, who alwayes did what was right, though againſt the vote, Firſt, Of the Multitude; Secondly, Of his Kindred; Thirdly, Of great Families: All theſe did not move him at all, nor did they bear the weight of one hair in the ballance for the turning him out of his way.

And this is a good pattern for the Miniſters of the Goſpel; They ſhould not fear to do the duty of their place and office; Though, Firſt, The Multitude are diſpleaſed; Though, Secondly, Their Kindred and Fathers Family contemn them for it; Though, Thirdly, Great men are angry, and are ready to powr out wrath upon them if they do. Magiſtrates and Miniſters act like themſelves when they are ſwayed by conſcience towards God, not by humane Concernments or Conſiderations.

VERS. 35, 36, 37.

O that one would hear me, behold, my deſire is, that the Almighty would anſwer me, and that mine adverſary had written a Book.

Surely I would take it upon my ſhoulder, and bind it as a Crown to me.

I would declare unto him the number of my ſteps, as a Prince would I go near unto him.

JOB having given many evidences and proofs of his integrity in the foregoing part of this Chapter, ſadly, and moſt ſeriouſly imprecating the Judgments of God upon himſelf, if his teſtimony were not true; he in theſe three verſes ſhews his aſſurance of the goodneſs of his cauſe, by his willingneſs to have the whole matter yet more fully heard and examined even before the pureſt and moſt impartial tribunal. We have two things moſt conſiderable in this Context,

Firſt, Job's earneſt requeſt or petition that he might come to a tryal, O that one would hear me, my deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me (ver. 35.)

Secondly, His profeſſion, with what heart and frame of ſpirit he hoped to appear and ſtand forth in the day of his tryal (ver. 36, 37.) Surely I would take it upon my ſhoulder, and bind it as a Crown to me; I would declare to him the number of my ſteps, and as a Prince would I go near unto him. Theſe are words of confidence, like confidence it ſelf, yet no groundleſs confidence, nor the confidence of the wicked, which God will reject, and in which they ſhall never proſper.

Verſe 35. O that one would hear me, Or according to the letter, O that it were given to me to have a hearer for me.

Job calleth for a Judge, and doubts not but his Judge will prove his Patron; he calls for a Judge to hear him with equity and moderation of ſpirit, of which kind of hearing he had found little from his friends.

Judicem audientem me. Pagn. Judicem appellet ſed gratiæ ut Ἐπιεικείας, hoc enim toto libro ſibi negari queritur. Coc.

O that one would hear me.] He ſpeaks indefinitely, as if he were very indifferent who the perſon were, ſo he were but an indifferent perſon that had the hearing of his cauſe, any perſon unbyaſt and uningaged ſhould ſatisfie him. Some render, O that I had a Judge to hear me; the Text is only, O that I had one to hear me, but becauſe 'tis the buſineſs of Judges to hear and determine cauſes, therefore it is well rendered, O that I had a Judge to hear me; or a hearing Judge. The Lord gave command for hearing as well as Judging (Deut. 1. 16.) I charged your Judges at that time, ſaying, hear between your Brethren; There can be no judging without hearing, therefore a Judge is called a hearer. Thus Abſhalon in his flattering and dſloyal ſalutes (2 Sam. 15. 3.) beſpake every man he met, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the King to hear thee; there is not a hearer, that is, there is not a Judge to hear and determine your caſe. O that I were made Judge in the Land, or the hearer and determiner of differences between you; how readily and how righteouſly would I diſpatch your cauſes! And hence the place where Judges uſe to hear cauſes, is called The Auditory (Acts 25. 23.) When they were come in to the hearing place that is, to the place where cauſes were heard and Judgment given. When Job ſaith, O that one would hear me, he intends not an ordinary hearer, or any one that came next, but a Judge to take cognizance of and make ſome determination about his caſe and ſtate: And while Job begs for a Judge or a hearer, he doth not appeal from God, as if he were unwilling to acquieſce and reſt in his Judgment; but he deſired that God would order him ſuch a Judge, or ſuch a hearer as might do him right, according to the integrity of his heart, and the equity of his cauſe. And though he ſpake in the former part of the verſe, as if he were content any Judge ſhould end it, yet we find he draws down his deſire to God himſelf in the latter part of the verſe; My deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me.

Ἀκροατήριον, Auditorium Juriſconſultorum verbum pro eo loco, ubi jus dicitur. Bez.

O that one would hear me.] There is an Eleganey in the Hebrew Text; Grammarians tell us that the Participle is joyned with a dative Pronoun of favour; O that one would hear me, with regard to my ſad caſe, or with compaſſion of my troubled condition; O that he would give me a hearer for me; Such a hearer I mean as is affected with and ſenſible of my ſorrowful ſtate. Job had been long heard, how many debates and diſcourſes had there paſſed between him and his Friends? And yet now he ſpeaks as if he had not been heard to that day.

Participiū audiens jungitur ac dativo favoris. Quis dabit mihi audientem mihi? Judicem deſiderat, qui ex æquo quidē judicat, ſed tamen in bonum. Bold.

Hence Obſerve, They who do not hear well, do not hear at all; a matter is never heard till it be rightly heard.

And as 'tis profitable to conſider this, in reference to the hearing of ſuch controverſal debates, as paſſed between Job and his Friends; ſo in reference to our ordinary hearing the uncontroverted doctrines of the Goſpel. Many faithful Miniſters of Chriſt have preached long, and have had many hearers, who may yet cry out as Job in the Text, O that men would hear us! They have not been heard, though they have had many hearers; few have heard them, though they have had a Multitude of hearers. How many Sermons ſoever you hear, till you hear them to profit, you hear them not at all. And how many cauſes ſoever the Judge heareth, till he heareth them with equity and equirinity, he doth not hear them at all. After Job had been ſo long hard, he had reaſon to cry out, O that one would hear me.

Secondly, Note, A good man deſires, and deſires earneſtly to have his cauſe throughly heard, to have it heard to purpoſe.

As a godly man would have his prayers heard, that is, granted, (The Lord is ſaid not to hear that prayer, which he doth not grant.) He gives God no reſt till he hath ſome hopes or intimations that his holy deſires are heard, and anſwered. So every man in diſtreſs or trouble, every man under hard cenſures, ſlanders, or miſ-underſtandings, longs to be heard, and O how long and tedious is the time till he hath obtained a deſired hearing? 'Tis a great pain not to be heard at any time, but then moſt when we our ſelves are (as Job was) in pain. When the body is in pain, and the mind in pain when we are wounded within, and wounded without, O how grievous and painful is it not to be heard, but to have our matters ſtill hanging in ſuſpenſe, and no end, no determination made about them! O that one would hear me.

Behold my deſire is, that the Almighty would anſwer me.

In this clauſe Job pitcheth upon God for his Judge; As if he had ſaid with David (Pſal. 73. 25.) Whom have I in Heaven but thee? And there is none upon the Earth that I deſire beſides thee. Where ſhall I have a Judge on earth or in Heaven but thee? Behold my deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me.

Deducunt alii à תוה quod eſt figurare; & תו eſt χάραγμα lineis ductis conſtans, quod quia uſum ſigni habet, hinc ſignum verti ſolet. Coc. תו Significat etiam terminum, unde Thau litera, quod claudat Alphabetum. Druſ. Qui ſignum interpretantur, locum hanc ita enarrant En ſignum innocentiæ meæ eſt Deus omnipotens, qui pro me teſtatur. Druſ. The Word which we tranſlate, My deſire, Is rendred by ſome, thus, my ſign is that the Almighty would anſwer me; and ſo we put in the Margin of our Bible. They who follow this reading derive the word from a Root which ſignifies, to mark, or to make a figure. So the word is uſed (Ezek. 9. 4.) Set a mark upon the heads of thoſe that mourn for the abominations that are committed in the Land, the word ſignifies alſo the uttermoſt end or term of a thing. The Hebrew Alphabet being cloſed with that letter. They who inſiſt upon this ſignification of the word, read not (as we) my deſire, but my ſign or my mark is that the Almighty would anſwer me. As if he had ſaid, The mark or ſcope that I aim at when I cry, O that one would hear me, is this, that the Almighty would anſwer me: Though I ſeem to ſpeak at large or at rovers, yet I have a mark, and the mark I ſhoot at is this, to have a hearing from God, O that God would be the Judge of my innocency and integrity, againſt all the falſe ſuppoſitions and miſpriſions which my Friends have had or made of me to this day.

But I rather adhere to our own tranſlation, my deſire is, &c. And ſo the word is derived from a Root which ſignifieth to wiſh or deſire; my wiſh (ſaith he) or deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me. There is a threefold anſwering.

Firſt, There is an anſwering to thoſe who ask Queſtions, for the reſolving of their doubts.

Secondly, There is an anſwering to thoſe who make petitions for the ſupply of their wants, or the grant of their requeſts.

Thirdly, There's an anſwering to thoſe that plead againſt us, or lay any charge upon us, for the clearing of our innocency, and wiping away of thoſe objections: In this latter ſenſe we are to take it here, O that the Almighty would anſwer me, that is, that he would undertake and clear my cauſe, that he would be Judge, and Witneſs on my ſide. To anſwer, ſignifies alſo to teſtifie, or to give a Teſtimony concerning another. Again, we anſwer; Firſt, In words, when we confirm, acknowledge, and approve, what another hath ſaid or done; Secondly, We anſwer by our actions (there is anſwering by the hand as well as by the tongue) when we do the thing that is deſired of us. O that the Almighty would anſwer me. Job having not found an equal Judge on earth, and knowing that none but God knew the ſecrets of his heart, deſires that he would be his Judge. So that he calls God to be his Judge, becauſe he alone was acquainted fully with his inſide, and perfectly diſcerned all the motions of his ſoul, his ends and aims, as well as the manner of his life. Thus he appealed from men (who are uſually led by their affections, by their love or hatred) to God, who (from the evidence of things) judgeth unerringly.

Hence Note, A godly man deſires above all things that God would hear, and judge his cauſe or caſe.

David made this prayer (Pſal. 26. 1.) Judge me O Lord, for I have walked in my integrity. And again (Pſal. 35. 24.) Judge me O Lord my God according to thy righteouſneſs, and let them not rejoyce over me. I have many Judges, many that judge me according to their unrighteouſneſs; but (ſaith he) Judge me O Lord, according to thy righteouſneſs. Once more (Pſal. 43. 1.) Judge me, O God, and plead my cauſe againſt an ungodly Nation. David deſires the Lord to ſuſtain both the art of an Advocate to plead his cauſe, and of a Judge to determine it.

But why doth Job (or why ſhould any godly man) deſire ſo earneſtly to have God to Judge him? The reaſon is, becauſe God is the beſt Judge, for firſt he is the moſt knowing Judge; they who have bad cauſes deſire much to come before bad or ignorant Judges, who cannot look far into them, much leſs look through them, they love to come before blind Judges, or if they be ſeeing Judges, they will do what they can to put out their eyes, they will blind them with gifts, as the Scripture ſpeaks, Gifts put out the eyes, But he that hath a good cauſe, deſires to have a knowing Judge, a Judge learned in the Law. And therefore a godly man muſt needs deſire God to be his judge, who knoweth him throughly, who knoweth not only the way without him, but that within him too, who knoweth not only his actions but his thoughts, who knoweth not only what he doth, but what he aims at, the purpoſes, intents, and deſigns of all his actions. Whom ſhould a godly man deſire to judge him in compariſon of God, who knows the frame of his heart, who though he cannot but ſee many faults, and ſinful failings in him, yet he knows alſo whatſoever is good in him, that is, whatſoever himſelf hath wrought in him, and helped him to work by his Spirit. God knows the work of his own grace, together with the moſt ſecret workings of all that grace. And therefore a godly man deſires moſt of all that God ſhould Judge him. Again, Secondly, He deſires it becauſe he knows God will be as juſt in determining his cauſe, as he is knowing about his cauſe; he cannot be turned aſide, nor byaſs'd by any means; no ſolicitations, no threats, no promiſes, no flatteries, no witcheries can in the leaſt draw the Lord off from that which is right. And as he is a juſt, and a knowing Judge; ſo, Thirdly, He is a merciful Judge, and will award to us according to the tenour of a Covenant of grace; he will not enter into Judgment with us, upon ſtrict legal terms, upon the terms of the Covenant of works; for then who could deſire God to be his Judge? Enter not into Judgment with thy Servant O Lord, (every one muſt ſay) for no fleſh is righteous in thy ſight; but a Believer knows God will judge him upon the terms of the Covenant of grace, and therefore he deſireth no other Judge but God. Behold, my deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me.

And that my Adverſary had written a Book.

Whereas ſome might object againſt Job's wiſh; you, perhaps, would have the Almighty for your judge, becauſe you hope he will favour you; no ſaith Job, I am willing that God ſhould know the very worſt of my caſe; As I deſire that God ſhould judge me, ſo that my Adverſary ſhould write a Book, and charge me home. The Hebrew is the man of my contention. There is a threeſold interpretation about this man of his contention.

איש ריבי Vir litis meæ, ſc. qui contra me litigat.

Vocat Deum virum contentionis, i.e. ἀντίδικον in qua loquendi forma אוש vir, tantum valet ac בעל dominus. Bold. [illegible]

Firſt, Some by this Adverſary or man of contention, underſtand God himſelf, who had dealt with Job in outward diſpenſations like an enemy, or an adverſary, like a man full of contention. The Lord ſaith (Iſa. 57. 15.) I will not contend for ever, &c. I have been long contending, long ſtriving, I have been as an Adverſary to this people for a great while; But I will not contend for ever, leſt the ſpirit ſhould fail before me, and the ſouls that I have made. Hence ſome conceive that even God himſelf may here be called Job's Adverſary, or the man of his contention. So the Scripture elſewhere expreſſeth the Lord under the word Man (Exod. 15. 3.) The Lord is a Man of War, the Lord is his name; As if he had ſaid, The Lord is ſuch a man of War as is alſo Lord and Maſter of the War, he wins the day and triumphs in every Battel. The Lord is a fighting man, too mighty for all fighting men. In which ſenſe, the Lord may be called here a man of contention; he can contend and ſtrive, and carry it like an Adverſary againſt all opponents.

Secondly, Others expound it of his Advocate; 'Tis the office of an Advocate to contend for his Client. O that the Almighty would anſwer me, and that the man of my contention had written a Book; that is, O that he who is to plead for me and mannage my cauſe at the hearing, had drawn up his Book, ſtated my caſe, and laid forth my condition, that the Almighty might proceed to judgment upon it.

Thirdly, 'Tis taken as we tranſlate for his real Adverſary; O that the man of my contention, or my Adverſary whoſoever he is that hath or will contend with me, had drawn up his Book, his Book of accuſation, and had filled it with the worſt matter that he could get againſt me; it ſhould be all one to me what he can ſay againſt me, while I have the Almighty for my Judge. Thus he alludes to thoſe who bring in a charge or Inditement in writing againſt offenders when they are tryed or arraigned. Such Books or Bills of Inditement are read in open Court before the Judge the Priſoner ſtanding at the bar to receive his Judgment. O that my Adverſary had written a Book. From the Elegancy of the Hebrew, Job calling his Adverſary a man of contention.

Obſerve, Some men are ſuch lovers of ſtrife, that they are men of ſtrife.

They are all for ſtrife, and debate, ſtrife is the very Element wherein they live, they live in the troubled waters, yea I may ſay, they live and they love to live in the very fire of trouble, they are men of contention. The good Prophet was ſo accounted (Jer. 15. 10.) Wo is me my Mother, that thou haſt born me a man of ſtrife, a man of contention to the whole earth; I have neither lent on uſury, nor men have lent to me on uſury, yet every one of them doth curſe me, that is, I meddle not with buſineſs, I intangled not my ſelf with worldly affairs, I neither lent nor borrowed, I neither bought nor ſold, yet I am a man of ſtrife, and contention. Some though they are nothing but peace in their ſpirits and ſpeeches, yet are men of contention to the whole earth, that is, while they only ſpeak the truth, and hold out the purity of the wayes, and worſhip of God, this vexeth all the world of wicked men. Such are men of ſtrife and contention to the whole earth, every one wrangles with them, none can bear them. It is ſaid of the two witneſſes (Rev. 11. 10.) They tormented the men that dwelt upon the earth. We read of a man (Rev. 2. 13.) the notation of whoſe name (Antipas) is a man againſt all men; not that he was for contention, but he was a man ſo holy in his life and zealous for the truth of God, that all man (upon the matter) contended with him, and he was ſlain in the contention. The noble Athanaſius in the time of the Arrian Hereſie, oppoſed the whole world, he was a man of contention to the whole earth. In this ſenſe ſome good men the faithful witneſſes of Chriſt are men of contention and ſtrife. But many (as Job calls his Adverſaries) are men of contention in an ill ſenſe, that is, they deſire contention and ſtir up ſtrife. Behold (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 11. 11.) All they that were incenſed againſt thee ſhall be aſhamed and confounded, they ſhall be as nothing, and they that ſtrive with thee ſhall periſh, We put in the Margin, the men of thy ſtrife; that is, men that are for nothing but ſtrife, or whoſe ſtrongeſt bent is to ſtrife, and their ambition to be men of contention. Chriſt was ſo converſant with ſorrow that he is called a man of ſorrows (Iſa. 53. 3.) And the ſpirit of Antichriſt is ſo ſteeped in ſin, that he is called the man of ſin (2 Theſ. 2. 3.) And by a like Hebraiſm or Elegancy of ſpeech, they who love to fiſh in troubled waters, or will be troubling the waters though they get no fiſh, are deſervedly called men of trouble, or men of ſtrife.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, O that my Adverſary had written a Book, that is, a Book of accuſation, a charge, a libel, or an inditement againſt me, I wiſh with all my heart he had brought it in, let him do his worſt.

Note, While our own Book of conſcience hath nothing but good in it, or while the Book of our own conſcience is for us, we need not fear, nor much care who write Books againſt us.

Let our Adverſaries write Books as large as they will, while we do well; let them ſay their worſt while we do good. It hath been the diſtemper of moſt times, and 'tis of theſe to write Books of contention, and publiſh ſtrife; we may ſay of may (as it was ſaid of ſome old Philoſophers) They ſpeak or pen whole cart loads of reproach and ſlander. What is the fence againſt all this? Nothing but a good conſcience, he that can ſay his conſcience writes nothing but good, and finds the records of that fair for him, may take courage and comfort, when men charge nothing but filth and dirt upon him. Paul had enough to ſay for himſelf, when ſtanding before the Council he could ſay (Act. 23. 1.) Men and Brethren, I have lived in all good conſcience before God, untill this day. And though as ſoon as he had ſaid ſo, Annanias commanded to ſmite him on the mouth, yet he was well enough, becauſe his conſcience did not ſmite him. He tells us alſo (2 Cor. 1.) that though he and others with him, had been preſſed above meaſure, in ſo much (ſaith he, v. 8, 9.) that we deſpaired even of life, and had the ſentence of death in our ſelves? Yet (ver. 12.) our rejoycing is this, the Teſtimony of our conſcience. A good conſcience is an impregnable fort, It fears not the fierceſt battery of evil tongues, or pens.

ὅλας ἁμάξας βλασφημιῶν. Lucian.

Thirdly, Obſerve, It is a convincing argument, that a man hath a good conſcience and a good cauſe, when he is willing to be tryed, and to have the worſt laid to his charge.

He that is guilty catcheth at any thing for a covering, and deſires to ſhadow himſelf that he may eſcape unſeen; fain he would keep his actions and his wayes fairly mantled over; he that is honeſt makes no coverings of what he hath done, nor doth he fear the diſcoveries which any man can make of them. He that is Gold cares not to be guilded, nor is he unwilling to be tryed. He ſaith (as Job in the Text) My deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me, and that mine Adverſary had written a Book.

Verſe 36. Surely I would take it on my ſhoulder. Mr. Broughton renders the word of aſſervation, Surely, As an Oath; I ſwear I would bear it on my ſhoulder.

Theſe words are a confirmation of what he ſpake laſt; As if he had ſaid, When my Adverſary hath made his Book as big and as heavy as he can, I ſhall bear it for all that; I would bear it upon my ſhoulder. Sin or guilt are a burden which no man is able to bear; who can take up any one ſin, the leaſt ſin, upon his ſhoulders, and ſtand under it? Any one ſin lived in and loved, will not only over burden our ſhoulders, but break our backs. But (ſaith Job) let mine Adverſary write my faults and failings, I can bear the Book upon my ſhoulders; Why? Becauſe he knew his Adverſary could write no ſinful practice, that he lived in or loved, or deſired to keep in his boſome, as he profeſſed at the thirty-third verſe. Yea when Job ſaith, I would bear it upon my ſhoulder, he doth not only intimate it ſuch a burden as would not preſs him down, nor break his back, but that it would be his honour, and that he ſhould bear that Book as a Banner of victory, or as an Enſign of glory. He was confident that whatſoever his Adverſary could write, with an intendment to diſparage him, would in the iſſue turn to his praiſe.

Verbis ſignificantiſſimis exprimit, quam ſit ſibi bene conſcius, & quam certò perſuaſus ſit ſingula accuſationis capita laudi ſibi ac ornamento fore. Merl.

There is yet another interpretation of theſe words, I would bear it on my ſhoulder; As if Job's meaning were; Suppoſe my Adverſary find real faults in me, and charge me with them upon due proof; yet I will take his Book upon my ſhoulder, and bear it patiently as my burden; I will acknowledge and confeſs what I have done amiſs, and neither deny or excuſe it. The word which we tranſlate to take upon the ſhoulder, ſignifies the taking up of a heavy burden, and 'tis applied to the bearing of any puniſhment; that's a good ſenſe; if my Adverſary doth write my faults indeed, I will bear his charge upon my ſhoulder, and take it patiently;

ently; I am ready to ſubmit, as to the dealings and chaſtenings of God, ſo to the reproofs of man. Job was far from thinking he could bear the guilt of his ſin upon his ſhoulder (he might as well bear the weight of the whole earth as of one ſin) only if found faulty or guilty he would quietly bear the blame. But if his Adverſaries Book ſhould be found a ſlander, and his integrity appear through all his accuſations, what then?

I would bind it as a Crown to me (ſaith he)

The word is plural in the Original; I would tie it for Crowns to me; So Mr. Broughton renders. Crowns are glorious things, they are the greateſt glory of this World, they are emblems of Soveraignty, or of higheſt Magiſtracy and Majeſty. I would bind it as Crowns. The leaves and lines of this Book ſhall be as ſo many Pieces and Jewels of my Crown, or as many Crowns ſet with precious ſtones. I would bind it to me as a Crown, or as Crowns.

But why doth Job ſpeak thus? Had he no ſin, no faults, that he ſaith, I would bind the Book as crowns to me? Did he think nothing could be written of him which he had cauſe to be aſhamed of?

I anſwer; Though as ſome men make Garments to cover their ſin, ſo others cover themſelves with ſin as with a Garment (Pſal. 73. 6.) and bind their ſin to them as a Crown glorying in their ſhame; yet Job was far from either of theſe ungodly tempers: Yea though he had lived like an Angel, yet he knew God might find juſt cauſe enough to charge him with folly. And therefore in this boaſting expreſſion, he only intimates his integrity, that he was neither a lover of ſin, nor a deſpiſer of goodneſs. Or when Job ſaith, I would bind it as Crowns to me, his meaning is only this, Though my Adverſary find out and hit upon my offences, yet I ſhall not be like a common malefactor or condemn'd offender; no, the very Book of my offences will be not only my defence, and clearing, but my honour and glory. All that can be charged upon any man muſt come under one of theſe three notions.

Firſt, Either it is falſe, and that which he never did, (Job's Friends had charged him with many things which he never did, with ſuch things as he never contributed ſo much as a thought or put a little finger to the doing of them) now that which a man is falſely charged with, he can eaſily (at leaſt in the ſight of God and of his own conſcience) diſcharge himſelf of. And that which at firſt was but a calumny, will at laſt be his Crown.

Secondly, Suppoſe the fact charged be true, yet if it be found ſuch as he hath been humbled for, and repented of, and turned from, and unfeignedly beg'd ſtrength againſt, it ſhall not turn to his ſhame. Sins hidden and continued in are our ſhame, and will be our confuſion, but ſins confeſſed and repented of, are our comfort and our Crown; we cannot take comfort in any ſin, though confeſſed and repented of; but we may take much comfort that to our knowledge we have no ſins, but ſuch as we have confeſſed and repented of.

Erit mihi ſcelerũ confeſſio pro corona. Pined.

Thirdly, If true, 'tis either pardoned or unpardoned. Job might ſay, let it be granted, that my Adverſary hath filled every page and line of the Book with ſuch ſins as I have indeed committed, yet they are all freely pardoned, God hath fully diſcharged me of them, and given me my (quietus eſt, or) acquittance into my boſome. Now then what though my Adverſary accuſeth me? what though he write a Book of accuſations againſt me? I have already accuſed my ſelf as much before God, and God hath forgiven me; there is an act of oblivion paſſed upon all my tranſgreſſions in the Court of Heaven; the Lord hath ſaid, that my ſins and my iniquities he will remember no more, then what do all theſe charges amount to? Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods Elect? It is God that juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died. Theſe challenges are univerſal; And though many have both charged and condemned the very elect for whom Chriſt died; yet if once a man hath confeſſed his ſin, and God hath forgiven his ſin, all the charges of men and Devils will be but ſlanders and unſeaſonable accuſations.

Thus Job might triumph over the man of contention, and ſay, whatever my Adverſary can write, is either what I have not done, or if I have done it, I have undone it by confeſſing it, and God hath undone it by pardoning it; the Lord hath taken away my ſin through the blood of the Covenant, and I know that I ſhall be juſtified. Upon this conſideration of Goſpel-grace, Job had reaſon enough to tell his Adverſary, that he would bear his Book of inditement upon his ſhoulder, and bind it to him as a Crown.

Hence Note, Firſt, Wrongful accuſations are matter of honour, rather then of diſgrace to the innocent.

There are two ſorts of wrongful accuſations; Firſt, When we are accuſed of thoſe evils which we never did. Secondly when we are accuſed for doing that which is good, as if it were evil; both or either of theſe accuſations are our Crown. It is ſaid in that Prophecy of Chriſt (Iſa. 50. 7, 8, 9.) The Lord God will help me, therefore ſhall not I be confounded, therefore have I ſet my face as a flint, and I know I ſhall not be aſhamed. Jeſus Chriſt had a Book written againſt him, but he could ſay, I know I ſhall never be aſhamed; and why? The reaſon is evident; There was not one word of truth in all the inditement brought againſt Jeſus Chriſt; he was charged with many groſs ſins, and called (as we ſay) all to naught. He was called a Glutton, a Drunkard, a Devil, a friend to Publicans and Sinners, but (ſaith he) I know I ſhall not be aſhamed, I ſhall have honour from and glory with God notwithſtanding all theſe accuſations. He is near that juſtifieth me, who will contend with me? Let us ſtand together, who is my Adverſary let him come near to me? Behold the Lord God will help me; who is he that ſhall condemn me? Lo, they ſhall all wax old as a garment, the Moth ſhall eat them up. Thus we ſee Chriſt had a number of accuſations heaped upon him, as if he had been the worſt of ſinners, but none of them could reach or touch his honour; for he had never toucht any ſin. And though all the ſins of his people were juſtly charged upon him (he having undertaken to be their Mediator, and to ſtand in the place of ſinners) yet he bare them with infinite ſtrength, and to the ſatisfaction of his Fathers juſtice upon his ſhoulder, and ſo bound them to him as his Crown. We find alſo how the Adverſaries of that faithful Prophet write a Book of ſlanderous reports againſt him (Jer. 20. 10.) I have heard the defaming of many (that is, many defaming me) report ſay they and we will report it, all my familiars, or (as the Hebrew hath it) every man of my peace watched for my halting (they are hungry for ſomewhat againſt me) ſaying, peradventure he will be inticed (we by ſome cunning inſinuation or other ſhall bring him into a ſnare, or within our danger) and we ſhall prevail againſt him, and we ſhall take our revenge on him. But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible one; therefore my perſecutors ſhall ſtumble, they ſhall not prevail &c. This was the Prophets confidence; he knew theſe were falſe reports, and would therefore be as Crowns upon his head, not a ſnare to his feet. The Saints in the primitive times made Crowns of all their accuſations, and gloried in thoſe things which their prophane Adverſaries accounted their ſhame and their crime. Their faults were made by their Enemies, not done by themſelves: Or they accuſed them of that which was not their fault but their glory. They charged that as ſin upon them which was their vertue, and their higheſt acting grace was all they had to diſgrace them with. And are not ſuch diſgraces our glory and our Crown? Chriſt hath pronounced all them bleſſed, and therefore honourable, who are thus diſgraced (Math. 5. 11, 12.) Bleſſed are you when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſely for my names ſake: Rejoyce and be exceeding glad for great is your reward in Heaven; That, to be ſure, is no leſs then a Crown, far greater and better then all earthly Crowns. To that Crown we muſt expect to paſs (as the holy Apoſtle did, 2 Cor. 6. 8.) by honour, and diſhonour, by good report, and ill report, as deceivers and yet true. If there be any truth in ill reports, they are dirt in our faces, and we have cauſe to be humbled under them; but if ill reports be falſe, we have cauſe to rejoyce in them, and they will be Crowns upon our heads.

Let me add theſe four good counſels about thoſe evil reports which may fall upon us. Firſt, If ill reports are true, then be humbled; Secondly, If falſe, be comforted:

Thirdly, If they have any thing of truth, or (not being altogether untrue) have ſome very ſimilitude or likeneſs to truth, then, 'tis good for us to ſearch our hearts and try our wayes more ſtrictly, whether (though we have not done the thing reported) we have not given juſt occaſion for ſuch a report; or (though we have not done that evil) whether we have avoided all the appearances of that evil which is reported of us. It was ſaid of a Virgin, She was chaſt indeed, but not thought to be ſo, becauſe ſhe was more wantonly attired then became a chaſt Virgin. Though we are not ſo ill as ſome ſuſpect, yet poſſibly we are not ſo good as we would be thought and ought to be; This ſhould be matter as of preſent humiliation, ſo of future caution. Fourthly, If we have not given ſo much as any outward occaſion of ſuſpition, yet we ſhall do well to enquire whether we have not ſome affection to and ſecret liking of ſuch ſins; this God ſometimes puniſheth by ill reports, and makes us ſee the undue wandrings of our own hearts, by the undue wandrings of other mens tongues concerning us.

Again, Seeing Job, though he had many ſins, and thoſe ſuch as his Adverſary might write a Book of, yet could bind the Book of his accuſations as a Crown to him.

Note, Pardoned ſins cannot hurt the ſinner; and though it troubles him that he hath ſinned, yet his ſins cannot trouble him.

He (ſaith the Apoſtle) who is once purged hath no more conſcience of ſin (Heb. 10. 2.) that is, though he knoweth he hath many ſins, yet he hath not a trembling, tormenting, accuſing conſcience becauſe he is purged and his ſins pardoned through that one ſacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt. This is the glory of the Goſpel: Free grace in Juſtification takes all our ſins off the file, as if they were not at all. Pardon is the blotting out of tranſgreſſions out of Gods Book, and if they are once blotted out of Gods Book, we need not care who writes them in their Book, nor what Books men or Devils write againſt us.

Laſtly, Seeing though Job had ſinned, yet he relieved himſelf with this, that he was upright, and had an aſſurance in his own ſoul, that he did not love his ſin, nor hide it in his boſome.

Hence Note, We ſhall never be put to ſhame for thoſe ſins which we do not love.

A little ſin loved will be not only our ſhame, but our ruine, whereas great ſins truely hated, ſhall be ſo far from ruining us that they ſhall not make us aſhamed. A ſin hid in the boſome, will one day make the ſinner hide his head; But he that knoweth, he hath no ſin in his boſome, may bear his ſin on his ſhoulder and bind it as a crown upon his head. He that is ſincere, is aſhamed of the leaſt ſin, but he ſhall not be put to ſhame for the greateſt; as it follows;

Verſe 37. I would declare to him the number of my ſteps.

'Tis queſtioned, who is meant by the Him to whom Job would make this declaration. Some refer it to God, and ſome to the Adverſary; the ſenſe is much one, whether to the one or the other. It ſhews much holy confidence, and a great teſtimony of a clear conſcience to be willing to make known the whole courſe of our lives to God or man. I will declare to him the number of my ſteps; As if Job had ſaid, I ſhould be ſo far from refuſing the Book written againſt me, though all the miſcarriages of my life were raked together and ſum'd up in it, that I am ready my ſelf to give an account of my whole life. I am ready to make a fuller confeſſion and declaration of my ſins, then my Adverſary can make againſt me. I would furniſh him with matter for his Book, beyond all that he or any man elſe knows of me; I would declare the number of Tantum abeſt ut eum reſpuerem, ut etiam eum adjuvarem, qui librum talem conſcribere inſtituiſſet adverſum me; omnia illa acta mea ſigillatim enumerarem. Merc.

My ſteps.] He means not corporal ſteps, but moral, the motions or actions of his life, whether in thought, word, or deed; theſe are our ſteps, and every act of theſe is a ſtep forward or backward, Heaven-ward or Hell-ward. So that when Job ſaith, I would declare to him the number of my ſteps; it is, as if he had ſaid, I would give him an account or a narrative of all that I have done in this world.

But can any man do that? We may more eaſily take the number of our ſteps in walking then of our hearts in thinking, of our tongues in ſpeaking, or of our hands in doing. How then could Job ſay, I would declare unto him the number of my ſteps, ſeeing they are innumerable?

I anſwer; We are not to nnderſtand it, as if Job would undertake to declare all his particular acts, or every thought, word, or deed, which had paſſed him all his dayes. But firſt, their kind, good and evil, or how he had moved in naturals, how in civils, how in ſpirituals. Secondly, When he ſaith, I would declare unto him the number of my ſteps; his meaning is, I would be exact in diſcovering the courſe of my whole life, even as if I had told every ſtep. Thirdly, When he ſaith I would declare to him the number of my ſteps, his meaning is not, that he would ſpecifie every one of them, but that he would not hid or conceal any one of them; many hide and cover their ſteps in ſinful wayes. It ſhall not be imputed to a man as ſin, that he is not able to remember all his ſins; but 'tis his ſin if he hide or ſeek to put a covering upon any of them. Thus Job would declare the number of his ſteps, and diſcover his life, even to his Adverſary; As if he had ſaid, When he hath written his Book, I will tell another manner of ſtory of my ſelf then he hath or can; when he hath ſaid as much as he can againſt me, I will yet freely ſay much more againſt my ſelf. I would declare to him the number of my ſteps.

Job kept an account of himſelf, and of all his wayes, and this is one of the beſt accounts we can keep. Many keep an account of their expences, and incomes; they know what goes out, and what comes in every year; but how few are there that keep account of their lives and converſations, of their thoughts, of their words and works, theſe paſs without account; though they muſt all be accounted for hereafter. And how ſhall we declare the number of our ſteps, if we keep not an account of them? 'Tis a great piece of the practice of godlineſs to put the Queſtion often to our ſouls, What have we done? The Prophet (Jer. 8. 6.) ſets forth the wickedneſs of that age, when no man ſaid, What have I done? What's my way? What my ſteps? What have I been ſpeaking? What have I been doing? Where have my thoughts been? Only they who have kept an account, are and will be willing to give an account. And how ſad will it be with them to be called to an account by God, who have never called themſelves to an account, nor conſidered how or which way to make it? A godly man knows he muſt declare his wayes to God hereafter, and he is ready (when there is cauſe) to declare them to his fellow-brethren here. He cares not (ſo far as is fit) who knows his whole heart and life. As every one ſhould be ready (1 Pet. 3. 15.) to give a reaſon of the hope that is in him with meekneſs, and godly fear; ſo to give an account of what hath been done by him, with the ſame meekneſs and godly fear. But how ſhall any man give an account of what he hath done; who keeps no account of what he hath done? David made a ſtrict ſearch of himſelf, both as to what he hath done, and what God hath done to him (Pſal. 77. 5, 6,) I have conſidered the dayes of old, the years of ancient times. I call to remembrance my ſong in the night; I commune with mine own heart, and my ſpirit made diligent ſearch; I ſearched my ſelf as with a Broom in my hand(ſo ſome render that Text) I ſwept my heart; or as others expreſs the Elegancy of the Original, I ſearched as with a Spade in my hand, I digged into my heart and life; or as a third gives the Alluſion, I ſearched as with a Fan in my hand, to find out what was chaff. He, ſurely, ſearched himſelf to purpoſe, who ſwept and dig'd and fan'd all his words and works, yea the very aims, ends, and intentions of all his works; and it was high time for him to do ſo, when the providences of God wrought ſo ſtrangely and unwontedly towards him, that he was put to thoſe trembling Queſtions (ver. 7.) Will the Lord caſt off for ever? Will he be favourable no more? 'Tis no time for us to favour our ſelves by a ſlothful non-animadverſion upon our wayes, when the favour of God and the light of his countenance begins to be over-caſt and clouded towards us. Then if ever we ſhould reſolve with the Church (Lam. 3. 40.) to ſearch and try our wayes, and turn again to the Lord. And as for the man, who (though he hath had his faylings) yet yet hath not perverſely turned from the Lord, he may ſay with an acceptable boldneſs (as Job did) I would declare to him the number of my ſteps;

As a Prince would I go neer unto him.

נציך

Dux quaſi anteſignanus.

The word ſtrictly ſignifies, a Leader or a Captain, marching before his company.

Some render, I would go neer to him as to a Prince; that is, I would beſpeak or intreat his favour, I would honour him as a Prince, or as ſome great one. Here again it is queſtioned, who is meant by the Him in the Text, to whom Job would go as if he were a Prince. Firſt, Some underſtand the antecedent to be the Adverſary, As if he had ſaid, I would go to him and ſhew him reſpect, even as if he were a Prince, though he be my Adverſary. Secondly, we may rather refer it to God himſelf; I would go to God and ſeek his favour. Men uſe ambitiouſly to ſeek the favour of a Prince; either of theſe references ſuit well with that reading.

Haberem eum ut principem virum etſi adverſarius. Merc.

But our tranſlation ſeems more ſutable to the ſcope of the Text; I as a Prince would go to him, that is, I would go, or apply my ſelf to the Almighty with a Princely ſpirit; I would not ſtand as a guilty wretch at the bar, unable or afraid to hold up my head; I would not ſtay till I was cited, and ſubpœna'd to appear by my Adverſary, but I would come freely of my own accord; as a Prince would I go neer him, or I would (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 4. 16.) come boldly to the throne of grace, with the freeſt and nobleſt ſtrain of ſpirit imaginable; As a Prince I would come

Quaſi princeps. i. e. animo liberrimo. Brent.

Neer to him.] Faith is our drawing neer to God, and the more faith we act in coming to him, the neerer we draw to him. As Princes we go neer to him by faith, that is, we have the cloſeſt and freeſt communion with him. Job would not keep at a diſtance from his Judge, as a malefactor doth, but as a Prince he would go neer unto him. There is abundance of Goſpel in theſe words; As a Prince would I go neer to him.

Hence Obſerve, A believer through grace hath courage and boldneſs, Princely boldneſs with God.

When men ſuſpect and charge him moſt and worſt, yet his faith and courage fail not. Solomon hath told us (Pro. 28. 1.) The righteous is as bold as a Lion, who is a King or Prince among all the beaſts of the field. 'Tis true of him that is righteous in his actions and perſonal qualifications, that is a man of righteous principles, and righteous in his practices hath much warrantable boldneſs, both towards God and man; but 'tis much more true of him that is righteous by the imputed righteouſneſs of faith in Juſtification, he, indeed, is bold as a Lion before God, and with God; not bold to ſin againſt him as many are, but bold to come and plead for and upon the pardon of ſin, through the blood and ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt. A juſtified perſon hath a principle ſpirit; David prayed (Pſal. 51. 12) Uphold me with thy free (or princely) ſpirit. When David had fallen into thoſe groſs ſins; his courage and ſpirit fell too; he wanted his former free acceſs in addreſſing to God; though he remained in the ſtate of ſalvation, yet he had loſt the joy of his ſalvation; therefore he prayed; Reſtore to me the joy of thy ſalvation, and uphold me with thy free ſpirit. As if he had ſaid, I could once as a Prince come neer to thee O Lord, but alas, now I cannot; my heart is ready to ſink, and my ſpirits to fail within me, O do thou uphold me by thy free ſpirit, which alone can make my ſpirit free, and cauſe me (as I have done formerly) to draw neer with a well grounded boldneſs and full aſſurance of faith. O that I might once again as a Prince go neer unto thee.

Hic ſe profert illa fidei πληροφορία quæ efficit ut freti Chriſti Juſtitia ſecurè inſultēt morti, peccato, Satanæ ipſiſq; inferorum portis. Merk.

Thus we ſee Job's princely freedom in going to God, and in that an evidence of Goſpel light and liberty breaking out even in thoſe times of darkneſs and bondage. The Jewiſh Church was ſubject to bondage all their dayes, yet ſome had much of the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, and none a more glorious liberty then this holy man (though a ſtranger to them) who even while his Adverſary was charging him, would go neer to God as a Prince, and challenge all thoſe who had any thing to lay to his charge, ſeeing he knew that God had Juſtified him; If God be for us, who can be againſt us? (Rom. 8. 31.)

Vides in Jobo maximam fiduciam planè conſentientē Evangelicæ parrheſiæ. Coc.

Laſtly, We may from Job's example take notice, that though we are not juſtified by the teſtimony of our conſcience; yet conſcience teſtifieth that we are juſtified, and we may riſe up to a holy confidence from Scripture-grounds by the ſpirit, that God accepteth of us in Chriſt, notwithſtanding our ſins, as alſo that he heareth our petitions, and will at laſt give us the white ſtone of abſolution, with the new name written in it, though the Adverſary write a Book of accuſation againſt us. The Popiſh Doctors deny that a juſt man may know that he is juſt or juſtified: Paul indeed ſaid (and ſo in effect did Job) though he knew nothing by himſelf, yet he was not thereby juſtified; but he never ſaid (nor did Job) that he did not know he was juſtified.

VERS. 38, 39, 40.

If my Land cry againſt me, or that the Furrows likewiſe thereof complain:

If I have eaten the fruits thereof without Money, or have cauſed the Owners thereof to loſe their life:

Let Thiſtles grow in ſtead of Wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barly: The words of Job are ended.

THis holy and juſt man had abundantly vindicated his own integrity by an Induction of many particular inſtances in the former part of the Chapter, and having put (as it were) a parentheſis, a little ſtop to the current of that point in the three former verſes; here he returns again to and re-aſſumes the ſame ſubject, purging himſelf (for that's the ſcope of this Context; which is alſo the concluſion of Job's diſcourſe) from all unjuſt oppreſſive wayes, either in getting or uſing the things of this world, by an expreſs imprecation of a grievous miſchief upon himſelf in the cloſe or laſt verſe; Let Thiſtles grow in ſtead of Wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barley, if it be not as I have affirmed.

Before I come to the opening of the words, take this note from the general purpoſe of them.

A godly man is very exact and curious in clearing himſelf from ſcandalous aſperſions and ſuſpitions.

As he deſires to be very circumſpect and accurate in his walking (that was Job's care) ſo he is very exact in vindicating the uprightneſs of his wayes; and when theſe two go together, they make a bleſſed harmony. Some are very careleſs in their walking, who are very zealous for their credit; they will be much in juſtifying themſelves, that either they have done well, or not done ill, when they have been negligent enough in well doing, or in taking heed leſt they do ill. But (I ſay) when a man hath been careful in his walkings and actions, he cannot be too careful in his own clearings and vindications. As a godly man will confeſs all his ſins to humble himſelf before God, ſo he may aſſert the utmoſt of his own integrity, that he may juſtifie himſelf and glorifie God before men. This good man in the Text was not afraid of over-doing in this point: He had formerly affirmed himſelf (God was his Witneſs) a man upright, and theſe his laſt words ſeal to the truth of the ſame affirmation, that he had walked uprightly.

If my Land cry againſt me.] The Word ſignifies Land in general, and yet more properly, manured Land, or Land prepared and fitted by dreſſing and manuring to nouriſh and bring forth Corn and Graſs, Plants and fruits, that is, Land well husbanded, till'd and dreſt. If my Land

Cry againſt me.] By a uſual figure in Scripture, acts of life are aſcribed to things liveleſs, and acts of reaſon to thoſe things which have not ſo much as ſenſe. To cry and complain, are acts of reaſon put out by them who are unreaſonably dealt with. Here we have crying and complaining aſcribed to Land, and to the Furrows of the Field, which neither know what man doth, nor are ſenſible of what man doth to them. This elegant proſopopœia is very frequent in Scripture; and tis alwayes uſed to note great cauſe given of crying or complaining. And here the attribution of a cry to liveleſs Land, ſhews the ſin of oppreſſion to be ſo crying a ſin, that even things without life would complain of it could they ſpeak, though the oppreſſed, who can, dare not. The cry of men againſt us is an argument that we have done much amiſs, but the cry of land, and of the Furrows of the field, argue it much more.

If my Land cry againſt me.] There is a twofold general ſenſe of theſe words in reference to the ſin which Job would purge himſelf from; when he ſaith, if my Land cry againſt me.

Firſt, They may import that he never got any Furrow or foot of Land into his poſſeſſion wrongfully, either by open violence, or by ſecret fraud and ſubtle enſnaring devices. Some will oppreſs by Law, that is, by colour of Law and pretenſions of equity; Job abhor'd that as much as down-right and bare fac'd oppreſſion.

Secondly, They may import, that he never uſed any unrighteouſneſs for the improving of his Land; tis poſſible for a man to have Land which is truely and legally his own, either by juſt deſcent and inheritance, or by valuable price, purchaſe, and good conveyance. And yet to uſe it ſo that his Land may cry againſt him, and upbraid him with unrighteouſneſs. Moſt conceive this latter ſenſe Job's intendment here, yet I ſee no reaſon why we may not very well take in both. As if he had ſaid; My Land hath not cryed againſt me as violently or cunningly wreſted out of the hand of the lawful proprietors, nor can my Land cry and complain againſt me, as having been unrighteous in the uſe of it, or in my dealings with others about it, whether Farmers to whom I have let it, or Labourers whom I have called to dreſs and till it. If my land cry againſt me,

Or the Furrows likewiſe thereof complain.] Not only his Land, but not the Furrows, that is, not ſo much as any one Furrow of it had cauſe to complain; the Hebrew is to weep. The word ſignifies to weep both for ſorrow and for joy, yet doubtleſs here, 'tis weeping for ſorrow (that only is accompanied with complaining) which Job denies he had given the Furrows of his field any occaſion for. I (ſaith Job) have not made the Furrows of my field a Bochim, a place of weeping, or (as we render) of complaining. Every juſt complaint ſuppoſeth ſome juſtice ſuffered by us, or ſome miſery fallen upon us. When, as David ſaith (Pſal. 144. 14, 15.) There is no complaining in our ſtreets, then we may conclude as he doth, happy is that people that is in ſuch a caſe; we may alſo well conclude, happy is that particular perſon, whoſe Land cryeth not againſt him, and whoſe Furrows make no complaining in his field.

From the words as they hold out in general that Job gave his Land no cauſe of crying, nor his Furrows of complaining;

> Obſerve, Firſt, Sin is ſo hateful a thing, and ſo burdenſome, that the ſenſeleſs Creatures will bear witneſs againſt it, and complain of it againſt evil men, if men do not.

There will never want a cry againſt ſinners; the very earth ſhall do it, the Furrows of the field ſhall do it, if it be not otherwiſe done. And they who do well acting juſtly towards men, and walking holily towards God, ſhall not want teſtimony of their well-doings? If men neglect or refuſe to give it, the very ſtones of the ſtreet ſhall give it. When Chriſt came triumphantly in Jeruſalem, the people ſpreading their garments in the way, and the whole multitude of Diſciples rejoycing and praiſing God for all the mighty works which they had ſeen, ſaying, Bleſſed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord, peace in Heaven and glory in the higheſt. This ſtirred the envious jealouſie of the Phariſees, they could not bear it, but deſired Chriſt to rebuke his Diſciples; to whom he replyed, If theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out (Luke 19. 39, 40.) As if Chriſt had ſaid; The ſpeech-leſs ſtones will ſpeak and give witneſs to me if men will not. They who are owned of God ſhall not one time or other, one way or other, want ownings or witneſſings from the creature. The Story, or Legend rather, tells us, That Bede blind with age, being brought by his Leader to a preaching-place, where there were no hearers, but a heap of ſtones; thoſe ſtones (Sermon and prayer being ended) cryed out, Amen venerable Beda; 'tis ſo in truth, with reference to thoſe that are good, and do good; if all the men in the world, if men and Angels be ſilent, and either forbear or diſdain to give teſtimony for them, The very ſtones will ſay, Amen, the Walls will bear them witneſs. So on the contrary, if a ſinner, an ungodly oppreſſor ſhould have none to implead or impeach him, none to give witneſs or teſtifie againſt him, the very earth ſhall do it, the Furrows of the field ſhall do it: God will raiſe up witneſſes againſt him, where and when he thinks it is impoſſible any ſhould be had. If man riſe up againſt the will of God, the creatures will riſe up againſt him as one man. The Prophet (Hab. 2. 10, 11.) makes a threatning report of a ſtrange Antiphony or Anſwerſong, in this caſe, or to the point in hand; Thou (meaning the covetous and ambitious Chaldean) haſt conſulted ſhame to thy houſe by cutting off many people, and haſt ſinned againſt thy ſoul: As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt ſinned greatly, and though thy ſin be againſt God chiefly as to the moral evil of it, yet thy ſin is chiefly againſt thy own ſoul as to the pœnal evil of it; Thou in the acting of thy outragious luſts, haſt hurt thy ſelf more then others, more then all the Nations whom thou haſt oppreſſed. And if there ſhould want witneſſes of thy ſinful oppreſſions (none daring to open his mouth againſt thee) yet the Stone ſhall cry out of the Wall, and the Beam out of the Timber ſhall anſwer it. Here are witneſſes without exception, Stones and Beams, Walls and Timber: Theſe are witneſſes that cannot be ſuborned to witneſs a falſhood, nor can they be ſilenced with bribes or promiſes of reward from witneſſing the truth. Theſe faithful witneſſes like Muſicians or Choriſters ſhall anſwer one another, from poſt to pillar, from ſide to ſide; one ſide that ſhall ſing, Behold blood, and the other ſhall anſwer, Behold deceit, the Stone ſhall cry, Behold covetouſneſs, and the Beam ſhall anſwer, Behold cruelty; the Stone ſhall cry, Behold oppreſſion, and the Beam ſhall anſwer, Behold perjury; the Stone ſhall cry, Behold envy, and the Beam ſhall anſwer, Behold malice. Thus inanimates ſhall cry and anſwer one another in their cry againſt wicked men, rather then there ſhall want a witneſs of their wickedneſs. Job ſuppoſed ſuch a thing, when he ſaid, If my Land cry againſt me, or the Furrows thereof likewiſe complain.

Secondly, from theſe words, Crying, Weeping, Complaining:

> Note, Some ſins are crying ſins, vocal ſins, which being done, ſay ſuch were the doers, and woe to the doers of them.

Every action hath its voice; The good we do commends us, and any ill we do reproves us, but ſome evil done cry out upon us, yea and out againſt us. The Prophet is charged by the Lord (Iſa. 58. 1.) Cry aloud and ſpare not, lift up thy voice like a Trumpet, ſhew my people their tranſgreſſion, and the houſe of Jacob their ſins. But though the Prophets do not cry at all; yet the ſins of a people will cry aloud, they will lift up their voice like a trumpet, and cry aloud againſt ſinners: The land will cry, and the Furrows will complain, though the Prophets ſhould prove dumb Dogs that cannot bark, or fauning Dogs that will not bite.

And conſider what ſort of ſins thoſe chiefly are, which cry to God, and againſt man.

Firſt, Such ſins as diſturb humane ſociety, and overthrow common ſafety, peace and liberty, are crying ſins. When a neighbour is ſo un-neighbourly, as not to let his neighbour live in ſafety by him, this cryeth; Cain's murder of his Brother was a ſin againſt mankind, or againſt the common converſe of man with man. If brethren of the ſame blood ſhed one anothers blood, who can be ſafe? There's no living in the world if the Laws of brotherhood and neighbourhood are ſo highly violated; therefore God himſelf told Cain; The voice of thy Brothers blood cryeth unto me from the ground (Gen. 4. 10.) Blood is the beſt and the worſt ſpeaker in the world. The blood which Chriſt our elder brother freely ſhed for us, ſpeaks peace and pardon; but the blood of a Brother violently ſhed by us, ſpeaks wrath and vengeance. When the Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 12. 24.) We are come to the blood of ſprinkling, that ſpeaketh better things, then that of Abel; His meaning is, not that Abel's blood ſpake any good at all, but that the blood of Chriſt ſpeaks incomparatively good or the beſt things for us, as the blood of Abel ſpake incomparatively bad, or the worſt things againſt Cain.

Secondly, Thoſe ſins which are committed with a high hand, that is, with impudence and boldneſs againſt the light of nature, are crying ſins (Gen. 18. 22.) The cry of Sodom (that is, the cry of the ſin of Sodom) is come up to me, ſaith the Lord. What was the ſin of Sodom, which made ſuch an out-cry to Heaven? It was the abomination of nature, Man burning in luſt towards man; Sodomy is the name and character with which that ſin hath gone and is branded to this day. The more voyces ſpeak againſt any ſin, the louder and the ſtronger is the cry of that ſin againſt us. That ſin which is condemned both by the voyce of the Law and of the Goſpel, both by the voyce of the Law of Nations and of nature; O how loud, how ſtrong a cry doth that make in the ears of God, do call down wrath upon the un-repenting ſinner!

Thirdly, Thoſe foul ſins which are committed in ſecret; ſo ſecretly that they are paſt finding out as to men (for as God hath his ways and judgments which are altogether paſt finding out; His ways are in the deep, his paths are in the Sea, his footſteps are not known; ſo we may ſay of ſome ſinners (in a degree) their path is in the Sea, and their footſteps are not known in the ways of wickedneſs: their ſinful motions are like the motions of the Eagle in the air, which leaves no track, or like that of a Serpent on a rock, which cannot be diſcerned) Now when a ſin which according to its nature falls under the Magiſtrates Cognizance, doth yet by its privacy eſcape both the cognizance and ſentence of man. when (I ſay) ſins are thus ſilently committed and wrapt up in darkneſs, when they are notſeen by men, nor confeſſed before God, then they cry to God, who alone can; and who certainly will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and Judg the ſecrets of men, or thoſe things which men have done amiſs in the greateſt ſecrecy.

Fourthly, The open ſins of ſuch perſons cry to God for Juſtice, whoſe perſons are (upon the matter) above the Juſtice of man. There's no dealing with ſome ſinners, as they break the rule of the Law, ſo they fear not the penalty of the Law. They are great offenders in every ſence; great offenders as to the hainouſneſs of their offences, and great offenders as to the eminence of their places; there is no coercing them by any human power. Now when the ſins of men are beyond the reach of mans Juſtice, they cry to God for Juſtice, who is able to humble the proudeſt, to cruſh the ſtouteſt, and deal with the ſtrongeſt tranſgreſſors, whoſe day is chiefly againſt the chiefs, againſt the Oaks and Cedars, againſt the high walls and towers, that is, againſt every offending perſon, how high or ſtrong ſoever he is.

All theſe ſins and ways of ſinning are ſaid to cry to God for vengeance upon ſinners, and are reſtleſs in their cry; yet, not, firſt, as if the Lord wanted an evidence of the fact till they cryed, or took no notice of them till theſe complaints informed him. Nor ſecondly, as if he needed excitation or awakning to do Juſtice upon ſinners, eſpecially upon great and preſumptuous ſinners; but only to ſhew the notoriouſneſs and provocation of thoſe ſins, which is ſuch that they beſpeak their own puniſhment, ſuch that God is bound in honour to brand them with ſome ſignal ſtroak of his diſpleaſure.

Thirdly, Conſidering that the ſpecial ſin here aimed at and profeſſed againſt by Job, is the ſin of Oppreſſion in one kind or other; either oppreſſion (as hath been ſhewed) by invading other mens lands, or oppreſſion in the unjuſt uſage of his own.

Obſerve, Oppreſſion is a notorious crying ſin.

That land or eſtate, which hath been gotten by unrighteouſneſs cryeth, or carryeth the cry of thoſe that have been wronged up into the ears of God, and beggs, yea ſolicits that he would do them right. As oppreſſion makes men cry and complain, ſo oppreſſion it ſelf doth cry and complain; when the oppreſſed ſit down mourning and crying, then oppreſſion cryes; And though the mouths of the oppreſſed ſhould be ſtopt, ſo that they cannot cry, yet the mouth of oppreſſion cannot be ſtopt from crying. And if the ſin of oppreſſion cry, how much more do the oppreſſed cry? If the land or houſe which is unjuſtly taken away, cryeth, how much more do they cry from whom theſe have been unjuſtly taken away? Thus oppreſſion cryes and the oppreſſed cry, and what with the one or t'other cry, or between both cryes, there's no end of crying, till the cry or continual clamour of that ſin come up with importunity, before God the righteous Judg, to whom vengeance belongeth, and who will ſpeedily avenge his Elect who cry unto him day and night, though he bear long with them (Luke 18. 7.) that is, though he delay that execution of the Judgment cryed for ſo long, that in mans account it be reckoned very long, and is long indeed conſidering how ſuddain and preſent a ſtroak, that oppreſſion deſerved. The oppreſſion of the people of God in Egypt cryed, and they cryed too; The Lord heard both the voyce of their oppreſſion, and their voyce who were oppreſſed (Exod. 3. 7.) And the Lord ſaid, I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my people, which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reaſon of their task-maſters; for I know their ſorrows. And as the Lord heard the cry of his people when they were oppreſſed by the Egyptians; ſo he bids them take heed of oppreſſing one another, for he would quickly hear the cry of any, eſpecially of the poor that ſhould be oppreſſed by them (Exod. 22. 22, 23.) Ye ſhall not afflict any widdow or fatherleſs child; if thou afflict them in any wiſe, and they cry at all unto me, I will ſurely hear their cry. There are three things in this monition which exceedingly heighten the ſenſe which God hath of any wrong done to the poor; Firſt (ſaith the Lord) If thou afflict them in any wiſe; that is, in any kind or in any degree; Secondly, If they cry at all unto me; that is, if they make any the leaſt moan or complaint to me; then, Thirdly, I will ſurely hear; the Lord doth not ſay peradventure or probably I may hear, but ſurely, or doubtleſs, I will hear; that is, make their oppreſſors ſmart for it.

Fourthly, Whereas the very land and the furrows of it are here brought in crying and complaining.

Note, The ſin of man is a burden to the ſenſeleſs Creatures.

As the ſin of man hath defiled the whole Creation, and made it ſubject to vanity (That's the Apoſtles doctrine, Rom. 8. 20.) ſo it is a vexation and grief to the creature, as the ſame Apoſtle tells us (Ver. 22. 23.) For we know that the whole Creation groaneth and travaileth (like a child-bearing woman) in pain together until now, and not only they but our ſelves alſo, who have the firſt fruits of the Spirit groan within our ſelves. They groan and we groan, the whole Creation groaneth, being ſubject to vanity (as abuſed and burdened by the luſt of men) and therefore waiteth for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God; that is, for that liberty which (according to their meaſure and capacity) they hope for and expect, when the full priviledges and dignities of the Sons of God ſhall be manifeſted; For then no mans land ſhall cry any more at all, nor ſhall the furrows of it complain; as Job here profeſſed his did not by any ſpecial unworthy carriage or dealing of his with it, or with men about it.

There are four things which may cauſe the land to cry, and the furrows of it to complain. Firſt, when it hath been gotten unjuſtly; Secondly, when ſervants are over-wrought in plowing and dreſſing it; Thirdly, when the labourer is denyed or delayed his wages; Fourthly, (which ſome inſiſt much upon in this place) when the land is over-much plowed and (as we ſpeak) haraſſed, never being ſuffered to reſt or lie fallow, but put continually or every year to the bearing of a crop, till the very heart of it be worn out. And therefore the Lord commanded the Jews (Levit. 25. 4, 5.) In the ſeventh year ſhall be a Sabbath of reſt unto the land, a Sabbath for the Lord; thou ſhalt neither ſow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. As the Sabbath day was a reſt from thoſe labours which God laid upon man for ſin (Gen. 3. 19.) ſo the Sabbath year was a reſt for the ground, which God had curſed for the ſin of man: in which God ſeems to intimate a tenderneſs to the very ground. We may conceive Job diſclaiming any or all theſe wrongs done to or about his land, while he ſaid; If my land cry againſt me, or the furrows likewiſe thereof complain; as it follows,

Verſ. 39. If I have eaten the fruit thereof without money, or have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life.

This verſe informeth us yet more particularly what it is which cauſeth the cry of the land, or the complaint of the ſurrows of the field. If I (ſaith Job) have eaten the fruit thereof without money. The Hebrew is, the ſtrength thereof. Thus Mr. Broughton Tranſlates ; If I ate her ſtrength without ſilver. And as this word ſignifieth Strength in general, ſo that radical moiſture or native humour wherein the procreative ſtrength of the Creature doth conſiſt: when the earth puts forth fruit, it puts forth ſtrength. One ſpecial curſe laid upon Cain for killing his brother Abel was (Gen. 4. 12.) When thou tilleſt the earth, it ſhall not henceforth yield unto thee her ſtrength; that is, it ſhall not be fruitful, nor anſwer (as it uſed) the expectation of the Husbandman. The earth lets out its ſtrength, or keeps it in, as the Lord gives order and ſpeaks the word; As the fruit of the ground, ſo the fruit of every thing is and ſhews the ſtrength of it. Sin is the fruit of corruption (the corrupt nature of man brings forth no other fruit) and when we ſin, what do we but ſhew the ſtrength or force of our corruption? and ſtill the more we ſin, the ſtronger and more forceable do our corruptions ſhew themſelves. When a godly man acts holily and is fruitful in good works, he puts forth the ſtrength of his inner man, the ſtrength of his Soul; every act of grace is an effect or fruit of the grace of God working in man. Jeſus Chriſt eats the ſtrength of a believers Soul, when he eats the fruit of his graces, or his gracious fruits, as the Church invites him to do (Cant. 4. 16.) Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleaſant fruits; that is, the fruits of Faith and Love, which thorow my abiding in him I bear and bring forth (theſe fruits are the delight, the pleaſure of Jeſus Chriſt) and we give Chriſt our ſtrength when we give him the fruits of holineſs, and are filled with thoſe fruits of righteouſneſs which (as the Apoſtles ſpeaks, Phil. 1. 11.) are by him (that is, by vertue of our union with and abiding in him) to the praiſe and glory of God. Thus, as by grace, the holy fruit of the Soul is the ſtrength of the Soul, ſo by nature the fruit of the earth is the ſtrength of the earth; and the earth beſtows her ſtrength upon us every year, when it brings forth fruit: which (as the Apoſtle told the heathen Lyſtrians, Acts 14. 17.) is a witneſs of the goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs. We (commonly) call fruitful ground, ſtrong ground, and that ground which is unfit for or yields little corn, or graſs, or herbs, we call weak ground: 'Tis more then probable that Job's land was ſtrong and fruitful land, and therefore he ſaith, If I have eaten the fruit (or the ſtrength) thereof

Without money,] without ſilver, ſaith the Text, becauſe ſilver was the moſt uſual money in all payments; Gold was more rare even in the days of Solomon (1 Kings 10. 21.) Money is ſo much in ſilver that all money may go under the common name of ſilver. Now when Job ſaith, he did not eat the fruit of his land without mony, or ſilver; His meaning is, that he had eaten nothing but what he paid for; or he aſſures us that he had not either,

Firſt, taken away other mens land by force or fraud (as Ahab took away Naboth's vineyard) and ſo eaten the fruit thereof without mony. They who intrude upon other mens rights and get their land into their hands without mony, are groſly guilty of eating the fruit of their land without mony; (Though indeed no man payeth ſo dear for what he eateth, as they who in this ſence, eat without mony) Or Job's meaning was,

Secondly, that he had not eaten the fruit of his land without mony, by refuſing to pay his ſervants and labourers, who were imployed to dreſs and manure it for his uſe. When they by whoſe labour and ſweat the earth brings forth, are denied their hire, wages, or a comfortable incouragement and valuable ſatisfaction for their pains; Then the owner of the land may be ſaid to eat the fruit of it without mony. This latter ſence, of eating without mony, is that, I conceive, from which Job here acquits himſelf by this proteſtation. Taking it for granted that the land was his own by right of inheritance or of purchaſe, yet he adds, If I have eaten the fruit thereof without money; that is, if I have cauſed others to take pains and bring in my fruits (that's not every mans work, Job was a great man and a Magiſtrate, it was not his buſineſs to till the ground, and gather in the fruits of it, he had ſervants to do that for him, but ſaith he, if others have brought in my fruits) and I have not paid them for their pains in doing it, and ſo have eaten without mony, let this be ſin to me, or let me feel the juſt ſmart and puniſhment of this ſin; let my beſt fruits and ſweeteſt meats have ſour ſauce, if I have been ſound or can be proved to have eaten my bread, or dipt my morſels in this unrighteouſneſs, the withholding from poor ſervants and labourers the wages of righteouſneſs. If I have eaten the fruit thereof without mony.

Hence Note, Every man ought to pay for what he eats; or, no man (who is able to pay for what he eats) ought to eat what he hath not paid for.

All the bread we eat is ſtolen bread, unleſs we pay ſome valuable price or other for it. There is a two-fold paying for what we eat, that we may eat our own (not ſtolen) bread, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in his counſel and direction about diſorderly walkers and buſie bodies (that is, Idle perſons) among the Theſſalonians (2 Epiſt. 3. 12.) Now them that are ſuch we command and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work and eat their own bread. This Apoſtolical command, ſhews us the Firſt way of eating our own bread; that is, when we take pains in perſon that we may have bread to eat; ſo the rule is given (Gen. 3. 19.) In the ſweat of thy face ſhalt thou eat thy bread, till thou return to the ground, that is, till thou dieſt, or as long as thou liveſt. That is truely our bread which we labour for in any honeſt calling; and he that payeth labour, payeth a great price for what he eats. Secondly, that bread alſo is our own, for which though we do not labour in kind, that is, in dreſſing and ſowing the ground, yet we labouring in ſome kind or other, that is, in ſome profitable trade or employment ſubſervient to the good of mankind, do either pay a due price for it unto thoſe of whom we have it, or pay thoſe a due price for their labour who get it for us, by dreſſing and ſowing our ground. So then, this is to eat our own bread, when we either labour our ſelves to get it, or recompence thoſe who get it, for their labour; we our ſelves alſo labouring as the providence of God calls us forth to be of uſe in our Generation.

Secondly, In that Job is thus ſolicitous to vindicate himſelf from taking other mens labour without ſatisfying them for it;

Obſerve, As all oppreſſion is very ſinful, ſo eſpecially the detaining of the labourers wages; or when we call men to do our work, but give them no reward.

If other mens labour feeds us, and we do not feed them for their labour, this is a great and a crying oppreſſion (Jer. 22. 13.) Wo to him that buildeth his houſe by unrighteouſneſs, and his chambers by wrong, that uſeth his neighbours ſervice without wages, and giveth him not for his work. As they build their houſes by unrighteouſneſs and by wrong, who get mony unrighteouſly with which to pay their labourers; ſo alſo do they who having mony righteouſly gotten, yet refuſe to pay their labourers. I will come neer to you in judgment, and I will be a ſwift witneſs (ſaith the Lord, Mal. 3. 5.) againſt the ſorcerers, and againſt the adulterers, and againſt falſe ſwearers, and againſt them that oppreſs the hireling in his wages. What this ſin is, and how highly provoking, we may ſee both by the ſins with which 'tis joyned, Sorcery, Adultery and Perjury, as alſo by the ſpeed which the Lord will make to declare and execute his wrath upon the practiſers of it. The Apoſtle brings it in with a word of attention and admiration (Jam. 5. 4.) Behold, the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which you have kept back by fraud, and the cryes of them which reaped have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabboth. Though the poor labourers durſt not complain openly, yet the hire kept back dares and will, as deſiring to go to him to whom it properly belongs. You have made the labourer ſweat at your work, and in giving you his ſweat, he hath given you his ſtrength and blood, and ſhall he have nothing for all this? will not this cry? 'Tis a baſe ſin covetouſly to keep our own, but to keep that which is anothers injuriouſly, to keep the labourers hire after we have ſuckt out his ſweat and ſpirits in doing our work, this is not only ſinful but inhuman. How great a Cruelty is it, when the earth and the labourer have as it were joyned together to give out fruit in abundance, That yet men ſhould be ſo penurious and baſe ſpirited as to eat that fruit without mony; and to devour the fatneſs and the ſweetneſs of it without conſidering their pains who brought it home. And as this is true of husbandmen who labour in the field and till the ground, ſo of all kinds of labourers in Towns and Cities of Commerce. They who drive great trades and have many labouring callings under them, ſhould take heed of eating the labours of poor handicrafts men without mony; Such often complain, they are ſo far from getting bread to eat (that is, things convenient and neceſſary for the maintenance of their charge by their work) that they cannot (as they commonly ſpeak) get water to waſh their hands. Trades bring forth fruit by labour as well as the earth doth, and to wrong or oppreſs any labourer by denying him a competent recompence for his labour, is to eat fruit without mony. 'Tis uſually ſaid, There's nothing cheap but poor mens labour. And remember that you eat the fruit of your trade or of your land without mony, not only firſt, when you altogether withhold the hire of the labourer, but Secondly when you do not give him proportionably for his labour, that he may live by you, and have ſome little incouragement, for himſelf, his wife and children; yea thirdly, the guilt of this ſin ſticks upon thoſe who are afraid poor labourers ſhould thrive or get ſome what aforehand by them. Such a one was Laban, of whom Jacob complained to his wives Rachel and Leah (Gen. 31. 7.) Your Father hath deceived me, and changed my wages ten times. Laban could not bear it, that Jacob ſhould have any thing about him, and therefore would be ſtill ſhuffling and altering with him. This is an argument of an oppreſſing ſpirit. And fourthly, the guilt and ſtain of this ſin is contracted when there is a deferring of the poor labourers reward, or when any unneceſſarily put off the payment of his wages. What the Scripture ſaith of giving in charity, is much more true of paying in juſtice, Say not to thy Brother, go, and come again to morrow when it is in the power of thy hand to do it. The Law among the Judicials of Moſes was very ſevere for the prevention of ſuch delays (Deut. 24. 14,15.) Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy ſtrangers that are in thy land within thy gates; at his day thou ſhalt give him his hire: neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor and ſetteth his heart upon it, leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord, and it be ſin unto thee; that is, leſt the Lord cauſe thee to ſmart for this ſin, and make thee feel it to be ſin in thy ſufferings, while thou wouldeſt not avoyd it by his warnings. That Law did not only forbid the utter denying of the labourers wages, but the detaining of it for a night. You may be found eating the fruit of your land without mony, when you unduely withhold (though but a mite) what is due to them who have laboured for it. Job it ſeems was ſo tender in this point that he could not eat a morſel of bread while he thought the labourer was unpaid. If I (ſaith he) have eaten the fruit thereof without mony,

Or have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life.

There is ſome difficulty in theſe words. Two things are chiefly enquired for the right underſtanding of them. Firſt, who are meant by theſe owners of the land. Secondly, what is meant by loſing their life.

The word which we tranſlate Owners, may be expounded three ways.

Firſt, Some take it, for the former poſſeſſors, or proprietors; As if Job had ſaid, I have not come to the poſſeſſion of my land by undoing and ruining thoſe that were rightly poſſeſſed of it.

Secondly, Others underſtand by owners the labourers, who having a right to the wages which they have earned by their work, are here called owners or Maſters of the land, becauſe ſo far as their labour comes to, they ought to have a livelihood out of it, as well as the proper owners or Land-lords.

Thirdly, Say ſome, theſe owners are the poor, the ſtranger, the widdow, and the fatherleſs, who alſo may be called owners of the rich mans land, becauſe a ſhare is due to them, as Solomon ſpeaks expreſly (Pro. 3. 27.) Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, we put in the Margin, The owners thereof, which cannot with any congruity of ſence be meant of thoſe who were legal and proper owners, becauſe 'tis clear (from the ſcope of the place) that the admonition is given to, not concerning ſuch owners; who yet ought to know that even the poor are owners and Maſters of a part with them, and that they ought not to deny them a part, when (as that Scripture concludes) it is in the power of their hand to do it; that is, when they have ſome overplus of eſtate by them, which they may (as occaſion offers it ſelf) expend upon charitable uſes. The poor have a right in charity to the poſſeſſions of the rich; and though when the rich will part with nothing to them, the laws of men ſhould take no hold of it, yet the law of God doth; that will certainly caſt and condemn ſuch narrow-hearted and cloſe-handed rich men as having unconſcionably with-held that relief from the poor which is their due.

Locupletes qui ſua mercede fraudant colonos (utcunq; ſit propria ipſorum terræ poſſeſſio) furti rei ſunt, non ſecus ac ſi ex alienis agris fructus aut vi aut fraude decerperent. Merl.

Indigentes vocantur בעלי טיב domini boni.

Now, when Job ſaith, I have not cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life, I conceive that the owners by him intended muſt be taken in ſome one of theſe ſences, and may ſafely be taken in them all; either for thoſe who were the former proper owners of the land, or for the labouring poor, or for the poor who were unable to labour. Job proteſteth himſelf clear (and ſo every juſt man will approve himſelf to be) from the oppreſſion or vexation of any of theſe, not only by not taking from them that which he had no right to, but by not with-holding from them that which was their due, either as having earned it by their work, or as being neceſſitated to ask it by their wants. If I have cauſed the owners thereof,

To loſe their life.] This latter clauſe may be taken two ways; Firſt, in a ſtrict ſence, for thruſting them out of the world by violence, and enſnaring them to death by ſome abuſed law, or Secondly, in a large ſence, It may note the putting of them to any grievous trouble or hardſhip. For they are as it were, deprived of their lives, who are deprived of the ſupport and comfort of their lives. The Hebrew word complies fairly with this expoſition, which ſignifies not only to expire or die, but to grieve and pine away while we live. The poor labourers livelihood comes in by his labour; and that which is a mans livelihood may well be called his life. Thus when Job ſaith, I have not cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life, he may be thus underſtood, I have not by troubling and vexing them, tired and worn out their ſpirit, nor made their lives bitter and burdenſom to them which had been a continual dying, and, in a ſort, the looſing of their life, while they had it. The people of Iſrael in Egypt, were as dead men, being continually oppreſſed by cruel task-maſters: and when they were in Babylon, their ſtate during that Captivity was preſented under the type of dead bones (Ezek. 37.) So then, when Job ſaith, he had not cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life, This loſs of life may be taken either ſtrictly, importing that he had not deſtroyed the life of any to get their eſtate; nor had he made the life of any ſad and ſorrowful by vexatious dealings with them, or denying them their right.

Iſta phraſis non tam mori ſignificat vel ſpiritum penitus emittere, quam inter labores ineluctabiles fere deficere & ſyncopen pati præ inedia.

Hence Obſerve, Covetouſneſs ſometimes concludes in murder, and is uſually accompanied with Cruelty.

The covetous quickly grow cruel, and as they make more of Gold and ſilver then they are (they make riches their god, and are therefore called Idolaters) ſo they make leſs of their brethren then they ſhould; they adore their Gold as if it were a god, and they abuſe their brethren, as if they were not ſo good as beaſts. Solomon ſaith (Pro. 12. 10.) A righteous man regards the life of his beaſt; that is, he will not work him unreaſonably, much leſs work him to death, and he will not deny his beaſt a reward when he hath done his work, but gives him fodder and food fit for him; but an unrighteous covetous man hath little or no regard to the life of his brother, but makes him work and will not allow him wherewithal to live, which (in effect) is the taking away of his life. We read how Covetouſneſs produced murder in kind in the caſe of Naboth; Ahab that he might take his vineyard, took away his life; as the Prophet charged him (1 Kings 21. 19.) Haſt thou kild, and alſo taken poſſeſſion? And covetouſneſs doth this often equivalently, afflicting and troubling the poor, till they either die with grief, or their lives are a dayly death to them. Remember Chriſts Admonition, Beware of Covetouſneſs. No man knows whither covetouſneſs will carry him; it hath ſet many down in blood; and while they have over-loved and over-valued the eſtates of other men, they have hated their lives, and ſplit their blood, like water upon the ground. The love of mony is the root of all evil, ſaith the Apoſtle (1 Tim. 6. 10.) Who can tell what gall and wormwood may ſpring from that bitter root both to himſelf and others? How baſely do many carry it (through covetouſneſs) towards labourers? how baſely towards ſervants? how baſely towards tenants? racking their rents and laying load upon them, till they periſh or expire, yea how baſely do many (through covetouſneſs) carry it towards themſelves; often denying themſelves (while they have abundance) the neceſſaries of this life, and ſometimes even letting themſelves die to ſave charges. Covetouſneſs is the root-ſin, which Job diſclaimeth, while he diſclaims all theſe acts of ſin. The forcing of his land to cry againſt him, and the furrows thereof to complain; his eating the fruits thereof without mony, and his cauſing the owners thereof to loſe their life; all theſe acts of cruelty and oppreſſion, were ſo much the abhorrence of his Soul, that in caſe he were guilty of any one of them towards man, he wiſheth his land might be burdened with this following curſe from God.

Verſ. 40. Let Thiſtles grow in ſtead of Wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barley.

Job makes a paſſionate and a rhetorical concluſion: This imprecation carries, in the very face and letter of it, a ſutableneſs to the ſin which he had diſclaimed. Nothing ſo proper to puniſh injuſtice in getting or ill uſing land, as an improper product of the land; and what can be a more improper product then for land to bring forth Thiſtles in ſtead of Wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barley.

Let Thiſtles grow, &c.] The word rendred Thiſtles, is ſometime taken in general for any ill weed, ſometime particularly for thorns (Cant. 2. 2.) As the Lilly among thorns, ſo is my love among the daughters. Thus again (Pro. 26. 9. Hoſ. 9. 8.) Theſe uſually grow in deſolate places (Iſa. 34. 13.) Thorns ſhall come up in her palaces; that is, her palaces being ruined and uninhabited of men, thorns ſhall root and ſhoot up there. We render it Thiſtles (2 Kings 14. 9.) The Thiſtle that was in Lebanon ſent to the Cedar that was in Lebanon, &c. Thorns and Thiſtles are troubleſom any where, but in Corn they are very hurtful. This curſe God laid upon the earth when man had ſinned (Gen. 3. 18.) Curſed is the ground for thy ſake, in ſorrow ſhalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; Thorns alſo and Thiſtles ſhall it bring forth to thee, and thou ſhalt eat the herb of the field. Job did as it were awaken and revive this ancient general curſe upon all lands, upon his own land eminently and conſpicuouſly, while he ſaid, Let Thiſtles grow חוח Septuaginta reddunt κνίδην urtica & alibi ἄκαν ut hic Symmachus ἄκανος Generale nomen eſt ſentium, quales in locis dirutis & derelictis adnaſci ſolet. Druſ.

In ſtead of Wheat.] As Thiſtles are reckoned among the worſt ſort of weeds, or are here put for all ſorts of weeds; ſo wheat is indeed the beſt of grains. The beſt bread (which is the ſtaff of mans life) is that made of Wheat. And when the Pſalmiſt would ſhew what excellent proviſion the Lord would have made for his people in caſe of their obedience, he gives it thus (Pſal. 81. 16.) He ſhould have fed them alſo with the fineſt, or (as our Margin hath it) with the fat of Wheat. So that Job wiſheth the worſt for the beſt, while he ſaid, Let thiſtles grow inſtead of Wheat;

And Cockle in ſtead of Barley.

The ſence is the ſame; the word tranſlated Cockle, ſignifies any ſtinking or ill-ſented weed, alſo ſour ill taſted grapes (Iſa. 5. 4.) We may take it here ſtrictly, properly, and in kind, (as we render) for that ſpecial weed ſo called, which grows often among Corn, or ſynecdochically, for any thing which hinders the fruitfulneſs of the earth, when ſown with uſeful ſeed. The plain meaning is, Let the land which I till deceive my hopes, let it never hereafter anſwer the pains, labour and coſt, which I beſtow upon it, let me ſow the pureſt Wheat in the ſpring, and let me reap Thiſtles at Harveſt, let me ſow good Barley, and let my crop be Cockle. Thus let the Lord deal with me, if I have given my land cauſe to cry againſt me, or the furrows thereof to complain.

Hence note, Firſt, The earth naturally yields that which is ſown; that's proper to the earth; If you ſow Wheat you ſhall have Wheat, if you ſow Barley you ſhall have Barley again.

Thus the Lord ſpeaks alſo in reference to moral ſeed by the Apoſtle (Gal. 6. 7.) Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap. All that we do, or all our works are like ſeed ſown; if our works be holy and good, we ſhall have a harveſt ſutable to them; if they are wicked, unjuſt, and unrighteous, we ſhall have an anſwerable return: in morals, what we reap is always like what we have ſowed. The Lord (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 2. 6, 7.) Will render to every man according to their works; to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath. And as in morals the harveſt is always like the ſeed-time, ſo in naturals the harveſt would always be like the ſeed-time did not ſin hinder it.

Hence Note, Secondly, Sin changeth the natural courſe of things; or, God to puniſh and chaſtiſe the ſin of man changeth the natural courſe of things.

As God is the efficient, ſo ſin is the meritorious cauſe of theſe changes; it was ſin which brought the firſt change upon nature; the earth (as created by God) had only a ſeminal vertue in it for the production of thoſe things which were good, uſeful, and profitable for man. That was it which God implanted in the earth, or (I may ſay) that was the general plant of the earth, A power to bring forth that which was good. But ſin (which is the worſt weed) being brought forth, God commanded the earth to bring forth bryars and thorns, and mixed our beſt fruits with weeds; And as that general curſe was laid upon the earth for the firſt tranſgreſſion of man, ſo when men multiply their tranſgreſſions, and dayly bring forth evil inſtead of good fruits, when their lives are full of bryars and thorns, of Cockle and thiſtles, they may look that God ſhould renew and heighten that curſe, and give them a crop of thiſtles in ſtead of Wheat, and of Cockle in ſtead of barley. We read how the Lord expoſtulated with his vineyard of old (Iſa. 5. 4, 7.) What could I have done more to my vineyard that I have not done to it? Wherefore, when I looked it ſhould bring forth grapes, did it bring forth wild grapes? What thoſe wild grapes were, the 7. Verſe tells us; When I looked for Judgment, Behold oppreſſion; for righteouſneſs, Behold a Cry. (That's the bad word in this Text, a Cry) Now (I ſay) when particular perſons, Churches or Nations diſappoint the Lords expectation thus ſadly, and when he having watered and dreſt them, proteſted and taken care of them, they in ſtead of Judgment bring forth oppreſſion, and in ſtead of righteouſneſs a cry; Then the Lord in Judgment may charge their vineyards to bring forth wild grapes in ſtead of grapes, and their fields to bear Thiſtles in ſtead of Wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barley. Look to it, as you would have an anſwerable return of any of your labours, or that the earth ſhould bring forth that which is ſown by the bleſſing of God upon it, or that any thing you take in hand ſhould proſper and produce a deſired effect (every man hath a ground to till, and a plow going, that hath a lawful calling, and every man is looking for a harveſt, now (I ſay) if you would not reap thiſtles in ſtead of wheat, and Cockle in ſtead of Barley (as the husbandman in the Country would not) let your actions be juſt and good, ſow to your ſelves in righteouſneſs, and you ſhall reap with rejoycing, whereas they that ſow the wind ſhall reap the whirl-wind.

Thirdly, Job in theſe words calls down a very great affliction upon himſelf, that he ſhould ſow wheat, and reap thiſtles, and have his barley return'd in Cockle.

Hence Obſerve, Not to receive the good we expect, is a ſore affliction.

To find thorns where we ſet them, or cockle where we have ſown it, doth not trouble us, but to ſee thorns grow where we ſowed wheat, is not only a loſs and a trouble, but a torment. It is a great burthen to the Lord when he miſſeth his expectation among men; when he looks for grapes, and we bring forth wild grapes, when he hath planted and watered his vineyard, then to ſee it unfruitful, or ill fruited, this is a provocation. If the Lord had let his vineyard lie undreſs'd (as Solomon ſaith of the field of the ſluggard, Pro. 24. 30.) it would not trouble him much to ſee it overgrown with Thorns, and the face of it covered with nettles (there are ſome of whom God looks for nothing but wild grapes, he doth not expect to gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thiſtles) But when a people are the plantation of the Lord, dreſt and manured by the preaching of the Goſpel, and the uſe of holy things, then the Lord is at once both grieved and provoked, if they are either barren of good fruit, or bring forth bad. Where the Lord ſoweth he looks to reap, and where he ſoweth much to reap much; muſt he not therefore be much troubled when he either reaps little or nothing where he had ſowed much, or nothing at all of that which he expected to reap, but the clean contrary? As to meet with changes for the better, or to have good come up in the place of evil, to have wheat for thiſtles and barley for cockle, doth exceedingly rejoyce the heart of man, (There are ſuch changes promiſed in Scripture, Iſa. 55. 13.) In ſtead of the thorn ſhall come up the fir-tree, and in ſtead of the bryar ſhall come up the mirtle-tree, and it ſhall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlaſting ſign that ſhall not be cut off. The Lord will ſo work for his people one day, that where there were none but bryars and thorns (the beſt of men in degenerate times have been as a bryar, and the moſt upright of them ſharper then a thorn-hedg, Mich. 7. 4.) ſuch as trouble and vex his people, there ſhall come up in ſtead of thoſe thorns fir-trees, that is, ſuch as ſhall be very uſeful, and in ſtead of the bryar a mirtle-tree, that is, a godly man ſhall be in place and power. Mirtle-trees ſignifie the people of God (Zech. 1. 8.) Chriſt was in the botom among the Mirtle-trees, (that is, with the Church) O how will this rejoyce the Saints when they ſee ſuch changes as theſe in the world! and ſuch they ſhall ſee: As the Prophet ſhews in another Allegory (*Iſa.*60.17.) For braſs I will bring Gold, and for Iron I will bring Silver, and for wood Braſs, and for ſtones Iron. I will alſo make thy Officers peace, and thine exactors righteouſneſs; that is, things ſhall mend beyond expectation, your changes for the better ſhall exceed your hopes. O how good is it to us when things grow better then we lookt for! And O how ſad is it to be looking for good, and to ſee all grow naught, or waxing worſe and worſe! Thiſtles in place of wheat, and cockle in place of barley; as they ſaid (Jer. 8. 15.) We looked for peace, and no good came, and for a time of health, and behold trouble. Theſe doleful words are expounded two ways. Firſt, ſome conceive them to be a rebuke of the peoples groundleſs expectation of good days, and a proſperous condition; As if the holy Prophet had thus beſpoken them; You may look for peace as long, and as confidently as you pleaſe, but I aſſure you, that ye only pleaſe or flatter your ſelves with vain hopes in doing ſo; for while you are thus bad no good will come, and while your ways and lives are not amended, the times will not, cannot mend; look alſo (if you will) for health or healing, that the preſent crazy ſickly ſtate of things ſhould recover ſtrength, and that your diviſions and breaches ſhould be cloſed and cured, but in this alſo you will find your ſelves diſappointed, for you ſhall behold nothing but breaking and dividing among your ſelves, till ye return and are reconciled unto God. This is a good ſence of the Text, though a ſad one to the people both of thoſe times and ours; Nor is the Second, any whit more comfortable, which (according to our Tranſlation) makes it the peoples complaint to or of their falſe and flattering Prophets. As if they had ſaid; We (having been often encouraged and warranted by you to expect ſpeedy deliverance) have long looked for peace and proſperity, but alas, how were we deluded and miſlead by you our leaders: for no good came, or good was not? and we looked as earneſtly for healing, but behold trouble; we ſee nothing to this day, but viſions of fear and amazement, nothing but tokens of ruin, and ſome haſtning deſolation. Thus to fall ſhort of or below our expectings, is the lengthning and heightning of our miſery. This miſery Job wiſht upon himſelf, that he ſhould not have what he had cauſe to look for, if he had willingly and knowingly cauſed any to miſs that which they might juſtly expect and look for at his hands; and having ſpoken this he gives over ſpeaking, ſo it followeth;

The Words of Job are ended.

Here's the end of this Chapter, the end of Job's large diſcourſe continued throughout the five fore-going Chapters, as alſo the end of his whole diſcourſe, debate, or diſputation with his friends.

The words of Job are ended.] There's a Queſtion ſtarted by ſome about theſe words, whether they are a part of that which by way of eminence above all writings we call the Scripture, or whether they were only added by the Tranſcriber of the Book, I will not ſtay upon the reaſons one way or other, but conclude in that opinion that theſe words are a part of Scripture. The words of Job are ended.

And 'tis conſiderable that the word here uſed ſignifies ending with perfection, or ending to purpoſe; As if it had been ſaid, Job hath now brought the matter to a full iſſue. In the firſt verſe of the firſt Chapter, God gave teſtimony concerning Job, that he was a perfect man, and now he ſaith, the words of Job are perfect; ſuch as the man was, ſuch were his words, he was a perfect man, and here are perfect words. For we muſt not take theſe words as noting only a bare Concluſion, here is an end of what Job ſpake. But Job having brought his matters to a good end, to a perfect iſſue, he breaks off his work (as it were) glorying and ſits down not only quietly, but triumphantly, his work (as to the truth of his caſe) being ſo well ended. The ſeventy ſecond Pſalm concludes in this form; The prayers of David the ſon of Jeſſe are ended. Not that David made no more prayers, or pray'd no more, but the perfection of prayer was recollected into that Pſalm; For there holy David having by faith, in Spirit, prayed for and about the glory of the kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt, (which is the buſineſs of that Pſalm) it might well be ſaid, The prayers of David the Son of Jeſſe are ended; they are Compleat, and wound up to the higheſt imaginable perfection of a prayer; ſo here, The words of Job are ſaid to be ended; that is, Job hath ſaid as much and as well for himſelf as could be ſaid, or as could be expected he ſhould ſay. And though he ſaid more afterwards (we ſhall find him ſpeaking twice more, to very great purpoſe before the Book ends) yet he never ſpake more in his own defence againſt what his friends had ſpoken; as to any ſuch ſpeaking, he had not a word more to ſpeak, nor did he ſpeak a word more; and therefore this concluſion well becomes his going off from this point under diſcuſſion. The words of Job are ended.

Thus (by the good hand of God with me) I have gone through a good part of my way and work, One and thirty Chapters of this Book have been opened in theſe expoſitory exerciſes, and publiſhed to the world. And though I am come to the end of Job's words, yet my work is not ended; There's more yet to be done. Behold Elihu entring the ſtage and acting a very great part towards the ſtating and moderating of this Controverſie; and when he hath done God himſelf begins and determins the matter fully and unqueſtionably; who though he gives ſome check to Job, yet he gives the Crown to him alſo; and determins the Controverſie for him againſt his three friends.

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations

UPON THE THIRTY-SECOND, THIRTY-THIRD, AND THIRTY-FOURTH
CHAPTERS
Of the Book of

JOB.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER, TO
Thoſe eſpecially of this CITY, who yet continue helpful towards this WORK.

SIRS,

YE have had (according to my poor meaſure) the whole diſputation between Job and his three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, explicated in Nine Parts already publiſhed; I now (through the bleſſing and good hand of God with me) preſent you with the Tenth; which indeed, without any deſign or pre-intent of mine, proves like the Tenth wave from the vaſt Ocean of this holy Book, ſomewhat bigger, and fuller, I cannot ſay (and 'tis my reproof having been ſo long converſant in this Book that I cannot ſay) ſtronger and better, i. e. more ſpiritual (which alone is the ſtrength of Scripture writings) then the former; but ſuch as it is (and that it is ſuch as it is, I own and humbly acknowledg the goodneſs of God in uſing me to do it,) ſuch as it is (I ſay) I freely tender it to your favourable acceptance, and dedicate it to the glory of God and the common good: knowing that it is both my duty and Intereſt to ſhew the ſmall improvement though but of one ſingle talent, rather then, either through ſloth or ſlaviſh modeſty to hide it in a Napkin.

In the prefatory Epiſtle to the Second part of this Book, there was an endeavour of a diſcovery concerning the diſtinct opinion of Job's three friends, as alſo of what himſelf held faſt and inſiſted upon all along in diſtinction from theirs. And now that I have done with all that was ſaid on both ſides by the diſputants, and am come to open the diſcourſe of Elihu, who appeared as Moderator to give a determination about the Great Queſtion, ſo long ventilated among them; it may ſeem ſomewhat neceſſary, and I am much perſwaded (if in any competency attained) it will not be unprofitable, to give the Reader a brief proſpect of what Elihu aimeth at and doth in this his large and accurate diſcourſe, continued in ſix Chapters throughout and divided into (beſides his General preface which takes up the whole thirty ſecond Chapter) four remarkable Sections.

Elihu is introduced by the pen-man of this Book in a great paſſion, both with Job and his three friends, and he gives us an account why he was in ſuch a heat of paſſion with both (Chap. 32. 2, 3.) Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu; againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he had juſtified himſelf rather then God. Alſo againſt his three friends was his wrath kindled, becauſe they had found no Anſwer, and yet had condemned Job.

It remains therefore, that Elihu was the man, who found an anſwer in this great difficulty and yet condemned not Job. And indeed he condemned him not (as his friends had done) as a man imperfect and crooked in his ways, as a man that feared not God and eſchewed not evil; In or for theſe things Elihu did not condemn Job, though his wrath was kindled againſt him: he condemned him only for this, becauſe he complained ſo much of the ſeverity of Gods dealings with him, and ſo, by conſequence juſtified himſelf rather then God. And in that point or for that fault he ſpared him not, but reproved him as ſharply and condemned him as deeply as his friends had done upon other and thoſe (moſt of them) undue and inſufficient grounds. Thus we read his cenſure of him (Chap. 34, 35.) Job hath ſpoken without knowledg, and his words were without wiſdom. And again (Chap. 35. 16.) Therefore Job openeth his mouth in vain, he multiplyeth words without knowledg; that is, without a clear knowledge of himſelf both as a creature and as a ſinner, as alſo of the deſign and purpoſe of God in afflicting him.

Now, beſides thoſe paſſages in the diſcourſe of Elihu wherein he chargeth Job*'s three friends with folly for condemning* Job when they could not anſwer him, and thoſe wherein he reproves Job*'s ignorance or want of knowledg, for wondring how ſuch great evils ſhould fall upon him, notwithſtanding his integrity, likewiſe his boldneſs or peremptorineſs in his own cauſe, juſtifying himſelf rather then God, yea and deſiring to plead his cauſe before him; I ſay beſides theſe paſſages, we at firſt reading might conclude that* Elihu did nothing elſe throughout theſe ſix Chapters, but enlarge or paraphraſe upon thoſe things, which had long before been ſpoken to by Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, and by Job himſelf as much as by any of, if not beyond all them three.

But upon further conſideration of the matter in the whole ſeries and contexture of his diſcourſe, we may collect two things, inſtanced in and inſiſted on by Elihu alone, upon which his particular opinion and ſentence is grounded in diſtinction from all the reſt. The clear underſtanding of which, will lead us to a fair ſolution or removal of thoſe doubts which ariſe about the Queſtion or matter in debate.

The two diſtinct points produced by Elihu, are, Firſt, about Revelation, or how God is pleaſed to manifeſt his mind and will to man. Secondly, about Mediation, or the means which God hath graciouſly afforded man to heal thoſe breaches, which ſin hath made between God and him, and ſo either firſtly, or afreſh to reconcile man again to himſelf.

The Former of theſe is handled (Chap. 33. Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17.) For God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, though man perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a viſion of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men: Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction, that he may withdraw man from his purpoſe, and hide pride from man. And thus, as it is ſaid in the Verſe following, He keepeth back his Soul from the Pit, and his life from periſhing by the ſword; that is, theſe ſpeakings of God are by the ſaving power and Spirit of God made effectual for his ſalvation both temporal and eternal.

The latter is handled in the ſame Chapter, beginning at the 23. Verſe to the end of the 30. If there be a meſſenger (or Angel) with him, an interpreter, one among a thouſand, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs: then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith, Deliver him from going down to the Pit, I have found a ranſom. His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs, he ſhall return to the days of his youth. He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable to him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy, &c.

Hence the opinion or determination of Elihu may be thus conceived.

That, notwithſtanding all the confuſions and diſorders which ſeem to be in the affairs of this world, the providence of God over mankind in general, and his great mercy towards the righteous in ſpecial, is ſeen moſt eminently in theſe two things.

Firſt, In that he inſpires them with the knowledg of Heavenly things, or acquaints them ſome way or other with his mind, both as to the meaning of what he doth to them, and of what he would have them do.

Secondly, In that he provideth and ſends them a meſſenger or Mediator both to inſtruct them in their duty, and to pray for mercy, and ſo conſequently to deliver them, when their Soul draweth neer to the Grave, and their life to the deſtroyers.

Both theſe gracious diſpenſations of God are proper to righteous men, or at leaſt appropriate to them in a peculiar manner; the righteous are the men for whom God provides a meſſenger or Mediator, and the righteous are the men whom God ſavingly and effectually inſpires with the knowledg of his will, in the things which concern both their preſent work and future reward. Neither hath Satan any power ſo to darken their underſtandings about thoſe great things as to make them miſcarry; and as for all his other miſchievous plots and practices againſt them, they ſerve to a clean contrary purpoſe then he intendeth, according to that moſt comfortable aſſertion of the Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 28.) We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.

Satan provoked God for a licence to heap outward calamities upon Job, in ſtripping him naked of his worldly ſubſtance, and in tormenting his body with grievous pains and ſickneſs; which latter Elihu proſecutes at large (Chap. 33. 19, 20, 21, 22.) He is chaſtned alſo with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain; ſo that his life abhorreth bread, &c. And what he ſpeaks of ſickneſs is applicable to any or all ſorts of affliction; in all which (as it is ſaid, Verſ. 27, 28, 29, 30.) God looketh upon men; and if any ſay, I have ſinned and perverted that which is right, and it profiteth me not; he will deliver his Soul from going into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light. Lo, all theſe things worketh God oftentimes with man, to bring back his Soul from the pit, to be enlightned with the light of the living.

From theſe premiſes we may collect both what is proper to the righteous; and that, in whatſoever is common to them with the wicked, there is neither diſorder nor confuſion. For though the beſt of the righteous are lyable to the ſame outward evils which the worſt of the wicked are, yet their condition is not the ſame; ſeeing to the wicked thoſe evils are purely puniſhments; and but the beginning of thoſe ſorrows which ſhall never end; whereas to the righteous they are either but chaſtiſements for ſome ſin already committed, or medicaments to prevent the committing either of the ſame, or of ſome other ſin. And as for thoſe who by ſuch chaſtnings are brought to a ſight of their ſins and forſake them, their Souls are (by this means, Verſ. 30.) brought back from the pit to be enlightned with the light of the living.

This point is yet more fully and plainly proſecuted by Elihu in the thirty-ſixth Chapter; where he informeth us, how ſufferings are differently to be conceived of according to a threefold difference of the perſons ſuffering. The firſt and chief, is of thoſe, who are truely righteous and keep cloſe to God in righteous ways. The ſecond is of thoſe who being righteous in their ſtate have fallen foully in their way, with whom we may alſo reckon ſuch as are yet in an unrighteous ſtate, yet ſhall be and at laſt are converted and brought home to God. The third is of thoſe who perſevere and obſtinately continue in their wicked ſtate and ways, ſtopping their ears, and hardning their hearts, both againſt inſtruction and correction.

Elihu ſeemeth to put all theſe together (Verſ. 5, 6.) Behold God is mighty and deſpiſeth not any, he is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom, he preſerveth not the life of the wicked, but giveth right to the poor. More diſtinctly,

He ſpeaks of the firſt (Verſ. 7.) He (that is, God) withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: But with Kings are they on the Throne, yea, he doth eſtabliſh them for ever, and they are exalted.

He ſpeaks of the ſecond ſort (Verſ. 8, 9, 10, 11.) And if they be bound in Fetters, and holden in the Cords of affliction, then he ſheweth them their work and their iniquity, that they have exceeded. He openeth alſo their ear to diſcipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity, &c.

He ſpeaks of the third ſort (Verſ. 13, 14.) But the Hypocrites in heart heap up wrath; they cry not when he bindeth them; they die in youth, and their life is among the unclean.

Theſe three ſorts of men are dealt with by God according to their kind. The laſt of them being altogether wicked and incorrigible, abide under wrath for ever.

The ſecond being in an evil ſtate, or having done that which is evil, yet humbling themſelves (through grace) and being bettered by their afflictions, are uſually reſtored to a proſperous eſtate in this life, and in caſe they dye under affliction, are alwayes crowned with the bleſſedneſs of eternal life.

The Firſt ſort, walking conſtantly (humane frailties excepted) in their uprightneſs, are not only preſerved in peace, but receive high favours and ſpecial marks of honour from the bountiful hand of God; which is true, eſpecially according to the condition of thoſe times, wherein God did more engage himſelf to his faithful Servants in promiſes of temporal happineſs, then now he doth in Goſpel times.

And yet even theſe, as now they are not, ſo then they were not always exempted from ſufferings; for as the ſecond ſort of righteous men are often afflicted in a way of chaſtiſement for their ſins; ſo the Lord reſerves to himſelf a liberty (his Soveraignty allowing it) to afflict the beſt and holieſt of his Servants for the trial of their graces, or the magnifying of his own grace to them and in them; as a Maſter of Heroick Arts and Games impoſeth a very laborious task upon his Scholar-Champion, not as a puniſhment of any default, but to confirm his ſtrength and exerciſe his valour.

The due conſideration of all theſe things laid together by Elihu, might well ſatisfie Job, and ſuſtain his faith in a patient bearing the burden of all thoſe calamities, which the Great and moſt wiſe God was pleaſed to impoſe upon him, and likewiſe convince him that he had failed much in giving out ſo many impatient complaints about them. And no doubt they prevailed much with him, both towards his conviction, and the quieting of his heart under thoſe diſpenſations; For we hear no more of him in that language.

Yet Elihu thought he had not done enough, but continueth his diſcourſe, and draweth a further demonſtration for his purpoſe, from the wonderful works of God in nature, from the rain, thunder, ſnow, winds, &c. Which he doth from the 27. Verſe of the 36. Chapter, to the end of the 37. and with that concludes his anſwer.

The ſcope of Elihu in that long and learned Philoſophical Lecture was to teach and aſſure Job, that, God who cauſeth and diſpoſeth thoſe various alterations and terrible impreſſions in the air, both for the humbling and benefiting of man, doth much more both ſend and over-rule all thoſe changes and afflictions which befal the ſons of men, here on earth, to humble them and do them good. And further to aſſure him, that if man be not able to give a ſatisfying reaſon of thoſe works of God in nature, but is often gravel'd and forced to ſit down in a ſilent admiration; then ſurely man is much leſs able to fathom the depth of Gods purpoſes in all the works of his providence, but muſt in many of them only ſit down quietly and ſubmit; For (as Elihu concludeth from theſe premiſes (Chap. 37. 23, 24.) Touching the Almighty we cannot find him out, he is excellent in power and in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice he will not afflict, (either cauſeleſly or more then needs, though we ſeldom ſee the cauſes or acknowledg the need of his afflictions) men do (that is, they ought) therefore fear him; and if any are ſo proud and high in their own thoughts that they do not, at their peril be it, for) he reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart; that is, as the carnal wiſdom of wotldly men cannot be a bar, ſo the true wiſdom of godly men is no priviledg againſt the Soveraign power of God in afflicting them. And therefore Job, though truely wiſe in heart, muſt not look for any ſuch reſpect from God as to be untoucht by or priviledg'd from affliction.

For the cloſe of all, we may ſum up the whole ſcope of Elihu*'s under taking with* Job, yea of the whole Book of Job in theſe ſix points or propoſitions.

Firſt, No man can ſtand before God in his own perſonal righteouſneſs.

Secondly, How righteous ſoever any perſon is, yet the Lord may afflict and break him in what way and in what degree himſelf thinks fit.

Thirdly, God hath moſt wiſe and gracious aims in afflicting his righteous ſervants.

Fourthly, His moſt righteous ſervants may not take the liberty to complain as if they were wrong'd, or as if God were either rigorous or unrighteous in the leaſt, how much or how long ſoever they are afflicted.

Fifthly, There is nothing gotten by complaining or ſtriving under the afflicting hand of God; and therefore,

Sixthly, 'Tis beſt for us or our wiſeſt way when things are at worſt with us to give glory to God both as juſt and good, and (poſſeſſing our Souls with patience) by faith to wait in hope, till he giveth us a freſh experience of his goodneſs, either by ſweetning our troubles to us, and ſupporting us under them, or by bringing us out of them (as he did Job) in the fitteſt ſeaſon.

If in peruſing this diſcourſe of Elihu we carry theſe general reſults in our eye, we ſhall read both the Text and Comment with more clearneſs in our underſtandings at all times, and with more profit (when at any time under them) in our chaſtenings, which, that we all may is the prayer of

Of the Book of
JOB.

CHAP. XXXII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

So theſe three men ceaſed to anſwer Job, becauſe he was righteous in his own eyes.

Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the Son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram; againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

Alſo againſt his three Friends was his wrath kindled; becauſe they had found no anſwer, and yet had condemned Job.

The laſt Chapter ended with theſe words, The words of Job are ended; the beginning of this tells us his three Friends had ended theirs. So theſe three men ceaſed to anſwer Job: Thus we have had the whole diſpute between Job and his three Friends: Now followeth the determination of it. The Diſputants having done, the Moderators begin; Firſt Elihu, and after him God himſelf. Elihu ſpends ſix whole Chapters in delivering his mind upon this Controverſie; yet he makes ſome pauſes and overtures, moving or inviting Job to a reply. But Job interpoſed not a word.

We may conſider this whole diſcourſe of Elihu in four diſtinct parts; the firſt contained in the thirty-ſecond, and thirty third Chapters; the ſecond in the thirty-fourth; the third in the thirty-fifth; and the fourth in the thirty-ſixth and thirty-ſeventh Chapters of this Book.

In the firſt part he directeth his ſpeech; Firſt, To Job's three Friends, in this thirty-ſecond Chapter; Secondly, To Job himſelf in the thirty-third.

In this Chapter we may conſider, Firſt, A rational tranſition from the diſpute between Job and his Friends: to this diſcourſe of Elihu, in the five firſt verſes; Secondly, We have a very Rhetorical pathetical Preface, wherein Elihu endeavoureth to gain attention by giving an account, or the reaſons of his undertaking, in which he interweaves many Apologies for himſelf, in venturing upon ſo hard a task, reſpecting both his youth, and the weight of the Argument. He amplifies and continueth upon this ſubject to the end of the thirty-ſecond Chapter; wherein he engageth himſelf by ſolemn promiſe to carry on the buſineſs without reſpect of perſons, without fear or flattery.

Yet more diſtinctly in this firſt part, The tranſition; Firſt, A reaſon is aſſigned why Job's Friends left off ſpeaking. As it is not good to begin to ſpeak, ſo neither to give over ſpeaking, till we ſee and can give a reaſon for it: The reaſon here given, is, becauſe Job was righteous in his own eyes (ver. 1.) Secondly, A reaſon is given not only why Elihu did begin to ſpeak, but why he began to ſpeak as he did, in anger; Firſt, Againſt Job, which is laid down in the ſecond verſe, Becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God: Secondly, Againſt his Friends (ver. 3.) Becauſe they had found no anſwer, yet had condemned Job, or, becauſe they cenſured him, though they could not confute him. In the fourth and fifth verſes we have a diſcovery of the cauſe of Elihu's modeſty in forbearing ſo long to ſpeak, which he further inlargeth in the following parts of the Chapter.

Verſe 1. So theſe three men ceaſed to anſwer Job.

They who had maintained the diſpute all this while, ceaſed, reſted, or ſate down. When men ſpeak they uſually ſtand up or ſtand forth. The word in the Hebrew may be rendred thus, They ſabbatized, implying they had found it a week of hard work, and ſtrong labour in dealing and tugging with Job: And now as if their ſeventh day or Sabbath were come, they ſate down and took their reſt. Speaking, eſpecially arguing and diſputing with a knowing and reſolved Adverſary, is tough work; and they who have been at it to purpoſe, may for very wearineſs have cauſe enough to reſt or take their Sabbath; ſo did theſe three men, they ceaſed or ſabbatiz'd from anſwering Job.

Verbũ ipſũ שבת indicat contentionem & defatigationem diſputationis præteritæ & ingentem vim poſitam in repugnando & refutando. Pined.

We may yet further enquire, why did they ceaſe? Firſt, Some men ceaſe to anſwer, becauſe they have no more to anſwer. Secondly, Others ceaſe to anſwer, becauſe they ſuppoſe they have anſwered enough already, and will anſwer no more. Some ſay the former was the reaſon why Job's three Friends ceaſed to anſwer, they had no more to anſwer: Others take the latter, that they had no mind, no will to give any further anſwer. But the Reaſon expreſſed in the Text (which ſhould ſatisfie us and ſuperſede further Queries) is,

Becauſe he was righteous in his own eyes.

As if it had been ſaid, Becauſe they ſaw they had done no good upon him, Job kept his ground and maintained his ſtanding, he diſputed every inch with them, and yielded not an inch; as they found him at firſt, ſo he was at laſt, they ſaw him a man immovably ſet down in his own purpoſe and opinion, and therefore, becauſe they could get nothing by ſpeaking, they would ſpeak no more. 'Tis but loſt labour (as we ſay) to waſh the Blackmore. The conſtancy and warmth of Job in defending himſelf they judged obſtinacy, and a humour to oppoſe, or but the ſwelling of a proud ſpirit; whereas indeed it was the love of truth, not of contention, a zeal to do himſelf right, not to do them wrong, which cauſed him ſtill to hold up the Bucklers, and adhere ſo ſtiffly to his own opinion. Thus deſpairing to convince or bring him to an acknowledgment, that he was unrighteous, They ceaſed

Becauſe he was righteous in his own eyes.] That's ſuch another form of ſpeaking (Prov. 3. 7.) Be not wiſe in thine own eyes: As alſo that (Prov. 26. 12.) Seeſt thou a man wiſe in his own conceit, there is more hope of a fool then of him. You may eaſier reduce a man that is indeed ignorant, then him that thinks himſelf very wiſe, or knowing, but is not. This was the apprehenſion of Job's Friends concerning him, He was a man (thought they, and ſo they ſaid) righteous in his own eyes.

There are three ſorts of righteous perſons: Firſt, Such as are righteous in the eyes of God, and ſo the godly are under a twofold notion: Firſt, As being pardoned for, or juſtified from their unrighteouſneſs, through faith in Chriſt, bleſſed are they who are thus accounted righteous in the eyes of God. Secondly, They are righteous, as avoiding unrighteous, and doing righteous things. There is a ſeed, a principle of righteouſneſs in perſons juſtified and regenerated, which daily puts it ſelf forth in righteous actings; He that doth righteouſneſs is righteous (1 John 3. 7.) He is ſo, both as to his ſtate, and as to his actions, in the eyes of God and good men.

Secondly, Many are righteous in the eyes of men, they have fair appearances and out-ſides; you can read nothing amiſs in their converſation, yet they are unrighteous, yea, altogether unrighteous in the eyes of God, yea, and poſſibly in their own too; they cannot but ſee their own wickedneſs, though they can conceal it from the ſight of others. Hypocrites are like painted Sepulchres, fair without (as Chriſt ſpake of the Phariſees) but within full of rottenneſs. They ſeem that to men which God ſeeth they are not; they can ſhew their beſt ſide to, and hide their worſt from men, but they cannot play this game with God; he ſeeth their beſt is bad, becauſe it is but the covering, not the hating, not the mortifying of that which is bad.

Thirdly, there is another ſort who are righteous in their own eyes; ſuch Solomon deſcribes (Prov. 30. 12.) There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not waſhed from their filthineſs. Theſe have a great opinion of themſelves; they think all is right and well with them, when indeed they are filthy and unclean, their hearts being yet unchanged, though their wayes are ſmoothed; and though they may have left off to do many filthy things, yet they are not waſhed from their filthineſs. The Text in hand puts Job into this third ſort of righteous men. But was it thus with him? I anſwer; Firſt, Job was a man righteous in the eyes of God, in both the notions mentioned; he was righteous as juſtified, and righteous as ſanctified. Secondly, Job was a man righteous in the eyes of many men; for he ſaith (Chap. 29. 11.) The ear which heard me bleſſed me; and the eye which ſaw me gave witneſs to me; yet Job had not an univerſal teſtimony given by men; there were ſome, I cannot ſay many, in whoſe eyes he was unrighteous; he was ſo in the eyes and opinion of his Friends eſpecially. Though none could, as to the eye, tax Job with any unrighteouſneſs, no not they who doubtleſs had ſifted his life to the bran, yet his Friends thought him unrighteous, and he ſtood judg'd as unrighteous in their eye.

As for the third ſort of righteouſneſs, that of being righteous in our own eyes we muſt diſtinguiſh; Job was indeed righteous in his own eyes in a good ſenſe, and that under a twofold conſideration: Firſt, As not having committed any groſs or ſcandalous act of wickedneſs, as he profeſſed at large and with much confidence in that apology and vindication which he made for himſelf in the Chapter foregoing; where he calls down the ſevereſt judgments of God upon himſelf, if he had done ſuch things as he was ſuſpected of, eſpecially if he had defiled himſelf with thoſe common pollutions of the world, wantonneſs, injuſtice and oppreſſion. Job ſtood upon it that he was thus righteous. Secondly, Job was righteous in his own eyes, as to the allowing of himſelf in any the leaſt ſin or unevenneſs, either of heart or life; thus much his proteſtation or imprecation amounts to in the thirty-third verſe of that Chapter, If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſom: As if he had ſaid, I have not lived in the love of any ſin whatſoever. Thus Job was righteous in his own eyes, proteſting to God and before men, that as he was not ſcandalouſly wicked in any kind, ſo he was not cloſely nor hypocritically wicked; every ſin was his burden, and the abhorrence of his ſoul. In any other ſenſe Job was far from being righteous in his own eyes; he never either ſaid or thought he had done no evil, or was altogether ſinleſs, like white paper without blot or blur; yea, we very often find him confeſſing his ſins and failings (Chap. 7. 20.) I have ſinned; What ſhall I do unto thee, thou preſerver of men? He maketh a like acknowledgment (Chap. 9. 2.) I know it is ſo of a truth, but how ſhall man be juſt with God? If he will contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand. Again (ver. 20.) If I juſtifie my ſelf, my mouth ſhall condemn me: If I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe. And while he affirms the general viciouſneſs of nature, he muſt needs imply his own (Chap. 15. 14.) What is man that he ſhould be clean? And he which is born of a woman, that he ſhould be righteous? Behold he putteth no truſt in his Saints, yea, the Heavens are not clean in his ſight, how much more abominable and filthy is man? In this univerſal concluſion he includeth himſelf, therefore Job was far from being righteous in his own eyes, in any proud opinion of his own righteouſneſs or freedom from any ſtain of ſin. So much for the opening of thoſe words, containing the reaſon why his Friends ceaſed to anſwer, Becauſe he was righteous in his own eyes.

It was the deſign of theſe three men not only to convince Job that he was a ſinner, but to bring him upon his knees as a notorious ſinner; and yet all their Allegations and Arguments could not bring him to it; My righteouſneſs (ſaid he, Chap. 27. 6.) I hold faſt, I will not let it go. Now, when they ſaw him thus reſolved and ſtiff in maintaining the goodneſs of his cauſe, and the integrity of his ſpirit, they quitted the buſineſs, or as the Text ſaith, Ceaſed to anſwer.

Hence Note, We ceaſe to do, when we cannot attain our end in doing.

Impoſſibiliū nullus eſt conatus.

When we ſee it is in vain to perſwade, we give over perſwading; deſpair of working our end, puts an end to our working. Induſtry is at a ſtand, yea withdraweth, when impoſſibilities appear. And though nothing be impoſſible unto God, yet we find God himſelf giving over both ſpeaking and ſmiting when he ſeeth he is like to do no good by either. Thus he expreſſeth his purpoſe (Iſa. 1. 5.) when he had ſpent many rods of ſore judgments and afflictions upon that people, when he had ſtricken them, till from the crown of the head to the ſole of the feet they were nothing but a continued wound, and yet they received not correction, he preſently reaſons thus, Why ſhould ye be ſtricken any more, ye will revolt more and more: As if he had ſaid, The end why I ſmote you was to amend you, to bring you home to my ſelf, to cauſe you to turn back, or return from your evil wayes; but I ſee I have loſt my labour, and ſpent not only my rods but my ſcorpions in vain upon you, therefore I will ceaſe from this kind of work, why ſhould ye be ſtricken any more, ye will revolt more and more? And when God hath ſpoken long to a people who regard it not, he ceaſeth to ſpeak any more, but ſaith, Why ſhould ye be taught any more? Let the Prophets tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth, let him be dumb and ſilent, as the word is (Ezek. 3. 26.) Thou ſhalt be dumb, and ſhalt not be a reprover (why?) for they are a rebellious houſe. After all thy ſpeaking they continue rebelling, therefore ſpeak no more. We read the like dreadful prohibition (Hoſ. 4. 4.) Let no man ſtrive nor reprove another (let all wayes of reclaiming this people be laid aſide) for thy people are as they that ſtrive with the Prieſt: That is, They are obdurate and deſperately ingaged in wickedneſs (Hoſ. 4. 17.) Ephraim is joyned to Idols (he cleaveth and ſticketh faſt to them, he will not be pulled from his own inventions) let him alone. Thus God ſaith to his Prophets and Miniſters ceaſe; he ſaith to his Ordinances, ceaſe, when ſinners will not ceaſe to ſin and do wickedly againſt the Lord. The ſame unprofitable and incorrigible people are threatned in the ſame manner by another Prophet (Amos 8. 9.) It ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord God, that I will cauſe the Sun to go down at noon. And (ver. 11.) I will ſend a famine in the Land; not a famine of bread, but of hearing the word of the Lord. God would ſtop the raining down of heavenly Manna, and the people ſhould not hear, becauſe they would not. Such was the ſentence of Chriſt againſt the Jews (Matth. 23. 37.) O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, thou that killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them which are ſent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy Children together as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, but ye would not? What follows this refuſal? Read and tremble (ver. 38.) Behold your houſe is left unto you deſolate, for I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth, &c. As if he had ſaid, Becauſe ye have been ſo unteachable, therefore ye ſhall be taught no more. It is ſad, when we give God occaſion to give over either ſpeaking to us, or afflicting us. God will not alwayes ſtrive with the unwillingneſs, much leſs with the wilfulneſs of man; nor will men be alwayes doing that to men, which they ſee doth them no good. So theſe three men ceaſed, &c.

Secondly, Hence Note, When men are obſtinate and will not be reclaimed, it is good to give over.

Why ſhould they who in any kind are abſolutely reſolved, be further moved? (Acts 21. 14.) When Paul's friends ſaw he would not be perſwaded, they ceaſed: They had uſed much perſwaſion to keep him from going up to Jeruſalem, becauſe of the ſufferings that were propheſied ſhould befal him there; yet when he ſtood out, in an holy obſtinacy againſt them, cloathed with a gracious ſpirit of courage to ſuffer for Chriſt, When he would not be perſwaded they ceaſed, ſaying, the will of the Lord be done. As it was the height of Paul's holineſs, that he would not be perſwaded, he was obſtinate for Gods cauſe, or for the doing of a duty; ſo it is the height of many mens wickedneſs that they will not be perſwaded, they are obſtinate againſt God, or againſt the doing of their duty: Such as are infected with the luſt of contending, will maintain that opinion pertinaciouſly, which they cannot maintain truly. As ſome ſtrive for the love of victory, rather then of truth; ſo others ſtrive becauſe they love ſtrife even more then victory, and had rather contend then conquer, becauſe that puts an end to ſtrife. In ſuch caſes they do beſt who do no more: And if Job's caſe had been ſuch, if he had held up the diſcourſe, not for truth but for victory, or becauſe he would have the laſt word, like a clamorous Sophiſter, who hath alwayes ſomewhat to ſay, though nothing to the purpoſe; in that caſe, I ſay, Job's Friends had done wiſely in ceaſing to anſwer; they indeed did well upon their own ſuppoſition, though as to the truth of Job's condition they failed greatly. Job was not a man of that ſpirit. He that perſiſts in holding and defending truth, is not obſtinate, but conſtant.

Further, as to the ground why they ceaſed, according to their ſuppoſition, Obſerve, To be righteous in our own eyes is hateful both to God and good men.

A man is never ſo vile in the eyes of thoſe who can diſcern him, as when he is righteous in his own; how righteous ſoever any man is, he ſhould be little in owning it. To inſiſt much upon our own righteouſneſs, ſavours rankly of a Phariſee (Luke 18. 9.) Chriſt ſpake a Parable to this purpoſe (that's the title of the Parable, ver. 9.) And he ſpake this Parable unto certain which truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others. Then follows the Phariſees boaſt of his faſting twice in the week, &c. And when the Text ſaith (ver. 14.) The Publican went down to his houſe juſtified rather then the other; it doth not imply that the Phariſee was at all juſtified, but rather that being righteous in his own eyes, he was under a ſad ſentence of condemnation [illegible] the eyes of God. The meaning is not, that the Phariſee was ſomewhat juſtified, and the Publican more; but that the Phariſee was not juſtified at all. It is our duty to follow after righteouſneſs, but our ſin to boaſt of it (Matth. 5. 3.) Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit. The more poor we are in ſpirit, the more rich we are in ſpirituals. Poverty of ſpirit is directly oppoſite to our being righteous in our own eyes. Chriſt came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance (Matth. 9. 13.) By the righteous there we are to underſtand thoſe that are righteous in their own eyes, thoſe that have high thoughts of themſelves: The ſinners whom Chriſt calls to repentance are the poor in ſpirit, though indeed the righteous in their own eyes are the greateſt ſinners. As we never do worſe, or more againſt right, then when we do that (as it was ſaid of that ungovern'd age, Judg. 17. 6.) which is right in our own eyes; ſo we are never worſe, then when we are righteous in our own eyes.

From the whole matter of theſe words, we ſee, that as Job's Friends had been miſtaken all along in that which they ſpake, ſo now in the reaſon of their ceaſing to ſpeak; which was a ſuppoſal that Job was righteous in his own eyes.

Hence Obſerve, There is nothing more common then for men to miſtake and miſ-judge one another.

Job's Friends concluded him ſetled in a proud conceit of his own righteouſneſs, becauſe he conſtantly denied their charge of unrighteouſneſs. Some impoſe an opinion upon their brethren which is not theirs, and make them ſay that which they do not affirm: How injurious is this? Yea, ſome miſ-judge the word of God as well as the words of men. They wreſt the Scriptures (2 Pet. 3. 16.) They make the Scripture ſpeak that, which the holy Ghoſt never intended. It is dangerous to ſtrain the word of a man, much more the word of God. The former proceeds from a want of charity, but the latter is a great impiety. There could not be a more unrighteous thought conceived of Job in any mans heart, then that he was (as his Friends thought him) righteous in his own eyes; yet thus they thought him, nor would they think otherwiſe of him, let him ſay what he would to the contrary. So much of the firſt verſe, which giveth us a reaſon why Job's Friends ſate down and ceaſed to anſwer; His being (as they judged him) righteous in his own eyes. In the next verſe Elihu gives out a ſeverer Judgment againſt him then this; To be at all righteous in our own eyes (according to the ſenſe intended) argues a man to be both very blind and very proud, but for a man to be ſo righteous in his own eyes, as that he dares juſtifie himſelf rather then the moſt righteous God, argues not only blindneſs and pride, but pride and blaſphemy: Yet thus ſaith Elihu of Job, as it followeth.

Verſe 2. Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu, the Son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram; againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

Here comes in the fourth Speaker, as a Moderator or Determiner of this great Diſpute; and he begins, much unlike a Moderator, in a heat.

Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu.

Novus hic eſt diſputandi actus, nova etiam argumentandi forma, tanto ſubtilior, quanto magis in ſeipſam reflexa. Nam videtur argumentari (ut logici loquuntur) quaſi ad hominem, ex ipſis Jobi verbis & dictis. Pined.

It is very common for men to grow hot in diſpute; but for a man to begin his diſpute with an heat, that's very ſtrange: Many have been all in a flame upon a little diſcourſe; but to be in a flame upon the entrance of a diſcourſe, is a thing almoſt unheard of. Yet thus it was with this man.

Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu] The Hebrew is, His noſe or noſtrils were angry. The Metaphor is taken from Horſes, Bears, Lions, Bulls, or any furious Creatures, who ſend forth fumes of wrath or anger at their noſtrils. The blood at the heart of an angred angry man is inflamed, and he, as it were, breaths out fire and ſmoak at his mouth and noſtrils. Elihu came in a flame to this buſineſs.

How unceſſant were the oppoſitions of Job! No ſooner had thoſe three men ceaſed ſpeaking, but a fourth riſeth up to ſpeak. The good man found no reſt; his three Friends had their Sabbath, they ceaſed or reſted from the diſpute, but Job was at week-day labour ſtill, attending the words of this angry Moderator. Mr. Broughton renders, The anger of Elihu was in choler. Anger is hot, but his anger was heat, or, at leaſt, his anger was heated, yea, it was not only heated as at the fire, but kindled like a fire.

Philoſophi iram ζέσιν αἵματος faciunt, ſpiritus affectuū inſtrumenta ſunt: ut res phantaſiæ imprimitur, iræ ſpiritus commovetur ad habendam vel depellendam. &c.

Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu.] Anger is a fire; and (as Solomon ſaith) Can a man take fire in his boſom, and not be burned? So I may ſay, Can a man carry anger in his boſom, and not burn himſelf, if not others with it? And as fire is blown up by bellows, ſo is anger by provocation. The anger of God is expreſſed in a heat (Deut. 29. 24.) What meaneth the heat of this great anger? (ver. 20.) The anger of the Lord and his jealouſie ſhall ſmoak againſt that man, And (Pſal. 2. 12.) If his wrath be kindled but a little, &c. The leaſt ſparklings of it are terrible. The anger of God is a moſt dreadful fire; and the anger of man hath much dread in it. We have need to look to our paſſions. Fire is good but it muſt be kept in its due place; fire on the hearth, fire in the chimney is good, but fire in the roof, or among the houſhold-ſtuff conſumeth all. There is (as I may ſay) an hearth for anger where it will do no hurt. Then was kindled the wrath

Of Elihu the Son of Barachel.] There are many queſtions about this perſon among the learned; it would be too great a diverſion, and poſſibly an unprofitable one to ſtay upon them. We have him here deſcribed, Firſt, By his name. The Hebrew Etymologiſts ſay, This proper name Elihu ſignifieth, He is my God, or my God is he. And as he is deſcribed by his name, ſo by his nativity or parentage; Elihu the Son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram.

His Fathers name Barachel, ſignifies in the Hebrew, One whom God hath bleſſed, or, the bleſſing of God. The Sons name was, My God is the Lord. And the Fathers name was, The bleſſing of God, or, one whom God hath bleſſed. We may note a piece of holy devotion in the old Fathers, in giving ſignificant names to their Children. And ſurely it may be of much uſe to give our Children good and ſignificant names, ſuch names as carry a remembrance of duty, or of mercy. When Alexander the Great, met with a common Souldier whoſe name was Alexander, he ſaid to him, Be ſure thou do nothing unworthy the name of Alexander. His name had a great encouragement in it to gallantry in war. And it is noted of Diadumenus, that having obtained both the Empire and the name of Antoninus, he ſaid, I will labour all I can, that I may not be injurious to the name of the Antonines. This ſhould be much more our care and ſtudy, where holineſs makes the name honourable; John ſignifieth the Grace of God; and, as I remember, it is the ſaying of one of the Ancients, concerning a bad man ſo called, Thy name is John, but thou art not John; thy name ſignifieth grace, but thou art not gracious. Ambroſe ſaid to the Virgin Agnes, or Anne, There is chaſtity in thy name, do not contradict thy name. So Jerome writing to Pammachius, which name ſignifieth a fighter againſt all, Do thou (ſaith he) fight againſt all ſin, againſt the Devil, the world, and thy own corruption. The ſame Author writing to Melecius, which ſignifies, Honey ſweetneſs, Have thou (ſaith he) the ſweetneſs of Honey in thy manners. And to Probus he writes, Thy name ſignifieth honeſty, Then be thou an honeſt man. The Apoſtle exhorts (2 Tim. 2. 19.) Let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. It is a great argument, ſeeing all who profeſs the Goſpel are called Chriſtians, from Chriſt, that therefore they ſhould adorn that moſt worthy Name by worthy walking. And let me ſay to all thoſe whoſe names ſignifie any thing of God, of Grace, or Goodneſs, ye have a good and gracious name, let not your actions be a reproach to God, nor a ſhame to the profeſſion of his grace. A good heart will make a good uſe of every thing, and is provoked to have more then a name for that grace or goodneſs which is in his name, even to be really that which his name is. How ſhould an Elihu, whoſe name ſignifies He is my God, labour after this holy aſſurance, that God is his? How ſhould a Barachel, whoſe name ſignifieth the Bleſſing of God, be alwayes praying and waiting for the bleſſing of God, or returning praiſe to God (both in heart and life) for all his Bleſſings? Elihu the Son of Barachel Ego curabo ne deſim nomini Antoninorum.

The Buzite.] Here Elihu is deſcribed by his family, as before by his Father. The Buzite, that is, coming from Buz. Yet there is a difference about that; ſome ſay he had that name from the place where he dwelt; we read (Jer. 25. 23.) of a place called Buz. Others ſay, he was called the Buzite from the name of his family; as he deſcended from Buz the Son of Nahor Abraham's Brother (Gen. 22. 21.) Milcah hath born Children unto thy Brother Nahor, Huz his firſt born, and Buz his Brother. Maſter Broughton is clear in it, who gives this gloſs upon the Text, Elihu the Buzite, of Buz, Abraham*'s Brothers Son, of the family of* Ram, famous then for knowledge. Rebecca and Jacob ſeem to have left Religion in Nahor*'s houſe*. Thus far he. Jerome ſaith, Elihu was deſcended from the ſecond Son of Milcah, whom the Septuagint call Bauz, from him was Balaam the Sorcerer, who according to the Tradition of the Jews was this Elihu ſpoken of in the Book of Job, at firſt, an holy man and a Prophet, but afterwards an Apoſtate. But I leave that as a Rabbinical Tradition.

Hieron. in tract. Heb. ſuper Geneſin.

Apparet, quod ſicut Eliu dicitur Buzitis quia originem traxit ex Buz; ita dicitur de Ram ratione maternæ originis. Melcha enim mater Buz fuit filia Aram unde & 70. loco Ram legunt

We have yet a further deſcription of Elihu in the Text, Of the kindred of Ram, of the family or poſterity of Ram. Who this Ram was is much controverted by Interpreters; nor is the controverſie yet ended who this Ram was. Some ſay he was that Ram ſpoken of (Ruth 4. 19.) but it is not likely, that he was ſo ancient as Job, or if he were, he would not leave the Iſraelites (from whom Pharez was deſcended) to dwell among the Edomites. Others ſay he was that Aram mentioned (Gen. 22. 21.) But neither doth this appear true; for then Elihu could not be a Buzite, but muſt draw his line from Kemuel the Brother of Buz.

The Chaldee Paraphraſe tells us, he was Abraham. And to clear this 'tis ſaid (as our own learned Annotators have given it) that he had a threefold gradation in his name: Firſt, He was called only Ram, which ſignifieth high: Secondly, Abram, which ſignifieth A high Father: Thirdly, Abraham, which ſignifieth the high Father of a multitude. But, upon which to determine I conceive it impoſſible, nor is there any great matter in it. Only this ſeems clear, that the family of Ram was ſome great and illuſtrious family in thoſe times; and we may take notice how diſtinct and punctual the Penman of this Book was in deſcribing the pedegree of Elihu. And there may be two reaſons why the Spirit of God directed him to be ſo; Firſt, Becauſe he was but a young man; and therefore as Saul (1 Sam. 17. 56.) when he ſaw David a young man, he asked after his parentage, Enquire whoſe Son this ſtripling is: I would fain know his kindred. So the kindred of Elihu is thus diſtinctly ſet down, that he, who by reaſon of his youth was little known as to his perſon, might be the better known by his Anceſtors, or Parentage.

Aram. Proinde ſicut tres reges viſitaverant Job cauſa amicitiæ, ita Eliu cauſa cognationis, de qua vendicavit ſibi in Job pluſculum audacioris licentiæ. Janſon. Quis iſte fuerit, quærunt interpretes, Gramatici certant, & adhuc ſub judice lis eſt. Druſ. Neutri ſententiæ accederem, ſed Ram alium quempiam fuiſſe putarim virum celebrem & clarum ex familia Nahor. Merc.

Secondly, His Parentage is thus diſtinctly ſet down, to aſſure us, that this is a true Hiſtory; for ſome have made the whole Book of Job to be but a Parable, aſſerting there was no ſuch real thing. But this one paſſage gives an undeniable proof, that this was a real Hiſtory, and the matter really acted. This perſon being deſcribed by his own name, and his Fathers name, and the next of his kindred.

From the conſideration of the perſon who carried on ſo great a part in this buſineſs, Elihu the Son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram, who was of a ſtrange Country, and if allyed to Abraham, yet at a great diſtance;

> We may obſerve, God did preſerve a ſeed of Religion, and of holy men to maintain his truth among thoſe who lived in dark places, and were wrapt up in many errors and ſuperſtitions.

This was alſo noted from the firſt words of this Book, There was a man in the Land of Uz: A man of gracious accompliſhments, and of a heavenly light. Here alſo was Elihu the Buzite, a man that had great knowledge about holy things (as we ſhall ſee afterwards) in thoſe parts and times when and where abundance of darkneſs, blindneſs, and ignorance reigned.

Having thus deſcribed Elihu, the Hiſtorian proceeds.

Againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

In the former part of the verſe it is ſaid, Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu; not ſpecifying againſt whom, nor the cauſe why; here he doubles the ſame words, with an addition, firſt, of the perſon with whom he was angry, Againſt Job was his wrath kindled. And as he tells us the mark or object of his wrath, ſo he gives, ſecondly, the reaſon of it, Becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God. Before I come to the explication of this latter branch, take theſe two brief Notes.

> Firſt, A godly man in maintaining a good cauſe, may give juſt reaſon of anothers paſſion or anger.

Job was a good man, and his cauſe was good, yet you ſee a wiſe and a good mans wrath is kindled. Paul and Barnabas were two good men, yet a difference aroſe between them (Acts 15. 39.) And the contention was ſo ſharp between them that they departed aſunder.

Secondly, Conſidering the cauſe of this anger in general, Becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God; we ſee it was an anger for Gods cauſe.

> Hence Note, Anger for God or in the cauſe of God is holy anger.

Though for the moſt part the fleſh or our carnal corruption is the cauſe of anger, and it begins at ſelf; yet ſometimes it is ſtirr'd in the cauſe of God. It is ſaid of Moſes, the meekeſt man on earth (Numb. 12. 3.) that when he ſaw the idolatry of the people (Exod. 32. 19.) His anger waxed hot; He was ſo angry, that he caſt the Tables of the Law which God had written with his own hand, out of his hand and broke them. It is ſaid (Mark 3. 5.) Jeſus Chriſt looked about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts: He alſo expreſt a great deal of zealous anger (John 2. 15.) When he made a whip of ſmall cords, and drove the buyers and ſellers out of the Temple. Some of the Hebrews tell us, that the word here uſed for anger, ſignifieth anger carried out to the deſtruction of ſin, and that is a very gracious anger. There are two things which exceedingly declare the holineſs of a mans ſpirit. Firſt, When he can patiently bear loads of evil and wrongs in his own cauſe, or which have but a private reſpect. Secondly, When he is ready to take fire in the cauſe of God; many dull and ſluggiſh ſouls can hear God abuſed, and their ſpirits ſtir no more then a ſtone; Elihu was angry, but it was in the cauſe of God; or, Becauſe Job juſtified himſelf rather then God. When we are angry with ſin, we are angry (as the Apoſtle adviſeth us to be) and ſin not. That's anger without ſin, when we are angry with ſin; and are ſtirred up to oppoſe and ſuppreſs the pride and inſolency of mans ſpirit or ſpeeches againſt God: To be angry for our own honour, and intereſt, or Gourd, is an argument of undue love to ſelf. When God ſpared Nineveh, the Prophet was exceeding angry (Jon. 4. 1.) But his was ſinful anger, becauſe he was angry for his own ſake, fearing to be called a falſe Prophet; he ſet himſelf down to ſee what would become of the City, that he might have a perſonal glory, and he cryed up for a Prophet indeed. And when God had ſmitten his Gourd, he was angry, and angry unto the death (ver. 8.) and all becauſe he miſſed that which pleaſed himſelf. Many can be angry when they themſelves are diſcredited; but when diſhonour is caſt upon God, or his intereſt ſlighted, how quiet and tame, how cold and dull are their ſpirits! The anger of this man was a noble anger, as to the occaſion and riſe of it, *Job*s ſelf-juſtification, or

Becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.] This is a high point, and may juſtly provoke our anger: Elihu was not angry with Job becauſe he juſtified himſelf againſt his Friends, but becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

Here a Queſtion will ariſe, and it will ask ſome pains to determine it: Was this true? Did Job juſtifie himſelf rather then God? Was it poſſible Job ſhould do ſo? I ſhall give only a general anſwer to this Queſtion; Job did not juſtifie himſelf rather then God, either explicitely, or intentionally, but by conſequents he did. And though it be granted that Job gave juſt occaſion of this ſharp reproof by his raſh and paſſionate ſpeeches, uttered in the heat of diſpute, and in the grief of his heart, yet it cannot be denied that Elihu did ſomewhat ſtrain Job's words, though not beyond their ſenſe, yet beyond his ſenſe, and gave them the hardeſt interpretation (ſomewhat beſide the rule of charity) which they could bear; nor did he obſerve that meekneſs and moderation which might well have become him, to a man in that caſe. O how hard is it not to offend or do ill, while we are doing well!

To clear this a little further, conſider, There is a twofold ſtraining of words; Firſt, Beyond the ſenſe of the words ſpoken: Secondly, Beyond the ſenſe of the Speaker. I do not ſay, Elihu, in affirming this of Job, ſtrained his words beyond their ſenſe, but he ſtrained them beyond Job's ſenſe. Job ſpake words which might lay him under this cenſure, that he juſtified himſelf rather then God; but this was far from his intention; for doubtleſs he had rather a thouſand times his tongue ſhould have been cut out of his mouth, then to juſtifie himſelf with it rather then God, or to ſpeak a word to the diſparagement of Gods Juſtice. So then it was hard for Elihu to charge Job thus, though Job had let fall ſome inconſiderate ſpeeches, which adminiſtred occaſion for ſuch a charge. And as one of the Ancients ſpeaks of difficulties and ſeeming contradictions in Scripture, Diſtinguiſh the times, and the Scriptures will accord: So diſtinguiſh the time of this diſpute, take Job at the beginning of it, before he was teazed and heated by his Friends, and then he ſpake at a very low rate of himſelf, If I were righteous I would not know my own ſoul. But in the heat and towards the latter end of this long diſpute, Job gave too much advantage for ſuch a conſtruction to be put upon his words, that he juſtified himſelf rather then God; then which nothing can be ſaid more unjuſtifiable, nor more reprovable.

Hence Obſerve, To juſtifie our ſelves doth uſually and juſtly lay us open to the reproof of others; or, To juſtifie our ſelves, draws blame upon our ſelves.

To juſtifie, Is four wayes uſed in Scripture.

Firſt, (which is the moſt remarkable and excellent act of it) God juſtifieth man (Rom. 8. 33.) It is God that juſtifieth. This act of divine grace conſiſts in two things; Firſt, In the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſs to us; Secondly, In the free remiſſion of our ſins.

Secondly, Man juſtifieth God (Luk. 7. 29. 30.) And all the people that heard him, and the Publicans juſtified God, being baptized with the Baptiſm of John. Where to juſtifie imports as much as to glorifie doth (Acts 13. 48.) And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad and glorified the Word of the Lord, That is, they readily approved and received the word of the Lord; when we approve the Doctrine. and doings of God, his word and works, then we juſtifie him. And how ready ſhould we be on all occaſions to juſtifie God, who only is and is altogether good, when he is ſo graciouſly ready to juſtifie us who are evil, altogether evil and ungodly.

Thirdly, We read in Scripture of man juſtifying man, which is done any of theſe three wayes.

Firſt, He that conſents to what another hath done (though the deed be evil) juſtifieth him in doing it. A ſecret liking of any mans action is (as much as that amounts to) the juſtification of his perſon.

Secondly, He that openly approveth or applaudeth what another hath done, juſtifieth him much more. To conſent with ſinners is ſinful, to flatter them in their ſin is abominable.

Thirdly, He that ſtands up to mantain and defend what another hath done, juſtifies him moſt of all. All theſe acts of juſtification Job denied his friends, while he ſaid (Chap. 27. 5.) God forbid I ſhould juſtifie you; that is, that I ſhould ſecretly conſent to or openly approve and maintain what you have ſaid concerning me, or you in ſaying it.

Fourthly, the ſame man is ſaid to juſtifie himſelf; this ſelf-juſtification is that which kindled the wrath of Elihu againſt Job; The Text is expreſs; Becauſe he juſtified himſelf, &c. This juſtification of our ſelves is of two ſorts.

Firſt, Internal and mental; when in our hearts we give ſentence for, or approve of our ſelves; when we inwardly boaſt and glory of our ſelves, whether in what we are, or in what we do and affirm. The Phariſee (Luke 18. 11.) ſtood and prayed thus with himſelf (or to himſelf, that is, ſilently) God I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, Adulterers, or even as this Publican; I faſt twice in the week, &c. Thus he juſtified himſelf.

Secondly, There is an external and vocal ſelf-juſtification, when we openly commend, and cry up our ſelves; Thus Jehu juſtified himſelf (2 Kings 10. 16.) Come ſee my zeal for the Lord; He would needs blow a Trumpet, and proclaim before all men how good a man he was, and what good he had done.

Yet further, the juſtification of our ſelves is two-fold.

Firſt, Lawful, yea and commendable; take that in two particulars.

Firſt, that man who is really and indeed in a juſtified ſtate, through the free grace of God in Chriſt, he, when a juſt occaſion is offered, may juſtifie himſelf declaratively before men; for as we ought alwayes to juſtifie our ſelves declaratively by our works, that is, give evidence by our works that we are juſtified by faith; ſo we may juſtifie our ſelves by our words, to magnifie the rich grace of God in juſtifying us freely through Chriſt. David called others to take notice of what God had done for his ſoul (Pſal. 66. 16.) Thus a Believer may lawfully at any time, and at all times, it is his duty to juſtifie himſelf before men, by giving as the Apoſtle directs (1 Pet. 3. 15.) an anſwer to every one that asketh a reaſon of the hope that is in him, (that is, of his juſtified ſtate) with meekneſs and fear.

Secondly, A man that is ſound at heart, honeſt and upright with God, may lawfully juſtifie himſelf, as to the integrity of his intentions, purpoſes, and deſigns, when he falls under other mens jealouſies and ſuſpitions. David being often unjuſtly condemned by Saul, was as often in this work of juſtifying himſelf againſt him (Pſal. 7. 8.) Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteouſneſs, and according to mine integrity that is in me; As if he had ſaid, I am judged unrighteouſly, but I appeal to thy righteous judgment, who fully knoweſt (which I alſo know, my conſcience bearing witneſs) mine integrity. I appeal to thy mercy for the many ſins which I have committed againſt thy ſelf, but I appeal to thy Juſtice whether (as I am accuſed) I have at all ſinned againſt Saul. We may read Paul doing the ſame at large while he profeſſed (1 Theſ. 2. 3, 4.) that he did not act upon covetous deſigns for himſelf, nor was a flatterer of others, but as he was allowed of God to be put in truſt with the Goſpel, even ſo he ſpake, not as pleaſing men but God, which tryeth the heart. As it was the continual practice of falſe Apoſtles and others to diſcredit Paul's Miniſtery, by bringing his perſon out of credit; ſo it was his continual care to counter-work them, by a profeſſed vindication of himſelf. We may lawfully juſtifie our ſelves and our actings, when we are not only ſuſpected, but faſly accuſed and wrongfully charged about them, and that either of theſe two wayes.

Firſt, When we are charged to have done that evil, which we never did, then we may juſtifie our ſelves by a flat denial; David did ſo in that caſe (Pſal. 7. 3, 4.) O Lord my God, if I have done this, if there be iniquity in my hand, &c. As if he had ſaid, O God, thou knoweſt I have not done this which many burden me with. Again (Pſal. 30. 11.) Falſe witneſs did riſe up, they laid to my charge things that I knew not; I have not had ſo much as a thought to do that which they ſay I have actually done. Thus he diſcharged himſelf of thoſe crimes, which indeed he never committed nor was guilty of.

Secondly, We may juſtifie our ſelves lawfully, when the good we have done is charged upon us as an evil deed, or we looked upon as evil doers, when we have done nothing for the matter, but our duty, and that in the manner according to rule. Thus when Paul had iuſtified himſelf, by denying the evil which Tertullus accuſed him of (Acts. 24. 12, 13.) he preſently juſtified himſelf alſo in what he had done well, though his enemies judged it evil (verſ. 14.) But this I confeſs, that after the way which they call hereſie, ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets. This ſelf-juſtification is often very needful; for as there are ſome who call evil good, ſo there are others, who call good evil, and make that a mans fault which is his commendation. It was counted a crime by ſome of old to be leſs vitious then others, and it is accounted a crime by ſome at this day to be more vertuous then others; to be more holy, more exact, more wiſely preciſe and circumſpect in our wayes then others, many interpret folly, and ſtamp with madneſs. (2 Cor. 5. 13.) Paul was thought beſide himſelf, a meer Frantick in his high actings for Jeſus Chriſt; when our actions are thus miſ-repreſented, and put under ſuch diſguiſes, every good man is obliged to do himſelf right. For as we may honeſtly accuſe others, and declare the evil that we know they have done, when called to it; ſo we may ſpeak; ſo we may ſpeak out and declare the good we have done, and maintain that to be good (if it be good) which we have done, (though many call it evil) when called to it. Thus a man may ſtand upon his terms with all men, and yet be humble, and deeply ſenſible of his own ſinfulneſs and vileneſs before God. Paul ſaw nothing, upon the matter, but ſin in himſelf (Rom. 7. 14. 24.) When I would do good, evil is preſent with me; O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? That is, of ſin; as 'tis called (Rom. 6. 6.) Thus he ſpake when he had to do with God; but when he had to do with men, when he ſaw himſelf called to anſwer the accuſations, and wipe off the aſperſions which the enemies of the Goſpel caſt upon him. (1 Cor. 4. 4.) then he ſaith, I know nothing (that is, no evil) by my ſelf. Paul was very conſcious of his natural infirmity, yet very confident of his ſpiritual integrity. And therefore when he ſaw the Glory of God was like to be obſcured through his abaſement, and to be eclipſed by the ſhadows and darkneſs which men caſt upon his Miniſtery, then he took due honour to himſelf, and made the moſt of himſelf according to truth, in the eyes of all the world. Thus I have ſhewed what juſtifying of our ſelves is lawful, and I have done it that we may more clearly diſcern, what I am to ſhew next, or

Secondly, Namely, what that juſtifying of our ſelves is, which indeed is unlawful, reprovable and blame-worthy; I ſhall inſtance it in a few particulars.

Firſt, They juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, who do good with a deſire to be ſeen and applauded of men for it; thus Chriſt charged the Phariſees (Math. 6. 5.) They pray ſtanding in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men: And (ver. 16.) They disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to faſt. It is not a ſin to be ſeen of men in doing good, but to do good to be ſeen of men is ſinful, and the patching up of a ſelf-juſtification.

Secondly, They juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, who would pretend, or ſeem to have done that good, which indeed they have not. There is as much of this hypocriſie lodging and working now in the hearts of the Children of men, as was of old in the heart of Saul (1 Sam. 15. 13, 14. to verſe 22.) who profeſſed highly to have fulfilled the will of God to a hairs breadth; Bleſſed be thou of the Lord (ſaid he to Samuel) I have performed the commandment of the Lord; Thus he inſiſted upon his integrity, and juſtified himſelf to the face of Samuel, who quickly convinced him that he had done the Lords work to halves.

Thirdly, They juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, who either totally deny, or extenuate and leſſen the evil that they have done; this kind of ſinful ſelf-juſtification was opened largely at the thirty third verſe of the former Chapter, upon that imprecation made by Job, If I covered my tranſgreſſion as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſome. I refer the Reader thither for a fuller diſcovery of it.

Fourthly, They juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, who mingle their own works with the works or righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt for juſtification; for though ſuch pretend to Chriſt, and ſay they take up Chriſt and his righteouſneſs for juſtification yet it will be found a ſelf juſtification only; ſeeing unleſs Chriſt juſtifie us wholly, he juſtifieth us not at all; as the Apoſtle concludes (Gal. 5.4.) Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the Law; ye are fallen from grace; That is, ye who mingle your works with grace, are not juſtified by grace, but (which will be (unleſs repented of) your condemnation) by your works.

Laſtly, They juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, who ſay they are juſtified by Chriſt from their ſins, while they continue in their ſins, and hold faſt their iniquities; for as they that mingle their own good works with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, are ſelf-juſtifiers, ſo alſo are they that take hold of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, while they will not let go, nor part with their evil works. To look for juſtification while we continue in the love and practice of any known ſin and unrighteouſneſs, is as ſinful as to expect juſtification by our own righteouſneſs.

Object. But doth not the Scripture ſay, that God juſtifieth the ungodly? (Rom. 4. 5.)

I anſwer, Though God juſtifieth the ungodly, yet the juſtified are not ungodly; God juſtifieth the ungodly and makes them holy by the grace of ſanctification, as well as righteous by the grace of juſtification: Righteouſneſs of life is alwayes the fruit of righteouſneſs by faith. Therefore if any man continuing in any known ſin, ſaith he is juſtified, he hath juſtified himſelf, for none do ſo who are juſtified of God. O how deeply are they condemned by God who thus juſtifie themſelves! Nothing is more deſirable then to be juſtified by God, and nothing is more dangerous then to juſtifie our ſelves, either by our own righteouſneſs, or in our righteouſneſs. Now as to juſtifie our ſelves in any of theſe wayes, is exceeding ſinful before God, ſo to juſtifie our ſelves any way, layeth us open or obnoxious to the cenſures of men. And that's the reaſon why this holy man Job was ſo deeply cenſured; for though he juſtified not himſelf in any of thoſe ſenſes which are ſinful, yet he did ſome way juſtifie himſelf, and while he juſtified himſelf only as he might, he was condemned as having juſtified himſelf in a way which he might not, We had need be very cautious, how we any way or in any kind juſtified our ſelves, few having done it without incurring cenſure, if not condemnation from others.

But what was Job's ſelf-juſtification, or of what kind, that it raiſed ſuch a duſt, yea kindled ſuch a flame of Anger in the breaſt of Elihu? I anſwer;

Job did not juſtifie himſelf by lies or falſhoods; that was not the matter for which Elihu was angry with Job, but becauſe he ſuppoſed he was more tender of his own name then of Gods. Thus the Text ſpeaks expreſly; Againſt Job was his wrath kindled, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

Hence Note, To juſtifie our ſelves rather then God, is not only ſinful but flagitious, not only ſinful but blaſphemous.

Let God be true and every man a lyar (Rom. 3, 4.) wo to thoſe who go about to ſave their own honour, by ſpeaking that which reflects diſhonour upon God, or who keep their own credit untoucht, by expoſing his to any hazzard; let God be juſt and every man unrighteous. As whoſoever exalts himſelf, humbles God (when we exalt our ſelves vainly) we humble God as much as we can, and ſo it will be interpreted) ſo he that juſtifies himſelf in any degree unduely accuſeth God, how much more he that juſtifieth himſelf rather then God? To commend or praiſe our ſelves, in the hearing of men is unſavory, to commend or praiſe our ſelves rather then men (who are our fellows, yea though our inferiors) is odious, how much more to juſtifie our ſelves rather then God, who is infinitely above us. It becomes the beſt of men, to accuſe, judge and condemn themſelves, to draw up their own Inditement, and ſay, we have deſerved worſe then we ſuffer from the hand of God, and have done leſs then duty requires at [illegible] hand.

But, Becauſe to juſtifie our ſelves rather then God, is a thing ſo horrid, few will be brought under this conviction, that they are guilty of it, or chargeable with it. And therefore I ſhall endeavour to make it appear, that there are many who though they do not juſtifie themſelves rather then God directly and barefaced, yet they do it ſecretly or conſtructively. I ſhall make out this in general as it may concern any man, while I more diſtinctly ſhew, how Job incurred this ſuſpition, and gave Elihu more then a probable ground to ſay, that he juſtified himſelf rather then God. Job never ſaid, he was more juſt then God, but he ſaid many things which gave Elihu occaſion to ſay, That ſurely he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

Firſt, When he ſpake ſo largely of his own innocency, ſpending five whole Chapters in the vindication of it, and ſpake ſo little, comparatively, of the Righteouſneſs and juſtice of God, this might bring him under a ſuſpition of juſtifying himſelf rather then God. For what could this intimate to his hearers, but that he had better performed the part of a gracious and righteous man, then God had of a gracious Father or righteous Judge. Though all that be true (how much ſoever it is) which we ſpeak of our ſelves, yet it is not good to ſpeak much, much leſs all of our ſelves; eſpecially when upon that account, we may ſeem to diſpute either the juſtice or goodneſs of God in dealing out the troubles and afflictions, under which we ſuffer.

Secondly, While Job did ſo often and ſo boldly offer to plead his cauſe before Gods tribunal, and was ſo importunate for a hearing, this carried a ſecret implication, that God had not dealt well with him, or at leaſt had not conſidered his cauſe throughly, for if he had, ſurely he ſhould have found more favourable dealing from God then he daily experienced.

Thirdly, While Job complained ſo often and greatly of the greatneſs of his afflictions, of the weight and heavineſs of the hand of God upon him, and, that he being but a poor worm, the great and mighty God ſhould ſtretch out his ſtrong hand againſt him; This alſo might be conſtrued; as if he thought God did not take a due meaſure of his infirmities, but let temptations take hold of him which were not common to man, and burdened him beyond what he was able to bear. Now, what was this, but to juſtified himſelf rather then God?

Fourthly, While he complained that the hand of God had not only touched him, but even abode and dwelt upon him, that he was conſumed from morning to morning, that he had not only weariſom nights, but months of vanity appointed to him, that his afflictions were not only exceeding ſharp, but exceeding long, yea that though they were extreamly violent, yet perpetual, this bare hard upon the goodneſs and wiſdom of God. For, to ſay that God overacts in the meaſure, and exceeds in the continuance of our afflictions, reflect alike upon the honour of God, and are rather a juſtification of our ſelves in bearing the Croſs, then of God in laying it on.

Fifthly, Job in ſeveral paſſages of this book deſired God to make an end of him, and take him out of this world; he was troubled that God did not kill him out of hand, or outright; this was a juſtification of himſelf rather then God, as if he knew better, whether it were more fit for him to live in a ſickly, weakly, painful condition, or to be delivered out of it by death. As we ſhould be willing to die, when God calls, ſo to live till God calls, and not to haſten death; He that believes (as he ought) will not make haſt out of the troubles of this world, much leſs out of the world, becauſe he finds it troubleſome.

Sixthly, He ſeemed to juſtifie himſelf rather then God, while he was ſo much troubled, becauſe God did not preſently reveal to him the reaſon of his troubles; Why is light given to a man whoſe way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? Was his complaint (Chap. 3.23.) that is, wherefore is the light of this natural life given to me, whoſe way is in the dark, and who know not the reaſon why I am thus afflicted? We ought to ſit down in this aſſurance, be our condition never ſo reſtleſs, that the moſt wiſe God hath a reaſon for every ſtroke of trouble he layeth upon our loins, though we ſee it not. They who cannot fully reſign themſelves and their wayes to God, yea, reſolve their wills into the will of God, are much diſquieted and reſtleſs in their minds, [illegible] they ſee not the reaſon of Gods dealing with them [illegible] why it is ſo with them? Let all ſuch know, this alſo is to make our ſelves wiſer then God, and to juſtifie our ſelves rather then him. And therefore from all theſe conſiderations take theſe two inferences, which may keep us ever at a diſtance from this high preſumption, yea (which we ſhould carefully avoid) from the ſhadow and appearance of it; the juſtifying of our ſelves rather then God.

Firſt, It is enough to condemn us under the guilt of this ſin, if we allow not all that God doth to be good, yea and beſt for us, how much or how long, or in what kind ſoever he is pleaſed to afflict us with evil. It is our duty to accept, that is, to take well at Gods hand, the puniſhment of our iniquity (Lev. 26.41.) how much more to welcome the soreſt and heavieſt croſs which he is pleaſed to lay upon us, either for the chaſtiſement of our failings and falls, or for the tryal and exerciſe of our graces. It is ſaid (2 Sam. 3. 36.) Whatſoever the King (meaning David) did, pleaſed all the people; There was a wonderful concent and harmony between the peoples ſpirit and David's actions; Surely whatſoever God doth, ſhould pleaſe all his people, whatever he diſpenſeth, be it ſweet or ſowr, hard or ſoft, light or darkneſs, it ſhould pleaſe all his people, and pleaſe them highly; and ſo far as we come ſhort of this frame of heart, ſo far do we juſtifie our ſelves rather then God.

Secondly, It is a fault not only if we are not ſatisfied and pleaſed with what God doth, but if we do not praiſe and glorifie God in and for what he doth; and that not only in his juſtice that he hath done us no wrong, but in his goodneſs, that he hath done all for our profit. That which turns to mans profit, ſhould alſo turn to the praiſe of God; but (as the holy Apoſtle aſſureth us, Heb. 12.10.) God chaſtneth his Children for their profit (and that the beſt and nobleſt profit) that they might be partakers of his holineſs; therefore we ought to praiſe and glorifie him, or to glorifie him with our praiſes while he is chaſtning us. Truely God is good to Iſrael (Pſal. 73.1.) He is ſo not only when he gives Iſrael outward good things, or things good to ſenſe, but when he afflicts, when he writes bitter things againſt his Iſrael and ſhews them only viſions of ſorrow and matter of amazement. Till our ſouls are wrought up to this Juſtification of God in his goodneſs, when things are worſt with us, we in ſome degree juſtifie our ſelves rather then God.

Again, For as much as Job, who cannot in all things be acquitted from this charge of juſtifying himſelf rather then God, was yet of another ſpirit and principle, then indeed or profeſſedly to juſtifie himſelf rather then God.

Obſerve; We may ſpeak amiſs and wrong God when we do not intend it, nor have the leaſt thought to do ſo.

David prayeth for the pardon of unknown ſins (Pſal. 19.12.) Cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults, keep back thy Servant alſo from preſumptuous ſins, let them not have dominion over me. To juſtifie our ſelves rather then God knowingly, is a preſumptuous ſin, to lay any blame upon God directly is blaſphemy; David prayed not only to be kept from ſuch groſs ſins, but to be cleanſed from ſecret ſins, that is, from thoſe ſins which he did not know that he had committed them, and which he never had any intent to commit. We may ſo miſ-place words and miſ-guide actions, when we think not of it, that we may quickly ſin againſt God, yea and juſtifie our ſelves rather then God; That which we do or ſpeak is to be judged by a rule, whether it be good or evil, not meerly by our intentions though good nor by our not intending of evil. We may be judged to have done or ſaid evil, though we meant no evil in doing or in ſaying ſo. Words and actions well meant may ſometimes juſtly undergo an ill conſtruction. They that hear ſhould interpret every word in the moſt favorable ſence; but if we ſpeak unwarily and unſafely or (as Moſes once) unadviſedly with our lips, we may thank our ſelves if we fall under reproof for what we have ſpoken. Therefore beg of God to ſet a watch over your mouth, and to keep the door of your lips, let nothing paſs unexamined. 'Tis our wiſdom to read every word over and over before we ſpeak it; many hear ill, who have ſpoken well, how much more may they who ſpeak doubtfully or dangerouſly. We have ſeen the cauſe why Elihu was ſo angry with Job, the next verſe will tell us why he was ſo angry with Job's three Friends.

Verſe 3. Alſo againſt his three Friends was his wrath kindled, becauſe they had found no anſwer, and yet had condemned Job.

We find Elihu angry on all hands, angry with Job, and angry with his three friends; ſome query upon this renewing of his anger (as God did Jonah) whether he did well to be thus angry or thus to appear in paſſion, and break out afreſh in wrath? And whether the reaſons of his anger will bear him out to have been angry with reaſon; anger prevails moſt in thoſe in whom reaſon prevails leaſt, and they have uſually the ſtrongeſt paſſions, who have the weakeſt judgments; Children and aged perſons, the ſick and pained are apt to be angry with others, and hard to be pleaſed themſelves. And 'tis a general axiom; The weak and impotent are naturally angry and paſſionate. Therefore we had need look to our paſſions, that they grow not ſtrong, for they will ſoon proclaim us weak: He is a wiſe man indeed, that can be at once wiſe and angry. (Proverbs 19. 11.) The diſcretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to paſs over a tranſgreſſion; And as there Solomon teacheth us, that diſcretion maſtereth anger, ſo he aſſureth us, that angry perſons are more then indiſcreet, fooliſh. (Eccleſ. 7.9.) Anger reſteth in the boſome of Fools. Anger often aſſaults the prudent, but if it abides and takes up its lodging in any boſome, 'tis in the boſome of a Fool, at leaſt, in that point, he doth fooliſhly who lendeth his boſome (though but one night) for anger to lodge in. And as at all times, ſo then eſpecially we ſhould narrowly watch and ſeverely bridle our paſſions, when (as Elihu here did) we undertake to adviſe thoſe who are miſtaken, or to reduce thoſe that are out of the way; when we give counſel to others, we ſhould be ſedate and quiet our ſelves. A Phyſician muſt not be angry with his patient, nor is it proper to apply medicinal healing counſel to the mind of another with an exulcerated mind. Much might be ſaid concerning this anger of Elihu, but I have ſpoken to that before in opening the former verſe, therefore I ſhall not ſtay here upon it; but proceed to conſider the reaſon why he was ſo.

Invalidum omne naturâ querulum eſt.

Becauſe they had found no anſwer, and yet had condemned Job.

Not to find an anſwer may proceed;

Firſt, From a defect of pains and induſtry in ſeeking it; an anſwer muſt be ſought and dig'd for, it muſt be ſtudied and prayed for, elſe it will not be found.

Secondly, The not finding of an anſwer, may riſe from the defect of ability, not of induſtury; many labour hard, but can make nothing of it; 'Tis probable Job's three friends laboured much, yet found no anſwer; and then it was no defect of induſtry but of ability, they found no anſwer, becauſe they could not. They (as we commonly ſpeak) did even beat their brains, and bite their nails for an anſwer, but could not attain it; they pumpt hard, but the water would not come, God hid the thing from their eyes; ſo then, they had not found any anſwer, becauſe after all their ſearch they could not; nor ſhould it ſeem ſtrange to us that they could not. At beſt we know but in part here, and till God by his Spirit teach us, we know nothing at all; ſo that I ſay, it ſhould not ſeem ſtrange to us, that theſe wiſe and good men could find no anſwer for Job, but that which follows ſeems ſtrange, even to amazement, that though they could not, yet (which, how alſo could they anſwer to their own conſciences!)

Had condemned Job.] What, condemn a man, and not anſwer him? 'tis worſe then to condemn a man, and not hear him. Poſſibly he that is condemned unheard, may yet deſerve a condemnation; but if we condemn a man unanſwered, he certainly, as to us, is condemned undeſervedly. And therefore this courſe of proceeding (if any) is liable not only to ſuſpition whether it be right, but to condemnation as utterly unrighteous. Though it may be a good mans caſe not to find an anſwer, yet ſurely a good man will not condemn when he cannot anſwer.

But it may be demanded; Did Job's friends indeed find no anſwer before they condemned him? we have heard of their anſwers all along. No ſooner had Job ended his former ſpeeches, but they preſently anſwered (Chap. 4. 1.) Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered and ſaid (Chap. 8. 1.) Then anſwered Bildad the Shuhite and ſaid (Chap. 11. 1.) Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite and ſaid; yea they all three anſwered Job a ſecond time, and two of them a third, how then could Elihu juſtly ſay, they found no anſwer, and yet had condemned Job?

For anſwer to this objection; I ſay, they anſwered Job, but they did not anſwer ſufficiently. The vulgar Latin tranſlation puts this gloſs (which is more then the rules of tranſlation allow) into the Text, rendring the original thus; Becauſe they had found no rational anſwer, and yet had condemned Job. They did not find out nor hit upon the right anſwer. improper and inſufficient anſwers, how many ſoever of them we heap up againſt any mans argument, are no anſwers, they are not worthy to be called anſwers. That only is an anſwer which carrieth a conviction in it, which reacheth the ſtate and ſtrength of the queſtion, or removeth the objection. In this ſenſe Job's three friends had found no anſwer and yet had condemned Job.

Eò quod non inveniſſent reſponſionem rationalem. Vulg.

The Hebrew is they made him wicked, or condemned him as a wicked man. So the Septuagint, they had no anſwer for him, and yet concluded him wicked; we ſay, they had condemned Job; And the reaſon of it is, becauſe to condemn a man is to leave under a ſuppoſal of wickedneſs, and to ſtigmatize or brand him for a wicked man. All the wicked ſhall at laſt be condemned, and none ought to be condemned, nor are any condemned juſtly now but the wicked; He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the juſt, even they both are an abomination to the Lord, (Pro. 17. 15.) There is a very elegant tranſpoſition of the words in the Hebrew; we may render the Text thus; He that juſtifieth the wicked, and wickedeth the juſt, &c. The Law of Moſes gave an expreſs rule againſt this perverſion of Judgment, in terms quite croſs to thoſe in Solomon (Deut. 25. 1.) If there be any controverſie between men, and they come unto Judgment, that the Judges may judge them, then they ſhall juſtifie the righteous, and condemn the wicked. Which we may render thus; They ſhall juſtifie the juſt and wickediſe the wicked, that is, they ſhall declare the juſt man juſt, and the wicked man to be wicked. That man either really is, or is accounted wicked, who is caſt in his cauſe and condemned. That was a dreadful ſentence (the Scripture (Acts 1. 20.) ſhews it fulfilled upon the traytor Judas) when he is judged, let him be condemned (Pſal. 109. 7.) We put in the Margin, let him go out guilty or wicked. In this ſenſe Job's three friends when when they condemned him, caſt him as a wicked man, though they had nothing to anſwer the plea which he made for his own integrity. We muſt not conceive any ſuch wickedneſs in them, that they were reſolved to condemn him right or wrong, yet they held their concluſion againſt the light and reaſon of all his premiſes, and though they could prove no ill againſt him, yet vehemently ſuſpecting him, they concluded he was an ill man, and ſo condemned him.

Damnarunt pro impio, etſi nulla in eum crimina probare poſſent quibus ille ſuam vitam contaminaſſent. Merc.

> Hence Note, Firſt, Some will proceed to condemn both perſons and opinions, though they can give no reaſonable account why they condemn either.

We read (Iſa. 56. 10.) of dumb Dogs, that cannot bark, that is, who know not what to ſpeak or ſay to purpoſe. There are many who (in this ſenſe) cannot bark, yet they will bite; and when they have no anſwer, they will condemn; and uſually dumb Dogs that cannot bark have the ſharpeſt teeth and are beſt at biting, or they are better at condemning then at anſwering. As ſome find an anſwer where there is none; that is, when ſuch reaſons are laid before them as are unanſwerable, yet they will not give over anſwering, but ſtill ſeek a knot in a ruſh, and draw the ſaw of contention as well without end as without cauſe; ſo others cannot find an anſwer where it is; yet when they cannot anſwer, they can cenſure and condemn him for wicked or perverſe, whom they cannot prove ſo. 'Tis much eaſier to ſay a man is faulty then to find his fault; yet they who have a mind to find faults, are ſeldome to ſeek for ſomewhat or other which they call ſo.

> Note Secondly, To condemn opinions or perſons when we cannot anſwer them, is a practice juſtly condemnable.

'Tis unjuſt (as was intimated before) to condemn a man before he is heard. For though poſſibly a man unheard may have juſtice when he is condemned, yet all agree 'tis injuſtice to condemn him when he is not heard; now if it be injuſtice to condemn a wicked man before he is heard, how unjuſt is it to condemn a man in whom we can find no wickedneſs after we have heard him?

Thirdly, From the manner of the phraſe here uſed,

> Note, To condemn a man is to render him wicked.

Condemnation (as was ſhewed) is due only to the wicked, and if an innocent be condemned; he is reputed wicked, and receives puniſhment as guilty. As that ſentence of condemnation which proceeds out of the mouth of God againſt impenitent ſinners and evil doers, binds the guilt of their evil deeds upon them, and delivers them up to puniſhment; ſo he that condemns his Brother, faſtneth guilt upon him, and ſpeaks him deſerving puniſhment; for as where guilt is, puniſhment followeth, ſo a fault is conceived to go before. There are theſe three things in ſin, the fault, the guilt, and the blot, or pollution of it; he that faſtneth guilt by condemnation, faſtneth the fault and blot much more, how ſad is it then to be deſervedly under condemnation? And how great is the priviledge of Believers, to whom (though in themſelves they deſerve it) there is no condemnation! (Rom. 8. 1.) They who in this life are paſt condemnation, are alſo paſſed from death to life. Many are condemned who are good in the ſight of God; but all condemnation makes a man evil, yea wicked in the ſight of the World. And becauſe every ſentence of condemnation renders a man wicked in the eyes of worldly men, therefore righteous Magiſtrates will not condemn haſtily; They will not judge (as Chriſt did not, Iſa. 11. 3.) after the ſight of their eyes, nor reprove after the hearing of their ears; To judge by the ſight of the eye, is to judge according to the firſt appearance of things, before inquiſition hath been made, and to reprove by the hearing of the ear, is to reprove according to the firſt report which is made, without examination. We muſt not judge thus, becauſe we muſt judge in righteouſneſs, which cannot be, if we judge thus, How deliberate, how tender ſhould we be in condemning any man, ſeeing condemnation doth not only impoſe a puniſhment upon, but ſuppoſe a crime, a wickedneſs, a fault in him? It is grievous enough to bear puniſhment, but to bear the burden of a crime or fault, is in reality much more grievous.

But ſeeing Elihu declares his anger againſt Job's three friends, becauſe they condemned Job, and had found no anſwer. Some will ſay, did not Elihu condemn Job ſo too? No, he condemned him indeed, but he firſt found an anſwer. Again, Elihu condemned Job, but not as his friends condemned him, his friends condemned him as to his ſtate, judging him unſound at heart; but Elihu condemned him only as to this or that particular act or ſpeech; he condemned him, Firſt, Becauſe he ſpake ſo largely in the juſtification of himſelf (Chap. 33. 8, 9, 10, 11.) Surely thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying, I am clean without tranſgreſſion; I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me. (And Chap. 34. 5, 6.) For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous, and God hath taken away my judgment. Should I lie againſt my right? My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion. Secondly, He condemned him for complying with the wicked: not that he thought Job acted like them, but becauſe being a godly man, he in his ſufferings ſpake ſometimes and behaved himſelf like them (Chap. 34. 8.) Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men. Further, he charged him with ſtubbornneſs againſt God (Chap. 34. 37.) For he addeth rebellion unto his ſin; and (which ſounds ſtrangely) with an eaſineſs towards evil men (Chap. 36. 17.) Thou haſt fulfilled the judgment of the wicked: judgment and juſtice take hold on thee. Thus Elihu condemned Job many wayes; but he condemned him not, without finding an anſwer.

Yea, I may ſay, Elihu is he, who in this great controverſie and difficulty, hath found an anſwer, and yet hath not condemned Job, that is, he hath not condemned him as his three friends had condemned him: He condemned not Job as one perverſe and crooked in his wayes, he condemned him not as one that feared not God and eſchewed not evil, he condemned him not as an hypocrite, rotten at heart and unſound in his eſtate; thus Elihu found an anſwer for Job, but condemned him not, no not while his wrath was kindled againſt him, becauſe he juſtified himſelf rather then God.

And the proceſs of this Book will ſhew, that though Elihu (in this ſenſe ſpoken of) condemned not Job, yet he found an unanſwerable anſwer, ſuch an anſwer, as to which Job neither could nor would make any reply; and that is the ſpecial buſineſs we have to look at in proſecuting his diſcourſe, even to find out the anſwer which he found; for that will be as the key of the work, to open the whole matter to us, and to ſhew us wherein Job had either failed or exceded, either in bearing the croſſes laid upon him by God, or in managing this controverſie with his friends.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

Now Elihu had waited till Job had ſpoken: Becauſe they were elder then he,

When Elihu ſaw that there was no anſwer in the mouth of theſe three men, then his wrath was kindled.

And Elihu the Son of Barachel the Buzite anſwered and ſaid, I am young, and ye are very old, wherefore I was afraid, and durſt not ſhew you mine opinion.

I ſaid Dayes ſhould ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdom.

This Context aſſigns the reaſon, Firſt, Why Elihu forbared ſo long to ſpeak, namely, becauſe he was young: that reaſon you have in the fourth verſe, as alſo in the ſixth and ſeventh. Secondly, Why he began at laſt to ſpeak, namely, becauſe his elders, thoſe grave ancient men would or could ſpeak no more. This he lays down in the fifth verſe, When Elihu ſaw that there was no anſwer in the mouth of theſe three men, then &c.

Verſe 4. Now Elihu had waited till Job had ſpoken.

The Hebrew is, He expected Job in words. Job was long in words, or he ſpake long in many words; and all that while Elihu waited, he kept ſilent; but when Job had ſpoken out, and Elihu had ſtay'd ſome time after to ſee whether either himſelf or his friends would ſpeak again, then he began. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, yet Elihu waited to ſpeak with Job. The words notes the moſt patient expectation, a waiting with much long-ſufferance, a waiting alſo in much confidence, as reſerving our ſelves till better times, or for a more favourable diſpenſation. So the word is uſed (Dan. 12. 12.) Bleſſed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thouſand three hundred and five and thirty dayes; that is, Bleſſed is he that waiteth out thoſe dayes of the Propheſie there ſpecified; he hath a ſtretched-out patience, that waiteth to the very laſt day, and to the laſt of that day. The word is uſed again (Habak. 2. 3.) If the viſion (that is, the mercy or deliverance revealed and promiſed) tarry, wait for it; that is, If it tarry beyond the time ſuppoſed by man (it never tarries beyond the time appointed by God) wait patiently for it, that is, for the accompliſhment of it; yea the word implyeth a waiting, as it were, with open mouth, or gaping to receive that good which is aſſured by propheſie or in the promiſe. Such an expectation is here aſcribed to Elihu, he waited for the iſſue of that great and long debate between Job and his three friends, or he gaped for ſuch a ſolid anſwer as might ſatisfie him, and determine the Queſtion under debate. Now Elihu had waited till Job had ſpoken.

Sapientem expectationem ſonat, qua duramus in malis, nos rebus melioribus ſervantes.
Bold.

Hence Note, Firſt, As it is alwayes our duty to wait on God, ſo ſometimes on men.

We ſhould wait, Firſt, To ſee what men will do for us. We ſhould wait, Secondly, To hear what men have to ſay to us; we ſhould wait for counſel, for comfort, for inſtruction, for conviction. We ſhould wait, Thirdly, To perform duty, and to do good to men. Thus God is pleaſed to wait upon (his creature) man, (Iſa. 30. 18.) Therefore will I wait to be gracious. As God waiteth to beſtow acts of grace on man, ſo man ſhould wait to perform offices of love and reſpect to man, or to give him advice, help and aſſiſtance, as his caſe and needs require.

Secondly, Conſider Elihu who had waited long as a hearer, was afterwards a great ſpeaker.

Hence Note, They that will ſpeak to any mans caſe rightly, muſt firſt hear him patiently.

They muſt be hearers, who would be learners. Paul ſate at the feet of Gamaliel, there he waited as a learner; and if they muſt wait as hearers, who would be learners, how much more ought they, who would be teachers, reprovers, or reformers?

Thirdly, Elihu waited that he might ſpeak opportunely, or in time.

Hence Note, Due times and ſeaſons of ſpeaking muſt be obſerved and taken.

(Eccleſiaſtes 3. 7.) There is a time to ſpeak, and a time to keep ſilence. The providences of God point wiſe men to both. And uſually times of ſilence fit us for times of ſpeaking; Every thing is beautiful in its ſeaſon; words ſpoken in their ſeaſon, are not only more effectual, but more beautiful, they are like Apples of Gold in pictures of Silver. And therefore as the wiſe man gives us caution, (Eccleſ. 5. 2.) Not to be raſh with our mouths to utter any thing before God: So we ſhould not be raſh with our mouths to utter any thing before men, but well to conſider what we have to ſay, and wait our time to ſay it. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 1. 19.) would have us ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak; and probably, the ſlower we are to ſpeak, the ſurer we ſpeak; Haſty ſpeaking hath given men more dangerous ſtumbles and falls, then ever haſty going did. The Prophet repreſents our Lord Jeſus Chriſt thus beſpeaking his Father as to his preparation and furniture for the exerciſe of his Prophetical, yea of his whole Mediatorial office (Iſa. 50. 4.) Thou haſt given me the tongue of the learned that I might know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon. As there is much wiſdom in hitting the matter what to ſpeak, and the manner of ſpeaking, how to cloath and dreſs the matter of our ſpeech; ſo there is much wiſdom in hitting the time and ſeaſon when to ſpeak. And as to time a thing well in acting, ſo to time it well in ſpeaking, is the better half of it. Elihu waited till Job had ſpoken. What I have now touched, may be one reaſon of his waiting; But the ſpecial reaſon of it follows in the Text.

Becauſe they were elder then he. And good reaſon that he ſhould wait upon his elders.

Significat non tantum ſenem ſed ſenio confectum, & non tantum ſenem ætate ſed ſapientia.

The Hebrew is, They were elder for dayes; they were not only old men for dayes, but elder for dayes then he; The word, ſtrictly taken, imports a man more then old, even one that is worn with age. Further, it denotes a two-fold elderſhip; Firſt, an elderſhip in time, dayes or years. Secondly, an elderſhip in wiſdom, and underſtanding. They are our Elders indeed, who are wiſer then we; elderſhip in time deſerves reſpect, but elderſhip in wiſdom commands it. And as ſuch are expreſt by this word in the Hebrew, ſo both the Grecians and Romans expreſs their wiſe men by a word of the ſame force, Senators were Elders, not alwayes in time (there was no Law much leſs neceſſity that every Senator ſhould be an old man) but in underſtanding: Every Senator ought to be a wiſe man, though not an old man. They who are to govern others wiſely, had need be furniſhed with wiſdome themſelves. Gray hairs alone cannot make a good Magiſtrate. We read the word applyed both to Church-Elders called (Iſa. 37. 7.) The Elders of the Prieſts, and to State-Elders, called Elders of the people (Exod. 17. 5.) or of the Land (Gen. 50. 7.) The Elders of the Land of Egypt went with them. 'Tis ſaid (Pſal. 105. 21, 22.) Pharaoh made Joſeph Lord of his houſe, and ruler of all his ſubſtance, to bind his Princes at his pleaſure, and teach his Senators wiſdom. Young Joſeph made Pharaoh's wiſe men wiſer, and gave counſel to his counſellers. Here Elihu calls Job's friends Elders and we may take him either ſpeaking ſtrictly, that they were his Elders in time, or ſpeaking modeſtly, that they were his Elders in wiſdom, knowledge, and underſtanding, and therefore he was not haſty to ſpeak, but gave them their ſcope, waiting till Job had ſpoken, Becauſe they were elder then he.

Hence Note, Firſt in general, Young men ſhould ſhew reſpect and wait upon their Elders.

The Apoſtle would not have Timothy ſlighted, though young (1 Tim. 4. 12.) Let no man deſpiſe thy youth: He chargeth the people not to deſpiſe Timothy becauſe young; and he chargeth Timothy to carry it ſo, that none might have the ſhew of a cauſe to deſpiſe him though young; Let no man deſpiſe thy youth; let not thoſe that ſeek occaſion find it. Now, as young men, eſpecially young Miniſters ſhould be ſo holy and grave in their converſation, as not to draw diſreſpect or contempt upon themſelves, and as no man ought to deſpiſe the young meerly becauſe they are young; ſo all men ought to honour old age. The old Law was expreſs for it (Levit. 19. 32.) Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God, I am the Lord. See, how theſe two are joyned together, Thou ſhalt honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God; As if he had ſaid, honour old men in the fear of God, or ſhew fear to God in the reverence and honour which thou giveſt to old men, who having lived a long time or many dayes in the world, bear at leaſt a ſhadow of the eternity of God who is The ancient of dayes, who lives and abides for ever. There is a two-fold ſtamp of God upon old men, more then upon other men, Firſt their very age hath a ſtamp of God upon it, for though all ages put together, are not a moment to eternity, yet, as to our computation and reckoning, old age bears the faireſt image of eternity: Secondly, Old men bear a reſemblance of God in their wiſdom, ('tis to be ſuppoſed that the oldeſt are wiſeſt, as Elihu ſpeaks ver. 7.) So then old men are to be reverenced not only for their precedence in time, but for their experience, wiſdom, knowledge and prudence, all which repreſent them more like to God then younger men.

Seris venit uſus ab annis.

Mira in hoc elucet antiquorum in publicis concertationibus gravitas & ſtupendum inviolabiliter ſervati in dicendo ac reſpondendo ordinis exemplum. Bold.

Secondly, Look to the ſpecial way wherein Elihu ſhewed reverence to his Elders, even by his long ſilence; he did not rudely nor raſhly break into diſcourſe, but waited till they had done. This modeſty of Elihu is both commendable and imitable, who would ſay nothing as long as Job or any of his friends had any thing to ſay, becauſe they were elder then he. As the light of nature teacheth reverence to the aged in all caſes, ſo more particularly, in this. There ſhines (as to this point) an admirable comlineſs in the diſputes of the Ancients, and a moſt eminent example of order inviolably kept both in propoſing and anſwering. Their rule or maxime was, Let the Seniors ſpeak, let the Juniors hear: Let Old men teach, let young men learn. It is the note of a learned Commentator upon this place from what himſelf had obſerved. Living (ſaith he) once at Paris in France, where, in a Monaſtery, three Indians were brought up and inſtructed in the Chriſtian Religion, I could not but admire to behold how ſtudiouſly, and ſtrictly they kept to the Laws of ſpeaking, the younger not offering a word till the Elder had done; The practice of theſe Indians brought with them out of Heatheniſm may reprove the imprudence of many, yea the impudence of ſome young men among us, who will be firſt in talk, when their betters and Elders are in place; The Prophet threatned this as a great judgment (Iſa. 3. 5.) The Child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the Ancient. The Child is not to be taken here ſtrictly, but for any inferiour in age, though poſſibly himſelf be arrived to the ſtate of manhood. As if the Prophet had ſaid, there ſhall be a general confuſion among all Degrees of men, without reſpect had to age or place, every ſtripling will take the boldneſs to talk and act unſeemly before his betters. Obeyſance and ſilence, bowing the body, and holding the peace, are reſpects which ought to be paid to our Superiours whether in time or authority.

Majores natu loquantur, juniores audiant; ſenes doceant, adoleſcentes diſcant; Pulcherrima diſciplinæ ſententia. Druſ.

But as young men ſhould not be forward to ſpeak in the preſence of their Elders, ſo they ſhould not be afraid to ſpeak when there is cauſe for it, eſpecially when their Elders forbear or refuſe to ſpeak any more. Thus Elihu who had long kept his mouth (as David in another caſe did Pſal. 39. 1.) with a bridle, and was dumb with ſilence, yet at laſt his heart was hot within him, and while he was muſing, the fire burned, and (as it followeth) he ſpake with his tongue.

Verſe 5. When Elihu ſaw that there was no anſwer in the mouth of theſe three men, then his wrath was kindled.

When Elihu ſaw it, that is, when he was as much aſſured of it (by their geſture and carriage) as if it had been viſible, that thoſe three men had no more to ſay, or would ſay no more (for the words may be referred indifferently to their will or power, when, I ſay, he ſaw they had no more to ſay) Either, firſt, to convince Job of error, or ſecondly, to defend the truth of God, which they had undertaken (when he ſaw this) his wrath was kindled, at that inſtant time, and for that very reaſon, his wrath was kindled. Some conceive (as was ſhewed before) that this anger proceeded from the paſſionateneſs of his ſpirit, and ſo tax him with it as his fault; but I rather conſent with thoſe who ſay it proceeded from his zeal for God, and ſo it was his vertue and his praiſe.

I have met with theſe words two or three times already ſince I entred upon this Chapter, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon them here; and as this anger of Elihu was ſpoken of before, ſo the ſame reaſon which was given before of his anger is repeated and reported here again; Then his wrath was kindled becauſe they had no anſwer in their mouths, that is, becauſe they had no more to ſay againſt Job whom they had condemned; and becauſe they had no more to ſay for God whoſe cauſe in afflicting Job they had defended; I ſhall only add a few brief Notes upon this Verſe and ſo paſs on.

Firſt, Some men anſwer till they have no more to anſwer.

'Tis very poſſible for a good and a wiſe man to be at the bottom of his reaſon, in ſome points, or to be brought to ſuch a wall, that he can go no further; David ſaith, I have ſeen an end of all perfection, which as it is true of all outward commodities and conveniences, which men enjoy, ſo both of their corporal and intellectual abilities, or of what they can either do or ſay. The beſt of men may ſee the end of their beſt perfections in all things, but Grace, and the hope of Glory. Their ſtock and treaſure may be quite ſpent, their ſpring exhauſted, and they gone to their utmoſt line and length. There's no more anſwer in their mouth, nor work in their hand.

Secondly Note, It may put a wiſe man into paſſion to ſee how ill ſome wiſe men uſe their reaſon, or that they can make no further uſe of it.

Then was the anger of Elihu kindled when he ſaw, they could anſwer no more, or that there was no anſwer in the mouth of theſe three men.

Thirdly, As the anger of Elihu is often ſpoken of, ſo ſtill we find ſomewhat or other is aſſigned as a ground of it;

Whence Note; We ſhould ſee good reaſon for our anger before we are angry, whether in our own cauſe, or in the cauſe of God.

There is nothing can excuſe anger but the cauſe of it. Reaſon is a good plea for paſſion; And he that hath a true reaſon for his anger, will probably manage his anger with reaſon, yea, and mingle it with grace; and ſo his proves not only a rational, but a gracious anger.

Fourthly Note, Provoked patience breaks out into greater paſſion.

In the former Verſe, we find Job waiting, he waited long and patiently; but being diſappointed of what he waited for, his wrath broke out; His anger was kindled; As when God waits long and is diſappointed, his anger is increaſed in the manifeſtation of it (Rom. 2. 4, 5.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs and forbearance and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leads thee to repentance? But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up wrath, &c. As if he had ſaid, The more patience God ſpends upon thee, the more wrath is treaſured up for thee, and that wrath will break out the more fiercely and violently to conſume thee, the longer it hath been treaſured up. Now I ſay, as the wrath of God is the more declared againſt man, by how much his patience is the more abuſed; So the abuſed patience of man will turn to greater anger, and he groweth the more paſſionate by how much he hath been the more and the oftner deceived. Thus Elihu is ſtill deſcribed acting angerly, yet in the very next verſe we ſhall find him ſpeaking ſoberly, plainly and to purpoſe.

Verſe 6. And Elihu the Son of Barachel the Buzite anſwered and ſaid.

When Elihu ſaw theſe three men gravel'd, and that after all the outcry they made againſt Job, they were forced to leave him as they found him, unconvinced of thoſe crimes, of that hypocriſie, which they had laid to his charge, he hereupon ſaw himſelf ingaged to undertake the matter and offer his opinion.

Concerning Elihu, his name, his Fathers name, Barachel, his tribe or ſtock, a Buzite, I have ſpoken at the ſecond verſe, and ſhall not add any thing of it here; only take notice, that here Elihu begins his own preface; the former part of the Chapter contained the report of the divine hiſtorian concerning Elihu; but theſe are the words of Elihu himſelf; here he begins like an Orator to gain favour with an attention of his hearers, or to prepare the minds of his hearers to receive what he had to ſay; And upon this ſubject or piece of Rhetorick (making Prefaces) he ſpends the whole that remains of this Chapter. And Elihu, &c. Anſwered and ſaid.

I am young and ye are very old (that is it which he ſaid) therefore I was afraid and durſt not ſhew mine opinion.

As if he had ſaid, I am conſcious to my ſelf of the weakneſs which accompanieth youth; I very well know my own incompetency for ſuch a work; I am young.

Parvus ſecundum dies. Heb.

The Hebrew is, I am few of dayes, or, little according to dayes; if you ſhould reckon or meaſure me by dayes, I am very little; and is not every man ſo? If you meaſure any man by dayes, is not he very little? Thou haſt made my age a ſpan long (ſaid David, Pſal. 39. 7.) that's quickly meaſured. Job ſpake thus (Chap. 14. 1.) Man that is born of a Woman, is of few dayes, and full of trouble; He ſaith not, this or that man, but man, take old men, the Elders, take all men, the oldeſt men are but few of dayes in themſelves conſidered; and comparatively to the age or rather the eternity of God, their utmoſt age is but as a drop to the ocean. Thus all men, even ancient men are few of dayes, which is here the deſcription of a young man, I am young (ſaith Elihu) or few of dayes; but compare one man with another, ſo ſome have few dayes, and others many dayes; young men have few dayes, and old men have many dayes, compared with one another. I am young, ישיש Decrepitus.

And ye are very old] The word notes decrepid old age, the very dregs of age, the utmoſt line of life; old age like a heavy burden bows the back, and cripples the limbs of the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt ſons of Adam. See more of this word (Chap. 15. 10.) There are ſeveral diviſions of the life of man, ſome caſt it into four parts, ſutable to the four ſeaſons of the year; ſome into five, alluding to the Acts of an Interlude or play; others into ſeven, an alluſion to the Planets; now whatever diviſion you make of the life of man, this decrepid old age is the laſt. I am young and ye are very old.

Wherefore I was afraid, and durſt not ſhew mine opinion.

What effect that ſenſe which Elihu had of his youth or fewneſs of days produced in him, is ſet forth in theſe words; 'twas fear, I (ſaith he) was afraid, &c. There is (as to this point) a twofold fear: Firſt, a cowardly fear; Secondly, a modeſt fear; when Elihu ſaith, he was afraid, he doth not mean the fear of a coward; but of a modeſt man: It is not cowardize to be afraid of doing many things, to fear to do thoſe things which are unlawful, or which are uncomely, is no part of cowardize. This latter fear ſurprized or rather compoſed Elihu; he was a man bold ſpirited enough, but modeſty made him afraid to ſhew his opinion. There is a great elegancy in thoſe words; I durſt not ſhew mine opinion; They imply, he hid his ſpeech, as Serpents hide themſelves when men approach. (Micah 7. 17.) Serpents which are a Terror to men, and make them afraid, are alſo afraid of men, their appearance cauſeth them to run and hide their heads. The Rabbins take much pains in their Criticiſms about this word to expreſs a vertuous modeſty. As it is a duty to be (as Chriſt exhorts his Diſciples to be) eſpecially in times of perſecution (Matth. 10. 10.) wiſe as Serpents, ſo it is a vertue to be fearful as Serpents, even to fear as much to be heard by ſome men, as Serpents fear to be ſeen by any man. Thus Elihu held down his head, he was afraid and durſt not ſhew his opinion ſuddenly, nor declare his judgment in the caſe, for the reverence he bare to thoſe graver and elder heads.

Note Hence, Firſt, Young men are apt to run into miſtakes, their heat uſually exceeds their light.

Youth drives furiouſly, and commonly carrieth preſumption with it, or is it ſelf hurried by preſumption. Though God hath given a young man a good underſtanding, quick parts, and a ready tongue, yet he wants much, becauſe he hath not ſeen much, and ſo is very liable to miſcarriage. He cannot look through, nor ſee to the end of things; for as it is the great and ſole priviledge of God to caſt an eye quite through all intermediate, both actions and revolutions, and to ſee the end from the beginning: So it is more peculiar to thoſe that are aged and long experienced, to ſee much of the end of things in their beginnings, or to ſee what is like to be as well as what is. 'Tis the part of a wiſe man to conſider what may come, and whither things tend; there is much weakneſs and deficiency in young men as to this. As moſt young men want ſenſes exerciſed (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of all unimproved Chriſtians of what age ſoever (Heb. 5. 19.) as I ſay, moſt young men want ſenſes exerciſed) to diſcern what is good or evil; ſo they want ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern what good or evil is like to be, they rarely ſee effects in their cauſes, or events in their prognoſticks. Therefore Elihu might well ſay, I am young, therefore I durſt not venture to ſhew mine opinion. Paul giveth Timothy ſomewhat a ſtrange warning (2 Tim. 2. 22.) Flee youthful luſts. Timothy was young, but was he noted for indulgence to any youthful luſts? What luſts doth he mean? Surely not drunkenneſs, nor uncleanneſs, nor any looſe behaviour; for though the moſt ſober and temperate young men, have in them the ſeed of all theſe, yea of every luſt, yet Timothy at that time was a pattern, a mirrour, not only of ſobriety, but of holineſs; and Paul was even forced to bid him take more liberty in the uſe of the creature, then he uſed to allow himſelf; Drink no longer water, but uſe a little wine for thy ſtomach ſake, and for thy often infirmities. Surely Timothy was a man that fled ſuch youthful luſts faſt and far enough when he drank nothing but water, and muſt be bid to drink a little Wine (1 Tim. 5. 23.) What luſts then were they which Timothy was exhorted to flee? The words following (ver. 23, 24, 25.) ſeem to clear it; that becauſe he was young, he ſhould take heed of ruſhing into unneceſſary Queſtions and diſputes, which young men are apt to do in the heat of their ſpirits; nor are there any luſts of the lower or ſenſual appetite, to which the heart of man is more intemperately and vainly carried out, then to thoſe of the underſtanding; and therefore the Apoſtle counſels Timothy to avoid unprofitable Queſtions, knowing that theſe gender ſtrife; (Thoſe Queſtions cannot promote faith in or holineſs towards God, which only ſtir up and foment ſtriſe among men) and the ſervants of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle to all, and patient. Theſe vertues, and graces, are oppoſed chiefly to the youthful luſts which Paul exhorts Timothy to take heed of; As if he had ſaid, Be not too hot-headed and haſty (as young men are very apt to be) in purſuing of controverſies and entangling thy ſelf in the thickets of Opinioniſts. Elihu was of an excellent temper, who, becauſe young, was afraid and durſt not ſhew his opinion.

Secondly, Note, It is good to fear, and ſuſpect our own judgments, or, to fear that we may erre; they ſeldom do or ſpeak amiſs who fear they may.

An over-confidence of being in the right, hath ſet'ed many in a wrong way; to be under a ſence of our readineſs to fall, preſerves us from falling, (Hoſea 13. 1.) When Ephraim ſpake trembling, then, he exalted himſelf; There are ſeveral ſences given of that place, but according to our tranſlation, the meaning is carried thus; When Ephraim was in an humble frame, and jealous of himſelf, not confident, nor over-bold (as ſome are who preſume to carry all before them) when he ſpake trembling, or did even tremble to ſpeak, then he did that which tended to his own advancement and exaltation. This gracious trembling doth at once ſettle us the faſter, and raiſe us the higher in the ways and things of God. It is a high point of wiſdom to have low apprehenſions of our ſelves; though that be true, You ſhall be eſteemed of others, as you eſteem your ſelves; If a man under-value himſelf others will; yet, 'tis beſt erring on that hand; Let the price be much too low, rather then any thing too high, when you are occaſioned to put a value upon or rate your ſelves.

Tanti eris aliis quanti tibi fueris.

Again, Conſider what an excellent ſpeaker Elihu was when he came to it, as will appear hereafter, yet ſee how he ſtood trembling, he durſt not ſpeak, nor offer his Opinion.

Hence Note, Uſually they who have moſt ability to ſpeak, are moſt backward to ſpeak, or ſparing of ſpeech.

They are not eaſily brought to it, who have it in them; The belly of Elihu was as full with matter, as an Egg with meat or a bottle with wine; yet how ſlow was he in opening himſelf? They who are and have leaſt are moſt deſirous, if not ambitious, to appear moſt, and would make up in ſeeming what they are not in being. As Elihu in this verſe hath ſhewed himſelf afraid to ſay any thing, ſo he ſhews us in the next, who, he hoped, would have ſaid all, and altogether have ſaved him a labour.

Verſ. 7. I ſaid, days ſhould ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdom;

Loquantur dies ſunt enim verba permittentis q. d. ſinam loqui illos, non præripiam eis loquendi locum. Piſc.

Or, as the Text may be rendred, let days ſpeak; days ſhall not be hindred by me from ſpeaking, let days ſpeak their fill, But what meaneth he, when he ſaith, let days ſpeak? how can days ſpeak; 'tis an elegancy in Rhetorick, when that which belongs to a perſon, is aſcribed to a thing, as here ſpeech to time, let days ſpeak; that is, let thoſe who number many days, who have lived and ſeen many days, let them ſpeak; they who have lived moſt days on earth, are yet indeed (as Bildad told Job, Chap. 8. 9.) but of yeſterday, and ſo have lived, as it were, but a day; yet, according to common account, ſome men are ſo very old, that you may call them days, and to them we may well ſay, let days ſpeak. We read of one who was called John of Times, becauſe he had lived (if the Records ſpeak true) three hundred years and more. An old man is a man of days; and thus Elihu might ſay, let days, that is, old men ſpeak.

Johannes de Temporibus.

But Children can ſpeak, why then doth he ſay, days ſhould ſpeak? I anſwer; There is a twofold ſpeaking; Firſt, natural, thus Children, as ſoon as they are out of their ſwadling-bands, learn to ſpeak; ſuch ſpeaking is but a natural act; Secondly, There is a ſpeaking which is an artificial or ſtudied act; thus Orators and men of eloquence ſpeak; ſuch ſpeaking Elihu intended when he ſaid, days ſhould ſpeak; He looked they ſhould ſpeak to purpoſe, ſpeak by rule, even the quinteſſence of reaſon; he preſumed they would have brought forth ſomewhat worthy of their years, and that he ſhould have received ſuch inſtruction from them, as they had learned from old age it ſelf; I ſaid days ſhould ſpeak. Children can ſpeak words, but old men ſhould ſpeak things, every word ſhould have its weight; their tongues ſhould drop as the hony-comb, and be a tree of life to feed and refreſh many. It is moſt truly ſaid of the word of God in Scripture, Every tittle of it hath a mountain of ſence, a mighty weight of truth in it; And ſurely the words of old men ſhould be weighty and convincing; They ſhould ſpeak truth with ſuch evidence both of teſtimony and reaſon as may put to ſilence all thoſe who ſpeak againſt or beſides either truth or reaſon. As, day unto day (ſaith David, Pſal. 19. 2.) uttereth ſpeech; that is, every day ſpeaks ſomwhat; ſo men of days ſhould ſpeak much both for inſtruction and conviction. I ſaid days ſhould ſpeak.

Hence Note, That's not to be eſteemed as done at all, which is not well done, or not done to purpoſe.

An old man doth not ſpeak unleſs he ſpeaks wiſely, edifyingly, and to the point. The aged ſpeak like children, when they ſpeak fooliſhly, or unfruitfully. He only is a good ſpeaker, who ſpeaks that which may do others good, or make them better. We ſay proverbially and truly both of ſaying and doing, As good never a whit, as never the better. I ſaid days ſhould ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdom.

Elihu reckons the age of aged men, by multitude of Years; this he doth only to heighten the matter; what wiſdom might he not expect from a multitude of Years? that is, from ſuch as had lived a multitude of Years. Certainly thought Elihu, they will,

Teach wiſdom.] There is a twofold wiſdom; Firſt, that which is meerly rational; Secondly, that which is ſpiritual; or there is firſt, a common; Secondly, an holy wiſdom; Elihu expected wiſdom of both ſorts, but chiefly of the latter, from multitude of years. He expected they would teach the wiſdom which the Spirit of God had taught them; that wiſdom which conſiſts in the true knowledg of God and of our ſelves, that wiſdom which is from above, that which man hath not from himſelf, nor is taught him by days or years, by uſe or experience only. And it was very probable, that they who from their youth had been inſtructed in the things of God, being grown old, ſhould alſo be grown further in this wiſdom, and riper in this ſort of knowledg. And therefore Elihu ſpake according to the rule of right reaſon, when he judged that thoſe three aged men had attained to a very high degree of divine light. Such is the goodneſs of God to his people, that uſually they grow in grace and knowledg as they grow in years; For though God is Debtor to no man (but Creditor to all men) and though old age in it ſelf conſidered, deſerves nothing of God, yea is not only undeſerving, but (becauſe ſin multiplies as our days do) ill deſerving, yet as Chriſt ſaith, To him that hath, (that is, who uſeth and improveth what he hath) more ſhall be given; And therefore though true wiſdom be a free gift, and is infuſed and wrought by the Spirit of God, yet we may in probability, and ought according to charity, judg, that they who have moſt days, have alſo moſt wiſdom. Though wiſdom be not entailed upon old age, yet there we are moſt likely to find it. I ſaid, multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdom.

Sapientiam intelligit, quæ in vera dei & noſtri cognitione ſita eſt; cujus author ſit ſpiritus dei, non hominis animus, non anni, non uſus, non experientia. Merl.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, We may well expect they ſhould be very wiſe, and knowing, who have had much means, and many opportunities of obtaining knowledg and wiſdom.

And therefore we have reaſon to expect much wiſdom from thoſe who have had a multitude of years paſt over their heads; It is a common rule in Logick, When ſufficient cauſes are put in act, the effect muſt needs follow; And ſo where probable cauſes are in act, probably the effect will follow. Old men having been well brought up in youth, and having had fair opportunities to attain knowledg and wiſdom, are rightly preſumed and judged well ſtor'd and ſtockt with both. Where ſhall we find wiſdom, if not among the Ancients? where, if not among a multitude or throng of years and days? Where elſe ſhould we look for it? Shall we go and enquire among the green heads and young beginners for it? Shall we go to novices and children for it? We may ſay, ſurely they who have been long taught, have learned much, ſurely they who have heard many ſoul-ſearching Sermons, and continued from day to day under the droppings of divine truths, are full of fruit and very fruitful; whither ſhall we go for fruit elſe, if not to theſe? ſhall we go to thoſe that live as upon the mountains of Gilboa, where David prayed no rain might fall? Shall we go for Goſpel-fruit to the wild naked untaught Indians and Barbarians, or to the rightly inſtituted and plentifully-inſtructed Churches of Chriſt? May we not more then ſay, conclude, ſurely theſe are wiſe, and full of ſpiritual underſtanding? The Roman Orator Cicero took it for granted that his ſon Marcus was well grounded in and plentifully furniſhed with the principles of Philoſophy, becauſe he had been at Athens a whole Year, and there heard Cratippus a famous Philoſopher read many excellent Lectures about things natural and moral. And may we not ſay to many thouſands of Goſpel-hearers and profeſſors, what? you that have heard ſuch, and ſuch able Miniſters, you that have had the word ſo long preached, and that at London (more famous for Goſpel knowledg, then Athens for Philoſophy) ſurely you are filled with all knowledg in the myſtery of Chriſt, and with all goodneſs in the practice of godlineſs. And doubtleſs, the Lord will argue it with thoſe that have had time and opportunities, as a rich price in their hand to get wiſdom, as Elihu did with his friends being aged men. Who can imagin, but that they are full of wiſdom, that they abound in knowledg and ſpiritual underſtanding, who abounding in days and years, have abounded alſo in means of knowledg?

Quanquam te Marce Fili Annum jam audientem Cratippum idq; Athenis abundare oportet præceptis inſtitutiſq; Philoſophiæ, &c. Cic. de Offi. lib. 1.

Note Secondly, As old men ſhould abound in knowledg, ſo they ſhould approve themſelves ready to teach the ignorant.

I ſaid days ſhould ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhould teach wiſdom. 'Tis a duty incumbent upon them who have learned much, to teach much. To conveigh wiſdom and knowledg to others is moſt proper to ſuch, as well as moſt ornamental, and honourable. To be knowing our ſelves is a great mercy, and to help others to the knowledg of what we know is a great duty; we loſe one ſpecial end of knowing, if we know only for our ſelves. To communicate and diffuſe our knowledg to others is the nobleſt way of uſing it, and the beſt way of improving it, and that in a double reſpect; Firſt, it is the beſt way of improving it, as to increaſe; Secondly, it is the beſt way of improving it, as to reward. The more we give out our knowledg, the more we ſhall have of it, and the more we ſhall have for it both from God and men. The Apoſtle ſaith of a Goſpel Miniſter (1 Tim. 3. 2.) He muſt be apt to teach, not only able, but apt, that is, ready and willing to teach, now what the Apoſtle ſpeaks there of an Elder by office, is true of thoſe that are elders in time, they alſo ſhould be apt to teach; not only able, but ready and willing to teach in and according to their ſphere and power. I ſaid days ſhould ſpeak, &c.

Thirdly, Note, 'Tis a reproach to old age, not to be knowing and wiſe, not to be able and apt to teach wiſdom.

That old age is venerable, not which hath white hair, but which whiteneth with vertuous and worthy actions; Elihu ſpeaks here, not only narratively but reprovingly, he reflects upon the ancient, whoſe abilities come not up to or do not equal their years. The aged may well bluſh and be aſhamed to be found ignorant of, or unſkilful in any thing that they ought to know. The Apoſtle ſhames the Hebrews with this, and tells them they were dull of hearing (Heb. 5. 11, 12.) becauſe when for the time they ought to be Teachers, they had need that one ſhould teach them again which be the firſt principles of the Oracles of God, and were become ſuch as had need of Milk and not of ſtrong Meat; As if he had ſaid, When for the time, days, and years, which have gone over your heads, (the reproof lies there) you ſhould be able to teach others, what a ſhame is it that you your ſelves ſhould not be capable of thoſe higher teachings, which he calls ſtrong Meat, but muſt be dealt with about the very principles of Religion, and be fed like Children with milk and ſpoons? How is it that you who ſhould have had ſences exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil, ſhould be ſo little able to diſtinguiſh them, either in their kinds or degrees. Theſe were ſpiritually Children, while naturally old men; They had not learned of their teachers, when the Apoſtle had reaſon to hope they had been able to teach learners, yea were learned teachers. Some are exceeding old, and exceeding ignorant, they have multitude of days upon them, yet if asked, they are not able to hold forth the leaſt Number of divine truths, poſſibly not one in a right underſtanding; As gray hairs are a crown of glory when found in the way of righteouſneſs, ſo gray hairs are crowns of glory, when found in a way of wiſdom, knowledg, and underſtanding, otherwiſe to be old and dotiſh, old and ſottiſh, how diſhonorable is it! yea, they that are old and ignorant, ſhall at laſt find their old age, a ſtrong aggravation, as of all their ſins, ſo eſpecially of their ignorance.

Senectus illa venerabilis eſt, non quæ canis ſed meritis albeſcit. Amb. lib. 7. Epiſt. 30.

VERS. 8, 9.

But there is a ſpirit in man: and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding.

Great men are not always wiſe, neither do the aged underſtand judgment.

Elihu, as was ſhewed in the former words, having in vain waited for the wiſdom of the Ancient, proceeds in this Context to give the reaſon why the Ancient are not always wiſe.

Verſ. 8. There is a ſpirit in man; and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding.

There's the reaſon of it; we render the firſt word of this eighth verſe by the Adverſative particle (But) there is a ſpirit in man; it is uſually rendered by the Affirmative particle, verily, truly, or indeed. Mr. Broughton ſaith, Certes a ſpirit is in ſad man.

There is ſome difference in opinion about this ſpirit affirmed to be in man. Divers expound Elihu intending the Spirit of God; there is a ſpirit; that is, the divine Spirit, the holy Spirit of God, or God the Spirit is in man. One of the Greek tranſlations puts it into the Text; Surely the Spirit of God is in man; and the Chaldee paraphraſe gives it in a like expreſſion; Surely there is a prophetick ſpirit in the ſon of man, or, in the ſons of men. Some are induced to this interpretation, becauſe it would be (ſay they) but a cold argument to commend what he had to ſay for the rectifying Job, by telling him that man hath a reaſonable Soul, which is common to all men. Yet I rather conceive that in this firſt part of the verſe, the ſpirit ſpoken of is the natural ſpirit of man, which in the latter part of the verſe he affirms is inſtructed, by the inſpiration of the Almighty, with ſupernatural light for ſpecial ſervices. The word is often uſed in Scripture to note the reaſonable Soul, or thoſe powers of the Soul which are the veſſels of reaſon, or in which natural reaſon hath its ſeat and exerciſe. There is a power of reaſoning in man, or a ſpirit which is able to diſcourſe of all things; there was ſuch a natural power implanted in man at his Creation, and though that power be much weakned and broken by the fall, yet there are, to this day, ſome remains of it in all men as born into this world; Surely there is a ſpirit in man; And becauſe the word is univerſal, or extendable to all men, therefore it is more then probable the word ſpirit here is to be taken in the largeſt ſence; for every man hath not the Spirit of God: yea the word here uſed for man, notes man of the meaneſt rank or loweſt form; ſurely there is a ſpirit (in Enoſh Mr. Broughton tranſlates) in ſad man, in ſickly man, in weak man, in the ſickleſt, weakeſt and loweſt of men there is a Soul, a Spirit indued with reaſon; this is, as the ſubſtratum or or ground of the whole buſineſs, Surely there is a ſpirit in man. And in the latter part of the Verſe, Elihu ſheweth what that is which heighteneth, raiſeth and improveth this natural ſpirit, certainly there is a ſpirit in man every man hath a reaſonable Soul.

Ὄντως δὲ πνεῦμα Θεοῦ ἐστιν ἐν ἀνθρώποις. Symmach.

And the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding.

Ineſt quidem hominibus vis illa rationatrix ſed quæ niſi Dei afflatu dirigatur, verè ſapere non poteſt. Bez.

The work of God inlightning man is expreſſed by breathing; when Jeſus Chriſt gave his Diſciples the Spirit, he breathed upon them, (or inſpired them) and ſaid, receive ye the holy Ghoſt (John 20.22.) For, as in the firſt Creation, when God gave man a natural being, he breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and man became a living Soul (Gen. 2. 7.) ſo in the ſecond or new Creation God breaths a ſpiritual life into that life, and man becomes a quickned Soul; And as his own Soul is quickned by the holy Spirit of grace, ſo he is fitted, as an inſtrument in the hand of God, to quicken the Souls of others with grace, or to inſtruct them in the ways of grace. The inſpiration of the Almighty

Giveth underſtanding.] But hath not the reaſonable Soul of every man an underſtanding? Doubtleſs it hath. Therefore I anſwer; The underſtanding may be taken two ways; Firſt, for the faculty; Secondly, for the furniture and enrichings of it; now though every man hath an underſtanding, yet every man hath not a furniſhed and an enriched underſtanding, a beautified and an adorned underſtanding. The Scripture ſpeaks of ſome men as if they were nothing but underſtanding (Prov. 1. 5.) A wiſe man will increaſe knowledg, and a man of underſtanding will attain unto all Counſel; Every man hath an underſtanding, but every man is not a man of underſtanding; every man is not a man of underſtanding in natural and civil things, much leſs in things divine and ſpiritual. As ſome men have ſo much will, or rather wilfulneſs, that they are nothing but will; and ſome have ſo much paſſion, that they are nothing but paſſion; ſo others have ſuch riches and treaſures of underſtanding, as if they were nothing but underſtanding. Now, it is the ſpecial inſpiration of the Almighty which giveth ſuch an underſtanding; that is, an enlarged and an enriched underſtanding. We ſay, the inſpiration of the Almighty

תבינם Intellectificat eos. Bren.

Giveth underſtanding.] The Hebrew is but one word, which we may expreſs as ſome do, It Intellectifieth. So then, the ſcope and meaning of this Verſe is plainly this; That howſoever every man, the meaneſt of men, hath a reaſonable Soul, yet the furniture of the underſtanding, or mans fulneſs of wiſdom and knowledg is by gift or inſpiration of the Almighty; and therefore ſome read the Verſe thus; Surely there is a ſpirit in man, but the inſpiration of the Almighty maketh them to underſtand. Thus Elihu would gain credit and Authority to what he had to deliver, as being by the teachings and dictates of the Spirit of God. The Seventy comply fully with this rendering; There is a ſpirit in men, but the inſpiration of the Almighty teacheth; As if Elihu had ſaid, Though man be endued with natural knowledg and reaſon, which can do ſomewhat, yet until light ſhines from above, till the ſpirit of God comes in and enlargeth the natural ſpirit, it cannot ſee far, nor do any great matter. Or take the ſence of the whole verſe thus, in connection with what went before; Though old age hath odds of youth, yet one man as well as another hath a ſpirit of reaſon and judgment in him, whereby through ſupply of ſpecial inſpiration from God (who can do all things) he may be able to know that which want of years denieth him. From the words thus opened,

Eſt ſpiritus in hominibus, ſpiratio autem omnipotentis docet. Sept.

Obſerve, Firſt, Wiſdom or underſtanding is the gift of the Spirit of God.

We have a like aſſertion by way of queſtion in the 38. Chapter of this Book (Ver. 36.) Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts, or who hath given underſtanding to the heart? who hath? hath man put wiſdom into himſelf; or hath he made his own heart to underſtand? the queſtion denies, no, man hath not done it. Wiſdom is an Influence or an Inſpiration from the Almighty; knowledg to order common things is of the Lord (Iſa. 28.26,29.) His God doth inſtruct him (the husbandman he means) to diſcretion (in ordering the ground) and doth teach him; how much more in ſpiritual things and the myſteries of the kingdom of Heaven. (*Pro.*16.1.) The preparation of the heart in man, and the anſwer of the Tongue (that is, The fitting of the heart for any right anſwer of the Tongue) is from the Lord; both the general preparation of the heart for ſervice or uſe, and the ſpecial preparation of it to this or that ſervice and uſe is of the Lord, and ſo is the Anſwer of the Tongue for the diſcharge of it. (Eccleſ. 2. 26.) God giveth to a man that is good in his ſight, wiſdom and knowledg and joy; As God giveth man the knowledg of things, ſo wiſdom to know how to order and manage the things that he knoweth; Some have more knowledg then they know how to manage, their knowledg maſters them, they are not maſters of their knowledg; they have more knowledg then wiſdom. Now God gives to him that is good in his ſight (that is, to the man whom he chooſeth and is pleaſed with) knowledg and wiſdom; and then he gives him joy, that is, Comfort in the exerciſe of that knowledg wherewith he is endued; this is a notable and a noble gift of God. We read (Iſa. 11. 2.) The ſpirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding; It is a propheſie of Chriſt, who being made in all things like to man, had a natural ſpirit, or a reaſonable faculty, and he had that furniſhed by the ſpirit without meaſure; the ſpirit of the Lord reſted upon him, the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, the ſpirit of counſel and might, the ſpirit of knowledg and of the fear of the Lord; even Chriſt as man received an unction or inſpiration from the Almighty for the fulfilling of his Mediatorial Office; much more do meer men for the fulfilling of any Office they are called unto. (2 Cor. 3. 5.) We are not ſufficient of our ſelves ſo much as to think a good thought; Our ſufficiency is by the Inſpiration of the Almighty. (James 1.17.) Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above; It is not a vapour that riſeth out of the earth, but an Influence which diſtills and drops down from Heaven, it is from above; that is, from God who though he be every where filling both Heaven and Earth with his eſſential preſence, yet (according to Scripture Language) his moſt glorious and maniſeſtative preſence is above; and therefore to ſay, every good gift is from above, is all one as to ſay, it is from God. Daniel and thoſe other three Noble youths of the Jewiſh race exceeded all the wiſe men of Chaldea in rare abilities, and the Scripture tells us, whence it was, that they did ſo. (Dan. 1.17.) As for theſe four Children, God gave them knowledg and skill in all learning and wiſdom; and the aſſertion is laid down in general (Dan. 2.21.) He (that is, God) changeth times and ſeaſons, he removeth Kings and ſetteth up Kings, he giveth wiſdom to the wiſe, and knowledg to them that know underſtanding; All theſe Scriptures ſpeak with one conſent the language of this Text, It is the Inſpiration of the Almighty that giveth underſtanding. And if we compare (1 Sam. 10. 1.) with the 6. 9. 11. and 12. Verſes of the ſame Chapter, we have a moſt remarkable paſſage to this purpoſe. Where Saul having received the unction from Samuel, both as an aſſurance of and a preparation for the exerciſe of his kingly Office over Iſrael; Samuel tells him (Ver. 6.) The Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou ſhalt prophecy with them (that is, with the company of Prophets ſpoken of in the former Verſe) and ſhalt be turned into another man. And the holy Text adds (Ver. 9.) God gave (or as we put in the Margin turned) him another heart. There is a twofold turning or changing of the heart, or of a man into another man. Firſt, by gifts of Illumination; Secondly, by the grace of Sanctification; the great change of the heart is that change, of Converſion, by the grace of Sanctification; Saul was not turned into another man, nor had he another heart, as changed by Grace (for he ſhewed ſtill his old heart in his new kingly ſtate) but he had another heart, or he was another man as changed by gifts; the ſpirit of the Almighty gave him underſtanding for the Government which he was called to; for whereas before he had only a private ſpirit, taken up about cattel and the affairs of husbandry, then God gave him a ſpirit of prudence and valour, a ſpirit of wiſdom and magnanimity, a Noble and an Heroical Spirit, befitting the Governour of ſo great and populous a kingdom, both in peace and War. Every Calling is a myſtery, much more the Calling of Kings and Supream Magiſtrates. It was ſaid to Imperial Rome; Do thou remember to Rule Nations and Kingdoms, let theſe be thy Arts; This Art the Spirit of the Tu regere imperio populos Romane memento. Hæ tibi ſint artes—

Lord gave Saul, even knowledg and skill to rule and govern; yea he had a gift of Illumination, not only for government, but for propheſie, he was found amongſt the Prophets; and when (verſ. 11.) they asked (wondering) Is Saul alſo among the Prophets? as if they had ſaid, How ſtrange and unheard of a thing is this, that Saul ſhould be furniſhed with the gift of propheſie, and join himſelf with the Prophets? They who before were acquainted with his perſon and manner of education were even amazed at the ſight; and while they were ſurprized with this amazement, one of the ſame place (as it ſeems wiſer then the reſt) Anſwered and ſaid, but who is their father? (verſ. 12.) That's the ſpecial word, for which I alledg this Text. What? Saul among the Prophets! Is it not ſtrange that he ſhould be inſpired! Then one anſwered and ſaid, who is their father? As if he had ſaid, Do not any longer ſtand wondering at this thing, but conſider who is the father of Saul as a Prophet, as alſo the father of all theſe Prophets. Saul was the Son of Kiſh as to natural deſcent, but he had another father as he was a Prophet, and ſo all theſe Prophets, had (beſides their fathers as men) one and the ſame father as Prophets. Therefore wonder not that ye hear Saul prophecying, for all theſe whom ye hear and ſee prophecying, have not theſe gifts by birth from men, nor by induſtry from themſelves, but from God who is a free agent, and inſpireth whom he pleaſeth. The ſame God who, by inſpiration, hath freely beſtowed thoſe gifts upon the other Prophets, hath alſo inſpired Saul with a gift of prophecy. The Spirit of God is his father (in that capacity) as well as the father of theſe other Prophets. And hence the Scripture runs in the plural number, who is their father? Unleſs God give power from above, the underſtanding is dark, the memory unfaithful, the tongue ſtammering; it is light from on high that teacheth the skill of prophecy. Solomon had the greateſt meaſure of underſtanding of any meer man ſince the fall of man, and of him it is ſaid, (1 Kings 4. 29.) God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding exceeding much, and largeneſs of heart, even as the ſand that is on the Sea-ſhore. Solomon's heart had been as narrow as another mans, if the inſpiration of the Almighty had not widened it. When Moſes was ſo ſinfully modeſt, as to excuſe his Embaſſie to Pharaoh, ſuppoſing himſelf not fitted for ſuch an undertaking (Exod. 4. 10, 11.) O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken unto thy ſervant, but I am ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue. God preſently put the queſtion to him, Who hath made mans mouth? &c. As if he had ſaid, Cannot he give words into thy mouth, who gave thee a mouth? Cannot he act thy Organs of ſpeech who made them? Now therefore go and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou ſhalt ſay. The inſpiration of the Almighty ſhall give thee underſtanding. Heathen Poets have boaſted of their raptures and inſpirations. The people of God have a promiſe of the Spirit to lead them into all truth, and to help them in maintaining thoſe truths.

Eſt Deus in nobis, ſunt & commercia cœli, ſedibus æthereis ſpiritus iſte venit. Ovid.

From this general, that the furniture of the underſtanding is the gift of God, or by inſpiration of the Almighty, take theſe hints by way of Corollary.

Firſt, If a right underſtanding flow from the inſpiration of the Almighty, then pray for an underſtanding, pray for the Spirit; Ye have not becauſe ye ask not, ſaith the Apoſtle (James 4. 2.) God gives wiſdom, but he gives it to them that ask it (Jam. 1. 5.) If any man want wiſdom, let him ask it of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. God upbraideth us not, either with our want of wiſdom, or with the abundance of wiſdom, that he is pleaſed to ſupply us with, and give out to us. When Solomon was put to his choice what to ask, he ſaid, Give thy ſervant an underſtanding heart. God gave Solomon wiſdom, but Solomon asked it firſt. All good things are ſhut up in promiſes, and the promiſes are opened to give out their good things, when we pray. (Prov. 23. 5.) When thou cryeſt after knowledg, and lifteſt up thy voyce for underſtanding, then ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledg of God. To pray well is to ſtudy well, becauſe by prayer light comes in from on high to make ſtudies ſucceſsful, and the work to proſper in our hand. As the Almighty breatheth down on us, ſo we muſt breath up to the Almighty. To expect and not to pray, is to tempt God, not to truſt him.

Secondly, Do not only pray for wiſdom, but uſe means, but be induſtrious for the obtaining of it; The gift of God doth not take off the diligence of man. God doth not work in us that we ſhould ſit ſtill. (Prov. 2. 4.) Then ſhalt thou know wiſdom when thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſure. And where is this treaſure to be had? Surely in the mines of Scripture, and in all thoſe appointments wherein God hath promiſed to meet his people, to ſhine upon them and give them the knowledg of his ways in Jeſus Chriſt.

Thirdly, Be thankful for any gift of knowledg; for every beam and ray of light be thankful; it is God who commands light to ſhine out of darkneſs, and that God who at firſt commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, dayly ſhineth into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledg of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, (2 Cor. 4. 6.)

Fourthly, If underſtanding be from inſpiration, then they who have received much underſtanding, muſt be caution'd againſt two evils; firſt, not to be proud, nor high minded; that our gifts come from on high, ſhould make us very low in our own eyes. What haſt thou that thou haſt not received, and if thou haſt received it, why doeſt thou glory as if thou hadſt not received it? Theſe are the Apoſtles Soul-humbling and Pride-mortifying queſtions or expoſtulations rather (1 Cor. 4. 7.) You that have received the greateſt gifts, whom the inſpiration of the Almighty hath made moſt wiſe and underſtanding, be ye moſt humble in your ſelves. Secondly, let me add (which is another dangerous Rock upon which great gifts are apt to daſh and ſplit you) take heed of deſpiſing thoſe who have received leſs; our portions are divided and allotted to us by the hand of God. Divine wiſdom gives us our portion of wiſdom; he that hath moſt, hath no more then God hath given; and he that hath leaſt, hath as much as God is pleaſed to give. They deſpiſe the wiſdom and queſtion the underſtanding of God in giving wiſdom, who deſpiſe thoſe to whom he gives leſs wiſdom and underſtanding then he hath given to themſelves.

Fifthly, To thoſe who have received but little, I ſay alſo two things, by way of caution; firſt, do not envy thoſe who have received much; it is of God that they have more then you, is your eye evil becauſe the eye of God is good? Secondly, be not diſcontented with your own leſſer portion; do not ſit down ſullen; ſay not, we will do nothing with what we have received, becauſe we have not ſo much as others: We know the doom paſſed on him who having but one talent hid it in a napkin. If we are diſcontent with a little portion, or with one talent, that little is too much, and that one too many for us; nothing doth more dim the glory of God, nor more deſtroy and eat out our own comforts, then diſcontent; the Devil, ſince his fall, is the moſt diſcontented Spirit in the World, and he was not contented while he ſtood, he thought he was not high enough, and that was his undoing. They who are diſcontent with the gift of God, loſe what is given, and ſo fall into deeper diſcontent; yea, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in another caſe (1 Tim. 3. 6.) into the condemnation of the Devil.

Sixthly, Then, let us not be lifted up in our own natural wiſdom and reaſon, he that would be wiſe, muſt become a fool, (1 Cor. 3. 18.) until we ſee our own wiſdom folly, we cannot attain the wiſdom of God, or Godly wiſdom.

Seventhly, This ſhews us the reaſon of the various kinds, and ſeveral meaſures of gifts among the Sons of men. Men differ not more in the meaſures and degrees of their outward eſtates, worldly riches, titles and honours, then they do in the meaſures and degrees of their inward abilities, wiſdom, knowledg, and underſtanding: Men differ not more in the feature and figure of their faces, then in the furniture of their minds. One hath five talents, another two, a third but one. And as the various degrees of the ſame gift, ſo diverſities of gifts are from the ſoveraign pleaſure of God. The Apoſtle is large and very diſtinct in this matter (1 Cor. 12. 4, 8, 9, 11.) There are diverſities of gifts, but the ſame Spirit; to one is given by the Spirit the word of wiſdom, to another the word of knowledg by the ſame Spirit, to another prophecy, to another diſcerning of Spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, &c. But all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every man ſeverally as he will. It is only the will of the Spirit, the will of God which makes this diviſion and diverſification of gifts among men. And as the Apoſtle ſheweth here the riſe or ſpring of all to be from God, ſo he had ſhewed that the reaſon and intendment of all this is the benefit of men (Ver. 7.) The manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withall. Whatever your gift is God hath given it for profit and uſe. One hath skill in ſciences, another in languages, one is more acute, another more ſolid, one hath a ſtronger judgment, another a quicker phanſie and a more ſearching invention. One is beſt at an argument to convince the underſtanding, another at a motive to quicken the affections; one can confute an error and ſtate a Controverſie well, and another can beſt diſcover ſin, and convince the Conſcience; one hath weight of matter, but is ſlow of ſpeech, another hath a fluent tongue, but is leſs material; a third is both; but all to profit withall. Such a Character was given of thoſe three Eminent men in the beginning of the reformation, Luther, Eraſmus, and Melancthon; Luther had matter and not words, he did not affect any exactneſs of ſtile or ſpeech; Eraſmus had words at will, but leſs weight of matter; Melancthon was full in both, there was a concurrence or complication of many eminent gifts in him. The ſame Eraſmus, mentioned laſt but one, hath a like paſſage in his Preface to the works of the Ancients (which he with wonderful skil and induſtry redeemed from many miſtakes, and ſet forth more defecate and pure to the view and uſe of the world) where obſerving the different veins of divers Authors in their writings, he concludes thus; Several men have their ſeveral gifts, as it pleaſeth the gift-giving Spirit to give to them. In Athanaſius we admire a ſerious perſpicuity of ſpeaking, and in Chryſoſtom a flowing Eloquence; in Baſil, beſides his ſublimity, a pleaſant language; in Hilary we ſee a lofty ſtile, well matcht with the loftineſs of his matter; in Cyprian we reverence a ſpirit worthy the Crown of Martyrdom; and we are in love with the ſweet incentives and modeſty of St. Ambroſe; In Jerome we commend his rich treaſures of Scripture-knowledg, and muſt acknowledg in Gregory a pure and unpoliſht ſanctity. He ſhuts up this; Leſt I ſhould be tedious; others have, from the bounty of the ſame Spirit, their diſtinct abilities, by which they are commended to the conſciences of the Godly. The Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding. And as this is true with reſpect to the gifts of Illumination, which Elihu pitcheth here upon; ſo 'tis much more true in reference to the gifts of ſanctification; The Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth a ſpiritual underſtanding to know ſin, and hate it, to know Chriſt and love him; ſo to know as to be conformed unto, yea transformed into that which we know. The Inſpiration of the Almighty gives this underſtanding, this heart-changing and life-renewing underſtanding.

Res ſine verbis Lutherus, verba ſine rebus Eraſmus, res & verba Philippus.

Again, There is a ſpirit [in man] and the Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding; The word is Enos, weak man.

Hence Note, God can make the weakeſt and the unlikelieſt of men wiſe and full of underſtanding.

It is no matter what the man is, if God will uſe him; he can make Enos to be Iſh, the weak man ſtrong, the ignorant a learned, a knowing man; Amos was a husbandman, and God gave him an excellent underſtanding; the Apoſtles were Fiſhermen, and yet the Inſpiration of the Almighty made them wiſe above many; God can make the wiſe fooliſh, and fools wiſe. The power of God triumphs over all humane power, and in all humane infirmity. So much the Apoſtle teacheth (1 Cor. 1. 27.) God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe, and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; And baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed hath God choſen, yea and things which are not, to bring to nought things which are, that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence. God chuſeth thoſe things which have the greateſt improbability for his work, that the power and ſucceſs of the work may be aſcribed to him alone. When we chuſe, we ſhould chuſe thoſe that are fit for the work, to which they are choſen; we ſhould not chuſe a fool to govern, nor one that is of low parts himſelf to teach others; we ſhould pitch upon the wiſeſt and ableſt we can get. Joſeph ſaid well to Pharaoh (Gen. 41. 33.) Look out a man diſcreet and wiſe, and ſet him over the Land of Egypt. We cannot make men wiſer then they are, and therefore we muſt chuſe and take thoſe that are wiſe to do our work. But when God comes to do his work, he often takes the fooliſh and the weak, becauſe as he calleth them to, ſo he can fit them for his work. As the ſtrongeſt oppoſition of nature againſt grace cannot hinder the work of the Spirit; when the Spirit comes, he will make a proud man humble, a covetous man liberal, an unclean perſon modeſt and temperate; ſo the weakneſs of nature cannot hinder his work. If a man be low in parts, God can raiſe him; Out of the mouths of babes and ſucklings haſt thou ordained ſtrength (Pſal. 8. 2.) or (as Chriſt alledgeth that Text, Matth. 21. 16.) Thou haſt perfected praiſe; one might think, Surely God will take the aged, the learned and great for his praiſe; no, he ordains praiſe to himſelf out of the mouths of babes and ſucklings, that is, out of their mouths who in all natural conſiderations, are no way formed up nor fitted to ſhew forth his praiſe. Iſa. 32. 4.) The heart of the raſh (or haſty) ſhall underſtand knowledg. Heady and inconſiderate perſons, whoſe tongues (as we ſay) run before their wits, ſhall then be grave, adviſed, and ſerious, both in what they do, and (as it followeth) in what they ſay; The tongue of the ſtammerers ſhall ſpeak plainly, that is, clear words with clear reaſon; or they ſhall ſpeak well both in matter and form, right things rightly. All this the Lord doth that he may honour himſelf, and lift up his own name only, which alone is to be lifted up. Never fear to put an empty veſſel to a full fountain; no matter how empty the veſſel be, if the fountain be full; God delights in broken weak and empty creatures, that he may mend, ſtrengthen, and fill them. There is a ſpirit in man [in weak man] and the Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding.

Elihu having ſhewed the Original of mans wiſdom to be from God in this 8. Verſe, makes an inference from it in the 9. The inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding; And what then? Surely even hence it cometh to paſs, that, Verſ. 9. Great men are not always wiſe, neither do the aged underſtand Judgment.

It is well conceived by ſome Interperters, that the Apoſtle doth more then allude to, even cite this Text (1 Cor. 1. 26.) You ſee your Calling Brethren, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many Noble are called. If God ſhould chuſe only or moſtly wiſe men, they would be ready to ſay, we are choſen for our wiſdom; If he ſhould chuſe and call only or moſtly rich men, they would be ready to think, we are choſen for our riches; If he ſhould call only or moſtly Kings and Princes, they would conclude, we are called for our Greatneſs. Therefore the Lord paſſeth by moſt of theſe, and calleth the Fiſherman, calleth the poor man, the ignorant man, and ſaith, You that have nothing, you that (in the eſteem of the world) are nothing, do you follow me, who have all things, and can ſupply you with all. Thus here ſaith Elihu, Great men are not always wiſe; Why not? the reaſon is becauſe God doth not always beſtow wiſdom upon them, It is the Inſpiration of the Almighty that giveth underſtanding; Greatneſs doth it not; Not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many Great or Noble are called. Elihu and the Apoſtle Paul ſpeak the ſame thing almoſt in the ſame words. This is alſo a proof of the divine Authority of this Book, as well as that (1 Cor. 1. 19.) taken out of the ſpeech of Eliphaz in the 5. Chapter at the 13. Verſe; He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, &c.

Great men are not always wiſe.

The word always is not at all in the Original Text, and therefore put in a different Character; Great men are not wiſe; but it's well ſupplied by that word always; For the meaning of Elihu is not that great men are never wiſe, but not always wiſe.

Great men, the Rabbies, the honourable men of the world, men in Authority and great place are intended by this word. The Officers which King Ahaſuerus ſet over his feaſt, are called Rabbies (Eſt. 1. 8.) ſo that we may expound it here in the largeſt ſence, as including all ſorts and degrees of Great ones.

רב Magnus unde Rabbi Magiſter, qui multam eruditionem habet. Honorabiles Pag. Magnates. Tygur.

Great men are not always wiſe.

That is, wiſdom neither floweth from, nor is it always aſſociated with greatneſs: As ſome are little yet great, little in the World, yet great in true wiſdom; ſo others are great, yet little, they are little in wiſdom, or have little true wiſdom; though they are great in the World, or have great worldly wiſdom.

Hence Note, It is not greatneſs of birth, of place, or power, that can make any man wiſe, nor doth it at all aſſure us, that a man is wiſe, becauſe we ſee him exalted to and ſettled in a place of power and greatneſs.

The Prophet (Jer. 5. 4, 5.) finding ſome very incorrigible and hardned in ſinful courſes, concluded them mean perſons, and in the loweſt form of the people. Therefore I ſaid, Surely theſe are poor, they are fooliſh, for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the Judgment of their God. To be poor and fooliſh is very common; theſe are poor and fooliſh (ſaith the Prophet) but ſurely I ſhall find the great ones better accommodated with wiſdom; and thereupon he reſolved, I will get me to the great men, and will ſpeak unto them, for they have known the way of the Lord, and the Judgment of their God; That is, theſe great men have had great means of knowledg, and we have reaſon to ſuppoſe them as great in knowledg, as they are in place or in power. But did the great men anſwer his expectation? Did he find that in them, which he ſought and looked for? Nothing leſs: The great men proved more fooliſh, or leſs in true knowledg then the poor, as it followeth, But theſe have altogether broken the yoke and burſt the bonds; as if he had ſaid, I thought theſe great men had been wiſe, but I ſee they are very fools. What can be a greater argument of folly, then to break thoſe yoaks and bonds, which the wiſdom of God hath put upon us? 'Tis both our wiſdom and our freedom to be bound by the moſt wiſe and holy will of God; and hence the Prophet accounts this one as ſtrong as a thouſand arguments, to prove that the great men among the Jews were not wiſe, becauſe they were not only unwilling to be bound to the obedience of the will of God, but wilfully burſt thoſe bonds. When Jeſus Chriſt came into the World, the great ones, the Rabbies had the leaſt true wiſdom, they would not believe on him, nor receive him; yea ſome boaſted of this their unbelief as an argument of their wiſdom (John 7. 48, 49.) Have any of the Rulers, or of the Phariſees believed on him? No; they were too wiſe to believe; faith in Chriſt was left to the fools, and counted folly by thoſe wiſe men; But this people (ſay they, meaning the common ſort or ignorant vulgar) who knoweth not the Law are curſed. And they thought them accurſed becauſe they believed in and received Jeſus Chriſt, the chiefeſt bleſſing. Great men are not always wiſe in civil things, very rarely in ſpiritual things; they have not always the wiſdom of a man, they ſeldom have the wiſdom of a real Chriſtian. They are not always worldly wiſe, or wiſe for this preſent world, much leſs are they always wiſe for the world which is to come. Great in title, and wiſe in truth, are a ſweet couple, but ſeldom ſeen. If ſo

Then there is no taking of things upon truſt from the greateſt in the World. As it is dangerous to follow the multitude (Exod. 23. 2.) the moſt are uſually the worſt, and they who are evil, will lead to evil; ſo there is no following great ones blindfold, for even they are often blind, or (which is worſe) will not ſee; and they who either do not or will not ſee their own way, may ſoon lead others out of the way, and turn them aſide to that which is not good.

Οὐχ οἱ πολύχρονοι εἰσιν σοφοί. Sept.

Again, This firſt part of the verſe (Great men are not always wiſe) is rendred by the Septuagint, men of many years, or great in years, are not always wiſe. The Original word may refer to greatneſs of age, which conſiſts in having lived many years, as well as to greatneſs of honour, which conſiſts in the injoying of high places and dignities. But I rather adhere to our tranſlation, that the great men here intended are the great in power and place, not in years and days, though it be a truth, that ſuch are not always wiſe; and if we take in that ſence alſo, it is a further confirmation of the general truth in hand, that wiſdom is the gift of God, and therefore thoſe men are not always wiſe, whom we might moſt probably look upon as ſuch. For as we ſee great men, who have the advantage of means for education in learning, are not always the wiſeſt; ſo the aged, who have that great advantage of time and experience to gather wiſdom are not; both often come ſhort in abilities of underſtanding and prudence, the former of their inferiours, the latter of their Juniors. This is expreſs in the latter part of the verſe, and therefore needs not be inferred from this firſt part of it, by way of interpretation; Great men are not always wiſe, then follows this disjunctive propoſition;

Neither do the aged underſtand Judgment; or, that which is right.

The word Miſhpat is taken two ways in Scripture; firſt, for the rule of righteouſneſs; Samuel told the people, the judgment or manner of the Kingdom, (1 Sam. 10. 25.) that is, how the Kingdom ſhould be ordered and governed, according to judgment and rules of righteouſneſs. Secondly, Such an actual Adminiſtration as is according to that rule of righteouſneſs, is in Scripture called judgment. The aged do not always underſtand judgment in either notion; they do not always underſtand the rule, nor do they always act according to the rule which they underſtand; they who fail in one, much more in both theſe, do not underſtand judgment. Sometimes the aged are at a loſs and know not what to do, and oftentimes they are ſo intangled with their luſts, that they will not do what they know. Yet here remember, theſe words are not to be taken as an abſolute negation of wiſdom to the ancient, much leſs as a reproach upon them: For uſually the aged are moſt underſtanding in judgment, and we may more probably and do more frequently find judgment with them, then among thoſe that are young. And therefore when Elihu ſaith, neither do the aged underſtand Judgment; his meaning is only this, old age doth not give wiſdom, nor is it the old mans priviledg only, to underſtand Judgment.

Hence Note, As honour or greatneſs of eſtate, ſo age or greatneſs of years, doth not confer wiſdom upon any man.

Time doth neither ſtop nor convey knowledg and underſtanding; old men have not their knowledg by their Antiquity, and therefore, as no man is wiſe at all times, ſo no man is made wiſe by time. In a ſtrict ſence, wiſdom is not the Daughter of time, but the gift of the eternal. It is not time but divine favour which makes wiſe. They are ſoon made wiſe and learned, whom God will teach. The teachings of God make young men like the ancients in wiſdom, and without his teaching, the aged are like Children in folly. God ſometimes denieth wiſdom to the ancient, and ſometimes he takes wiſdom from them. And God ſuffers old men to act like Children, to go out of the way, to do fooliſhly, that he may ſtain the glory of all fleſh, and that all might both know and have their dependance on him alone. Hence take two or three deductions.

Intelligentia juris non pendet à ſenectute. Piſc.

Firſt, From the connection of theſe two verſes, we learn that, The Spirit of God is not tyed to any age or degree of men; the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding; great men are not always wiſe, &c. The Spirit of God is a free Spirit; and as the Spirit is free becauſe he moves without any deſert in the object; as alſo becauſe he gives liberally, plentifully, and abundantly; ſo the Spirit of God is free as to the choice of objects, he give here and not there, he paſſeth by this man, and takes hold of that, he ſometimes paſſeth by the rich, and takes the poor, (Eccl. 9. 15.) The poor wiſe man ſaved the City; ſometimes he paſſeth by the old, and takes the young; and he doth all this, that we might aſcribe all to himſelf, not to the age of man, not to any thing in man. God hath promiſed to be with his Church, and with his Miniſters by his Spirit to the end of the World; but the Spirit hath his choice as to particular men, and none have been more deceived then they that thought the Spirit in bonds or tyed to them; Come (ſay they, Jer. 18. 18.) let us deviſe devices againſt Jeremiah; for the Law ſhall not periſh from the Prieſt, nor Counſel from the wiſe, nor the word from the Prophet; The Prieſts are of this opinion, and Jeremiah is out of the way, he is a falſe Prophet, and therefore certainly we may proceed in our devices againſt him, for we have the opinion of the Prieſts and Prophets with us; Thus they ſpake, as if the Spirit of God had been bound up to that order. We ought to ſeek wiſdom at the Prieſts mouth; yet they who reſt upon their wiſdom may ſoon be deceived; knowledg may periſh from the Prieſts mouth, and counſel from the ancient. The great Cheat which the Pope hath put upon the world is, That the Spirit of God is tyed to the pumels of his Chair, or that there he cannot erre. But as particular men, ſo whole Councils of learned and aged men have erred. True wiſdom is not the birth of time, nor the peculiar of a party, but the free gift of the Spirit of God, who is moſt free, both in what he giveth, and to whom he giveth. Therefore

Secondly, Let us not pin our faith or our Conſciences upon men, how great, or how Ancient ſoever they are; Let us give reſpect to the Ancient, and the Honourable, (not to do it is not only uncivil but ſinful) yet let us not give up our Conſciences to them; For great men are not always wiſe, neither do the aged underſtand Judgment; We muſt not reverence any mans perſon to the prejudice of the truth. The opinions of great or ancient men are not to be received, as Oracles, without debate; we have liberty to conſider of them, and to compare them with the rule: We muſt prove all things, and hold faſt that only which is good. A heathen gave that direction to thoſe who hear Philoſophical diſcourſes; You muſt take off all thoſe conſiderations which concern the perſon ſpeaking, and only mind what is ſpoken: his Antiquity, that he is an old man, and his authority, that he is a great man, muſt not ſway you; His outward geſture, tone and gravity, his ſevere or demure looks, which much affect, almoſt aſtoniſh unlearned auditors, and make them ready to ſwallow any thing that is uttered, muſt all be laid aſide when the matter delivered and aſſerted, comes to be examin'd and laid in the ballance. Believe what is ſaid becauſe you judg it true, do not believe it true becauſe ſuch or ſuch a man hath ſaid it; becauſe an old man, or a great man, or a good man hath ſaid it. How ſtrictly then and religiouſly is this to be obſerved in hearing the word of God, and the doctrins of faith? in that caſe be ſure to lay aſide all that concerns the ſpeaker, and weigh what he ſpeaks alone and ſingle in the Ballance of the Sanctuary.

Quæ in Philoſophia dicuntur ea oportet exiſtimatione ejus qui dicit detracta, ſeorſum per ſe examinari, Etenim canities dictis, geſtus, ſupercilium, &c. faciunt ad percellendum imperitum Auditorem. Plutarch. de Auditione.

Thirdly, Then, we ought not to deſpiſe what young men ſay, becauſe of their youth. If old men be not always wiſe, then wiſdom may be with the young; ſometimes an opinion is undervalued, becauſe it is the opinion of a young man; and truths are not received, becauſe he that delivers them hath not ſeen many days. As it is a ſin to adore old age, or to give up our faith and Conſcience to it; ſo it is a ſin to ſlight youth, in doing ſo we may ſlight the truth. Paul ſaith to Timothy, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth; Which as it is a Caution to Timothy (as hath been ſhewed) to carry himſelf wiſely and warily, leſt he ſhould occaſion others to ſlight or deſpiſe him; ſo it is a Caution to the people, that they ſhould not deſpiſe him becauſe of his youth; That which is the true glory of gray hairs, doth ſometimes Crown the youthful head, wiſdom (I mean) and ripeneſs of underſtanding. It was ſaid of a godly woman, She had a youthful body, but an aged mind. Samuel was young in years, but in grace elder then old Eli; Jeremiah was young, but how wiſe did the Inſpiration of God make him? Daniel was young, yet wiſer then all the Magicians and Aſtrologers; Timothy and Titus were young, yet Honourable for prudence and piety; and therefore, ſeeing great men are not always wiſe, neither do the aged underſtand Judgment, as we ſhould not accept what old men ſay becauſe of their age; ſo let us not ſlight what young men ſay becauſe of their youth.

---Tempora quippe virtutem non prima negant, non ultima donant.

Corpore juvencula, animo cana fuit. Ambr. de Agnete. Ser. 90.

When God furniſheth young men with abilities, and calleth them to his work, even old men muſt be willing, at leaſt not diſdain, to hear them. Chriſt muſt be heard in or by whomſoever he will ſpeak. God indeed doth uſually ſerve himſelf by the aged, yet he hath abundantly teſtified that truth is not bound up to old age. Modeſty ſhould bridle young men from being over-forward to ſhew themſelves, but it muſt not ſhut or ſeal up their lips. Old men muſt have the preheminence; Elihu ſhews us that order (Ver. 7.) I (ſaith he) ſaid days ſhall ſpeak, and multitude of years ſhall teach wiſdom: We muſt firſt attend and give ear to our elders. And when we are to chuſe Officers or Governours, to chuſe ignorant Greenheads before knowing Gray hairs, were a preverting of all order. Therefore men of years having grace and wiſdom proportionable, are to be preferred before the younger. In that caſe it were a ſhame to advance young men, with a neglect of the aged. But when God gives more grace and underſtanding to young men then to ancients, our approbation ſhould follow his preparation, and whom he qualifies beſt, we ſhould ſooneſt chuſe. The order of Nature is good, yet not always fitteſt to be obſerved. Right reaſon and the rule of the word of God muſt ſway and caſt our vote, not the age and years of men. When Samuel was ſent to anoint a King in the place of Saul among the ſons of Jeſſe, he looking on Eliab ſaid, Surely the Lords anointed is before him (1Sam. 16. 5.) but the Lord ſaid unto him (Ver. 6.) Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature, becauſe I have refuſed him, for the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. Now, as we are not to be taken with the beauty and ſtature of men, ſo not with their gray hairs and outward gravity. Old men are not always wiſe; wiſdom and a heart for God, a good heart, or a heart to do good, may dwell with a Green Head, even with a greener then ſeven, the eighth or greeneſt of all (ſo was Davids) that come or ſtand in a day of Election before us.

VERS. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

Therefore I ſaid, Hearken to me: I alſo will ſhew mine opinion.

Behold, I waited for your words: I gave ear to your reaſons, whileſt you ſearched out what to ſay.

Yea, I attended unto you: and behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that anſwered his words:

Leſt ye ſhould ſay; We have found out wiſdom: God thruſteth him down and not man.

Now he hath not directed his words againſt me: neither will I anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

ELihu, having aſſerted this negative propoſition in the former verſe, Great men are not always wiſe, neither do the aged underſtand Judgment, makes his inference from it in theſe words.

Verſ. 10. Therefore I ſaid, Hearken to me.

As if he had ſaid; Though I am none of the great men of the world, though I am none of the aged among the ſons of men, yet hearken unto me; for ſeeing great and aged men are not always wiſe, nor have ingroſſed all wiſdom and underſtanding to themſelves, it is poſſible that ſome beams of wiſdom may ſhine forth even from ſo mean a Junior, even from ſuch a puny as (I muſt confeſs) I am.

We may alſo make the inference from the 8. verſe; There is a ſpirit in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth underſtanding. Therefore I ſaid hearken to me; As if he had ſaid, Though I am a young man, and have not had either thoſe natural or accidental advantages of the ancient for the gathering of any great ſtock or treaſures of wiſdom, yet there is an inſpiration of the Almighty which giveth underſtanding. If the Lord will make uſe of me, and inſpire me, if he pleaſe to breath his truths into me, and irradiate my Soul with divine light, I may be able to do and ſay ſomething in this matter. The inference, you ſee, follows well and without ſtrain from either of thoſe premiſes.

Therefore I ſaid, hearken to me.] It may be queried, to whom did Elihu ſay thus? We tranſlate the words indefinitely, not determining them to this or that perſon; But the Original ſeems to ſpeak perſonally; Therefore I ſaid, hear thou me. Which may be underſtood two ways; Firſt, that Elihu directed his ſpeech principally to Job, Hear thou what I ſhall ſay. Secondly, that Elihu ſpake to the whole company there preſent, as if they had been but one man, we may ſpeak in a congregation of hundreds and thouſands, we may ſpeak to many, as if there were but one to hear; as what is ſpoken to a few, may be intended to all. (Mark 13. 37.) What I ſay unto you, (my Diſciples)

Diſciples) I ſay unto all; watch. So that which is ſaid to all, is ſurely ſaid to every one in the aſſembly where 'tis ſaid. Though we take Elihu here, as ſpeaking directly but to one perſon, yet we muſt take him as deſiring that every perſon preſent ſhould take it as ſpoken to himſelf; Hearken to me.

Hence Note, Firſt, When any ſpeak reaſon, and hold out truth, they are to be heard.

No man ſhould ſtop his ear with a prejudice to the perſon. He that ſpeaks truth, deſerves to be heard: though (as Elihu) he be a young man, or inferior to many in age, yet he is to be heard, though inferior to many in power and experience, yet he is to be heard; (Eccleſ.4. 13.) Better is a poor and wiſe child, then an old and fooliſh King that will not be admoniſhed. And better is a poor and wiſe child, then an old man that can give no admonition. As that man is in a ſad condition, whether King or Subject, that will not be admoniſhed, ſo that man, be he never ſo ancient, is not much to be regarded, that is not able to give admonition. But though both diſcreet young men, and diſcreet poor men are to be heard when they ſpeak truth and reaſon, yet that of Solomon (Eccl.9.16.) is too often verified; The poor mans wiſdom is deſpiſed, and his words are not heard. Moſt conclude, If a man be poor, his counſel is ſo too, and if he be young, how can he be a counſeller? yet, hear me (ſaith Elihu)

Scientiam meam.
Mont.

I alſo will ſhew mine opinion, or my knowledg.

I will ſhew what my underſtanding is, or what light God hath given me in this caſe. The words are plain.

Note from them, What truth or truths we have received and know, we ſhould communicate and make known.

'Tis a duty to ſhew our opinion when we have a call and an occaſion to ſhew it, as Elihu here had. Some have knowledg, who will not ſhew it; They (which Chriſt forbids, Matth 5 15.) put their candle under a buſhel. God hath lighted a candle, and ſet it up in ſome mens ſpirits, yet they either quite conceal or much obſcure it. God hath given them a talent of knowledg, and they like the unprofitable ſervant, wrap it up in a Napkin. They will not ſhew their opinion. Not to ſhew what we have, when called to it, is a denial that we have it. As good not have a candle, or a talent, as let our candle be hid, or hide our talent. The very Heathen condemned this, while they ſaid, Covered vertue, is buried vertue. Yea while a man covers his vertues, parts, and abilities, he burieth himſelf alive, or is dead while he lives. As, the Scripture ſaith, they have only a name to be alive, but are dead, who make a ſhew of more then they have (Rev. 3. 2.) ſo they have a name to be dead, or may be numbred among the dead, who will not ſhew what indeed they have.

There are two things which hinder men from ſhewing their opinion; Firſt, idleneſs, they are loth to take the pains to ſhew it. Secondly, ſhamefaſtneſs; There is a commendable modeſty, 'tis not good to be over-forward in ſhewing our opinion; But that modeſty is ſinful, which quite hinders us from ſhewing our opinion. They who keep in their knowledg and opinion either through idleneſs, or ſhamefaſtneſs, do almoſt as ill as they who ſhew their opinion, and declare their knowledg through pride and high-mindedneſs, or meerly to ſhew themſelves, to ſhew their wit, and to make a noiſe of their parts and learning. 'Tis ſinful ſelf-pleaſing either to know only that we may know, or to publiſh what we know only to be known. With ſome 'tis nothing that they have knowledg, unleſs others know that they have it. An affectation to appear knowing, is as bad as to be ignorant. I will ſhew mine opinion (ſaith Elihu) But why would he ſhew it? We have reaſon to judg, it was from the honeſty of his heart, not from the height of his Spirit. And when ever we ſhew our opinion, we ought to ſhew it out of an honeſt heart, and for honeſt ends, ſuch as theſe.

Firſt, To inſtruct thoſe who are ignorant.

Secondly, To reduce thoſe who are out of the way.

Thirdly, To feed hungry Souls with wholeſom dorine. (Prov. 10. 21.) The lips of the righteous feed many.

Fourthly, To ſtrengthen the weak.

Fifthly, To confirm the doubtful.

Sixthly, To comfort the ſorrowful.

Seventhly, To encourage the fearful.

Eightly, To quicken the ſlothful in the ways and work of God.

Laſtly, and above all, That God may be glorified by the uſe of the talent that he hath given. (1 *Pet.*4.10.) As every man hath received the gift, even ſo miniſter the ſame one to another, as good Stewards of the manifold grace of God. Stewards muſt not ſet up their own, but their Maſters Intereſt. We ſhould miniſter by every gift as Stewards of the manifold grace of God.

I will ſhew mine opinion (ſaith Elihu.)

But what haſte? Elihu it ſeemeth foreſaw ſome ready to object; Why do you a young man take upon you to ſpeak in a cauſe, wherein ſo many of your Elders and Betters have not prevailed? why are you ſo buſie? 'Tis much boldneſs for you, or ſuch as you to declare your opinion in this controverſie, wherein ſuch wiſe, learned, and godly men have, without ſucceſs, ingaged already. To this Objection, Elihu makes a preventing anſwer, rendring this account of his undertaking; As if he had ſaid, I have attentively obſerved all the paſſages and traverſes of this diſpute, I have heard all that Job's friends have offered, whether for vindication of the juſtice and righteouſneſs of God in laying that great affliction upon him, or for the conviction of Job, to make him ſee his ſin, and ſit down humbled. I have heard all this (ſaith Elihu) and upon the whole matter I find, Job is yet unanſwered, or that there is need of a further anſwer to ſtop his mouth, to ſilence his complaints, and humble him under the hand and ſoveraign power of God.

This is the ſcope and ſum of theſe two verſes following.

Verſ. 11. Behold, I waited for your words, I gave ear to your reaſons, whileſt you ſearched out what to ſay.

Verſ. 12. Yea I attended unto you; and behold, there is none of you that convinced Job, or that anſwered his words.

You have the general ſence of the Text, I ſhall yet proceed to a more particular explication of it.

Behold, I waited for your words.

יחל
Moratus eſt, præſtolatus eſt, expectavit.

The word which we tranſlate to wait, imports three things in Scripture; Firſt, an act of hope, or to be carried towards any thing deſirable, with a wonderful deſire to enjoy it; Hope cauſeth the Soul to breath after fruition. Secondly, the word implyeth that grief or trouble which poſſeſſeth the mind upon a long ſtay or detainment of that good which we deſire and hope to attain. Thirdly, it notes, the Souls patient waiting (though grieved and burdened with preſent delaies) for future enjoyment. In all or any of theſe ſences, Elihu might ſay, Behold, I waited for your words, I earneſtly deſired to hear you ſpeak to ſatisfaction, and I am grieved that you did not; and I would, if need were, patiently wait ſtill, did I not perceive you had done, and quitted your hands of this work.

Behold, I waited for your words.] Mr. Broughton renders, Behold, I waited through your ſpeech, or, into your words, I ſtood ſtill, but I have not been aſleep, I have long expected, you would ſay what is right, and I have ſeriouſly conſidered what you ſaid, I waited for your words;

I gave ear to your reaſons.] That is, to find what convincing reaſon was couched in your arguments. The Hebrew is, I gave ear to your underſtanding; That is, I attended to find out your apprehenſions, or to gather up your ſence in this matter, that I might not miſtake your meaning, nor anſwer at random. The vulgar tranſlation reads it, I have heard your wiſdom; That is, what wiſdom there was in your words. The truth or reaſon that is in words, is the wiſdom of them. So that, when Elihu ſaith, I gave ear to your reaſons, or, to your underſtanding, it intimates that he took the exacteſt heed he poſſibly could to find out the utmoſt tendency and purpoſe of their diſcourſe. As if he had ſaid; I have weighed every tittle that ye have ſpoken, and tryed it by mine ear, to find whether it were ſolid yea or no.

There is one clauſe further to be opened in this verſe; I gave ear to your reaſons,

While you ſearched out what to ſay.

This implyeth that Job's friends did ever and anon, take time to conſider either each man with himſelf, or that they conſulted one with another, what anſwer to ſhape and make to Job.

חקר Scrutatus, perſcrutatus eſt remota & abſtruſa.

Whileſt ye ſearched out.] The word which we tranſlate to ſearch out, notes the ſtricteſt ſearch after that which is hidden, remote and ſecret. 'Tis applyed (Deut. 13. 14.) to that care which Judges ought to take in finding out the truth of an accuſation brought againſt enticers to Idolatry. The ſtrictneſs of the Original is, While ye ſearched out words, As if he had ſaid, I am perſwaded you have ſtrained your ſelves to the utmoſt, to find out what to ſay, you did not ſpeak what came next, but ſearched for your anſwers.

We may learn a good leſſon from the practice of Elihu; we ſee he was no idle hearer; yea in him we have the deſcription or character of an active hearer; I waited for your words, I gave ear to your reaſonings, while ye ſearched out what to ſay.

Hence Note, We muſt diligently hear and give ear, weigh and conſider what is ſpoken, before we give anſwer.

No man is well prepared to anſwer, but he that hath been an attentive hearer. And as no man can be a fit anſwerer in points under diſputation, ſo no man can be a fruitful practiſer in points of inſtruction, but he that hath been a diligent hearer. 'Tis our duty, when the word is preacht, to wait, not for a ſound of words, not for fine words, or words dreſſed up with affected eloquence, but for ſound ſavory words, for words that have weight and light in them, for words that have ſtrength and authority in them, to prevail upon the heart, and conquer us to obedience. Theſe are the only words, worth the waiting for; and for theſe we ought to wait.

Secondly, Before Elihu comes to give his opinion, he tells Job's friends, that he had diligently heard the matter out, even all their reaſonings and ſearchings.

Hence Note, We muſt not make a judgment from any one part of a diſcourſe, we muſt take all together.

We muſt compare the firſt and laſt, the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending of what is ſaid; We muſt look quite through. 'Tis not ingenuous to pick up this or that paſſage, to take a piece here, and a piece there; we can never make a true judgment, till the whole is laid together. As, many exceedingly miſtake about the works of God, ſo about the words of men, becauſe they judg the whole by this or that part: Whereas they ſhould judg of the parts by the whole. As therefore we ought not to make concluſions about the providential works of God, till the laſt Act, or till all is concluded; ſo we muſt not judg the diſcourſes of men, till the laſt word, or till they have concluded their diſcourſe. Hear a man out, and then anſwer him.

Ab æquo attentionem ſibi conciliat. Merc.

Thirdly, Elihu ſeems to challenge it as his due to be heard ſpeak, after he had fully heard them ſpeaking.

Hence Note, They who have had the patience to hear others, ought to have the priviledg of being heard themſelves.

Hear me, ſaith Elihu; Why ſo? I have heard you. It is but equal and rational, that he ſhould have liberty of ſpeaking, who hath ſhewed an attentive perſeverance in hearing.

From the laſt branch of the Verſe, while ye ſearched out what to ſay, Obſerve, We ought to ponder and try what we ſpeak, before we ſpeak it.

The work of the tongue muſt follow that of the underſtanding. (Eccl. 12. 10.) The Preacher ſought to find out acceptable words or words of delight, words of pleaſure. The Preacher ſought; But how did he ſeek? He ſought diligently and earneſtly. The Preacher ſought, but in what way did he ſeek? ſurely he ſought by diligent ſtudy and earneſt prayer, to find out acceptable words, what words were thoſe? not men-pleaſing words, not ſoft words, which might paſs with all ſorts, or humour all phanſies, not ſuch words as would ſerve for pillows under bad mens elbows. The acceptable words which the Preacher ſought, were words of truth and ſobriety, words of power and Authority; in no other ſence may we ſeek out acceptable words, or words of delight; nor is there any true delight, but in words of truth. Thus every faithful Preacher ſhould ſeek to find out acceptable words; every holy and wholſom doctrin is made up of ſuch words. Only thoſe doctrins and exhortations which are formed and compoſed of ſuch words, are (as the Apoſtle ſaith of the great doctrin of Jeſus Chriſt, manifeſted in the fleſh to ſave ſinners) faithful ſayings, and worthy of acceptation (1 Tim. 1.15.) Elihu took notice of this in Job's friends, they did not ſpeak hand over head, but ſearched what they might ſay moſt to the purpoſe (as they judged) of the cauſe in hand, and to the profit of their hearers.

Elihu thought he had not yet ſpoken enough in way of apology for himſelf. And therefore the Penman of this diſpute repreſents him ſpeaking further, yet much to the ſame ſence.

Verſ. 12. Yea, I attended unto you, and behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that anſwered his words.

Uſq; ad intima veſtra conſiderabam vos. Druſ.

I attended unto you; That is, I did not only deſire to receive full ſatisfaction from you, but I attended, hoping at laſt to find it. I ſtayed, I did not make haſte, nor did I haſten you. Some expound the word with a great ſignificancy, I did as throughly conſider and attend what was ſaid, as if I had looked into you. Thus (ſaith Elihu) I attended unto you.

But what did he find? He found two faults in their words after he had attended unto them throughly, Firſt, he found them faulty, becauſe none of them had convinced Job. Their proofs did not make good their accuſations. The ſecond fault which Elihu found, was, They had not refuted Job's aſſertion. As if he had ſaid, Ye have ſpoken much, but upon the matter have done little. I waited, and I attended, expecting great things from you, but I have been deceived in my expectation. For having taken out the ſtrength and ſubſtance, the ſpirits and quinteſſence of your ſpeech, I find nothing coming up, either to a conviction of Job, as faulty in matter of fact, nor to an anſwer of him, as defective in matter of argument. So that when I have laid all that ye have ſpoken in the ballance, it weighs too light, Job is your match, yea, he hath over-matcht you.

Behold, there is none of you that convinceth Job.

Ἐλέγχειν.

The Hebrew word which we here tranſlate to convince, anſwers the Greek in the New Teſtament, which is alſo tranſlated, To reprove or convince. And both the Hebrew and the Greek, carry a threefold ſignification.

Ἔλεγχος.

Firſt, to prove, or to make good what is affirmed, either Firſt by reaſon and argument, or, Secondly, by teſtimony and authority. When ſuch proofs and reaſons, ſuch teſtimonies and authorities are brought in, as a man can make no exceptions againſt, or cannot evade nor reply to, then he is convinced. The Apoſtle giving a deſcription of faith (Heb. 11. 1.) ſaith, It is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and the evidence (or conviction) of things not ſeen. The Spirit of God makes conviction before faith acts. He brings ſuch proofs ſuch clear evidences, that though the thing be not ſeen, yet the ſoul ſits down convinced, that it is ſo, as fully as if we had ſeen it. The greateſt conviction we have to believe, is from authority and teſtimony; yea, that's properly and only faith, when we conſent to a thing upon the teſtimony and authority of another.

Ἔλεγξον.

Secondly, The word ſignifies to reprove, or rebuke with words. (Math. 18. 15.) Moreover, if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him of his fault. To reprove a man, is Firſt to tell him of his fault, and then to blame him for it. Every mans fault muſt be clearly proved, before he can be juſtly reproved. Thus the Baptiſt reproved Herod (Luke 3.19.) And becauſe Light proves, therefore it alſo reproves (John 3. 20.) Every one that doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. The ſame word is uſed (Eph. 5. 11.) Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. And again (1 Tim. 5. 20.) Them that ſin (that is, either openly, before all, or whoſe ſin hath been proved before all) rebuke, before all;

all, and, as the ſame Apoſtle directs (Tit. 2. 25.) Rebuke them ſharply.

Thirdly, The word ſignifieth, as to prove and reprove, ſo to chaſten and correct, to rebuke by the hand as well as by the Tongue (Heb. 12 5.) Ye have forgotten the exhortation which ſpeaketh unto you as unto Children; my ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. When thou art rebuked of him by blows, or receiveſt ſenſible convictions. (Rev. 3. 19.) Whom I love I rebuke and chaſten. Here in the Text we muſt underſtand the word in the firſt ſence. There is none of you that hath convinced Job; That is, ye have not proved what ye have ſaid; Ye have called him an hypocrite, and told him that he hath oppreſſed the poor, and detained the right of the fatherleſs; But ye have proved none of theſe evils againſt him. Ye have not proved the matter of fact, that he might ſit down penitentially confeſſing himſelf ſuch an offender, as ye have accuſed him to be.

Ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐλεγχόμενος, cum ab eo argueris.

Hence, Note, We can never convince another by what we ſay, until we prove what we ſay.

If we reprove any man for an errour in his judgment, and do not prove it to be an errour; or if we reprove a man for ſin in practice, and do not prove his practice ſinful, or that he hath practiſed that ſin, no conviction follows. What is ſaid and not proved comes to the ear only, not to the conſcience. Therefore ſaith Chriſt (John 8. 46.) Which of you convinceth me of ſin? Find a ſpot in my life if you can. I know you are ready to ſlander me with, but you cannot convince me of evil. It is ſaid of Apollos (Acts 18. 28.) He mightily convinced the Jews. How did he convince them? not by reproving them only, for not receiving the Meſſias; he did not barely tell them, ye are a company of unbelievers: but he reproved them by proving the neceſſity of their receiving Chriſt the Meſſias, and the evil of rejecting him, ſhewing by the Scriptures that Jeſus was the Chriſt. Here was proof, and ſo conviction followed. He convinced them by Authority, by the teſtimony of the word, comparing Scripture with Scripture, the Propheſie, with the Hiſtory of Chriſt. The Apoſtle would have the Miniſters of the Goſpel mighty at this work (Tit. 1. 8.) They muſt hold faſt the faithful word, that they may be able by ſound doctrin, both to exhort and to convince the gain-ſayers. Not only muſt they be able to rebuke gain-ſayers, this will not do it; they muſt alſo convince them, or ſtop their mouths. (James 2. 9.) If any of you have reſpect to perſons, ye commit ſin, and are convinced of the Law as tranſgreſſours. How doth the Law convince? Not only by reproving, but by proving, It ſhews us a rule, and ſaith, there you have departed from it; here is the line, and there ye have tranſgreſſed, or gone over it. Thus ye are convinced, that ye are tranſgreſſors. He is both wiſe and faithful, he doth his work like a workman that needeth not be aſhamed, who not only gives reproof but proof, either of error in judgment, or of evil in practice. For the cloſe of this point, I may ſhew you three great convincers.

Firſt, The holy Spirit of God; This Office of the Spirit Chriſt ſets forth (John 16. 7.) I will ſend the Comforter, and when he is come (what ſhall he do?) He will convince the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of Judgment; That is, he will bring proof home to the conſcience, to ſhew ſinners their evil ſtate and evil lives; He will alſo bring home to their ſpirits the alſufficiency of the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo overcome their unbelief, that they ſhall not be able to refuſe the offers of grace. He will likewiſe ſhew them ſuch reaſons why they ought to be holy, and walk in the ways of righteouſneſs, that they ſhall neither have power nor will to gain-ſay.

The ſecond great convincer, is Conſcience. They who were ſo forward to accuſe the woman taken in adultery (John 8. 9.) were at laſt convicted by their own Conſcience, and went out one by one; Their conſcience told them they were guilty, if not for that ſin, yet of other ſins as bad as that. They were ſo far before from judging themſelves for, that they took no notice of their own faults; they were ſevere againſt the woman, but they flattered themſelves, till Chriſt made their own conſciences, their convincers. And ſurely conſcience will one time or other convince to purpoſe; They who have refuſed or outſtood conviction by the word, yea and put by the motions of the Spirit, ſhall at laſt find conſcience convincing and ſpeaking home to them.

The third great Convincer, is Jeſus Chriſt in perſon; Of him in the performance of this Office, the Apoſtle ſpeaks clearly (Jude v. 15.) Behold the Lord cometh with ten thouſand of his Saints (And what comes he to do?) To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. Chriſt will make the greateſt of ungodly ones in that great day to acknowledg, that all their hard ſpeeches which they have ſpoken againſt the Saints, or godly men, were ſpoken againſt him. When prophane men are among their wicked companions, they can jear at the godly profeſſors of the name of Chriſt; even while they pretend to honour Chriſt; But Chriſt will make them ſee, that they ſcorned him, while they ſcorned the leaſt of thoſe that feared him, and believed on his name. The great day will be a day not only of executing Judgment, but of conviction, every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all the world of wicked men ſhall become guilty in their own ſight before God. Theſe are the three great Convincers. The holy Spirit of God, the Conſcience of every man, and Jeſus Chriſt in the judgment of the great day.

And let thoſe who now undertake that great work of conviction, often remember (which was a little before mentioned and ſet down) the method to be uſed and obſerved in it; Firſt, prove the matter, and then reprove the man. None were ever wrought to any good, by bare reproof, much leſs by force. Men are not to be driven into the faith by fire and ſword, by terrors and impriſonments; conviction muſt do it; and that will do it to purpoſe. This is the firſt thing which Elihu blamed and burdened Job's friends with; They reproved him, but did not bring ſufficient convincing proof againſt him. There was none of you that convinced Job.

Secondly, He lays this to their charge, that They had not anſwered his words. As ye have not proved your own allegations, ſo ye have not refuted nor infirmed his reaſons.

But how could Elihu ſay, They had not anſwered his words, when to every word he ſpake we find their ſeveral anſwers? Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered and ſaid; Then Bildad the Shuhite anſwered and ſaid; The like is ſaid of Zophar the Naamathite. They had been anſwering all the while, yet ſaith Elihu, Behold, there was none of you that anſwered his words. I ſhall reſolve this doubt, by giving this Note; which was alſo given upon the 3. Verſe, where ſee more.

Unleſs we anſwer home to the matter, and (as we ſay) hit the nail on the head, we have given no anſwer. We have not anſwered, unleſs we give a ſatisfactory anſwer. When the Reſpondent in Schools acquits himſelf well, The Moderator brings him off honorably, ſaying, Thy Anſwers ſuffice. Job's friends had been anſwering long, and they made many long anſwers, but Elihu, the Moderator was forced to tell them, ye have not anſwered ſufficiently.

Laſtly, Elihu having heard all their anſwers, and finding that they did not reach a proof againſt Job, nor anſwer his reaſonings and replies, he ſpeaks himſelf.

Hence Note, When we have weighed all duely, and find that others have not done the deed, we muſt not diſſemble our judgments, nor flatter them in their faulty anſwers.

Elihu would not do ſo, and the reaſon why he would not, is laid down in the next words.

Verſ. 13. Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom; God thruſteth him down not man.

In the former Verſe Elihu ſhewed his own diſappointment, while he waited upon others; I attended unto you (ſaith he to Job's three friends) and behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that anſwered his words; Then follows, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom, &c. In which words Elihu proceeds with his Preface, that he might the more fairly fall into diſcourſe with Job; for having told Job's friends that he had waited in vain, for ſatisfaction from their anſwers or replies, they having not convinced him, either by ſolid reaſon, or by Authentick Authority and teſtimony, that he was ſo bad as they judged him to be; He adds, this I affirm.

Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom.

That is, leſt ye ſhould ſay it boaſtingly, and cry victory againſt this afflicted man. The word is often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie ſaying with boaſting, or ſpeaking in pride of Spirit. The Baptiſt (Matth. 3. 9.) tells the Phariſees, Think not to ſay within your ſelves, we have Abraham to our father; his meaning is, do not ſpeak of your pedegree boaſtingly nor proudly: That ye are Abraham's Children will do you no good, unleſs ye are good, like your father Abraham, and do as he did. So here, Leſt ye ſhould (proudly) ſay, we have found out wiſdom; we have found the myſtery of the whole matter, we have found out the key, which unlocks this ſecret, or as Mr. Calvins tranſlater wittily as well as truly expreſſeth, We have found out the bean in the Cake, we ſay, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom; that is, that which will ſurely prove us wiſe men, and gain us the reputation of wiſdom among all wiſe and knowing men. What their ſpecial reſolve was, which they counted wiſdom, follows in the cloſe of the verſe according to our reading, God thruſteth him down not man. But before I deal with that concluſion, I ſhall briefly note two things from thoſe words, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom.

Rem acu tetigimus & ipſũ cardinem in quo tota controverſia vertitur de Jobo. Druſ.

First, Man is very apt to ſpeak boaſtingly, to have high thoughts, and then to utter great words of himſelf. Man is a proud piece of fleſh, and a ſmall matter will make him ſhew his pride, and ſpread his plumes (like that naturally painted bird) if not explicitely in words, yet his Spirit will ſwell, and be puſt up with towring conceits of himſelf. The Prophet Habakkuk deſcribes his temper (Chap. 2. 4.) He that is lifted up, his Spirit is not upright in him; a proud Spirit is always a falſe Spirit. They who think highly of themſelves, think themſelves higher then they are. And 'tis a great argument that man is naturally very proud, becauſe God hath given ſo many ſtops and checks to his pride, or hath made ſo many proviſions againſt it. The very contrivance of the work of Redemption in that way by the hand of Jeſus Chriſt, had this great deſign in it; for as the chief deſign in reference to man was his ſalvation (that was the ultimate end as to man) ſo there was another deſign in it, why God would ſave man that way, which the Apoſtle layeth down (1 Cor. 1. 29.) That no fleſh ſhould glory in his ſight; while God intended to give man glory, he took a courſe to cut off all glorying from man. God would not ſet up man again to work his own ſalvation, leſt he ſhould be proud of his works. Though we are now called to work out our own ſalvation (Phil. 2. 12.) yet it is wholy wrought by another; and we are there commanded to work out our own ſalvation with fear and trembling, not with preſumption and boaſting.

Again, How apt is man to boaſt of any good he doth? Seeing he is not aſhamed to boaſt ſometimes when he doth evil, and of that which is evil, even of the luſts and luſtings of his evil heart. (Pſ. 10. 3.) The wicked boaſteth of his hearts deſire. And what good is there in the deſire of a wicked mans heart? He (as ſuch) can deſire nothing, but what is worſe then nothing, ſin or vanity, and yet he boaſts of it.

Yea, man is ready to boaſt, not only of evil done, but of his ability to do evil; they in the Prophet boaſted that they were mighty to drink wine, and men of ſtrength to mingle ſtrong drink, (Iſa 5. 22.) How do ſome pleaſe themſelves that they are in power, only, becauſe that gives them an advantage to oppreſs whom they pleaſe, or all thoſe with whom they are diſpleaſed. David ſaw that Spirit ruling and raging in ſpiteful Doeg, whom he therefore checks, (Pſal. 52. 1.) Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, O mighty man? The Apoſtle found thoſe (Phil. 3. 19.) who gloried in their ſhame; that is, in ſinful practices (even making their belly their God) whereof they ought to be aſhamed. The Prophet ſpake of their like long before, (Iſa. 3. 9.) They declare their ſin as Sodome, they hide it not; As if it had been their ornament and their honour, their beauty and bravery to be wicked.

But eſpecially if bad men do that which is good, they boaſt of it. A carnal man may for the matter do good; yea, he may have a zeal for God. Jehu ſaid, Come ſee my zeal for the Lord, (2 Kings 10. 16.) But Jehu deſired more to have his zeal for the Lord ſeen, then to be zealous for the Lord. And ſo his was indeed zeal for himſelf, not for the Lord. The Phariſees did many good things, but they could not forbear boaſting in the good they did; they do all (ſaith Chriſt, who knew not only what they did, but with what heart) to be ſeen of men, or to have praiſe with men. Yea, not only are evil men ready to boaſt of the good they do, but the temptation lies hard alſo upon godly men to do ſo, their hearts are often unduely tranſported, as with the thoughts of their gifts, parts, and graces, ſo with what they do through the gift of grace. Our very graces, much more our outward priviledges, may be an occaſion of boaſting. Pride and boaſting are weeds which grow up from the beſt and richeſt ſoil. 'Tis rare to ſee any man rich in gifts and graces, and poor in Spirit; poverty of Spirit is the pureſt and trueſt riches of grace.

Secondly, As to the particular here ſpoken of, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom.

Note, Man is very prone to make boaſt of or glory in that which he calleth wiſdom.

When he hath found out (though but ſuppoſed) wiſdom, he cannot contain, he muſt cry it up. It is ſaid of the old Mathematician, when (after long ſtudy and beating his brains) he had found out a concluſion in Geometry, he ran about the City (as if tranſported) or raviſhed with this loud out-cry, I have found it, I have found it; and thus Job's friends were ready to cry out, they had found, they had found out wiſdom. There is indeed a very great temptation in the finding out or attaining of wiſdom, to puff man up, and to make him vain-glorious. We have great cauſe to be humbled, that we have ſo little wiſdom; and they that have any ſtore (as they think) more then their Neighbours, are in great danger of being proud of it. Knowledge puffeth up, (1 Cor. 8. 1.) When the head is full, the heart grows high. Yet this is to be underſtood of literal knowledg, not of ſpiritual, , or of knowledg when and where it is alone without grace, not of gracious knowledg. The more a gracious man knows, the more humble he is, becauſe his knowledg ſhews him his own vileneſs and emptineſs; but the more a carnal man knows, the more proud he is, becauſe (while ſuch) whatſoever or how much ſoever he knoweth, he knoweth not himſelf, nor doth he know any thing as he ought to know it, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks there at the ſecond verſe. And as meer natural men, ſo they who are but ſmatterers, or beginners in the ways of godlineſs, are alſo very ready to be tranſported with an opinion of their parts and knowledg, And therefore, the ſame Apoſtle gives it in charge to Timothy (1 Tim. 3. 6.) that he who is called and received unto Office in the Church, ſhould not be a novice; he means it not ſo much of one that is young in years, as if one that is young in the faith, a new plant in the Church, or one newly converted. And he gives this as a reaſon, Leſt being puft up (with pride he means) by being in ſuch a function, or by having ſuch reputation for wiſdom and knowledg, as is requiſite to a Goſpel Miniſter, he (which is a ſad fall, if not a down-fall into utter ruine.) fall into the condemnation of the Devil. Not that the Devil will condemn him for his pride, no, the more proud men are, the more the Devil approves of them, nor is it the Devils office to condemn, it is his office to execute; he is the executioner, not the Judg; and what ever he condemneth any man for, he will not condemn him for pride, no nor for any ſin. So that when the Apoſtle ſaith, Leſt he fall into the condemnation of the Devil, it is as if he had ſaid, Leſt he be condemned for the ſame ſin that the Devil was condemned for, which was pride: And it was pride (for he is the right father of the Gnoſticks) ariſing out of a high opinion, or conceit of his own wiſdom, and knowledg. Zophar ſaid (Job 11. 12.) Vain man would be wiſe. But is it an argument of a mans vanity that he would be wiſe? It is a mans duty to be wiſe, that's a good deſire; why then doth he ſay, Vain man would be wiſe? The meaning is, vain man would be in account for wiſdom, he would be reckoned among wiſe men, or he deſires more to be thought wiſe, then to be wiſe. A vain man, indeed, cannot deſire any good, but in reference to ſome evil that cleaves to it; and upon that account he may deſire to be wiſe. The firſt ſin came into the World by an attempt to get wiſdome, or by a proud thought in the hopes of attaining farther wiſdom.

Archimedes

wiſdom. The wiſdom which our firſt parents ſought for, was not wiſdom to know God, for that is the moſt excellent wiſdom, It is eternal life to know God; So then it was not wiſdom to know God, but it was wiſdom to be knowing as God, which they affected, they would be high and lifted up above the rate of a creature in knowledg, and that was their ruin. And I ſhall ſhew (in two things) why there is ſuch a temptation in wiſdom, or the reaſon why when we have found out that which hath a ſhew of wiſdom in it, we are ſo forward to applaud our ſelves, and boaſt in it.

Firſt, 'Tis ſo, becauſe wiſdom is no common Commodity, as I may ſay; wiſdom is but in few hands, if you conſider the multitude of men in the world. Now that which few have, all who have it are ready to be proud of. No man is proud of that which is every mans; no man is proud that he is a man, or proud that he hath reaſon, becauſe that is common to all men; but all men are not wiſe, all men are not learned, all men have not an improved wiſdom, reaſon, and underſtanding; that hath a peculiarity in it, and therefore of that many are proud.

Secondly, Wiſdom is not only rare, but very uſeful, and (which reacheth this point more fully) very ornamental; and how apt are we to be proud of our ornaments? A man is not proud of his ordinary Clothes, nor a woman of her every-day dreſs, but when a man or woman have their ornaments and Jewels on, their Gay-cloathing and rich apparel on, then they are apt to be proud and lifted up: So it is in this caſe; Wiſdom is like Gay-cloathing, it is a Jewel, an ornament, and therefore man is under a temptation when he hath any thing of wiſdom, eſpecially any eminency of wiſdom about him, to be lifted up and deſpiſe others: yea, to arrogate great things to himſelf, and to preſume that he can do no ſmall matters with his brain, or the engin of his underſtanding. It is a great attainment to be full of knowledg, and full of humility, high in parts, and lowly in Spirit; Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom.

God thruſteth him down, not man; or as others read, God hath caſt him down, not man.

The Omnipotent doth toſs him not man, ſaith Mr. Broughton. The word ſignifies to toſs a man (as it were) in a blanket, That is, to toſs him as we pleaſe far enough from his pleaſure, or to toſs him in open view. As if they had ſaid, ſee how the omnipotent toſſeth this man; The Omnipotent toſſeth him not man. There are two references of theſe words given by Expoſitors.

Firſt, Some expound them as the words of Elihu. Secondly, Others as the words of Job's three friends.

Firſt, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom. I (ſaith Elihu) ſay, God ſhall thruſt him down not man. That's the principle by which I will deal with Job, and ſo thruſt him down from that opinion which he hath of himſelf, and humble him, (that's the ſence of the words (thruſt him down) according to this interpretation) God ſhall do it and not man. Some of the learned inſiſt much upon this interpretation; wherein Elihu is ſupoſed making a great diſcovery of his humility, as not daring to undertake Job himſelf, but going about it in the ſtrength and power of God; As if he had ſaid, 'Tis a work above or too hard for man to put Job off from that opinion wherein he is ſetled. To do this is a work worthy of God, nor can it be done by any power, but that which is properly divine. And ſeeing God is graciouſly pleaſed to uſe the miniſtery of man for the bringing about ſuch works of Grace; far be it from me that I ſhould arrogate and aſſume that to my ſelf which God is pleaſed to work by my word. We may paralel this ſpeech of Elihu with two other places of Scripture, which will give light to it. Firſt, (Gen. 42. 16.) And Joſeph anſwered Pharaoh, ſaying, It is not in me, but God ſhall give Pharaoh an anſwer of peace. When Pharaoh propoſed to him his Dreams of the ſeven lean kine, and of the ſeven thin ears of Corn, Joſeph profeſſed it was not in him to expound them, but only in God; and that God would do it he was confident; God ſhall give to Pharaoh an anſwer of peace. I own no wiſdom in or of my ſelf, enabling me to reſolve this Queſtion, or to open this ſecret; If ever I do it, 'tis God who doth it, not I; unleſs he reveal the ſecret unto me, I cannot reveal it unto thee. Thus alſo ſpake Daniel, (Dan. 2.27.) When all the wiſe men of Babylon were foil'd, and gravell'd at the Kings propoſal, The ſecret which the King hath demanded, cannot the wiſe men, the Aſtrologers, the Magicians, and the South-ſayers ſhew unto the King. They cannot do it; it is not put by way of interrogation, cannot they do it? but they cannot, by way of negative aſſertion; how then can it be done? or who can do it? He anſwers, But there is a God in heaven that revealeth ſecrets, and maketh known to the King Nebuchadnezzar what ſhall be in the latter days. As if he had ſaid, As thy Magicians cannot, ſo I will not undertake to reveal the ſecret, but God both can and will, He will ſurely do it, yea, he is now doing it; the Text ſpeaks as of a preſent act, He maketh known to the King, &c. Thus (according to the expoſition before us) Elihu ſaith here, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom; I tell you plainly, I will not undertake him, and I am much aſſured ye cannot, therefore, Let God thruſt him down, let God deal with him, and conquer him, not I, not you, not man, not any man. If God will uſe me as a poor inſtrument to do it, I am ready, but the whole efficacy and power muſt be from himſelf. This carrieth a profitable and a holy ſence; every good man aſcribes the effect of all that he ſpeaks in perſwading others for good to the power of God. God muſt convert the ſinner, not man, not the preacher; God muſt humble the proud, not man, God muſt caſt him down from his high thoughts, or caſt down the high thoughts that are in him, not man; God muſt ſoften and break the hard heart, not man; in a word, 'tis God who both thruſteth man down by a gracious work of repentance and ſelf-abhorrence, and raiſeth him up by a powerful work of faith and holy confidence in Jeſus Chriſt: when man hath done his beſt, he can do nothing effectually, only God can. Whatſoever good man doth, God doth it in him and by him. Hence thoſe creature-abaſing and Chriſt-exalting queſtions (1 Cor. 3. 5.) Who is Paul? and who is Apollo? but Miniſters by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. Paul puts a ſlight upon himſelf, and a ſlight upon all inſtruments, that the whole power might be of God, as he concludes (Ver. 7.) So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increaſe. God only thruſts man down from his vain and carnal ſtate, God only lifts him up unto a bleſſed and a heavenly ſtate. This, you ſee, is an improveable interpretation, as the words are ſuppoſed ſpoken by Elihu.

Non eſt hoc opus ullius hominis ut Iobum depellat à ſua ſententia, ſed divina plane virtute opus eſt. Cum tamen Deus humano miniſterio utatur gratioſe ad perficiendas res hujuſmodi, abſit ut mihi arrogarem, quod Deus ſermone meo effecturus eſt. Jun.

But, I rather refer them to Job's friends, being collected or gathered up by Elihu, as the iſſue of their whole diſcourſe with Job. God thruſteth him down, and not man. This is it, that you mean (ſaith Elihu) this is the top of your wiſdom, the flower and Cream, the ſum and ſubſtance of all your arguments. All that ye have ſaid is reducible to this one poſition, God thruſteth him down, not man, and therefore he is a wicked man; This is the wiſdom which ye glory to have found.

Now though we take the words as the ſum of what Job's friends had ſpoken, collected and drawn together by Elihu, yet there is ſome variety in opening the ſence of them; I will but touch a little at what is offered by ſeveral Interpreters, and ſtay upon that which I conceive moſt proper to the place.

First, Some conceive that in theſe words an account is given why Job's friends gave over ſpeaking, or why they ſtood ſilent, either reſolving to ſpeak no more, or preſuming they had ſpoken all; As if they had ſaid, We have found out and concluded among our ſelves, that 'tis moſt adviſeable for us, or our wiſeſt way to ſay no more; you poſſibly think we can ſay no more, but we do induſtriouſly forbear to ſay any more; why ſhould we trouble him any further; God troubleth and vexeth him enough. God thruſteth him down, therefore let not man; And therefore we think it our wiſdom (having ſaid this) to forbear and give him over, for we will not add affliction any longer to the afflicted. So that as the Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning the repenting Corinthian (2 Cor. 2. 6, 7.) Sufficient to ſuch a man is this puniſhment which was inflicted of man, ſo that contrariwiſe ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, leſt perhaps ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with overmuch ſorrow; ſo Job's friends (according to this Expoſition) are brought in ſpeaking the ſame ſence; Sufficient to him is that puniſhment which hath been inflicted on him by one, even by God, ſo that contrariwiſe we ought rather rather to comfort him, leſt he ſhould be ſwallowed up with overmuch ſorrow.

Elihu de amicorum Jobi ſilentio conquerenti, ſic reſpondent. Fecimus de induſtria, non oportet hominem exagitare Jobum: ſatis eſt quod à Deo exagitetur. Vatabl.

Cum Deus propellat eum nihil ultra neceſſe eſt ut ab homine impugnetur; ut afflicto inſuper addatur afflictio; quia ſatis eſt quod Deus eum ob ſua peccata perſequatur. Rab. Levi.

Secondly, Others give their meaning thus rigidly; We think it our wiſdom to ſay no more, but to remit or give him up to God, as a man that is obſtinate and will not be convinced. Elihu told them a little before that none had convinced Job; and here they are repreſented, ſaying, we indeed have left him to God, as unconvincible by us, and therefore, God muſt thruſt him down, not man. There is a truth in this; ſome men are ſo obſtinate in their ways, though evil, and ſtiff in their opinions, though groſſeſt errors, that there is no more dealing with them, ſuch as theſe are paſt mans skill to recall or reclaim, they muſt be left to God. As in extream dangerous caſes of travel in child-birth, the good women ſigh and give over, ſaying, This is not womans work, we muſt leave her to the man; So in dealing with ſome men, after long labour and no ſucceſs, we muſt even ſay, This is not mans work, he muſt be left to God, who alone can thruſt him down, man cannot.

Thirdly, That which is, I conceive, chiefly intended, take thus; I (ſaith Elihu) have undertaken after long waiting and expectance to ſhew mine opinion, Leſt ye ſhould ſay, we have found out wiſdom; That is, an argument ſo ſtrongly concluding Job a wicked man, that no wiſe man can object againſt it. But what was that irrefragable argument, by which Job's friends hoped to conclude him, and ſtop his mouth for ever? Surely that which followed in this verſe, God thruſteth him down, not man; That Job's friends laid the main ground-work of their hard opinion concerning him in the dealings of God with him, is evident by what hath been ſhewed from many paſſages quite through the Book; All which may be reſolved into the ſenſe, now given, of this one; God thruſteth him down, not man, and therefore he is a wicked man.

Iſta animi obfirmatio omne amplius loquendi deſiderium adimit cum eo homine, quum nemo homo poterit, ſed deus ſolus de iſta animi pertinacia depellere. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The afflictions and thruſtings down of ſome men are eminently from the hand of God.

Every affliction is from God, but ſome are more from God. As God is more viſibly ſeen in the lifting up of ſome men, ſo in the caſting down of others. Every man that is lifted up, is lifted up by the hand of God; 'Tis the moſt High, who one way or other, ſetteth any man on high; but in ſetting up ſome men on high, his workings are ſo high, that every man may ſee them and ſay, The finger of God is there, the hand of God hath done it. 'Tis thus alſo in thruſting men down; every affliction, every thruſting down, is from God, there is a hand of God in it; for as Eliphaz ſpake (Chap. 5. 6.) Affliction comes not forth of the duſt, nor doth trouble ſpring out of the ground: Whence then are troubles? Surely they drop down from heaven; they are from the earth as to the contracting of them, but from heaven as to the contriving of them. Yet there are ſome troubles which fall from heaven more apparently than others do; That is, there is more of God, more of the hand of God in ſuch a diſpenſation, than there is in others, though there be a hand of God in every one: therefore ſay Job's friends, God thruſts him down, and not man; this mans afflictions are mighty ſtroaks from heaven. For though God hath raiſed up and uſed inſtruments againſt him, yet himſelf hath appeared moſt againſt him.

Secondly, Obſerve, Thoſe afflictions wherein God doth eminently appear againſt a man, ſeem to bear the greateſt witneſs againſt him of his ſinfulneſs or wickedneſs.

That was the ſcope of Job's friends, This is, ſay they, an undeniable argument, that the man is wicked, becauſe there is ſuch an eminent hand of God upon him. This was the foundation upon which they built all their ſeveral cenſures of him, yea, their hardeſt ſentences againſt him. And there is a fair probability in this way of arguing, upon four Conſiderations.

Firſt, It may be urged, thus; God is juſt, (men indeed are often unjuſt and unrighteous in the evil which they bring upon others; but God is juſt) and therefore he would not lay his hand upon any man in this manner, unleſs he were a wicked man. Surely his iniquity hath found him out, whom the hand of God hath thus found out.

Secondly, God is merciful, he is gracious, (Lament. 3. 33.) He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of men. Now if God hath declared himſelf ſo unwilling to grieve the Children of men, ſurely, when we ſee him ſo willingly grieve a man, as he hath grieved this or that man, may we not ſay, he is a wicked man? Judgment is called God's ſtrange work, but in judging ſome, he acteth as if judgment were his proper work, as if he were in his Element when he is laying heavy ſtroaks on their backs; therefore may we not conclude ſuch among the wicked?

Thirdly, God is wiſe; he cannot be deceived concerning any man; therefore there is ſome great reaſon why he afflicts, and what reaſon can more probably be given of a great affliction, than ſome great ſin? As God is ſo true that he will not deceive any man, ſo he is ſo wiſe that he cannot be deceived in any man. He cannot miſs his mark, nor fall upon a wrong ſubject in his diſpenſations; therefore we have fair warrant to ſay, that a man againſt whom God appears ſo much, appears very foul to him, whatever fair appearances he may have among men.

Fourthly, Take this Conſideration alſo, when men afflict their brethren, they often do it either out of reſolved malice, or in heat of revenge; but God cannot do it with ſuch a ſpirit, nor from ſuch principles; The higheſt acts of revenge in God, are but the awards of Juſtice. Again, Men will afflict others out of envy, or to eaſe themſelves; as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of parents chaſtning their children (Heb. 12. 9. 10.) We have had fathers of our fleſh, which have corrected us, and we gave them reverence, ſhall we not much more be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits and live? For they verily for a few days chaſtned us after their own pleaſure, or (as that Text may more clearly be rendred out of the original Greek) as it ſeemed good to them, or as they thought good; As if he had ſaid, They will do it upon their natural prerogative, or the right of paternity, without giving any account; Yea, a father will afflict and chaſten his child ſometimes (in another ſenſe) for his pleaſure; That is, to vent his paſſion, and eaſe himſelf: but God never chaſteneth us in paſſion, nor ever purely upon prerogative, but with a reſpect alſo to our ſpiritual (which is the beſt) profit, and for our good. Now among the good things which God aimeth at in afflicting any man, this is not the leaſt, the purging out of his evils. And therefore when we cannot aſcribe the chaſtiſement of man to man, but to God alone, 'tis a witneſs againſt him, at leaſt, it draws a ſuſpition upon him of ſome great ſinfulneſs lodged in him, or ſinful ways walked in by him.

Thirdly, obſerve, It is no concluding argument againſt any man that he is wicked, becauſe God afflicts him immediately; or, how much ſoever the hand of God appears in an affliction, 'tis no concluding argument againſt the afflicted.

'Tis one principal ſcope intended by Elihu in this diſcourſe, to ſhew that there were other cauſes and reaſons of God's afflicting Job, or any man elſe beſides him. And that we ſhould not make Concluſions, that the greateſt ſufferers, are the greateſt ſinners. For firſt, though indeed God threatneth to puniſh the wicked, who wilfully tranſgreſs his Law, yet he afflicts many, without reſpect to wickedneſs. Secondly, though God threatens the wicked only or chiefly at leaſt, yet he reſerves a liberty to try the innocent; yea, as Job ſaith in the 9. Chapter, He laughs at the trial of the innocent; And therefore the moſt innocent are moſt tryed. I have had occaſion more than once to ſhew why they are moſt or ſo much tryed. Firſt, for the exerciſe of their faith; Secondly, for the improvement of their patience; Thirdly, to humble them; Fourthly, ſometimes to ſet them up for examples to others; as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 5. 10.) Take, my Brethren, the Prophets, who have ſpoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of ſuffering affliction and of patience. The Prophets have ſuffered affliction, and God hath let them ſuffer, that they might be patterns of ſuffering; and 'tis ſo in many other inſtances; Fifthly, God doth it to mortifie their corruptions; Sixthly, to prevent future tranſgreſſions, he hedgeth up their way with thorns; Seventhly, to diſcover or gain a teſtimony of their ſincerity. They ſerve Chriſt to purpoſe, who can ſuffer while they ſerve, and bleed under his croſs, while they ſweat under his yoke. Surely then, there is no concluding againſt any man that he is a ſon of Belial, or hath caſt off the yoke of Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt burdeneth him with his croſs. Yet this was the great Maxime, which Job's friends inſiſted upon, He muſt needs be a wicked man, becauſe the Lord had thruſt him down, not man.

But when we ſee good men thruſt down by the hand of God, there is a better uſe to be made of it, than to judg them, and that is to be watchful over our ſelves, leſt we put a rod into the hand of God to chaſten us, or a ſword into his hand to wound us. For as Chriſt ſpake (Luke 23. 33.) If it be thus done to the green tree, what ſhall be done to the dry? If Chriſt ſuffered ſo much, who was a green flouriſhing fruit-bearing tree, what may we who are dry and barren trees? Or take the meer ſons of men, ſome of them comparatively to others, are as green trees flouriſhing in grace and holineſs, who yet are under ſore affliction; and if this be done to a green tree, what ſhall be done to thoſe who are but dry barren fruitleſs trees, yea, trees that bring forth evil fruit? The Apoſtle (1 Pet. 4. 17.) gives a ſutable caution; If Judgment begin at the houſe of God (he does not ſay at the Temple of Idols, But if it begin at the houſe of God) what will the end be of thoſe that obey not the Goſpel! Let others look to it when they ſee God afflicting his people, when they ſee God bringing ſuch troubles into his own houſe, what troubles may they expect, who are indeed but a den of thieves, and whoſe houſes are, yea who themſelves are as a Cage of unclean birds? Thus we ſee the great argument diſproved, which Job's friends uſed to prove him wicked, becauſe God did thruſt him down, not man. And, ſaith Elihu, this is it you ſay and boaſt of, as your wiſdom; but indeed you have not convinced Job, no not by this. What you have taken for a demonſtration, is but a fallacy. And though I might wave mine own trouble in ſhewing that it is ſo, becauſe I am not the man (but ye are the men) to whom Job hath ſhaped his whole diſcourſe, yet I cannot forbear to do it, only I promiſe you, I will not tread in your ſteps, nor take up your method in doing it. That's the ſum of the words which follow.

Verſ. 14. Now he hath not directed his words againſt me, neither will I anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

In this verſe Elihu ſpeaks Negatively in two things; Firſt, He tells us, that Job had not ſpoken profeſſedly, nor directly to him. Secondly, he tells us, how he would not deal with Job; that is, not as his friends before had done.

Now he hath not directed his words againſt me.

As if Elihu had ſaid, I confeſs I have not been at all ſpoken to all this while, unleſs in common with all the Auditory, and therefore might well enough look upon my ſelf as unconcern'd in this matter.

The word here uſed to direct, hath a great elegancy in it, and may be an alluſion; Firſt, to an Archer who aims at, or directs his arrow to the mark. Secondly, to a Warrier, eſpecially a Commander in War, who ſets his men in battel array againſt the enemy; As if Elihu had ſaid, Job hath not aimed at me, nor hath he ordered or ſet his words in order to oppreſs me. Job hath not drawn up his forces, nor ſet himſelf in array againſt me, but againſt you; And ſo perhaps that hate and bitterneſs of ſpirit, which you have contracted by this long-continued debate with Job, hath given you occaſion prudently to withdraw, and forbear the entertainment of any further diſcourſe with him. Yea, poſſibly ye are now fallen into a deep contempt of him, as a man forſaken of God, and therefore to be no more dealt with by man. But there is not the like reaſon for me to forbear ſpeaking with him; ſeeing as he hath not at all oppoſed me, ſo I am not at all diſturbed in my own thoughts about him, nor is my ſpirit imbittered with any vindictive motions againſt him; and ſhall therefore enter into the liſts of this diſputation, with a peaceable and quiet mind; or rather I ſhall (being a perſon every way unprejudic'd) do my beſt endeavour to moderate and compoſe this great difference between you. Now he hath not directed his words againſt me, &c.

ערך digeſſit, diſpoſuit, ordinavit, verbum bellicum de acie ordinanda dicitur. Merc.

Hence note, Firſt, Our words ſhould be well ordered.

They ſhould be drawn up like a well-diſciplin'd Army, in rank and file. Confuſion in words is as bad as confuſion in things; Some heap up words, but they do not rightly diſpoſe nor order them; all they ſpeak is out of joynt or frame. As a multitude or rout of men, doth not make an Army; we may ſee ten thouſand men together, and yet no Army; why? becauſe they are not in order or method, they are not under Diſcipline, and ſo they are but a confuſed throng, not an Hoſt of men. And thus a great many words hudled and throng'd together, are of no more force nor uſe, than a number of men without order; Method is very good in every thing we do, eſpecially in what we ſpeak; A ſpeech rightly ordered, is like an Army rightly marſhalled. A word fitly ſpoken, fitly as to the ſeaſon of it, and fitly as to the jointing and diſpoſing of it (we may take in both in that place of Solomon, A word fitly ſpoken) is like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver.

There is another thing conſiderable in this former part of the verſe, Elihu (as was lately intimated) ſpake thus to ſhew he came to the diſpute unprovoked; He hath not directed his words againſt me; he hath not toucht me. Ye indeed have been provoked by his words, he hath touched you often and often to the quick, and this hath made you touchy, angry and paſſionate, and you have grown into heats; but becauſe he hath not directed his ſpeech againſt me, therefore I ſhall come upon the ſtage, and enter this diſpute with much coolneſs and temper. In a word, I bring no paſſion againſt his perſon, as you (being ſtung by his words) have done.

Vult oſtendere quod non loquitur quaſi provocatus. Aquin.

Hence note, Secondly, They who are not provoked, have no reaſon to ſpeak provokingly.

That's it which Elihu would have Job perſwaded of; we uſe to ſay, Speak when you are ſpoken to. Then ſurely we are not to ſpeak otherwiſe, than we are ſpoken to; we muſt not give railing for railing, much leſs may we rail when railing is not given.

He hath not directed his words againſt me.] One of the Ancients Commenting upon this Text, ſaith, Elihu diſcovers pride in this ſpeech, He hath not directed his ſpeech againſt me; As if Elihu diſdained to take notice of what was ſpoken to them; which (ſaith he) is the humor of a proud man; who looks not upon himſelf as engaged by any thing ſpoken, unleſs you ſpeak perſonally and directly to him; whereas Chriſt ſpeaking perſonally to his Diſciples only, would yet have all men ſee themſelves ſpoken to (Mark 13. 34.) What I ſay to you, I ſay to all, watch. Elihu ſhould have taken what Job ſpake to his three friends, as ſpoken to all that were preſent, and ſo might well enough have ſpared this complement, as my Author conceives. But I paſs that as a curioſity; Eſpecially becauſe it appears plainly enough, that Elihu, though the words were not ſpoken directly to him, yet did take himſelf to be much concerned; and therefore riſeth up as a Moderator in this Controverſie between Job and his three friends. He hath not directed his words againſt me;

Superbi quæ ad communem omnium utilitatem dicuntur nunquam ſibi dicta exiſtimant. Greg.

Neither will I anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

I will not go your way, nor follow your example in this undertaking; I ſhall proceed upon other principles, and uſe other mediums than ye have done; ſuch, I hope, as will be found much more effectual, and attain their end. We may take theſe words;

I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches, two ways; Firſt, as their ſpeeches had too little light of reaſon in them; Secondly, as their ſpeeches had too much fire of paſſion in them. As if he had ſaid, I will uſe milder words and ſtronger arguments; I utterly diſapprove the courſe you have taken with him; and therefore I will neither inſiſt upon your theme to condemn him for an hypocrite, nor uſe your argument to prove it, becauſe God hath thus ſorely afflicted him; for I hold that a meer Sophiſm. I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches; That is, with ſpeeches which have ſo much paſſion, and ſo little true reaſon in them, as to the point in hand. For though Job's friends had ſpoken many things of much weight and reaſon conſidered abſtractly, or in theſi, yet when it came to the hypotheſis, as appliable to Job's ſpecial caſe, then their ſpeeches had little or no weight in them. So that in this profeſſion Elihu ſeems to promiſe theſe two things.

Mihi integrum eſt reſpondere & quidem longe aliter & ex alio fundamento, licet me directè Jobus non oppugnaverit. Scult.

Non ſequar vias veſtras in reſpondendo, ſed aliàs efficaciores inveniam. Aquin.

Firſt, That he would uſe ſtronger arguments than they had done; I will not uſe yours, that is, weak ones, I purpoſe to come better prepared to the Combat than you; for though Elihu doth ſometimes uſe ſuch arguments as they, yet he doth not uſe them to their end to prove that Job acted rebelliouſly, or like a wicked man againſt God, as they did: but to ſhew, that he carried himſelf too highly, or over-confidently towards God. And this (as it appears by the iſſue) took more upon Job than all his friends hard ſuſpitions, charges, and accuſations. This humbled him, this ſilenced him; he had nothing to return, but ſate down convinced; and therefore Elihu dealt with him in more ſtrength of reaſon and divine authority than they had done.

Secondly, When Elihu ſaith, I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches, he ſeems to engage that he would deal mildly with him, or without paſſion; he would not uſe bitter words, but debate and argue the matter gently and meekly. For though Elihu gave Job many ſevere reproofs, yet always in a more friendly manner, not to prove that he had done wickedly, but to convince him that he had ſpoken over-boldly; or that while he was ſo zealous to defend his own innocency, he ſometimes intrencht upon the ſoveraignty of God, in his eager and earneſt deſire of pleading his cauſe before him. And ſurely it was but need that Job ſhould have a man of a milder temper ſent in to ſpeak to him, elſe his ſpirit might have been quite over-whelm'd and ſunk. Nor was it without the ſpecial hand of God, that after this poor afflicted ſoul had been ſo hardly uſed, and ſo grievouſly cenſured by thoſe rigid diſputants, he ſhould at laſt meet with a man more meek and compaſſionate, in ſome meaſure, to mitigate and allay his ſorrow.

Firſt, In that Elihu ſaith, I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

Obſerve, It is not good to imitate others in any thing they do or ſpeak which is not good.

We muſt not either act or ſpeak by example, but by rule, or by example only ſo far as it anſwers the rule. 'Tis dangerous treading in their ſteps who tread awry. When Paul found that Peter did not go right, he was reſolved not only not to follow him, but to reprove him (Gal. 2. 14.) Thus ſaith Elihu, here I will not write after your Copy, nor take up directions from what you have done, for I ſee you have gone and done amiſs.

Again, When Elihu ſaith, I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

Note Secondly, What we ſpeak ſhould be our own ſence, not the ſence of others, unleſs their ſence, either of things or perſons, be the ſame with ours.

Some pin their opinion upon the ſleeves of others, and they will be juſt of the judgment of ſuch a man; what he ſaith, they will ſay. As ſome expect that every one ſhould be of their Judgment, and ſay as they ſay; they are many Maſters (which the Apoſtle James forbids, My Brethren, be not many Maſters, do not take upon you to give the rule to all others, ſome are proud at this rate, they think themſelves able to give the rule to all men) ſo not a few are ſo eaſie, that preſently they will take up any thing as a rule from any Maſter; whereas we ſhould not be ſo apt to follow, but labour to have the Judgment or reaſon of things in our ſelves, rather than to take it up upon truſt. When Luther was much troubled about the dealings of God in the world, to ſee how matters went, and was ſaying within himſelf, Surely it were better things were carried thus and thus; while Luther (I ſay) was thus troubled, he thought he heard this word of reproof from God; O Martin, Martin, I ſee thou art very wiſe, thou canſt give rules, even to God himſelf, but I am not a God eaſie to be led by men. I will not take thy counſel, though I ſee thou haſt an honeſt heart in what thou counſelleſt. I have a way of my own, and I will have my own way, though the world, yea, though good men, and my own faithful ſervants are grieved and mourn at it. Man would appoint to God himſelf, but God will not model matters by mans wiſdom, nor in his way. Thus in the preſent caſe (I only allude) it is not good for us when we hear what others ſay, preſently to receive it, or take the impreſſion from them; and ſo anſwer in their words, or vote their opinions, though they are wiſe and good men; Elihu takes the liberty to diſſent, as in his opinion, ſo in his Method of proceeding with Job, I will anſwer, but it ſhall not be with your ſpeeches, I will take my own courſe.

Martine, Martine, tu valde ſapis, ſed ego non ſum Deus ſequax.

Thirdly, Note, The failings and miſtakes of others, ſhould be our warnings not to do the like.

Elihu obſerved where they miſſed as to the matter in hand, he obſerved alſo wherein they miſſed, as to the manner of proceeding; and he obſerved both well, and wiſely to avoid the like inconveniences; and thereupon profeſſed, I will not anſwer him with your ſpeeches.

Fourthly, Note, We ſhould anſwer to every point and perſon with reaſon and ſweetneſs, not with paſſion and bitterneſs.

There is no convincing others with wrath; The wrath of man (ſaith the Apoſtle) works not the righteouſneſs of God, (James 1. 20.) That is, wrath will never bring about nor effect thoſe righteous things, or ends, which God would have us aim at. The wrath of man puts him quite out of the way of righteouſneſs, both out of the way of right ſpeaking, and of right acting. To ſhew much reaſon, and little paſſion, is our wiſdom. So the Apoſtle gives the rule (2 Tim. 2. 26.) The ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive; he doth not mean it of bodily ſtriving; As if he had ſaid, he muſt not be a fighter. As when the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 3. 3.) A Miniſter muſt not be a ſtriker; It can hardly be thought he ſhould intend only, if at all, that Miniſters ſhould not be like groſly boyſterous men, who are not ſo much as civil in their behaviour; ſurely ſuch are far enough off from a fitneſs to be received into the Miniſtry; therefore ſome expound the Apoſtle to the point in hand, he muſt be no ſtriker with his tongue in paſſion, anger, and wrath, no word ſtriker. There is great ſtriking, yea, wounding with words. Though Miniſters muſt ſtrike and wound with the authority of God, yet not with their own animoſities. They muſt wound the conſciences of ſinners, with the Word and Spirit of God, but not with their own wrathful ſpirits; ſuch ſtrikers they may not be, nor may the ſervant of the Lord ſtrive thus, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, yea, patient in teaching. It is a great exerciſe of patience to teach, with line upon line, precept upon precept; When we ſee little received or heeded, yet to inſiſt upon it, this is patience; In meekneſs inſtructing ſuch as oppoſe themſelves, if God peradventure will give repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth. As the Apoſtle James exhorts (Chap. 1. 21.) to receive the word with meekneſs; that's a moſt neceſſary rule in hearing the Word; for many times the hearer is in a paſſion, there is ſuch a ſtorm in his bowels that he cannot hear to purpoſe, therefore if any would receive the ingraffed word, they muſt receive it with meekneſs. I ſay alſo the word ſhould be given out or ſpoken in meekneſs, though not with coldneſs; I do not ſay with coldneſs or with a ſlightneſs of ſpirit, but with meekneſs. And the truth is, mild ſpeaking or meekneſs of ſpeech (as to the ſpirit and conſcience of the hearer) is not only moſt comfortable, but moſt prevailing. Meekneſs ſhould be ſhewed, even where there is the greateſt zeal; and zeal then prevails moſt, when there is moſt meekneſs in it. The Apoſtle Jude ſaith, Of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference, others ſave with fear; That is, ſave them by preaching that which may make them afraid, ſcare them out of their ſins; but yet ſtill this is to be done in a ſpirit of meekneſs. (Gal. 6. 1.) If any one be overtaken in a fault (what then? rail on him, rage againſt him, and revile him? no, but ſaith the Apoſtle) ye that are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch a one with the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted. Bones muſt be ſet (to that the word which we tranſlate reſtore alludes) with a tender hand. Thoſe three things which are required in a good Chyrurgeon, or Bone-ſetter, are as neceſſary in a reprover, or in him that would reduce another from the error of his way. Firſt, He muſt have an Eagles eye, to diſcern where the fault or failing is. Secondly, A Lyons heart, to deal freely with the faulty, how great ſoever they are. Thirdly, A Ladies hand, to uſe them gently and tenderly. All which will more fully appear, while Laſtly, From the example of Elihu, we collect and learn, that a good Moderator or compoſer of differences, muſt avoid five things. Firſt, lightneſs of ſpirit and of ſpeech. It is not good to ſpeak lightly of little things, but it is a ſhame to ſpeak lightly of great things. Weighty matters muſt be handled weightily, and we ſhould put not a little finger, but our ſhoulders to them! Secondly, paſſionateneſs of ſpirit and of ſpeech, muſt be avoided. That which hinders reaſon, had need be ſhut out while we are reaſoning. What a contradiction in the adjunct is it, to hear of an angry moderator? or to ſee a man ſet himſelf to compoſe differences between others with a diſcompoſed ſpirit of his own. Thirdly, partiality in ſpeaking, or the favouring of a party muſt be laid aſide; for as Elihu did not ſpare to tell Job's friends their own, ſo neither did he ſpare to tell Job his own, he was not partial on either ſide. What can be imagin'd more uncomly, than that he who ſtands between two ſhould lean to any one? or that he who comes to be an Umpire or a Judg, ſhould make himſelf a party or an Advocate. Fourthly, he muſt avoid timorouſneſs, and not be daunted with what man ſhall ſay or can do againſt him, while he is doing his duty. The fear of man is a ſnare (ſaith Solomon) That man had not need be in a ſnare himſelf, whoſe buſineſs it is to bring others out of the ſnares of error, whether in opinion or in practice. Fifthly, he muſt beware of an eaſineſs to be drawn aſide, either by the perſwaſions or applauſes of men. A Judg between others muſt keep his own ſtanding.

Thus far concerning theſe two verſes, wherein Elihu is ſtill carrying on his Preface, to prepare Job to receive attentively what he had to ſay. In the next place, Elihu turning to the ſtanders by, ſignifies to them in what condition he found Job's friends.

VERS. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.

They were amazed, they anſwered no more, they left off ſpeaking.
When I had waited, (for they ſpake not, but ſtood ſtill, and anſwered no more)
I ſaid, I will anſwer alſo my part, I alſo will ſhew mine opinion.
For I am full of matter, the ſpirit within me conſtraineth me.
Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles.
I will ſpeak, that I may be refreſhed: I will open my lips and anſwer.

ELihu had ſpoken of his friends ſilence before, and here he returns to it again, with a further addition and aggravation.

Verſ. 15. They were amazed, they anſwered no more, they left off ſpeaking, &c.

There are two opinions concerning the perſon who ſpake theſe words. Firſt, Some refer them to the writer or penman of this Book, but I rather take them as the words of Elihu himſelf.

They were amazed.] The root ſignifies to be affected with a very paſſionate and ſtrong fear, even ſuch a fear as they are arreſted with who flee or fall before their Enemies in battel. So the word is uſed (Jer. 50. 26.) A ſword is upon her mighty men, and they ſhall be diſmayed. Diſmay or amazement, is the diſplacing, at leaſt the diſturbing of reaſon it ſelf; Elihu ſhews how unable and unfit Job's friends were to argue with him any further, ſeeing upon the matter, they had loſt the uſe of their reaſon, and were as men crack-brain'd, or broken in their underſtanding. They were amazed.

They anſwered no more, they left off ſpeaking, or] Speech was departed from them; there is a two-fold Expoſition of that ſpeech (they left off ſpeaking) Some underſtand it paſſively, like that (Luke 12. 20.) This night ſhall thy ſoul be required, or taken from thee; thou ſhalt not freely deliver it up, but it ſhall be ſnatcht from thee; So here, their ſpeech was taken from them; or by an unanſwerable conviction, ſilence was impoſed upon them. Mr. Broughton renders, They do ſpeak no more, ſpeeches be departed from them. How can they ſpeak from whom ſpeech is departed.

We tranſlate actively, they left off ſpeaking, as implying a voluntary act, they gave a ſtop to themſelves; either they were not able, or it was not fit for them to ſay any more. The Hebrew is, They removed ſpeech from themſelves, and ſo became as ſilent as if they could not ſpeak at all. They were as mute as fiſhes. The following verſe being of the ſame ſenſe, I ſhall open that before I give the obſervations from this.

Verſ. 16. When I had waited (for they ſpake not but ſtood ſtill, and anſwered no more.)

Stare pro tacere.

Job waited hoping they would ſpeak ſomewhat worthy of themſelves, worthy of that opinion and reputation which they had in the world for wiſdom, but they deceived his expectation, He could not have nor hear a word more from them. This Elihu puts into a parentheſis (for they ſpake not, but ſtood ſtill, and anſwered no more) He uſeth many words to the ſame purpoſe, to ſhew that there was ſomewhat extraordinary in their ſilence; They ſpake not, their tongues ſtood ſtill. As ſpeech is the image of the mind, and from the abundance of the heart, ſo it is by the motion of the tongue. If the tongue ſtand ſtill, diſcourſe is ſtay'd. Their mouths were ſtopt, as being either unable or aſhamed to urge their accuſations and arguments any further. They ſtood ſtill and anſwered no more. It is ſaid of thoſe forward accuſers of the woman taken in adultery (John 8. 9.) That being Convicted by their own Conſcience, they went away one by one; they ſhrunk away, having not a word to reply; And ſo did Job's friends, who while they ſtood ſtill, carried it as men unwilling to be heard or ſeen any more upon the place. They were amazed, &c.

Firſt, Hence note, Amazement unfits us for argument.

Where wondering begins, diſputing ends. They were amazed, they anſwered no more.

Secondly, Note, The ſame men are ſometimes ſo changed, that they can ſcarcely be known to be the ſame men.

Eliphaz ſaid (Chap. 4. 2.) Who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking? He was ſo forward that he could not be kept from words, but now he had not a word in his keeping, ſpeech was withheld, or departed.

Thirdly, Note, Falſe grounds or poſitions, cannot be always maintain'd.

God will ſupply both matter and form, arguments and words, to confirm his own truth; they who are in the right, ſhall not want reaſon to back it: but they who are in the wrong, may quickly find a ſtop, and have no more to ſay, The Apoſtles were weak, becauſe unwilling in a bad cauſe (2 Cor. 13. 8.) We can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth; and they who are willing to be againſt the truth, ſhall be weak and not able long to do any thing againſt it (They ſpake no more) As God gives a banner, (that is, outward power) to them that fear him, that it may be diſplayed, becauſe of the truth (Pſal. 60. 4.) So he gives wiſdom and underſtanding (that is, inward power) for the maintaining of the truth. In thy majeſty ride proſperouſly becauſe of the truth (Pſal. 45. 4.) As Chriſt who is truth, and the giver forth of truth, ſo they who are undertakers for truth, ſhall ride and proſper. Truth may be borne down by power, and out-fac'd by impudence, but it cannot be overcome. Never fear to undertake a good Cauſe; and ever fear to undertake a bad one, for it will be ſlur'd at laſt. Truth may be oppoſed, but truth-defenders ſhall never be aſhamed, nor want a tongue to ſpeak for it. Chriſt (Matth. 10. 17.) warns his Diſciples what entertainment they were like to find in the world; They ſhall deliver you up to Rulers, ye ſhall be brought before Governours and Kings for my ſake; But he withal incourageth them; Take no thought what ye ſhall ſpeak, or what ye ſhall anſwer. For ſome might ſay, What if we ſhould be called in queſtion for the truths of the Goſpel? we are willing to burn for them (as that Martyr ſaid) but we fear we cannot diſpute for them. Well, ſaith Chriſt, take no thought what you ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given you in the ſame hour. God himſelf by his Spirit will prompt you, he will whiſper ſuch things into your ears, as all your oppoſers ſhall not be able to gainſay. Indeed we ſee ſome men of corrupt minds, and reprobate concerning the truth (as the Apoſtle gives their Character) who have courage enough to ſet forth lies, and ſlander the truth, who ſtrain their wits to the utmoſt, and (as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Jer.

(Jer. 9. 3.) bend their tongues like their bow for lyes. But let them remember what the Apoſtle ſaid of ſuch as they (2 *Tim.*3.8.) Now as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth; but (verſ. 9.) they ſhall proceed no further, for their folly ſhall be made manifeſt to all men; That is, ſhortly all ſhall ſee that theſe men have but plaid the fools: we may ſay of all thoſe who hold wild ranting opinions, they ſhall proceed no further, though they act highly againſt the truth now, yet ſtay but a while, and they will have nothing to anſwer or return, they will have emptied their quiver, and quite ſpent their powder, you ſhall hear no more of them.

From that 16. verſe, where Elihu addeth, I waited (for they ſpake not but ſtood ſtill, and anſwered no more.)

Obſerve Firſt, It is our wiſdom and our duty to ſtay our time before we put our ſelves out upon buſineſs.

It is good to wait; God himſelf is not haſty upon us, he waits to be gracious, and we muſt wait our ſeaſon to be ſerviceable; Elihu did not preſently engage. The Providences of God, and the Exigency of things, muſt put us on, we muſt not put our ſelves on. Chriſt tells us (Matth. 9. 38.) The harveſt is great, and the labourers few, pray therefore the Lord of the harveſt that he would thruſt forth labourers into his harveſt; he doth not ſay, pray that labourers would thruſt forth themſelves into the harveſt, or run into it before they are ſent, but pray the Lord of the harveſt that he would thruſt forth labourers; that is, that he would powerfully incline their hearts to the work, whom he hath fitted and prepared for it. And as until we are, at leaſt both competently prepared, and fairly inclined to that or any other good work, 'tis beſt for us to wait; ſo when once we are prepared and inclined, 'tis beſt for us, without delay, to ſet upon the work; Elihu did ſo, as appears in the next verſe.

Verſ. 17. I ſaid alſo I will anſwer my part, I will ſhew my opinion.

Now Elihu addreſſeth to his work, his duty; and in this with the verſes following to the end of the Chapter, we have, firſt, his reſolvedneſs to ſpeak,. I ſaid I will anſwer for my part, &c. Secondly, his ability, readineſs and furniture to ſpeak (v. 18.) For I am full of matter, &c. Thirdly, we have the motives that preſt him to ſpeak, or that he was exceedingly preſt to it in the latter end of the 18. verſe, as alſo verſ. 19, 20. My ſpirit within me conſtraineth me. Behold my belly is as wine which hath no vent, &c. I will ſpeak that I may be refreſhed. Fourthly; in the two laſt verſes, he tells us what caution, yea what conſcience he meant to uſe in ſpeaking (*v.*20.) Let me not I pray you accept any mans perſon: neither let me give flattering titles unto man, &c.

I ſaid I will anſwer for my part, &c.] Now you have done, I will begin; thoſe words, I ſaid, are not in the Hebrew Text explicitely, yet are well underſtood. I will anſwer for my part, that is, (as ſome conceive, the force of the phraſe) I will anſwer with my ſtrength, and might, I will put my ſhoulders to it; but better Grammarians conclude, that the word imports, A man's ſhare or portion in any work to be done, rather than the ſtrength which the workman uſeth or puts forth in doing it. And ſo the ſenſe is plain, as if Elihu had ſaid, they have done their part, they have gone to the utmoſt of their line; now I ſee it falls to my turn to ſpeak, and I will do what falls to my turn, I will anſwer alſo for my part.

Illud quod aliqui partem interpretantur pro mea virili parte aut pro viribus, Latinè potius dictum eſt, quam ad germanam vocis ſignificationem. Pined.

I alſo will ſhew my opinion.] We had theſe words in the negative at the 6, verſe; There Elihu ſaid, I was afraid and durſt not ſhew you my opinion; But here, as alſo before (verſ. 10.) Elihu had taken courage and was reſolved to ſhew his opinion. I ſhall not ſtay upon any opening of this clauſe, only I ſhall note two or three things briefly from it, as connected with the former verſe. There we had Elihu waiting, here we have him purpoſing to ſpeak.

Hence note, They who conſider and wait before they ſpeak, ſpeak moſt prevailingly, moſt weightily.

It was long e're Elihu ventured to ſpeak, but when he did, he did it to purpoſe and with full effect. That which comes from our own heart, is moſt like to take upon the hearts of others; they ſpeak as much from their hearts as with their tongues, whom we ſee long waiting before we hear them ſpeaking. And therefore, it is not good, no not for good ſpeakers, to be ſpeaking before they have been waiting; many through haſte bring forth untimely births, and unripe fruit; Elihu could ſay, I have waited, before he ſaid, I will anſwer for my part.

Secondly, Note, We ought to obſerve order in ſpeaking, and act our proper part.

I will anſwer for my part (ſaith Elihu) or my turn is come to anſwer. The Apoſtle Paul gives this rule at large (1 Cor. 14. 28, 29, 30.) He would have no Interruption, no confuſion in Church-meetings, or Church-ſpeakings.

Thirdly, When he ſaith, I will anſwer alſo for my part, I alſo will ſhew mine opinion.

Note, He that hath received a gift or talent, ſhould make uſe of it, and not hide it.

It is good to be doing our part, and ſhewing our opinion where we may be uſeful: Some love to act other mens parts rather than their own, and to intrude into Provinces which are not theirs. But whatſoever our hand finds to do (as Solomon ſpeaks, Eccl. 9. 10.) that is, whatſoever is, as Elihu here calls it, our part, that we ſhould do with all our might. More was given about uſing our talent and ſhewing our opinion at the 10. verſe of this Chapter, whither I refer the Reader.

Fourthly, Elihu was here but an auditor, not a diſputant, not a party, he came in only upon the by; yet having received a word he utters it.

Hence note, Every man ſhould think himſelf concern'd to ſpeak for the truth, when 'tis wronged, and do his beſt to right it,

Or we ſhould take all occaſions and ſeaſons of doing good by our words as well as by our works. As it is not good to out-run providence, ſo to neglect or foreſlow it is not good.

Laſtly, Obſerve, What others fail in, we ſhould labour to ſupply in the cauſe of God, and for his truth.

It is a Proverbial ſpeech among the Hebrews; Where there is not a man, there be thou a man; That is, if we ſee any unable to carry on and go thorow-ſtitch with the work before them, we ſhould lend a hand to help and ſupply them; thus ſaith Elihu, I will anſwer for my part, I alſo will ſhew mine opinion. And it ſeems (by that which follows) Elihu did ſo, not only to anſwer his duty, but to empty and eaſe his ſpirit. For,

Ubi non eſt vir, tu vir eſto.

In the 18, 19, and 20. verſes, he gives us that further account of his interpoſition about this controverſie.

Verſ. 18. For I am full of matter.

Yea, I am under a mighty Conſtraint; there is a kind of force upon me, The Spirit within me conſtraineth me.

I am full of matter.] The Original is, I am full of words; yet of more than words, as appears in the following part of this Chapter; therefore we tranſlate, I am full of matter; that is, I am full of ſuch words as are material; words of truth, words of ſoberneſs: I am full of ſuch words as will carry with them a Conviction home to thy Conſcience, O Job, and ſilence all thy complaints. Or as if Elihu had ſaid to Job's friends, Though ye have ſpent your ſtore upon Job, yet I have ſtore and plenty by me to ſpend upon him. Thus he reflects upon them as ſcanty and ſhort in their undertaking; your Lamps have ſpent their oyl, you have emptied your veſſels; ſo have not I, I am full of matter.

Cum ait ſe plenum, amicarum inopiam notare videtur. Pined.

The Spirit within me conſtraineth me.

The Text is; My ſpirit in my belly conſtraineth me. Maſter Broughton renders, My bellies ſpirit doth preſs me: The Seventy render, The ſpirit of my belly deſtroyeth me. A Greek tranſlater ſaith, My ſpirit within me ſets me on fire, or, I am all in a flame. The word which we render, Conſtrain, ſignifies to preſs very ſore (Judges 14. 17.) And it came to paſs the ſeventh day, that he told her, becauſe ſhe lay ſore upon him, or conſtrained him.

צוק In Hiphil anxit, anguſtiavit, preſſit. Συνέχει με. Sym.

It may be queſtioned, whoſe ſpirit, or what ſpirit it was that conſtrained Elihu?

Some expound it of the Spirit of God; he dictates both words and matter to me. Maſter Calvin ſeems to comply with this Expoſition; God hath printed ſuch a mark in the doctrine of Elihu, that the heavenly Spirit is apparent in his mouth; God (ſaith Elihu) hath put his Seal to what I have to ſay, therefore do not receive it as the word of a mortal man, the Spirit of God conſtrains me. Paul uſeth a word in the Greek of like ſignificancy (2 Cor. 5. 14.) The love of Chriſt conſtraineth me, it preſſeth and overbeareth me; I am not able to get out of the power of it.

Again, Others underſtand it of his own ſpirit, yet acted by the Spirit of God (Prov. 29. 11.) A fool uttereth all his ſpirit; we tranſlate, all his mind; the ſpirit preſſing Elihu was his mind carried ſtrongly or reſolvedly bent upon this buſineſs. The ſtrong inclination or diſpoſition of a mans mind to any thing good or bad, as in Scripture language called his Spirit.

The Spirit within me.] The Hebrew is, The ſpirit of my belly; Which form of ſpeech notes only that which is moſt internal, or lyeth cloſeſt within us. Solomon ſaith of the words of wiſdom (Prov. 22. 18.) It is a pleaſant thing if thou keep them within thee; The Original is, in thy belly. (John 7. 38.) Out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water; That is, out of his inward man; there ſhall be a ſpirit in his ſpirit (for this Chriſt ſpake of the Spirit which ſhould be given) and the ſame word is uſed of the wicked man (Job 15. 35.) His belly (that is, his mind or underſtanding) prepareth deceit. And Solomon (Cant. 7. 2.) ſpeaking of the Church, ſaith, Her belly is like an heap of wheat ſet about with lillies; That is, ſhe is big with holy thoughts and conceptions, as a woman great with child, ready to be delivered. A gracious heart is continually meditating and conceiving holy things, which it brings forth, and is as it were delivered of, upon any good occaſion. The ſpirit within me conſtraineth me.

Spiritus ventris eſt πληροφορία & alacritas urgens & extimulans ad loquendum. Coc.

What Elihu had thus ſpoken in plain terms by way of aſſertion in this verſe, he illuſtrates by way of ſimilitude or alluſion in the next.

Verſ. 19. Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles.

חמר חדת Vinum novum vel muſtum, cui non eſt ademptum obthuraculum ut exhalet. Jun.

Elihu proſecutes the ſame thing in another way; and to ſhew how troubleſom it was to refrain ſpeaking any longer, his thoughts being not only too many, but too working to be incloſed in ſo narrow a room as his own breaſt, he compares them to wine, or to new wine, which will either find or make its way out.

The whole ſimilitude is exceeding elegant, Firſt, he compares his thoughts, or the matter he had in his mind to wine. Secondly, he compares his ſoul or ſpirit to bottles, his inward man was the veſſel that held this wine. Thirdly, he compares his long ſilence to the ſtopple or cork of the bottle. Fourthly, he compares that trouble and grief of mind which this forbearance to ſpeak brought upon him, to the working which is in a bottle ſo ſtopt, or having no vent. Fifthly, he compares his intended ſpeaking to the opening of the bottle which gives it vent.

Behold my belly is as wine; that is, the thoughts of my belly are as wine.] The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith, as new wine, which is full of ſpirits, and being ſtopt is ready to break the bottle; which ſhews the mighty force which Elihu's thoughts had upon him, they would out, there was no ſtopping of them. Chriſt ſaith, (Matth. 9. 17.) No man putteth new wine into old bottles, but men put new wine into new bottles; why? becauſe they are ſtronger, and ſo more fit to preſerve the wine; My belly is as wine.

It is ready to burſt like new bottles.

The word which we render bottles, is never uſed in Scripture elſewhere in this ſenſe, but it is often uſed to ſignifie Wizards, or ſuch as have familiar Spirits (Iſa. 8. 19. Iſa. 29. 4.) becauſe they who uſed thoſe helliſh arts by compact with the Devil, did ſpeak out of their belly, and ſo as it were, out of a bottle. Now, ſaith Elihu, My belly is as new wine that hath no vent, and it is ready to burſt like new bottles; even new bottles will break, unleſs the new wine have ſome vent. And becauſe though new bottles be ſtronger than old to keep in wine, yet the wine may be ſo ſtrong as to break them, therefore Elihu hereby ſhews that his deſire or neceſſity of ſpeaking was ſo urgent upon him, that though he ſhould ſtrengthen himſelf, yea ſtrive with himſelf as much as he could to refrain from ſpeaking, yet ſpeak he muſt. I am full of matter, &c.

Unde à Græcis ἐγγαστρίμυθοι dicuntur. Merc.

Obſerve, Firſt, A man ſhould not ſpeak, eſpecially in weighty matters, till himſelf be well ſtored with matter.

Secondly, Obſerve, When ſome veſſels are drawn quite dry, and inſtruments ſpent and worn to the ſtumps, when they can neither do nor ſay any more, then God fills up and furniſheth others for his purpoſe.

There was not a drop more to be ſqueez'd out of Job's friends, but Elihu was a full bottle (Mal. 2. 15.) there is a reſidue of the Spirit; God hath more Spirit or ſpiritual abilities to diſpoſe of, and beſtow then he hath yet diſpoſed of to, or beſtowed upon any one or all the ſons of men.

Thirdly, Note, God can furniſh Inſtruments with proper gifts for the work which he calls them to.

Here was a man cut out on purpoſe for this work, he was clothed with a ſpirit of prudence and courage, as well as with a ſpirit of diſcerning. We have a wonderful example of this in Luther, who came forth againſt all the powers of the Papacy. What a ſpirit had he? his was a ſpirit of might, his ſpirit conſtrained him, his belly was like a bottle full of new wine, there was no ſtopping of it. Others would have been daunted and cowed down with the tenth of that oppoſition which he met with, but he was bold as a Lyon, who turneth not aſide.

Again, Why did Elihu come forth? why did his ſpirit conſtrain him? what made his belly like wine? Some charge him with pride and arrogancy of ſpirit, as if he did it out of vain oſtentation, to ſhew his parts and gifts, to ſet himſelf above thoſe other Worthies who had dealt and diſcourſed with Job before. But we have reaſon enough (conſidering what he ſpake, and what the iſſue of his ſpeaking was) to determine, that he was moved with a zeal for God, and to do good to Job, not with a ſpirit of pride, to ſhew his learning, wit or wiſdom among men; and therefore we find that when the whole matter was brought to an iſſue, and God himſelf came to deal with Job and his three friends, God commends Job, and reproves his three friends, but there is no reproof upon Elihu. Now for as much as God himſelf doth not charge him, what hath man to do to charge him? Not only charity but reaſon and judgment command us to think his deſign honeſt, and his ayms ſincere, while he profeſſeth under ſo vehement an impulſe or impreſſion upon his ſpirit to engage and ſpeak in this matter.

Hence note, Thirdly, To ſee truth ill handled, ſhould fill our ſpirits with much zeal for God.

That was it which drew Elihu to this engagement, he ſaw thoſe men (though good men) had put a diſguiſe upon the things and dealings of God; and if men diſguiſe the truth, and maintain error, if they deface the doctrines of faith and pure worſhip, with their own phanſies and falſe gloſſes, it ſhould kindle a holy fire and fervour of ſpirit in us, to aſſert and vindicate the truth. Our ſpirit within us (in all ſuch caſes) ſhould conſtrain us.

Fifthly, In that Elihu was ſo conſtrained and preſſed in ſpirit, as wine which hath no vent, or as a woman with Child ready to travel;

Note, It is a pain not to ſpeak when we have much to utter, and much mind to utter it.

When Elihu was full he had a conſtraint upon him to vent his opinion. David ſaith (Pſal. 39. 1, 2, 3.) I held my peace, even from good words; (he did not only forbear idle and evil diſcourſe, but refrain'd from good) but it was trouble to him not to ſpeak, eſpecially not to ſpeak good words; therefore he adds, My heart waxed hot within me. Jeremy found it no eaſie work to keep in words; yea, he deſcribes himſelf as much pained by not delivering his mind, as a woman is when not delivered in child-birth (Jer. 20. 9.) Then ſaid I, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name, but his word was in my heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay. There was wine, new wine in his belly, yea there was a fire within him; as we may be weary with ſpeaking, ſo with not ſpeaking, or forbearing to ſpeak, (Jer. 4. 19.) My bowels, my bowels, I am pained at the very heart, my heart maketh a noiſe in me, I cannot hold my peace. Read him in the like trouble upon the ſame occaſion (Jer. 6. 11.) Eliphaz (Chap. 4. 2.) was thus preſſed, Who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking? 'Tis a great pain, to be mind-bound, or not to deliver our mind, when our minds are full, and we full of deſire to deliver it.

Sixthly, When he ſaith, I am Conſtrain'd, I am like a bottle ready to burſt, It teacheth us,

The Spirit of God doth ſo over-power ſome men, that they cannot contain.

The Phariſees and High Prieſts, thought to ſtop up the Apoſtles, thoſe bottles full of the new wine of the myſteries of Chriſt, and therefore gave them counſel, yea a command to ſpeak no more in his name. At the 10. verſe, they ſaid of ſome in a common ſence, Theſe men are full of new wine, that is, they are drunken; but the truth was, they were full of the Spirit, full of Goſpel-truths, and like bottles full of new wine they could not hold. And when the Phariſees and high Prieſts would have ſtopt up thoſe bottles, and charged them that they ſhould ſpeak no more in the name of Jeſus; they anſwered, Whether it be meet to obey God or man judg ye; for we cannot but ſpeak the things that we have ſeen and heard: you may cut out our tongues if ye will, take away the organs of ſpeech ye may, but otherwiſe we cannot but ſpeak. As it is ſaid of Chriſt, they could not reſiſt the Spirit by which he ſpake; ſo they were not able to reſiſt the Spirit by which the Apoſtles ſpake. Some have ſuch Impulſes from the Devil upon them, that they cannot but ſpeak boldly as well as wickedly and blaſphemouſly; it is ſtrange to ſee what ſome both old and new Impoſtors have done, their bellies have been like bottles full of new wine, they have even burſt to vent their wicked opinions. Bernard diſcourſing of ſuch an Opinioniſt in his time, ſaith, He hungers and thirſts for Auditors, into whoſe boſoms he might empty himſelf, and pour out all his ſentiments, that he might appear who and how great a man he was. He careth not to teach thee what thou knoweſt not, nor to be taught by thee what he doth not know; but that himſelf may be known to know what he knoweth. Now if there be ſuch preſſures upon the ſpirits of vain men to be delivered of their falſe and airy conceptions: How much more when a man hath ſtrong impreſſions from the Spirit of God ('tis diſcernable by the matter that comes out of the bottle, whether it be the wine of Sodom, or of Sion) is he unable to contain himſelf? Such a man muſt ſpeak not only to inſtruct and refreſh others, but (as it followeth in the next verſe) to eaſe and refreſh himſelf.

Eſurit & ſitit auditores quibus omne quod ſentit effundat, quibus qualis & quantus ſit innoteſcat. Non curat te docere vel à te doceri quod neſcit, ſed ut ſcire ſciatur quod ſcit. Bern.

Verſ. 20. I will ſpeak that I may be refreſhed.

The Hebrew is, That I may breath, or, I may have room. The word properly ſignifies, that which is enlarged or widened; when a veſſel is full, and you draw ſome of the liquor out of it, then there is room; So ſaith Elihu, I will ſpeak, that I may be refreſhed, or have room.

I will open my lips, and anſwer.] To open the lips is a preparation to ſpeaking; Chriſt opened his mouth and ſpake; ſpeaking is begun with opening the mouth; a man may open his lips for other ends than for ſpeaking, and a dumb man opens his lips who cannot ſpeak, yet no man can ſpeak without opening his lips: and why did Elihu open his lips? it was to refreſh himſelf.

Hence note, He that ſpeaks his mind, eaſeth his mind.

'Tis good to ſpeak to refreſh our ſelves, but 'tis much better to ſpeak for the refreſhing of others; yea, we ſhould ſpeak (though to our own pain) that we may refreſh others, and ſpeak away their pain (Iſa. 50. 4.) Thou haſt given me the tongue of the learned, to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary; They are good words indeed which refreſh both the ſpeaker, and the hearers. But the deſign of ſpeaking is rather for the refreſhing of hearers, than of the ſpeaker. How vainly then do they ſpend their breath in ſpeaking, who ſpeak without any deſign of good, or of refreſhing, either to themſelves or others, who ſpeak only to be applauded and taken notice of, to be cryed up and commended for eloquent ſpeakers. Theſe are ſad deſigns of ſpeaking; better be a ſtammerer, than ſuch an Orator, better be dumb and not able to ſpeak, than to ſpeak for ſuch ends, with greateſt ability. Unleſs we ſpeak, that others may be informed, converted, comforted, edified, ſaved, ſome way or other bettered, we were as good hold our peace and ſay nothing. The holy Apoſtle profeſſed (1 Cor. 14. 19.) I had rather ſpeak five words with my underſtanding, that I might teach others alſo, than ten thouſand words in an unknown tongue. To ſpeak ſtrange words in an unknown tongue, may gain us a name among men; But neither are any ſouls gained, nor doth any ſoul gain the worth of one farthing in ſpiritual knowledg by hearing thouſands and ten thouſands of words ſpoken in an unknown tongue. We ſhould think all thoſe words even as loſt to us, by which we have not, at leaſt, intended the gain and good of others. But ſuppoſe, while we ſincerely intend the good of others in ſpeaking, they get no good by what is ſpoken; yet it ſhall not be without good to us: for as Elihu here hoped, ſo may we to be refreſhed by it; for when a man hath diſcharged his duty to God and man, in ſpeaking his mind, it cannot but be a great eaſe to his mind. Elihu had a great duty upon him, to moderate and ſet this buſineſs right between Job and his friends, to take down that height of ſpirit that was in Job, and to allay that ſharpneſs and bitterneſs of ſpirit that was in his friends. When we have in ſincerity diſcharged our duty to all others, and done that which our Conſciences charge upon us, how doth it quiet and refreſh our minds? and how many have been burdened and diſquieted in their ſpirits for neglecting this duty: They (I ſay) who neglecting to ſpeak when it was incumbent upon them to ſpeak, and the cauſe of God required it, have found it a burden upon them long after. When Mordecai had acquainted Queen Eſther with the ſad condition of the Jews, (whoſe deſtruction Haman had plotted) and adviſed the meſſenger to charge her, that ſhe ſhould go in unto the King to make ſupplication unto him, and to make requeſt before him for her people (Eſth. 4. 8.) She returned him anſwer by the ſame meſſenger, that ſhe could not do this without running the hazzard of her own life (verſ. 10, 11.) yet Mordecai replyed (verſ. 14.) If thou altogether holdſt thy peace (let the danger be what it will) at this time, then ſhall their enlargement and deliverance ariſe to the Jews from another place, but thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed: and who knows whether thou art come to the kingdom for ſuch a time as this? As if he had ſaid, It is thy duty to ſpeak for thy people at ſuch a time as this, and therefore if thou doeſt not break through all difficulties to ſpeak, thy ſilence will coſt thee dear, probably thou wilt loſe thy own life by it, or if not, then certainly thy conſcience will trouble and vex thee for it as long as thou liveſt. Many offend in ſpeaking, and we may in many caſes offend both God and man, yea our ſelves too (when we ſee our opportunities loſt) by neglecting to ſpeak.

VERS. 21, 22.

Let me not, I pray you, accept any mans perſon: neither let me give flattering titles unto man.

For I know not to give flattering titles: in ſo doing, my Maker would ſoon take me away.

IN theſe two verſes Elihu concludes (in which he had continued long) the Preface to his following diſcourſe and procedure with Job; Here alſo he acquaints us in what manner he meant to proceed with him; about which we may conſider two things.

Firſt, His reſolvedneſs or the ſetledneſs of his purpoſe what courſe to take. Secondly, the reaſons which moved him to it. The former he expreſſeth negatively in the 21. verſe, and that in two points.

Firſt, He would not accept any mans perſon.

Secondly, He would not give flattering titles unto man.

Theſe two negatives (as the negative precepts in the Law of God) are to be underſtood with their affirmatives

I

I will not accept any mans perſon, is, I will have and give an equal, or neither a more nor leſs (to the beſt of my underſtanding) than a due regard to every man's perſon. And, I will not give flattering titles; that is, I purpoſe to ſpeak plainly, I will not complement men, but do my beſt to accompliſh the matter. And as he aſſures us how he will proceed in this 11. verſe, ſo

Secondly, He gives us the reaſons of this his intended impartial, plain, and down-right proceeding in the 22. Theſe reaſons are two-fold.

Firſt, He would not do otherwiſe, becauſe he could not with any content to himſelf. It was againſt the very grain of his ſpirit to do otherwiſe; his diſpoſition lay a quite contrary way, he was a man of another genius or temper, a man of another mould and make, than to do ſuch low and unworthy things, as accepting the perſons of, or giving flattering titles unto men. He is expreſs in this (verſ. 22.) I know not to give flattering titles.

Secondly, He would not becauſe he durſt not give flattering titles, nor accept the perſons of men. The danger and dammage he ſhould incur by doing ſo, kept him from doing ſo, as well as his own indiſpoſition to it. He ſhould lay himſelf open and obnoxious to the wrath of God by ſuch ſeeking the favour of men; as appears in the cloſe of the verſe; In ſo doing my Maker would ſoon take me away.

Thus you have the parts and purpoſe of theſe words; I ſhall now give a more diſtinct explication and account of them.

Verſ. 21. Let me not, I pray you, accept any mans perſon; or, let me not now.

נא adverbium ſeu particula obſecrantis, ſeu adhortandi, ut ſodes, amabo, Latinis.

So that particle is rendred (Job 5. 1.) Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee; yet 'tis an Adverb of beſeeching or intreating; and therefore we render well, Let me not, I pray you; which rendring ſeems to have in it theſe two things. As if Elihu had ſaid, Firſt, Expect not that I ſhould, nor believe that I will do any ſuch thing, as the accepting of perſons, or the giving of flattering titles.

Secondly, Be not offended if I do not, be not angry with me, if I deal plainly with you; pray give me leave to uſe my own freedom and liberty when I am ſpeaking; for I am reſolved to do it, and not to accept the perſons of men, nor to give them flattering titles. The words may be rendred alſo in a direct negation, Verily I will not accept any mans perſon. But I ſhall keep to our reading.

Non accipiam, ut ſit לא pro אל quæ enallage inſolens non eſt. Druſ.

Let me not, I pray you, accept any mans perſon.

פני איש

The Hebrew is, Let me not lift up any mans perſon; or (which the Apoſtle forbids) Let me not have any mans perſon in admiration; I will not over-reverence any man, nor give him a reſpect beyond himſelf. The word which we render perſon, is in Hebrew, face, Let me not lift up the face of a man, or wonder at any mans face, as the Septuagint often render this phraſe. And it is uſual to put the face, or the countenance for the perſon, becauſe the face declares the perſon and ſhews who the man is; and it is elegantly expreſſed by the face, becauſe accepting of perſons, importeth a reſpect to others for their outſide, or in conſideration of ſome external glory. Let me not accept the face of any man, or perſon, let him be who he will. The original word iſh, moſt properly ſignifieth an eminent, or honourable man, a learned or wiſe man. As if Elihu had ſaid, I will not accept or lift up the face of a man, though he be (iſh) a man never ſo much lifted up, and exalted above his brethren. To accept the perſon of a man, is not a fault in it ſelf; for as our perſons are accepted of God, ſo ought our perſons to be accepted with one another; yea, it is a duty to accept the perſon of a man; that is, to give him favour, honour, and due reſpect. Not only civility and humanity, but religion it ſelf calls us to give outward reverence to them who excel, and are ſuperior, either to others or our ſelves. God himſelf is ſaid to accept the perſons of his people firſt, and then their ſacrifices or ſervices. And we ought to accept the perſons of men according to their differences in place and power, eſpecially according to thoſe gifts and graces, which ſhine in them. Therefore when Elihu ſaith, Let me not, I pray you, accept any mans perſon, his meaning is, let me not do it in prejudice to the cauſe or truth that is before us. Then we are properly and ſtrictly ſaid to accept perſons, when in any matter, buſineſs, or point of controverſie, our eyes are ſo dazel'd or blinded by external appearances, that we have reſpect rather to the perſon of the man, than to the matter, or the truth of the cauſe in hand. So then, this ſin of accepting perſons, is always committed when we are more ſwayed by, or when there is more attributed to perſons than to things, that is, when the mans worth is more looked to than the worth or merit of his cauſe; or further, when ſomething in a perſon which hath no reſpect to the goodneſs, or badneſs of his cauſe, moves us to give him more or leſs than is meet, this is ſinfully to accept or reſpect a perſon. Thus Elihu acquits himſelf from all thoſe bonds and blinds which his reſpect to thoſe worthy perſons before him, might lay upon him. They were ancient and grave men, they were wiſe and good men, he had a great reſpect for them, he owed much reverence to them, conſidering their age and gravity, their degree and dignity; yet he owed a greater reſpect to God, and to the truth, than to their perſons, and was thereupon reſolved, (though he had many and great temptations to do it,) not to accept the perſons of men.

Hence note, To accept perſons in prejudice to the cauſe or truth before us, is a high offence both to God and good men.

'Tis ſo in a double notion; Firſt, in the act of it, becauſe we do that which in it ſelf is not right, nor according to the mind of God. Secondly, in the iſſue, conſequence or effects of it, becauſe by reſpecting perſons, we are endangered to many other ſins. While Solomon only ſaith (Prov. 28 21.) To have reſpect of perſons is not good; his meaning is, 'tis very evil, 'tis ſtark naught. And the reaſon which he gives of the evil of it, is not only becauſe the act in it ſelf is evil, but becauſe the iſſue and conſequence of it is worſe; For, (ſaith that Scripture) for a piece of bread that man will tranſgreſs; That is, he that reſpects perſons, will turn aſide from Juſtice, for his own advantage, though it be very ſmall, even for a piece of bread. The Prophet complains of thoſe (Amos 2. 6.) who ſold the righteous for ſilver, and the poor for a pair of ſhoes. They who have ſold or given up themſelves to this crooked Spirit of reſpecting perſons, will not ſtick to ſell both the perſons of the righteous, and the moſt righteous cauſes, not only (as the Prophet ſaith) for a pair of ſhoes, but (as we ſay) for a pair of ſhoe-buckles. They will ſoon judg amiſs of things, who have reſpect to perſons, and they always look beſide the cauſe, who look too much upon the face; nothing ſhould weigh with us in judgment, but truth or right, and that in a five-fold oppoſition.

Firſt, Truth and right muſt weigh with us in oppoſition to relation. When a Brother, or a neer Kinſman be in the cauſe, we muſt not decline, nor be biaſſed from the truth, yea though it be on his ſide to whom we have no relation, but that of man.

Secondly, We muſt keep to the truth, and do juſtice in oppoſition to friendſhip. Though he be my friend, my old friend, and my fathers friend, I muſt not reſpect him, if truth ſtand upon the other ſide, upon the ſide of the meereſt ſtranger. It was anciently ſaid, Socrates is my friend, and Plato is my friend, but truth is more my friend, and therefore I will ſtick to that.

Amicus Socrates, Amicus Plato, ſed magis amica veritas.

Thirdly, We muſt hold to truth, in oppoſition to, or notwithſtanding the hatred of men; ſuppoſe a man bears us ill will, yea in other things hath wronged us, yet if his preſent cauſe be righteous, we muſt do him right: We may not bring in our particular wrongs or quarrels upon any cauſe, but that about which the wrong or quarrel riſeth. They ſhew the pureſt love to righteouſneſs, who act righteouſly towards thoſe that hate them, and will not wrong thoſe who have attempted to oppreſs and ruine them. A true lover of Juſtice will do to others as himſelf would have others do to him, yea though they have not done to him, as they would be done to.

Fourthly, we muſt ſtand to truth in oppoſition to riches and worldly abundance; riches uſually find more friends and favourers, than righteouſneſs doth. And 'tis uſual to favour the rich more than the righteous. How often is truth on the poor mans ſide over-ballanced by his adverſaries purſe? But, O how poor are they in ſpirituals and morals, who thus reſpect the perſons of the rich!

Fifthly, We muſt judg for truth in oppoſition to worldly greatneſs and power; and that in a two-fold conſideration.

Firſt, Though men have a power to reward, and prefer us, to do great things for us, yet this ſhould not draw us aſide; woe to thoſe who reſpect the greatneſs of the perſon inſtead of the goodneſs of the cauſe: yet how many are there who care not how bad a great mans cauſe is, if he will but engage to do them good? yea ſome great men look upon themſelves as much undervalued, if they be not favoured in their cauſe (how bad ſoever it be) becauſe they are able to do them good who favour it. Balak took it very ill at Balaam's hands, when he ſeemed unmoved by his ability to advance and reward him. Did not I earneſtly ſend for thee, to call thee? Wherefore cameſt thou not to me, am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour? (Numb. 22. 37.) And wilt not thou ſerve my intereſt, when I have ſuch a power to advance thine? Thus alſo Saul thought all muſt cleave to him, and forſake the cauſe of David, becauſe he was great and could prefer them (1 Sam. 22. 7.) Will the ſon of Jeſſe give every one of you fields, and vineyards, and make you all Captains of thouſands, and Captains of hundreds? Hath he any great places to beſtow, and honours to give? Why then do ye ſeem to adhere to him and his party. Hope of reward makes a great bias upon ſome mens ſpirits, and carrieth them quite off from truth.

There is a ſecond conſideration prevailing much with many in this matter; for though they are unmoved by rewards, and will not bite at the bait of ſelf-advancement; yet, ſay they, O he is a great man, and hath great power, he may do me a ſhrewd turn, he may vex me and undo me, he may ſit upon my skirts hereafter and ruine me. Thus where hope doth not, fear may carry a man from reſpect to right to the reſpect of perſons. But know, That be a man never ſo great, and able to do me a miſchief, yet truth muſt be maintained and Juſtice be done, though we ſhould be quite undone by appearing for it. It hath been ſaid of old, Let juſtice be done, though heaven fall; much more ſhould it be done, though we for doing and abetting it fall to the earth. Moſes gave that charge more than once (Levit. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 16, 17.) Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the mighty, but in righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judg thy neighbour. Again, Ye ſhall not reſpect perſons in Judgment, but ye ſhall hear the ſmall as well as the great, you ſhall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is Gods; neither undue pity to the poor, nor carnal fear of the great (which too often do) ought to put any check or ſtop to the execution of Juſtice. So in that excellent model of inſtructions which Jehoſhaphat gave his Judges (2 Chron. 19. 7.) Wherefore now let the fear of the Lord be upon you, take heed, and do it; for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor reſpect of perſons, nor taking of gifts. As if he had ſaid, Do not you reſpect perſons, for God reſpects no perſons; he is no gift-taker, therefore be ye no gift-takers; your duty is to give every one his due. That which is right to one man is right to another, either in the ſame, or in any parallel caſe; That which is the rich mans right in his cauſe, is the right of the poor man in his cauſe; yea it is as ſinful not to have a due reſpect to the rich man in his caſe, as not to have reſpect to the poor man in his. Then all ſorts and degrees of men are judged righteouſly, when there is no regard had or notice taken in Judgment, of what ſort or degree any man is. Judges are called gods, and therefore ſhould act like God without reſpect to men.

Quod uni æquum eſt, non debet alteri in eodem caſu eſſe iniquum.

And as this is a truth in all thoſe caſes of judgment, where Magiſtrates ſit in the place of God, ſo it is as true in all the private judgments and determinations of brethren concerning perſons or things, which (by way of diſtinction from the former) is commonly called the putting or referring of a matter in difference to men. We muſt take heed in private judgments, that we be not ſwayed according to the condition of perſons, nor muſt we make the fault great or leſs, the cauſe better or worſe, becauſe the perſon is greater or leſs, friend or ſtranger to us. The Apoſtle gives this counſel and caution to the Churches (James 2. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.) My Brethren, have not the faith (that is, the doctrine of faith or profeſſion) of our Lord Jeſus, the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons; For if there come into your aſſembly a man with a gold ring, and there come in alſo a poor man in vile rayment, and you have reſpect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and ſay unto him, ſit thou here in a good place, and ſay to the poor, ſtand thou there, or ſit here under my footſtool: are ye not then partial in your ſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? In adminiſtring the things of God which are ſpiritual, we muſt obſerve no civil difference, no diſtinction among men. Chriſt hath given himſelf alike and equally to rich and poor, bond and free, and therefore, as to Church priviledges and enjoyments, they muſt all be alike, and equal unto us. No man is to be known after the fleſh in the things of the Spirit (2 Cor. 5. 16.) that is, no man is to be valued meerly, upon natural or worldly accounts; if we do, then (as the Apoſtle James concludes in the place laſt before mentioned) are we not partial in our ſelves? that is (as ſome alſo tranſlate that reproving queſtion) Have we not made a difference, a groundleſs difference, or a difference grounded upon carnal reſpects, rather than upon any ſolid reaſon; and ſo as it follows in the cloſe of the verſe, are become judges of evil thoughts, that is, have made our judgment of thoſe perſons, according to the dictate of our own evil and corrupt thoughts, not according to the rule of the word.

Further, this ſin of reſpecting perſons, is found alſo in the ordinary converſe of men; For when we caſt favours upon thoſe that are ill deſerving, and commend thoſe (as we ſay) to the skies, who ſhould rather fall under our ſevereſt cenſure, and are led to do all this alſo, becauſe the perſon is a kinſman or a friend; for though (cæteris paribus, other qualifications and circumſtances being equal) we are to reſpect friends and kindred, who are our own fleſh, before ſtrangers, yet virtue and worth ſhould outweigh relations, and (as Levi in doing Juſtice, Deut. 33. 9.) ſo we in beſtowing rewards, ſhould not acknowledg our Brethren, nor acknowledg our own children; but let ſuch have our rewards who beſt deſerve them.

I may add this alſo, To take up this or that form of Religion, becauſe ſuch and ſuch perſons are in it, and to reject another, though better, becauſe none but a few that are deſpiſed and contemned are in it, is a moſt dangerous way of reſpecting perſons. This was the meaning of that queſtion (John 7. 48.) Have any of the rulers, or of the Phariſees, believed on him? As if certainly that muſt always be the beſt way and rule of believing, which is profeſſed by the rulers? Or as if it were ground enough to reject a way of Religion, becauſe the common people or the poor are moſtly found in it. Thus 'tis ſtoried of a great Prince that was converted to the Chriſtian faith, and reſolved to be baptized, that ſeeing a great many poor men in his way as he went, he asked to whom they belonged; it was anſwered they were Chriſtians, and of that religion which he was entring into; what, doth Chriſt keep his ſervants ſo poor? (ſaid he) I will not ſerve ſuch a Maſter, and ſo drew back, even while he was but ſetting his face towards Chriſt. I might inſtance the ſinfulneſs of accepting perſons in many other particular caſes, as well as theſe, but theſe may ſuffice for a taſt. Let me not (ſaith Elihu) accept any mans perſon,

Neither let me give flattering titles unto man.

In the former part of the verſe it was Iſh, here it is Adam; I will not reſpect the perſon of the greateſt men, nor will I flatter any earthly, any mortal man. Mr. Broughton renders, That I reſpect an earthly man. The vulgar latine tranſlates the whole verſe thus; I will not accept any mans perſons, and I will not equal God to man; As if he had ſaid, I will not meaſure God by man, in his dealings and proceedings with man; As my purpoſe is to ſpeak truth, and ſpare no man, ſo I will not wrong God by drawing him down to the rules of men. What is man that he ſhould compare with God? But, though this be a truth, yet becauſe it departs ſo far from the Original text, I will not ſtay upon it. Our reading is clear.

Græci vertant כנה cognominandi per ἐπιτρέπεσθαι revereri, & θαυμάσαι πρόσωπον, mirari perſonā reddiderunt. Merc. Et deum homini non æquabo. Vulg.

I will not give flattering titles.] There are ſeveral other readings of theſe words, which I ſhall propoſe and paſs to our own. Firſt, I will not uſe a preface, or, I will not ſtand prefacing with man. Flatteries are uſually ſet forth in affected Prefaces and Apologies. Secondly, Let me not change names before men; or, let me not ſpeak to man under a borrowed name; That Apud hominem præfatione non utar. Jun. Et apud hominem ne permutem nomina. Coc.

Et ad hominem non mutato nomine loquar. Merc. Ego non in gratiam ejus tectis verbis utar occultè eum deſignans & nomen proprium immutans. Verbum כנה ſignificat aliquem occultè deſignare. Merc. לא אכנה כנה eſt mutatis rerum nominibus agere, ut non poſſis niſi obſcurè quid ſentiatur intelligi. Cujus contrarium eſt aperire os, & σκάφην, σκάφην appellare. Coc.

That is, let me ſpeak plainly and clearly without ambages and fetches; let me ſpeak to every man, and about every thing by its own name, and not with covered words, as if I were unwilling to touch thoſe to whom I ſpeak. Our tranſlation is yet more clear to the ſcope and tendency of this place; I will not give flattering titles.

This ſentence is but two words in the Hebrew; The verb ſignifies (ſay the Rabbins) to hide, or conceal, or to carry a matter cloſely and obſcurely; and they give the reaſon of it, becauſe in flattering there is a hiding of what men are, and a ſhewing of what they are not. The word ſignifieth alſo to give a nick-name or a by-name, and ſo the ſenſe is; I will not give ſecret reflections, nor gird at any man upon the by; Job's friends had done ſo ſometimes, though they after ſpake explicitely and directly enough. Further, the word ſignifies the giving of any additional title. Thus I find it uſed in the Prophet (Iſa. 44. 5.) One ſhall ſay, I am the Lords: (ſpeaking how perſons ſhall flow into the Church) and another ſhall call himſelf by the name of Jacob: and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand unto the Lord, and ſirname himſelf by the name of Iſrael: He ſhall ſirname himſelf; that's the word here uſed, he ſhall take up that title, that illuſtrious title, he ſhall liſt or enroll himſelf among the people of God, and think it his honour and glory to ſirname himſelf by the name of Iſrael. The word is ſo uſed again (Iſa. 45. 4.) For Jacob my ſervants ſake, and Iſrael mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have ſirnamed thee, though thou haſt not known me. It is ſpoken of Cyrus, I have given thee a glorious title; God did not only name Cyrus, but gave him a ſirname, he called him, Cyrus my ſervant, and Cyrus mine anointed. Thus the word ſignifies to give a title, or a ſirname; now there are ſirnames or titles of two ſorts; Firſt, diſgraceful and reviling ones, juſtly given to, but commonly by vile men. Secondly, Honourable and advancing ones. And theſe are of two ſorts.

Firſt, Such as are true and well deſerved, many by the great acts which they have done, have purchaſed ſirnames; Alexander King of Greece, for his warlike valour and ſucceſſes, was called The Great; And among the Romans Scipio after his victories over the Carthaginians in Africa, was ſirnamed Africanus. The Roman Hiſtories ſupply ſundry examples of this kind. And when in Scripture Paul is called an Apoſtle, Peter an Apoſtle, They well deſerved theſe honourable Titles, becauſe as they were meerly of Grace immediately called and ſent of God, to publiſh and plant the Goſpel all the world over, ſo they laboured abundantly in it, and by their miniſtery ſubdued and conquered the world to the faith and obedience of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Secondly, There are alſo titles and ſirnames, which are meer pieces of flattery, there being no worth in the perſon that may juſtly deſerve them. 'Tis not ſinful to give titles, but as we tranſlate to give flattering titles unto men. We ſhould call men as they are, and as they deſerve; I will call a ſpade a ſpade, (ſaith Elihu) he that is good I will call him good, and he that is bad I will call him bad; and that which is ill done I will ſay it is ill done; Let me not give flattering titles unto men.

Hence obſerve, Flattery is iniquity: to give flattering titles unto men is to tranſgreſs the Law of God.

Some will not give true and due Titles to any man; The moſt truly honourable perſons and higheſt Magiſtrates, ſhall have nothing from them but Thou and Thee. Jacob a holy and a plain man, yet called his own brother, My Lord Eſau, (Gen. 32. 4. Gen. 33. 8.) Luke the Evangeliſt called Theophilus, Moſt excellent (Luke 1. 3.) And Paul ſtiled Feſtus, Moſt Noble (Acts 26. 25.) Now as they erre upon one extream, who will not give true titles, ſo do they on the other, who give (which Elihu here diſclaims) flattering titles. There is a two-fold flattery.

First, In promiſes.

Secondly, In praiſes.

Some are full of flattery in promiſes, they will tell you of great matters which they will do for you, yet mean no ſuch thing. Thus (Pſal. 78. 36.) The children of Iſrael dealt with God, when in the time of their ſtraights and calamities they promiſed to do great and good things, they would turn to the Lord and ſerve him; Nevertheleſs (ſaith the text) they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues; for their heart was not right with him, &c. Thus many upon their ſick beds, or in a day of trouble, what promiſes will they make? How deeply will they engage for duty, if God will reſtore them? how holy and zealous and upright will they be? they will leave their former ill courſes, and yet all is but flattery, they really intend it not. 'Tis flattery in promiſes to God, when there is not a purpoſe in the heart to do what we ſay, but only to get our ends upon him; And we deal no better many times by one another; men in ſtreights will promiſe any thing, and when they have gained enlargement, perform nothing.

Secondly, There is a flattery in praiſes, and that's here profeſſed againſt. This flattery in praiſing hath a double reſpect.

Firſt, To the actions of men. 'Tis flattery to call that act good that is naught, that juſt that is unrighteous; To put titles of virtue upon thoſe things that are vicious, to call that which is indeed a covetous act, a thrifty one, and to call that act which is cruel, juſt, at moſt but ſtrict or ſevere, this is to flatter men in what they do.

Secondly, There is a flattery of perſons, as to what they have and are, when we ſpeak more of them than is in them, when we ſpeak highly of them, who are low in all abilities and attainments. How groſly do they give flattering titles, who blow up very Ideots with a conceit of their learning, who extol fools for wiſdom, and commend the wicked as vertuous, yea recommend them as patterns of virtue?

Multi ſunt qui vitia virtutibus vicinis honeſtare contendunt & vitium omne palliant adumbrata nomenclaturæ vicino ſubjecta virtutis. Baſil. in Pſal. 61.

We ſhould give honour to all men to whom it belongs; but we are not to flatter any man, for that belongs to no man (Rom. 13. 7.) Render therefore to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour. There is an honour that belongs to men with reſpect to their degrees, when none belongs to them with reſpect to their qualities. He that is very honourable as to his place, may not deſerve any honour as to his worth, yet he muſt be honoured as much as his place comes to. And as there is an honour due to thoſe that are above us, ſo there is an honour due to thoſe that are our equals, yea to thoſe that are our inferiours, and below us. The Apoſtle gives that direction more than once; we have it firſt (Rom. 12. 10.) Be kindly affectionate one to another, in honour preferring one another. The people of God ſhould be ſo far from an ambitious affectation of preheminence above others, that they ſhould freely and really (not as many do complementally) give others the preheminence, and offer them the upper place or hand; The grace of humility, doth not only forbid us to exalt our ſelves above our betters, but it alſo (in many caſes) bids us ſet our ſelves below thoſe whoſe betters we are. One of the Ancients hath made three degrees of this kind of humility. The firſt is, when we make our ſelves inferior to our equals; The ſecond, when we make our ſelves but equal to our inferiors; The third, when we make our ſelves inferior even to our inferiors, and leſs than thoſe who are leſs than we. Of this third ſort of humility, the Apoſtle ſpeaks again in that ſerious admonition to the Church (Phil. 2. 3.) Let nothing be done through ſtrife, or vainglory, but in lowlineſs of mind; Let each eſteem other better than himſelf. As it is good to judg (according to truth) the worſt of our ſelves, and the beſt of others, ſo it is good to have a better opinion of others than of our ſelves.

So then, the point lyeth not againſt giving honour to any man, or to men of all ſorts, but only againſt the giving of undue honour to any. Of that the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Gal. 1. 10.) If I yet pleaſe men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt; that is, if I ſhould pleaſe men by flattery, ſmoothing them up in their ſins or errors, I could not be the ſervant of Chriſt. They that were the ſtrict obſervers of Chriſt, could not but obſerve this in him, that though he came to ſave man, yet he was far enough from pleaſing, that is, humouring any man. (Luke 20. 21.) And they asked him, ſaying, Maſter, we know that thou ſayeſt and teacheſt rightly, neither accepteſt thou the perſon of any, but teacheſt the way of God truly.

Yet caution is to be uſed here. For ſome go ſo far to the other hand, that while they think they ought not to flatter or pleaſe, they care not how they ſlight or diſreſpect the perſons of men; and in ſtead of forbearing (as they ought) ought) to give undue titles, they will not (as was toucht before) give ſo much as thoſe that are due, that's a ſin in defect, as the other is in exceſs. And they ſin much more who while they refuſe to give flattering titles, are free to give reviling titles. There are theſe two great tongue-evils among men; Some give flattering titles, others give reviling titles, detracting, calumniating, and biting titles; it is as dangerous not to forbear the one, as to be free and forward in giving the other, and therefore we ſhould take heed of both theſe extreams, that our ſpeech may have an equal reſpect to truth, both while we praiſe, and while we reprove.

Verſ. 22. For I know not how to give flattering titles.

Neſcio cognominare; i. e. Blandiri. Bez.

It ſeems to have little virtue in it, or matter of commendation, not to give flattering titles, when we are not able, or know not how to give them; To hear one that is (as we ſpeak) a meer Countryman, or a Clown ſay, I will not give flattering titles, ſpeaks not his praiſe at all, becauſe 'tis ſuppoſed he at moſt can but but ſpeak ſenſe, or true Engliſh; but to hear a learned man, or ſome great Courtier ſay, I will not give flattering titles, this is ſomething, this ſhews that his honeſty maſters his ability, and that his conſcience is too ſtrong for his parts. How is it then that Elihu ſaith, I know not to give flattering titles? Had not Elihu wit and skill, words and language at command to give them? Was he ſo coarſely bred that he could not reach them?

I anſwer, Thoſe words, I know not, may have a threefold interpretation.

Firſt, I know not, is, I have not made that piece of knowledg my ſtudy, I have not ſet my ſelf to learn the art of flattery, nor to gain the skill of carnal Courtſhip. Thus I know not to do it, is, I have not ſet my ſelf to do it, I have not made it my buſineſs, or my aim to do it; A good man hath, or at leaſt deſireth no skill in that which is evil, or not his duty; how much ſoever any man knows to flatter, yet we may ſay he knows not to flatter who abhorreth flattery; And can ſay (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Eph. 4. 20.) He hath not ſo learned Chriſt; that is, he hath heard no ſuch leſſons, nor received any ſuch inſtruction in the ſchool of Chriſt.

Thus Elihu ſaith, I know not to give flattering titles. And doubtleſs, 'tis beſt being an Ideot, or a bungler at the doing of that which is not good, or (as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſome are to every good work) to be reprobate to every evil work, and word. How knowing are they, who can ſay in truth, they know not how to lie, or flatter, &c. I dare not ſay (with the Papiſts) that ignorance is, but I am ſure this neſcience is not only the mother of devotion, but a great point of devotion it ſelf. And in this ſenſe every godly man, and only a godly man knoweth not how to do evil.

For as the wicked may have the Theory of good works, and know what it is to pray, what it is to hear the Word of God, yet they have no skill, they are not ſtudied, nor fitted for the practice of thoſe works; So a godly man may know in ſpeculation what it is to do wickedly, and how to do it as well as the moſt wicked man in the world, yet he is not at all diſpoſed nor ready for the practice of any wickedneſs. As nature makes us reprobate to good, ſo grace to evil works. The Prophet ſaith of a bad ſort of men, (Jer. 4. 22.) They are wiſe to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledg. Were they an ignorant people? No, the meaning is, they had not ſet themſelves to learn the doing of that good which they knew; theirs were not ſins of ignorance, but of wilfulneſs, and perverſneſs. So on the other hand, 'tis the commendation of the people of God, They are wiſe to do good, but to do evil they have no knowledg. I know not to give flattering titles.

Secondly, As to know a thing or perſon, imports the allowance and approbation of it. (Pſal. 1. 6.) The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; that is, he approveth it. (Pſal. 101. 4.) I will not know a wicked perſon; that is, I like him not, I regard him not, I will never give him teſtimony, he ſhall neither have my hand, nor my heart. So, not to know a thing or perſon, notes our diſallowance and diſtaſte of either; in this ſenſe Chriſt will ſay to thoſe great knowing profeſſors (Luke 13. 27.) I tell you, I know you not whence you are, depart from me, &c. Thus, here when Elihu profeſſeth, I know not to give flattering titles; his meaning is, I like not, yea, I cannot abide to do it I may be as much skilled as any man to ſpeak high words, poſſibly I could Court it as well as others, but I have no heart to do it, yea it is the abhorrence of my ſoul to do it. A good man doth not approve the doing of evil, and therefore though he know well enough how to do evil, yet he is truely ſaid not to know how to do it.

Thirdly, Not to know a thing, is not to be accuſtomed, or practiſed in it. Thus when Elihu ſaith, I know not to give flattering titles; he ſeems to ſay, It is not my manner, I have not been uſed to flatter. As uſe doth not only make fitneſs, but increaſeth our knowledg, ſo diſuſe doth at once unfit us to do a thing, and diminiſheth our knowledg how to do it. And therefore what we uſe not to do, we are rightly ſaid not to know to do. I know not to give flattering titles.

Hence note, The ſpirit of a good man is ſet againſt all that is evil, he cannot cloſe nor comply with it.

His underſtanding aſſenteth not to it, his will chuſeth it not, his conſcience cannot ſwallow it, though not a camel, but a gnat, the leaſt of ſin-evils, much leſs doth he give himſelf up to the free and cuſtomary practice of great ſins. A good man may well be ſaid, not to know to ſin, becauſe though he knoweth the nature of all ſins, yet he knowingly declines the doing of every ſin. I know not to give flattering titles,

In ſo doing my Maker would ſoon take me away.

Thoſe words, in ſo doing, are not expreſſed in the Original, but ſupplied to make up the ſenſe; and yet we may very well read the text without them; I know not to give flattering titles, my Maker would ſoon take me away, or as Mr. Broughton renders, my Maker would be my taker away.

My Maker.] Elihu expreſſeth God, by the work of creation, or by his relation to God as a creator; Elihu doth but include himſelf in the number of thoſe whom God hath made, he doth not exclude others from being made by God, as much as himſelf, while he ſaith, My Maker. God is the Maker of every man, and is ſo in a threefold conſideration.

Firſt, He is the Maker of every man, in his natural conſtitution, as he is a man, conſiſting of a reaſonable ſoul and body. I am fearfully and wonderfully made, ſaid David, with reſpect to both, (Pſal. 119. 14.)

Secondly, God is every mans Maker, in his civil ſtate, as well as in his natural; he formeth us up into ſuch and ſuch a condition, as rich, or as poor, as high, or as low, as Governours or as governed, according to the pleaſure of his own will. (Prov. 22. 2.) The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the Maker of them both; he meaneth it not only, if at all in that place, that the Lord hath made them both as men, but he hath made the one a rich man, and the other a poor man. Thus the Lord is the maker of them both. And as the Lord makes men rich, ſo great and honourable. (Pſal. 75. 6.) Promotion cometh not from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South; It cometh from none of theſe parts or points of earth or heaven, it cometh from nothing under heaven, but from the God of heaven; God is the Judg, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another.

Thirdly, The Lord is the Maker of every man in his ſpiritual ſtate, as good, and holy, and gracious. (Eph. 2. 10.) We are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works; till we are wrought by God, we can do none of God's work, nor have we any mind to do it. Now when Elihu ſaith, My Maker would ſoon take me away, we may underſtand it in all theſe three ſenſes; he that made me this body and ſoul, when I came into the world, he that ordered my way and ſtate all this while that I have been in this world, he that formed me up into a new life, the life of Grace, and hath made me a new man in this and for another world. This my Maker would ſoon take me away.

Hence Note, It is good to remember God as our Maker.

Man would not make ſuch ill work in the world, if he remembred God his Maker, or that himſelf is the work of God. We ſhould remember God our Maker; Firſt, as to our being, as from him we receive life and breath. Secondly, condly, as to our well being, as from him we receive all good things, both for this life and a better. (Eccleſ. 12.1.) Remember now thy creator (not only that God is a creator, but thy creator, remember this) in the days of thy youth; And ſurely if thou remembreſt him well, thou wilt not forget thy ſelf ſo much as to forget the duty which thou oweſt him. Think often upon thy Maker, and then this thought will be upon thee always, If I owe my ſelf wholly unto God for making me in nature, now much more do I owe my ſelf unto God for making me a new creature? We ought to live wholly to him from whom we have received our lives. He that hath made us ſhould have the uſe of us. He hath made all things for himſelf, (Prov. 16.4.) chiefly man, who is the chief of all viſibles which he hath made. Thoſe two Memento's, That we are made by the power of God: and that the price by which we are redeemed is the blood of God, ſhould conſtrain us at all times and in all things to be at the call and command of God. My Maker

Would ſoon take me away.] We had the ſame word in the former verſe, there 'tis uſed for accepting a perſon; here for taking away a perſon. The Learned Hebricians take notice of an elegant flower of Rhetorick in this expreſſion; If I take perſons, God will take away my perſon; ſo we may tranſlate the Text; If I take men, my God will take me away. Yea my Maker would not only take me away at laſt, or (as we ſay) firſt or laſt, but he would make diſpatch, and be quick with me, My Maker would Soon take me away.] Some render, He would take me away as a little thing; But the mind of our tranſlation is, he would take me away in a little time. The original word bears either ſignification, and ſo may the ſcope of the Text; My Maker would take me away as a little thing, he would blow me away as a feather, or as duſt, and cruſh me as a moth; and he would do it in a moment, in a little time; all the men of the world, yea the whole world is but a little thing before God, and he can quickly take both away. Iſa. 40. 15.) Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of the Ballance; Behold, he taketh up the Iſlands as a very little thing. Now if whole Iſlands, if all Nations are ſuch little things as drops and duſts, then, what is any one particular man, how big ſoever he be? And how ſoon can God take him away! Little things are taken away in a little time. So the word is uſed in the ſecond Pſalm (verſ. 12.) If his wrath be kindled but a little, or but, as a little thing; if the wrath of Chriſt be kindled only ſo far that you ſee but a ſpark of it, bleſſed are they that truſt in him; There is no ſtanding before the leaſt wrath of the great God, by the greateſt of the ſons of men.

כמעט

We tranſlate, He would ſoon take me away, or he would do it in a little time, my ruine needs not be long in working, he would rid his hands of me preſently; to take or ſnatch a man away, notes three things.

Firſt, A violent death, or a violence in death.

Secondly, A ſpeedy or ſudden death, a quick diſpatch. When the fire was kindled and the word ſent out againſt Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, their Maker ſoon took them away; he bid the earth open, and it took them away in the twinkling of an eye; they went down quick into hell. It is ſaid of a wicked man in this book (Chap. 27.21.) The Eaſt wind carrieth him away; there alſo this word is uſed, that is, judgment like ſome fierce impetuous wind, ſhall blow him from his ſtanding and blaſt all his glory.

Sunt qui ישאני tolleret me, exponunt, combureret me, ut aliquando ſumitur hoc verbum à flamma, quæ in ſublime tollitur. Merc.

Some give the ſenſe by the effect of fire, My Maker would ſoon burn or conſume me. The word in the Hebrew ſignifieth to burn, as well as to take away, and we know the burning of a thing is the taking of it quite away; fire makes clean riddance. And again, fire or flame riſeth up (as a thing that is taken up) into the air, and that which is burned in the fire may be ſaid to be taken up with it. Thus alſo 'tis tranſlated (2 Sam. 5. 20, 21.) David came unto Baal-perazim, and David ſmote them there, &c. and there they left their Images, and David and his men burnt them; we put in the margin, and David and his men took them away; which is the tranſlation here in Job. Either of the readings is clear and full to the purpoſe; God hath fire, he hath hell fire unquenchable for ſinners, their Maker can quickly conſume and burn them up. (Iſa. 27.4.) Who would ſet the briars and thorns in battel againſt me? I would paſs through them and burn them up together. How quickly can the Lord burn wicked men, who like briars and thorns ſcratch and tear the innocent? wicked men can no more ſtand before the wrath of God, than briars and thorns can ſtand before a flaming fire. That's a good reading; ours comes to the ſame ſenſe, My Maker would ſoon take me away.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, As flattery and accepting of perſons are great, ſo they are very dangerous ſins, they are wrath-provoking ſins.

If we flatter men, God will not flatter us, he will deal plainly with us. To receive flattery, or to ſuffer our ſelves to be flattered, is very dangerous, as we ſee in the example of Herod (Acts 12. 22, 23.) who having made a very eloquent Oration, The people gave a ſhout, ſaying, it is the voice of a God, and not of a man; They gave him flattering titles, or (as ſome render the former part of this verſe) they wondered at his perſon. But what was the iſſue of it? Preſently (ſaith the Text) the Angel of the Lord ſmote him, becauſe he gave not God the glory, and he was eaten up with worms, and gave up the ghoſt. Thus his Maker took him ſoon away, for taking that glory to himſelf. O take heed of entertaining flatteries when given, we ſhould put them back from us, as we would a poyſonous cup. High commendations of Sermons given to the Preacher, may have a ſad conſequence. When men give much glory to men, 'tis hard for men to give the glory back again to God. Herod was ſo pleaſed and tickled with the glory which the people gave him, that he could not part with it, and ſo loſt himſelf. Becauſe he forgat that he was a worm, he was deſtroyed by worms. The tranſlation given us by the Septuagint of this Text in Job, complies fully with that dreadful example in the Acts; I know not how to give flattering titles, for in ſo doing the worms or moths will eat me up. The words of Elihu thus rendred in Job are a threatning aſſertion, That the worms ſhall eat thoſe that give flatteries; and the judgment which fell upon Herod, is an example threatning all thoſe that receive flattering titles, with that dreadful doom of being eaten up by worms. And doubtleſs, if not that, yet either ſome other corporal and viſible judgment, or (which is much worſe) ſome ſpiritual and inviſible judgment, will overtake thoſe who love either to flatter others, or to be flattered themſelves. And as that example ſhews how dangerous it is to receive flatteries; ſo to give flatteries, hath in it a double danger.

Καὶ ἐμὲ σῆτες ἔδονται, & me tineæ edent. Sept.

Firſt, It is dangerous to others. When Paraſites flatter Princes, when Miniſters flatter the people, how doth it inſnare their ſouls? 'Tis hell and death to flatter ſinners, and not to deal plainly with them; to give lenitives inſtead of corroſives; to give oyl where vinegar ſhould be given; to heal the hurt of the ſoul deceitfully, is the greateſt hurt and wounding to the ſoul. Flatteries are thoſe pillows ſpoken of in the Prophet (Ezek. 13. 18.) ſowed to the arm-holes or elbows of wicked men, upon which many ſleep without fear, till they dye without hope; yea theſe flatteries as well as any falſities and errors of doctrine, whether reſpecting faith or worſhip, are that untempered mortar, of and againſt which the Prophet ſpeaks in the ſame Chapter (verſ. 10. 15.) wherewith ſome daubed that wall of vain confidence which others built, while they ſeduced the people, ſaying, peace, and there was no peace. How often do the true Prophets warn the people againſt theſe flatteries of the falſe Prophets? And how ſadly doth the Prophet Jeremy bewail them? (Lam. 2. 14.) Thy Prophets have ſeen vain and fooliſh things for thee, and they have not diſcovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have ſeen for thee falſe burdens, and cauſes of baniſhment; that is, the viſions which they have ſeen, they pretend, at leaſt, to have had from God, but they are their own dreams and brain-ſick phanſies, and ſo the cauſe of thy baniſhment; they have undone thee with theſe deceits, ſoothing thee up in thoſe thy ſins, which procured thy baniſhment, and cauſed the Lord to thruſt thee out, and ſend thee far away from thine own Land. They have fed, yea filled thee with falſe hopes, till thy condition was hopeleſs. How many thouſands have been deſtroyed by flatteries both for here and for ever? And if flattery be ſo dangerous to the receiver, then

Secondly, It muſt needs be much more dangerous to the giver. It is no ſmall ſin to palliate or cover the ſins of others; others; but it is a far greater ſin to commend the ſin of others, or to commend others in their ſin. And we may take the meaſure of this ſin by the puniſhment of it. When we hear the Lord threatning flatterers with ſuddain deſtruction, doth it not proclaim to all the World, that their ſin is full of provocation? The Lord bears long with many ſorts of ſinners, but not with ſinners of this ſort. My maker would ſoon take me away.

Non leve ſcelus eſt veritatem palliare. Merc.

Hence Note, Secondly, God can make quick diſpatch with ſinners.

Neſcit tarda molimina ſpiritus ſancti gratia.

As the grace of God towards ſinners, ſo his wrath needs no long time in preparations. When we deſign great actions, we muſt take time to fit our ſelves. Princes muſt have time to ſet out an Army or a Navy, when they would either defend themſelves againſt, or revenge themſelves upon their enemies; but God can preſently proceed to action, yea to execution. He that made all with a word ſpeaking, can deſtroy the wicked as ſoon as ſpeak the word; he can do it in the twinkling of an eye, with the turning of a hand. My maker would ſoon take me away.

Thirdly, Becauſe Elihu, being about to ſpeak in that great cauſe, ſets God before him, and God in his Judgments, in caſe he ſhould ſpeak or do amiſs;

Note, Thirdly, They that do or ſpeak evil, have reaſon to expect evil at the hand of God.

If I ſhould flatter (ſaith Elihu) my Maker would ſoon take me away. I have reaſon to fear he will; not that God takes away every ſinner as ſoon as he ſins, (God rarely uſeth Martial Law, or executes men upon the place, we ſhould live and walk more by ſence then by faith if he ſhould do ſo) but any ſinner may expect it. God (I ſay) is very patient and long-ſuffering, he doth not often take ſinners away, either in the act, or immediately after the act of ſin. Yet there is no ſinner but hath cauſe to fear, leſt as ſoon as he hath done any evil, God ſhould make him feel evil, and inſtantly take him away. David prayeth (Pſal. 28. 3.) Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity. There is a two-fold drawing away with the workers of iniquity. Firſt, to do as they do; that is, wickedly. Thus many are drawn away with the workers of iniquity; and 'tis a good and moſt neceſſary part of prayer, to beg that God would not thus draw us away with the workers of iniquity, that is, that he would not ſuffer the workers of iniquity to draw us away into their leud and ſinful courſes. Secondly, there is a drawing away to puniſhment, and execution. In that ſence (I conceive) David prayed, Lord draw me not away with the workers of iniquity, who are taken away by ſome ſudden ſtroak of Judgment; though I may have provoked thee, yet let not forth thy wrath upon me, as thou ſometimes doeſt upon the workers of iniquity: Do not draw me out as Cattel out of the Paſture where they have been fed and fatted for the ſlaughter. Every worker of iniquity is in danger of preſent death, and may look that God will be a ſwift witneſs againſt him: Though moſt are reprieved, yet no man is ſure of that.

Again, In that Elihu repreſents God to himſelf ready to take him away, in caſe of flattery and prevarication in that cauſe;

Note, Fourthly, It is good for us to over-awe our Souls with the remembrance of the judgments and terrours of God.

'Tis profitable ſometimes to converſe with the threatnings, as well as with the promiſes; 'tis profitable to remember what God is able to do againſt us, as well as to remember what God is able to do for us; even believers ſhould go into the dreadful treaſuries of wrath, into the thunders and lightnings of divine diſpleaſure, as well as into the delightful treaſuries of mercy, of love and compaſſion; it is good for a good man to think God may take me away, as well as to think God will ſave and deliver me; we need even theſe meditations of God, to keep down our corruptions, and to fright our luſts. Though it be the more Goſpel way to make uſe of love, yet the Goſpel it ſelf teacheth us to make uſe of wrath, (2 Cor. 5. 11.) Knowing the terrour of the Lord we perſwade men.

Laſtly, Note, When we go about any great work, when we are either to ſpeak or do in any weighty matter, it is good for us to ſet God before our eyes, to think of and remember our maker.

As in great undertakings we ſhould remember our Maker, waiting for and depending upon his aſſiſtance, ſtrength, and bleſſings, in what we do or go about; ſo we ſhould remember him to keep our hearts right. And to remember ſeriouſly, believingly and ſpiritually, that God beholds and ſeeth us in all our ways and works, and that according to the frame of our hearts, and the way that we take in every action, ſuch will the reward and iſſue be, cannot but have a mighty command, and an anſwerable effect upon us. We can hardly do amiſs with God in our eye. And therefore as it is ſaid of a wicked man (Pſal. 10. 4.) that through the pride of his countenance he will not ſeek after God, God is not in all his thoughts. So David ſaid of himſelf (though in that Pſalm he ſpeaks chiefly as a type of Chriſt) and ſo in proportion or as to ſincerity every godly man ſaith like David, (Pſal. 16. 8.) I have ſet the Lord always before me: Becauſe he is at my right hand, therefore I ſhall not be moved; that is, as I ſhall not be utterly overthrown by any evil of trouble, ſo I ſhall not be overcome by any evil of temptation: Or I ſhall not be moved either in a way of diſcouragement by the troubles I meet with, or in a way of inticement by the temptations I meet with. How ſtedfaſt, how unmoveable are they in the work of the Lord, how do they keep off from every evil work, who ſet the Lord always before them, and have him at their right hand! Could we but ſet the Lord before us, either in his mercies or in his terrors, we ſhould not be moved from doing our duty in whatſoever we are called to do.

Thus far Elihu hath drawn out his ſpeech; in a way of preface, preparing himſelf for his great undertaking with Job; he hath now fully ſhewed the grounds why he undertook to deal with him, and what method he would uſe in that undertaking. In the next Chapter, and ſo forward to the end of the 37. we have what he ſaid, and how he managed the whole matter.

CHAP. XXXIII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Wherefore, Job, I pray thee, hear my ſpeeches, and hearken to all my words.

Behold now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth.

My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart: And my lips ſhall utter knowledge clearly.

Elihu having ſpent the whole former Chapter in prefacing to Job's friends, directs his ſpeech now to Job himſelf; yet not without a renewed Preface, as will appear in opening this Chapter. Wherein we may take notice of four heads of his diſcourſe.

Firſt, we have his Preface in the ſeven former verſes of the Chapter.

Secondly, A propoſition of the matter to be debated, or of the things that Elihu had obſerved in Job's ſpeech about this Controverſie, from the 7. verſe to the 12.

Thirdly, We have his confutation of what Job had affirmed, from the 12. verſe to the 31.

Laſtly, We have his concluſion, exciting Job to make anſwer to what he had ſpoken, elſe to hear him ſpeaking, further in the three laſt verſes of the Chapter.

Elihu in his Preface, moves Job about two things; firſt, to attend what he was about to ſay.

Secondly, to make reply to and anſwer what he ſhould ſay.

Elihu moves Job to the former duty ſeveral ways.

Firſt, By a mild Intreaty and ſweet Inſinuation in the firſt verſe; Wherefore, Job, I pray thee, hear my ſpeeches, and hearken to my words. As if he had ſaid, I do not come authoritatively and rigorouſly upon thee, to command or demand thy attention, but as a faithful friend I deſire thee to attend unto my ſpeech, and hearken to my voice.

Secondly, He moves him to hear, by profeſſing his own readineſs and preparedneſs to ſpeak, in verſe 2. Behold now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth; that is, I have been (as it were) tuning my inſtrument, and fitting my ſelf for diſcourſe, let me not loſe my labour nor my ſtudy.

Thirdly, He moves him to attend from the ſincerity and gracious Ingenuity of his heart in that which he had to ſay to him. This he layeth before him in verſe 3. My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart, and my lips ſhall utter knowledge clearly. What better incouragement to hear! And

Fourthly, Elihu moves him to hear from the conſideration of his preſent ſtate, as a man, not only made by God, but by him inſtructed for the work which he had undertaken. the former of which is expreſt, the latter implyed in verſe 4. The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life. Thus Elihu calls out Job to hear. And

Secondly, As he invites him to hear what he had to ſay, ſo he provokes him to anſwer what he ſhould ſay, verſe 5. If thou canſt anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me, ſtand up. As if he had ſaid, Be not diſcouraged, take heart man, do thy beſt to defend thy ſelf, and make good thy own cauſe againſt what I ſhall ſay; ſpare me not; do thy beſt, thy utmoſt.

Having thus incouraged him in general to anſwer, he proceeds to give him two ſpecial motives.

Firſt, from their common ſtate or condition, in verſe 6. Behold, I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead; I alſo am formed out of the clay. As if he had ſaid; You have often deſired to plead with God, or that God would hear your plea; now conſider, I am in Gods ſtead, though a man like your ſelf.

Secondly, He incourageth him from the tenderneſs of his Spirit toward him, reſpecting his preſent condition, promiſing to deal with, or treat him fairly, gently, in verſe 7. Behold my terrour ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee. That favour Job had asked of God, in the 9. Chapter; Let not thy terror make me afraid. Now ſaith Elihu, that which thou didſt fear from God, thou needeſt not at all fear in dealing with me, My terror ſhall not make thee afraid, &c. Thus Elihu begins with Job, that he might lead him to receive fairly, or anſwer fully what he had to ſay.

The three firſt verſes of the Chapter, contain the firſt part of the Preface, wherein Elihu excites and calls forth Job's attention by thoſe four conſiderations already diſtinctly propoſed, the firſt whereof is laid down,

Verſ. 1. Wherefore, Job, I pray thee, hear my ſpeeches, and hearken to all my words.

Elihu begins very mildly, ſweetly, inſinuatingly, even intreatingly, and beſeechingly, Wherefore,

I pray thee.] The word which we tranſlate, I pray thee, is in the Hebrew language a monoſyllable Adverb of obſecration or exhortation. I pray thee.

Hence Note, 'Tis good to uſe gentleneſs towards thoſe with whom we have to deal, eſpecially with thoſe who are either outwardly afflicted, or troubled in Spirit.

Intreaties have great power; and therefore though the Prophets and Apoſtles ſpeak ſometimes in a threatning way, and command attention upon utmoſt peril, yet for the moſt part they beſpeak it with Intreaties, (2 Cor. 5. 20.) Now then we as Embaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us, we pray you in Chriſts ſtead be ye reconciled to God. The Apoſtles went about a begging, as it were, with this meſſage, with the beſt meſſage that ever was carried forth to the World, Reconciliation unto God; we pray you. And again (2 Cor. 6. 1.) We then as workers together with him, beſeech you alſo that you receive not the grace of God in vain; that is, the doctrine of the Goſpel holding forth the grace and favour of God freely in Jeſus Chriſt, (1 Theſ. 4. 1.) Furthermore, we beſeech you brethren, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to pleaſe God, ſo ye would abound more and more. As he did beſeech them not to receive the grace of God in vain, ſo he did beſeech them to a progreſs in and an Improvement of that grace. Again (1 Theſ. 2. 7.) We were gentle among you, even as a Nurſe cheriſheth her Children; how tender is a Nurſe to the Infant hanging at her breaſt, or dandled on her knee! Speak ye comfortably to Jeruſalem, was the Lords direction when ſhe was in her warfare; that is, in a troubled and afflicted condition. (Iſa. 40. 2.) The Hebrew is, Speak to her heart; ſpeak ſuch words as may revive her heart, and add freſh Spirits and life to her. The Apoſtles rule for the reſtoring of thoſe that are fallen, is, that they ſhould be kindly treated (Gal. 6. 1.) Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye that are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch an one with the Spirit of meekneſs. It is a great point of holy skill ſo to order a reproof as not to provoke; ſo to ſpeak as to ſpeak open, or pick the lock of the heart; affectionate intreaties are bleſſed pick-locks, which do not ſtrain the wards, but effectually lift up the holders and ſhoot the bolt of the heart, cauſing it to ſtand wide open to receive and take in the truth of promiſes, counſels and reproofs. Meek words meeken the Spirit. 'Tis hard to refuſe what we perceive ſpoken in love; and if any thing will ſoften a hard heart, ſoft language is moſt likely to do it. When Abigail came out and met David upon his way, hot upon revenge,, yea having (upon the matter) ſworn revenge againſt Nabal and his Houſe, yet her intreaties and mild words overcame that mighty warriour, at leaſt, took off the edg of his Spirit, and of all his party, (1 Sam. 25. 33.) Nor did he only accept of or ſubmit to her counſel, but gave thanks both to God and her for it; Bleſſed be the Lord, and bleſſed be thy advice, which haſt kept me this day, from ſhedding blood. Gentle words, like gentle rain, ſoak deep, and make the Soul, like a fruitful Tree, bud and bloſſom. For as paſſion in the ſpeaker, begets paſſion in the hearer, and heat brings forth heat, ſo kind and kindly words, are not only moſt uſeful, but moſt powerful. There is a rebuking, and that cuttingly, or a ſpeaking of cutting words, uſeful in ſome caſes, then eſpecially, when ſinners have not only done evil, but are ſetled and reſolved in it. But in caſe of affliction, ſpecially of inward affliction, or trouble of Spirit, ſoft words are beſt and do beſt. Hear, I pray thee, ſaith Elihu,

And hearken to all my words.] Here's hearing, and hearkning, to hearken is more then to hear; to hear is barely to receive the ſound of words; but to hearken is to take up the ſenſe of them, or as it were to ſuck out the ſtrength and ſweetneſs of them; to hearken is to weigh or ponder every tittle ſpoken, and take the value of it. The word in the Text, which ſignifies to hearken, hath a ſingular elegancy in it. One of the Rabbins renders, Ear my words; hear my words and ear them. The ſame word which in the verb ſignifies to hearken, which is the work of the ear, ſignifies alſo the ear, or inſtrument of that work in the noun. To ear words, notes the moſt diligent attention, as to eye a thing, notes the moſt accurate inſpection. The word ſignifies alſo the beam of a ballance, becauſe by the ear, or by the two ears (as by a ballance) words are tryed and poiſed, whether they are weighty and ſolid, or light and chaffy; when Elihu ſaith, hearken to, or weigh my words, he intimates that he meant to ſpeak words which had worth in them, or that he meant to ſpeak matter more then words. And therefore he would not have a word loſt, Hearken, ſaith he,

To all my words.] Not to this or that only, but to all; as if he had ſaid, I intend not, and I hope I ſhall not ſpeak one needleſs or unuſeful word; not a word beſide the buſineſs. Therefore hearken to all my words.

Hence Note, Firſt, They who ſpeak to inſtruction, admonition or exhortation, ſhould not uſe one word more then is uſeful, not a word more then is to the purpoſe.

Seeing, every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account for it in the day of Judgment, (Matth. 12.36.) How ſhould every man take heed of ſpeaking an idle word, a word of which he can give no good account for any good it is likely to do. Idle words will make ſad work one day, and words of no value or account, will turn to a heavy account in the great day. That's an idle word, which doth neither work the heart for good, nor ſtrengthen the hand to or in a good work. And if we ſhould be careful not to ſpeak one idle word, or not one word unworthy to be heard, how ſhould we avoid evil words, or words which corrupt the hearers.

Secondly, As the words refer to that duty which Elihu minds Job of, and moved him to, Hearkning to all his words.

Note, They who hear, eſpecially about holy things and Soul-matters, ſhould hear all.

One word ſhould not be loſt, when every word is precious. We gather up the filings and leaſt duſts of Gold. The ear ſhould gather all that truth which the mouth ſcatters, and the heart ſhould lay it up as treaſure. We may charge many ſorts of men with deficiency at ear-work. And ſurely if men will not hear all that they ought to believe and do, they can neither do nor believe any thing that they hear.

Firſt, Some will not hear the word at all, they are like the deaf Adder ſtopping their ears at the voyce of the charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely to them.

Secondly, Others think that there's not a word more to be heard, but what they have heard already, who can ſpeak what they know not?

Thirdly, There are few who hearken to any word that is ſpoken; that is, who make it their buſineſs to hear, who hear with diligence, and labour at it. As it is a great labour to ſpeak, ſo I aſſure you, it is no ſmall nor eaſie labour to hear, if you hear indeed and as you ſhould. To hear the word is the exerciſe of the whole Soul. Among many hearers, there are but few hearkners, ſuch I mean as weigh and conſider what they hear.

Fourthly, There are very few who hear and hearken to all the words of righteouſneſs and ſalvation. As ſome though they hear all, yet hearken to halves, ſo others will hear but half, or only ſo much as pleaſeth them of what is ſpoken. When the King of Judah (Jer. 36.23.) had the Roll brought to him which Baruch had written from the mouth of Jeremiah, he heard three or four leaves of it read to him as he ſate by the fire, and then he cauſed it to be cut with a penknife and caſt into the fire; he did not read it out, he had enough of it, he had (as we ſay) his belly full, but his heart was altogether empty, he was very angry and vext at the word, but not at all humbled nor affected with it; and therefore would not hear all thoſe words.

Again, To hearken is to obey, to ſubmit and yield up our ſelves to the truth we hear. Samuel tells Saul (1 Sam. 15.22.) To obey is better then ſacrifice, and to hearken then the fat of Rams; to obey and to hearken is the ſame thing; the obedient ear is the hearkning ear. Mine ear haſt thou opened (ſaith Chriſt, Pſal. 40.6.) This opening or digging of his ear (as we put in the Margin) ſignified his readineſs to obey, as 'tis expreſſed (verſ. 7, 8.) Then ſaid I loe I come; I delight to do thy will, O my God. And in reference to this he had ſaid before (verſ. 6.) Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, burnt-offering and ſin-offering haſt thou not required; that is, for themſelves, or comparatively to that, which in the volum of thy Book is written of me, that I ſhould do. Which clearly expounds and is almoſt the ſame in terms with that of Samuel; To obey is better then Sacrifice, and to hearken, then the fat of Rams. Thus Elihu preſſeth Job to hearken to all his words obedientially, or to hearken with a purpoſe to obey. Take a few conſiderations, why we ſhould both hear and hearken to, that is, obey, the whole mind of God, all thoſe words which have the ſtamp of divine authority upon them.

Firſt, All the words of God are alike holy and true, pure and precious. Though ſome truths are more neceſſary to be known and believed then others, yet all are neceſſary, nor can we be diſcharged from the duty of hearing and obeying any one of them, if called.

Secondly, There is a like or the ſame power and authority in all the words of God; ſo that to neglect or ſlight [illegible]y one word, is to put a ſlight upon the authority of God himſelf. There is but one Law-giver and word-ſender.

Thirdly, Not to ſubmit to any one word (though it be ſuppoſed we hearken to all others) draws upon us the guilt of non-ſubmiſſion or diſobedience to the whole word of God. That's the Apoſtles concluſion (James 2. 12.) Whoſoever ſhall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all; for though in many things we offend all, yet there is a Goſpel-ſence wherein we are ſaid to keep the whole Law of God. And ſo the Apoſtle meaning is, that whoſoever ſhall give himſelf a looſe or a liberty, whoſoever ſhall diſpence or indulge himſelf in breaking any one command of God, he breaks all, that is, he declares himſelf ready to break all, if he had a like occaſion or temptation.

Fourthly, We would have all our words hearkned to by God, we would have God grant all our Petitions, all o[illegible] Requeſts and Supplications, and ſhall not we hearken to and obey all the precepts of God? Shall we not receive and believe all his promiſes and threatnings?

Fifthly, As we deſire God would, ſo God hath promiſed to hear all our words, even all the requeſts of his people which are according to his will. Chriſt ſpeaks without reſtriction (Matth. 21.22.) All things whatſoever ye ask in my name, believing, ye ſhall receive. And again (Joh. 14.13, 14.) Whatſoever ye ſhall ask in my name, that will I do, &c. Nor are there any reſtrictions upon the promiſes of God in granting and doing what we ask, but only theſe two; firſt, that we ask right things; ſecondly, that we ask aright. Now if the Lord hath promiſed to hearken to all our words, not to this or that, but to all our words which are according to his will, (we have no liberty to ask beyond the will of God, beyond the rule of Scripture, ture, nor can we ask any thing beyond that, but it is to our hurt and damage, now if God (I ſay) will hearken to all our words) ſhould not we hearken to all his?

Laſtly, The condition upon which God hath promiſed to hear all our words, is, that we ſhould be ready to hear and hearken to all his words, (1 John 3.22.) Whatſoever we ask we receive, becauſe we keep his Commandments, and do the things that pleaſe him. It were not confidence, but higheſt and moſt hateful impudence, to expect that God ſhould pleaſe us by giving us what we ask, while we refuſe (which is the condition of that promiſe) to do the things that pleaſe him. Thus Elihu would have Job hearken to all his words, he being about to ſpeak, not his own, but the words of God. And that Job might not delay the opening of his ear to hear, Elihu tells him further in the next verſe, that himſelf had already opened his mouth to ſpeak.

Verſe 2. Behold now I have opened my mouth, my mouth, my tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth.

This phraſe of opening the mouth, imports four things.

Firſt, That a man hath been long ſilent; they that are full of talk, and ſpeak out of ſeaſon, may be ſaid to have their mouth always open, rather then at any time to open their mouths. But Elihu profeſſed in the former Chapter that he had waited as a Diſciple to hear and to learn, and had waited with utmoſt patience; therefore he might well ſay, Behold now I have opened my mouth, and taken upon me to ſpeak. So (Chap. 3.1.) after Job had ſate ſilent a great while, it is ſaid, Then Job opened his mouth, and curſed the day of his birth; Thus to open the mouth, intimates much ſilence and forbearance of ſpeech, and long expectation of a ſeaſon or opportunity to ſpeak.

Secondly, Opening the mouth, implyeth as ſpeaking after much ſilence, ſo with much prudence. A fools mouth is therefore ſaid to be always open, becauſe whenſoever he ſpeaketh, he is found ſpeaking imprudently and impertinently. But a wiſe man will not ſpeak, unleſs he may ſpeak to purpoſe, and ſo opens his mouth to ſpeak. Solomon ſaith, (Prov. 24. 7.) Wiſdom is too high for a fool, he openeth not his mouth in the gate; that is he is unfit to ſpeak in the preſence of wiſe and judicious men, he may open his mouth in the ſtreets, and in common company, but he opens not his mouth in the gate, where the Elders and Magiſtrates uſed to meet and judg the weightieſt matters. There is a four-fold conſideration to be had, as to the due opening of the mouth, (and 'tis no ſmall matter to open the mouth with thoſe conſiderations.)

Os aperire dicuntur apud Hebræos, qui in- [illegible] ſermonem ſerium & de re gravi. Piſc.

Firſt, Conſideration is to be had of the place ond company where, and to whom we ſpeak. We muſt not caſt pearls before ſwine, nor give ſtrong meat to Children.

Secondly, The time and ſeaſon wherein we ſpeak muſt be conſidered; every truth is not fit for every time. Chriſt would not ſpeak all at once to his Diſciples, for this reaſon, (John 16. 12.) I have many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; and becauſe ye cannot bear them now, therefore I will not ſay them now.

Thirdly, Conſideration is to be had how and in what way to ſpeak, whether inſtructingly, or exhortingly, reprovingly, or comfortably, we ſhould always labour to divide the word of God, and what we ſpeak from it aright, giving every one his proper part and portion. Then a man opens his mouth to ſpeak, when he conſiders how to ſort his ſpeech according to the ſtate of things and perſons before him.

Fourthly, Conſideration is to be had of the end or tendency of ſpeech, what our aim and mark is; we ſay, a fools bolt is ſoon ſhot, he conſiders not his aim and mark in ſpeaking; he that opens his mouth, looks to his mark, and drives a deſign, or hath a purpoſe in every word that paſſeth from him.

Thirdly, This phraſe of opening the mouth, notes liberty of ſpeech, or boldneſs in ſpeaking; when a man doth not ſpeak in his throat, as untaught Children do; nor in his belly, or in a bottle, as Witches and Sorcerers are ſaid to do, that peep and mutter (Iſa. 8. 19.) When a man (I ſay) doth not ſpeak any of theſe covert ways, but freely and liberally, then indeed he opens his mouth to ſpeak. We have that expreſſion in the promiſe, (Ezek. 29. 21.) In that day will I cauſe the horn of the Houſe of Iſrael to bud forth, and I will give thee the opening of the mouth in the midſt of them, and they ſhall know that I am the Lord; That is, I will give thee boldneſs, and liberty of ſpeech: Time was when thou didſt not dare to ſpeak a word for God, or of God, of his praiſe, name and worſhip, or if thou didſt it was but in a corner, or whiſpered in ſecret; but the time ſhall come when I will give thee the opening of the mouth; thou ſhalt ſpeak my truth and praiſes boldly: And the enemy ſhall know that I the Lord have procured thee this liberty. 'Tis a great mercy when God gives his people the opening of the mouth, or liberty of ſpeech, to ſpeak boldly, no man hindring, no not ſo much as diſcouraging them. The Prophet makes that the character of an evil time, when the prudent keep ſilence, (Amos 5. 13.) As in evil or calamitous times, it becomes the godly prudent to be willingly ſilent, adoring the juſtice of Gods ſevereſt diſpenſations towards them with patience and without murmuring at his hand. So in ſome evil times they are forced to keep ſilence, (though as David ſpake, Pſal. 39. 2. their ſorrows be ſtirred) either leſt by ſpeaking, even nothing but truth and reaſon, they draw further ſorrows upon themſelves; or becauſe they ſee it but loſt labour to ſpeak to a people obſtinate and reſolved on their way.

Inde videtur dici אוב verbo, quod ipſi velut utres inflati turgeſcant & ſpiritus immundus ex illorum ventre reſpondeat.

Fourthly, This phraſe of opening the mouth to ſpeak, notes the things ſpoken to be of very great worth, ſuch as have been long concocted and digeſted, and at laſt ready to be brought forth, as out of the treaſury of an honeſt and underſtanding heart. The heart is the treaſury of words, there they are ſtored up: And from thence iſſued forth; as Chriſt ſaith, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. As there is a ſtock of evil words in the hearts of evil men, ſo of good and gracious words in the hearts of godly men, and when they open their mouths (according to this notion) it is to bring forth the treaſures, and riches of their hearts, to bring forth the gold and ſilver and precious things ſtored up there; all theſe are very uſeful interpretations of this phraſe; and I might give diſtinct obſervations from them, but it may ſuffice to have named them. I ſhall only add that the laſt is conceived by ſome to be chiefly intended in the latter branch of this verſe.

Os aperire eſt bene diſcuſſa & præmeditata habere dicenda. Bold.

My tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth.

This ſeems a ſtrange expreſſion; where ſhould the tongue ſpeak but in the mouth? When the tongue is out of the mouth, can it ſpeak? As the mouth cannot ſpeak without the tongue, ſo the tongue cannot ſpeak out of the mouth: Why then doth he ſay;

My tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth.] The Hebrew is, In my palate, the palate being a part of the mouth, and one ſpecial Inſtrument of ſpeech (Naturaliſts reckon five, The lips, the tongue, the teeth, the palate, and the throat) 'tis put for all; but there is more in it then ſo, for every man ſpeaks in his mouth, or by the palate which is the heaven, roof or cieling of the mouth. Therefore when Elihu ſaith, My tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth, or in my palate; the palate may be conſidered as the inſtrument of taſting as well as of ſpeaking. We ſay ſuch a thing is very ſavory to the palate; and we call that Palate wine, which is quick and lively, briſk and pleaſant to the taſt. Thus when Elihu ſaith here, My tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth or palate; his meaning is; I have uttered only that which I have well conſidered, what my tongue hath ſpoken to you, I have taſted my ſelf; I have put every word to my palate; for as a man that taſteth wine or any other ſapid thing, muſt have it upon his palate, before he can make a Judgment, whether it be ſweet or ſharp, quick or flat: So ſaith Elihu, my mouth hath ſpoken in my palate, I taſted my words before I ſpake them.

Palatum oris cœlum eſt. Druſ. Præmeditata & quaſi intelligentia meæ palato prægustata ſum prolaturus. B.Z. Bene ſapui verba mea antequam illa efferendo tibi aliiſq; ſapienda & guſtanda traderem. Bold. Non ſequar verba aliorum, ſed proprios conceptus enunciabo. Aquin.

Hence Note, Judicious and wiſe men will taſt and try what they intend to ſpeak before they utter it.

The ſpeaker preſents his words to the taſt of the hearer; for as this Scripture hath it at the 3. verſe of the next Chapter, The ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat; now he that ventures his words to the taſt and cenſure of others, had need take a taſt of them before he doth it. My tongue hath ſpoken in my mouth.

Secondly, From the ſcope of Elihu in adding this, namely, to gain attention, Note, There is great reaſon we ſhould hear that carefully, which the ſpeaker hath prepared with care.

They who regard not what they ſpeak, deſerve no regard when they ſpeak; but a weighing ſpeaker, ſhould have a weighing hearer. And what any mans tongue (in the ſence of Elihu) hath ſpoken in his mouth, that we ſhould hear, not only with our ear, but with our heart. This a ſtrong argument to quicken attention, yet Elihu gives in another, and a ſtronger in the next verſe.

Verſe 3. My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart, my lips ſhall utter knowledg clearly.

In the former verſe Elihu called for an open ear, becauſe he opened his mouth, and was about to ſpeak, or had ſpoken what he had well taſted. In this verſe he preſſeth the ſame duty, by profeſſing all manner of Ingenuity and Integrity in what he was about to ſpeak. He would ſpeak not only ſeriouſly, but honeſtly, not only from his underſtanding, but his Conſcience.

My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart.

The meaning is not, that the uprightneſs of his heart ſhould be the ſubject upon which he would treat, though that be a bleſſed and moſt uſeful ſubject, yet it was not the point he intended to diſcuſs: But when he ſaith, My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart, his meaning is, my words ſhall flow from the uprightneſs of my heart, I will ſpeak in the uprightneſs of my heart, or according to the uprightneſs of my heart; my words ſhall be upright as my heart is; the plain truth is this, I will ſpeak truth plainly, I'le ſpeak as I think, you may ſee the Image of my heart upon every word, I will ſpeak without dawbing, without either ſimulation or diſſimulation. Some conceive this to be a ſecret reproof of, or reflection upon Job's friends, as if Elihu had ſuſpected them to have ſpoken worſe of Job, then they could think him to be in their hearts. But as we cannot judg mens hearts directly, ſo there is no reaſon why we ſhould judg ſo of their hearts conjecturally. It is enough to the purpoſe, that Elihu aſſerts his own uprightneſs without reflecting upon or ſuſpecting the uprightneſs of thoſe, who had dealt with Job before; My words ſhall be in the uprightneſs of my heart.

Sincerè & abſque ullo fuco proferam animi mei ſenſa. Bez.

This uprightneſs of his heart may have a three-fold oppoſition. Firſt, to paſſion; ſome ſpeak in the heat and fire of their hearts, rather then in the uprightneſs of them; it is good to ſpeak with the heat and fire of zeal in our hearts; but take heed of the heat and fire of paſſion, I will not ſpeak in the heat, but in the uprightneſs of my heart, ſaith Elihu.

Secondly, This uprightneſs may be oppos'd to partiality, I will not ſpare when there is cauſe to ſpeak home, nor preſs, nor load thee with any thing where there is not cauſe for it.

Thirdly, This uprightneſs in ſpeaking, may be alſo oppos'd to ſpeaking without clear ground or proof. And 'tis ſuppoſed that Elihu aimed more ſpecially at this, Job's friends having been ſo high in his reproof, charging him with divers things for which they had no proof, but only a vehement ſuſpition. The words of Eliphaz are full (Chap. 22. 5.) Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite? For thou haſt taken a pledg from thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their Clothing: Thou haſt ſent widows empty away, and the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken: Surely Eliphaz could not ſpeak this in the uprightneſs of his heart, knowing it to be ſo, though he ſpake it in this uprightneſs of his heart, that he really thought it to be ſo. Which kind of uprightneſs Paul had in perſecuting the Saints, (Acts 26. 9.) I verily thought with my ſelf, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth. Thus Job's friends verily thought he had done many groſs things contrary to the Law of God, but they only thought ſo, they could not prove it; this is a lame kind of uprightneſs, and in oppoſition to this Elihu might now ſay, I will not charge or burden thee with any thing but what I know to be true, and had even from thy own mouth. My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart.

Non loquar ad calumniandum vel ad ridendum, ſed ſimplici animo ad veritatem manifeſtandam. Aquin.

I ſhall not ſtay to give particular notes from theſe words, according to this three-fold oppoſition; the Reader may improve them in that, as he hath occaſion; only in general Obſerve,

The heart and tongue ſhould go together.

The tongue ſhould always be the hearts Interpreter, and the heart ſhould always be the tongues ſuggeſter; what is ſpoken with the tongue ſhould be firſt ſtampt upon the heart, and wrought off from it. Thus it ſhould be in all our communications and exhortations, eſpecially when we ſpeak or exhort about the things of God, and diſpenſe the myſteries of Heaven. David ſpake from his heart while he ſpake from his faith (Pſal. 116. 10.) I believed, therefore have I ſpoken. Believing is an act of the heart, with the heart man believeth; ſo that to ſay, I believed, therefore have I ſpoken; is as if he had ſaid, I would never have ſpoken theſe things, if my heart had not been clear and upright in them. The Apoſtle takes up that very proteſtation from David (2 Cor. 4. 13.) According as it is written, I believed, therefore have I ſpoken; we alſo believe, and therefore ſpeak; that is, we moved others to believe nothing but what we believed, yea, were fully aſſured of, our ſelves, as the next words of the Apoſtle import, Knowing, that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you. To ſpeak what we in our heart believe, is to ſpeak in the uprightneſs of our hearts.

Some ſpeak without their hearts, that is, coldly, they have no heart at all in ſpeaking; as ſome hear without their hearts, only with their ears; ſo ſome ſpeak without the heart, only with the tongue.

Secondly, Others ſpeak what was never in their hearts; they have no experience in themſelves of what they ſay to others. They throw out their words at a venture. It is ſad to ſpeak that as a truth, or a comfort to others, which we have not found in our ſelves, that is, have not felt the operation of it upon our own hearts. How are they to be lamented, who ſpeak of the things of God as a Stage-player, who acts the part of, or perſonates a Prince, being themſelves but a poor Plebeian? It is bad to ſpeak without our hearts, or coldly, but 'tis worſe to ſpeak what was never in our hearts, or hypocritically.

Thirdly, Not a few ſpeak quite againſt their hearts; theſe are at fartheſt diſtance from ſpeaking in the uprightneſs of their heart; they ſpeak with a falſe and malicious heart, they ſpeak with a deceitful and double heart, with a heart and a heart. There are three ways wherein men ſpeak againſt their own hearts and Conſciences.

Firſt, In the profeſſion which they make of themſelves, (Rev. 2. 9.) Chriſt writing to the Church of Smyrna, ſaith, I know thy faith and patience, &c, and the Blaſphemy of them who ſay they are Jews and are not, but lie, &c. And ſo at Chapter 3. verſe 9. Which ſay they are Jews and are not, but do lie. We are not to underſtand it ſtrictly, that they profeſſed themſelves to be of the Nation of the Jews, the Children of Abraham. A Jew there is, any one that holdeth out a profeſſion of the faith of Chriſt. Old Teſtament words are often applyed to the new Teſtament, or Goſpel ſtate; they ſay they are Jews, that is, true believers, but they are not, and do lie; to lie, is to go againſt a mans mind, againſt his Conſcience; they make a great profeſſion of godlineſs and holineſs, of Chriſt and his ways, and they lie at every word; for indeed they are the Synagogue of Satan. Thus at this day ſome make profeſſion before the Church of God, and by ſuch profeſſion get admittance into the Church of God, who yet belong to the Synagogue of Satan. The Apoſtle John ſpeaks of ſuch, (1 Ep. John 2. 19.) They went out from us, but they were not of us; that is, they were not truly of us, though they once deſired to come in and join themſelves to us, and for a time walked with us.

Secondly, The tongue ſpeaks againſt the heart many times in the promiſes which men make to others of what they will do. O what courteſies and friendſhips will ſome men profeſs! they will tell you aloud how they love you, and how much they are your ſervants, while there is nothing in their hearts, but deceit and guile, yea poſſibly nothing but wrath and revenge to death. Thus Iſhmael went out weeping all along as he went (Jer. 41. 6.) and ſaid, Come to Gedaliah, the Son of Ahikam, yet he invited them into the City as poor Birds into a ſnare, to deſtroy them preſently; he was ſeemingly troubled at their affliction and wept, but his were Crocodiles tears, he murthered them as ſoon as he had them in his power.

Thirdly, Some ſpeak againſt their hearts doctrinally or in the Doctrine which they propound and teach. There are three ſorts who ſpeak amiſs doctrinally.

Firſt, Some ſpeak that which is not right in the uprightneſs of their hearts; or, I may ſay, they ſpeak that which is falſe with a true heart; that is, they think it to be a truth which they utter, when 'tis an error, and will be found ſo at laſt, When ever we ſee different opinions ſtifly maintained among honeſt and godly men, (which though it be a very ſad ſight, yet it is too often ſeen; In that caſe I ſay) one ſide always ſpeak that which is falſe with a true heart, and utters error uprightly. The truth is, ſome men defend an error with better and more honeſt hearts, then ſome others defend the truth. For

Secondly, There are ſuch as ſpeak right without any uprightneſs of heart, or they ſpeak truth with a falſe heart; this Elihu ſpecially profeſſeth againſt; he would not only ſpeak that which was right, but with uprightneſs, The Apoſtle found ſeveral teachers of this ſecond ſort (Phil. 1. 16, 17, 18.) Some preach Chriſt, that is, the Goſpel, yea the truth of Chriſt in the Goſpel, (elſe the Apoſtle would not have rejoyced in it, as he profeſſeth he did at the 18 verſe, I therein do rejoyce, yea and will rejoyce) yet theſe men did not preach in the uprightneſs of their own hearts; for, ſaith he, Some preach Chriſt out of envy and ſtrife, and ſome out of good will, (they preached Chriſt, pure Goſpel, yet not with pure hearts, for, he adds, they did it) ſuppoſing to add affliction to my bonds; they preacht to oppoſe the Apoſtles more then to ſet up Chriſt, and though they preached the truth, yet they did it more in pretence then in truth; as 'tis ſaid at the 18. verſe. The ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks of others, (2 Cor. 11. 13. 14.) who preached what was true for the matter, and yet he calls them falſe Apoſtles, deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and no marvel, for Satan himſelf is transformed into an Angel of light. They formed and ſhaped themſelves into Angels of light, and took up the doctrine of the faithful Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt in ſome things, yet they did it not in the uprightneſs of their hearts, but that they might weaken the eſtimation of the true Apoſtles in the hearts of the people, and ſet up themſelves there, that ſo in other things they might with greater efficacy or more effectually, miſlead them or draw them into error. Thus ſome are found ſpeaking lies in the truth of their hearts, and others ſpeaking truth in the falſeneſs of their hearts.

Thirdly, Many ſpeak that which is falſe with a falſe heart; this is the height of wickedneſs. The Apoſtle propheſieth of ſuch (1 Tim. 4. 2.) Who ſhall ſpeak lies in hypocriſie: The matter they ſpeak is a lie, and they ſpeak it with a baſe and falſe heart too. And therefore he ſaith of theſe in the ſame verſe, Their Conſciences are ſeared with a hot iron; that is, they are inſenſible both of the miſchief they do, and of the miſery they muſt ſuffer.

Elihu profeſſeth himſelf to be none of all theſe; he ſpake that which was right and true in the uprightneſs and truth of his heart. Such a one the Apoſtle directs the Goſpel Deacon to be, (1 Tim. 3. 9.) Holding the myſtery of faith in a pure Conſcience, which is the ſame with an upright heart. And he tells us (1 Theſ. 2. 4, 5.) That himſelf did not uſe any guile in the miniſtration of the Goſpel. He had truth on his ſide, and he had truth in his heart, as he alſo profeſſed to his Brethren the Jews, (Rom. 9. 1, 2.) I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, I lie not, my Conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the holy Ghoſt, &c. And again, (2 Cor. 2. 17.) We are not of thoſe that corrupt the truth; we ſpeak the truth, and ſpeak it truly. He is a better ſpeaker that ſpeaks with an upright heart, then he that ſpeaks with an eloquent tongue; he is the happy ſpeaker, who ſpeaks more with his heart then with his tongue, that can ſay with Elihu to Job, My words ſhall be of the uprightneſs of my heart. Words ſpoken of that ſubject, and words flowing from that ſubject, are lovely words. Of this latter ſort ſaith Elihu to Job; My words ſhall be.

And my lips ſhall utter knowledg clearly.

Job had charged his three friends (Chap. 13. 4.) that they were forgers of lies. This Elihu ingageth againſt, while he ſaith, My lips ſhall utter knowledg clearly.

Quia tribus amicis Jobus impſurat quod eſſent fabricatores mendacii, hoc à ſe excludit dicens & ſententiam labia mea puram loquentur. Aquin.

The word here tranſlated Clearly, is rendred two ways.

First, As an Adjective.

Secondly, As an Adverb.

Many render it as an Adjective, My lips ſhall utter clear knowledg, or diſtinct knowledg; clear as to the matter; pure, plain, without any adulteration, deceit, or guile, as to the manner. So the word is often uſed, I might give you many Scriptures for it. The Prophet ſpeaking in the perſon of Chriſt (Iſa. 49. 2.) ſaith, He hath made me a poliſhed ſhaft, the Hebrew is, a pure ſhaft, a glittering, ſhining ſhaſt. (Jer. 5. 11.) He made bright his arrows, there this word is uſed. It is applyed alſo to chief men (1 Chron. 7. 48.) Theſe were choice men, pure men. So ſaith Elihu (My lips ſhall utter clear ſhining pure knowledg.)

Hence Note, We ſhould ſpeak clear truth. Truth without mixture, truth well winnowed, doctrine well refined.

The Commandment of the Lord is a pure word (Pſal. 19. 8.) There's not any droſs at all in it, 'tis like Silver tried ſeven times in the fire (Pſal. 12. 6.) The Prophet among other bleſſings which God promiſeth to his Church and people, hath this (Iſa. 30. 24.) The Oxen likewiſe and the young Aſſes that ear the ground ſhall eat clean Provender, free from the ſtraw, and chaff, duſt and darnel. But may we not here renew the Apoſtles queſtion, (1 Cor. 9. 9, 10.) Doth God take care for Oxen? or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? For our ſakes no doubt it is written; that the mouth of the Oxe treading out the corn, ſhould not be muzzel'd, was written for the Miniſters ſake, to aſſure them, that while they labour in the Goſpel to feed Souls, their Bodies ſhould be fed. And that the Oxen and young Aſſes ſhall eat clean Provender, was written for the peoples ſake, to aſſure them, that Chriſt would ſend them ſuch Miniſters as ſhould feed them with pure, holy, wholeſom doctrine, not with the chaff of unwritten traditions, nor with the mixtures of humane inventions. They ſhould be taught clear knowledg, as Elihu here ſpeaketh. This mercy was alſo propheſied (Zeph. 3. 9.) Then will I turn to the people a pure language, or a clean lip: It is this word, that is, what they ſpeak, ſhall be pure truth, their language ſhall be, not only Grammatically pure, proper and genuine, but Theologically pure, without any tincture of error in it.

Secondly, As the word is taken (according to our tranſlation) Adverbially.

Note, We ought to ſpeak truth clearly.

Some ſpeak clear truths, who yet do not ſpeak them clearly. They ſpeak great truths, yet obſcure them in their own way of expreſſions; they who wrap up ſound doctrine in hard uncouth words, or deliver it in an unneceſſary multitude of words, do rather puzzle and confound their Auditors, then inform or inſtruct them. And they who ſpeak not knowledg clearly, are like thoſe who mud the waters, or raiſe a duſt in the air, which will not let others ſee diſtinctly what they hold or put in either. Speaking in dark words and ſtrange notions, is like ſpeaking in a ſtrange language. They only ſpeak profitably, who ſpeak clearly. We commonly ſay, Truth ſeeks no corners; truth would not be hid. What are obſcure and ambiguous words, of a doubtful conſtruction and interpretation, but corners, wherein many hide truth, while they pretend to ſpeak and publiſh it. Such ſpeakers as well as they who ſpeak in an unknown language, are Barbarians to their hearers. And therefore as the Apoſtle in reference to an unknown tongue, ſo ſhould we ſay in reference to any covert or obſcure way of ſpeaking in our own mother tongue, We had rather ſpeak five words that others may be edified, then ten thouſand words in hard and ſtrange expreſſions. Though we ſpeak in a known language, yet doubtful words hinder edifying as much as an unknown language doth; yea ſuch are as a foreiner to their hearers, while they ſpeak in their own Country-tongue. 'Tis a ſpecial gift of God, to ſpeak knowledg clearly. The Apoſtle hath left that excellent advice with all who are called to ſpeak the great things of eternal life, (1 Pet. 4. 11.) If any man ſpeak (that is, if he ſpeak about the things of God, divine things) let him ſpeak as the Oracles of God. What are they? The Oracles of God are the known word of God. But how are theſe Oracles to be known? Surely as God ſpake them, plainly and clearly; The Oracles of God were ſpoken without ambiguity, therefore let no man ſpeak them as the Oracles of the Devil were ſpoken, or as the Devil ſpake his Oracles, that is, ambiguouſly and doubtfully; the Devil of old gave out all his anſwers and Oracles doubtfully and darkly to his dark and blinded votaries; what he ſaid might bear ſeveral conſtructions. And he ſpake ſo on purpoſe, that whatſoever the event or iſſue proved to be, he (though the father of lies) might have the reputation of ſpeaking truth. The Devils Oracle gave Crœſus ſuch an anſwer as he might interpret either of a great ſucceſs, or of a great overthrow, when he asked counſel about his Wars. And when Saul came to inquire of the Witch of Endor, that is, of the Devil, (1 Sam. 28. 11.) he gave him a doubtful reſolve; To morrow ſhalt thou and thy Sons be with me (verſ. 19.) Which ambiguous anſwer might be underſtood as of the next day following, ſo indefinitely of any day near approaching. Satan loves not to ſpeak knowledg clearly. But the ſervants and meſſengers of Chriſt, muſt us great plaineſs of ſpeech while they are treating of and giving out the mind of God to his people; and be careful that as the doctrine is ſound which they deliver, ſo there may be a clearneſs in their delivering of it. Their lips (as Elihu ingaged his ſhould) ought to utter knowledg clearly.

Crœſus Halym penetrās magnam pervertet opum vim.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

The Spirit of God hath formed me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.
If thou canſt anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me, ſtand up.
Behold, I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead: I alſo am formed out of the clay.
Behold, my terror ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee.

IN theſe four verſes, Elihu ſtill proſecutes a diſcreet prefatory inſinuation both of himſelf and of his intended diſcourſe into the heart of Job, that both might find welcome, and good entertainment there. Elihu had aſſured him at the third verſe, that he would ſpeak in the uprightneſs of his heart, or that he would deal candidly, and clearly with him. That was a ſtrong argument to gain attention. And in this fourth verſe, he argueth with and urgeth Job, to give him attention, becauſe he was a man of Gods making, as Job alſo was. The ſame hand wrought them both, and therefore, why ſhould there be a ſtrangeneſs between them? Or an unwillingneſs to give or receive counſel and help from one another?

Verſe 4. The Spirit of God hath formed me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

I ſhall open theſe words two ways.

Firſt, As a direct propoſition, or aſſertion,

Secondly, In their connection and dependance, as they are here uſed, for an argument of perſwaſion.

First, Conſider the Text, as an aſſertion; The Spirit of God hath made me, &c. The word doth not ſignifie barely to make, or to clap up a work any how, but to make with art, to make ſkilfully, to compoſe and faſhion a thing with exacteſt grace, comelineſs, and beauty. Thus are we made by the Spirit of God. Man is an excellent piece of work, yea man is the Maſter-piece of all the viſible works of God. The Spirit of God hath made me.

עשני Faciendi verbum artificioſam & elaboratam agendi rationem aſſert. Pined.

There are two things here to be enquired; firſt, what we are to underſtand by the Spirit of God, to whom Elihu attributes his making. Secondly, why doth Elihu attribute his making to the Spirit of God? To the former queſtion, I anſwer; firſt, negatively, that by the Spirit of God we are not to underſtand a power or vertue put forth by God, in which ſence we ſometimes read the Spirit of God in Scripture. But by the Spirit of God here, we are to underſtand God the Spirit. In which ſence we read (Gen. 1. 2.) The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. As alſo (Math. 3. 16.) He ſaw the Spirit of God deſcending like a Dove, and lighting upon him; that is, upon Jeſus Chriſt, baptized by John in Jordan.

The ſecond queſtion is, Why doth Elihu attribute his making to the Spirit of God? Regeneration or our new-making is properly the work of the Spirit, but is Creation, or our natural conſtitution his work alſo? Saith not Moſes (Gen. 2. 7.) The Lord God formed man out of the duſt of the Earth; Jehovah Elohim formed man. And if we look into the firſt of John verſ. 2, 3. we read thus; In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God; the ſame was in the beginning with God, all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made, that was made. There our maker (for the making of all things is attributed to him) is the Son, the ſecond perſon in the holy Trinity, or the Word, who (as it followeth in that Chapter) was made fleſh. Why then doth Elihu here aſcribe his making to the Spirit? And how are theſe Scriptures reconciled?

I anſwer, by that received Maxime in Divinity, The works of the holy Trinity towards the Creature are undivided. So that, while this Scripture aſcribes the making of man to the Spirit or third perſon in the Trinity, it doth not at all croſs thoſe which aſcribe it to the firſt or ſecond, the Father or the Son. The Spirit of God hath made me.

Hence Note, Firſt, Man as to his bodily making, or the making of his body, is the workmanſhip of God.

As we are his workmanſhip Created in Chriſt Jeſus to good (or holy) works, (Eph. 2. 10.) ſo we are his workmanſhip Created to common and natural works. We have heard of that divine conſultation or reſolution rather (Gen. 1. 26.) Let us make man: The Father made man, and the Son made man, and the holy Spirit made man; the Father by the Son, through the holy Spirit made man. What a glorious, what a mighty power is put forth for the production of ſuch a poor Creature as man is! And this is true, not only of the firſt man in his Creation, but of every man ſince the Creation, there is a concurrence of a divine power and workmanſhip in the ſetting up of man as man. (Pſal. 100. 3.) It is he that made us, and not we our ſelves; God doth not only make us holy men, but he makes us men. Hence David (Pſal 13. 9, 14.) I am fearfully, and wonderfully made. He ſpeaks there of the frame of his Body, though that be much more true in reference to the admirable frame of the new Creature which is ſet up in the Soul; ſo, indeed we are fearfully and wonderfully made. (Iſa. 27. 11.) Thus is a people of no underſtanding (but did God ever make a people without natural underſtanding? Surely no, but they were a people without ſpiritual underſtanding, they did not underſtand what the mind, and meaning of God was, and what their own duty was; ſuch are a people of no underſtanding, how wiſe ſoever they are in their own eyes, or in the eyes of the World, what followeth?) Therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour; That is, God who made and formed them, both in their natural capacity as men, as alſo in their civil and ſpiritual capacity as a Church and Nation, or as a National Church (underſtanding it of the Jews) will not have mercy on them, will not favour them. We read the ſame Church at once looking to God as their maker and moſt earneſtly moving and imploring his pity upon the ſame account. (Iſa. 64. 8, 9.) But now O Lord, thou art our Father, we are the Clay, and thou our Potter, and we all are the work of thy hand; As if they had ſaid, thou O Lord, haſt moulded us as thy Creatures, and faſhioned us as thy Church, when we were but a rude maſs or heap without form or comlineſs, therefore do not mar thy own work, do not break the Veſſels of thine own making, or as it followeth in the ſame Chapter, Be not wroth very ſore O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever, behold, we beſeech thee, we are all thy people.

Hence Conſider, Firſt, That, we owe not only our well-being, but our very being unto God. And therefore

Secondly, No man ought to look upon himſelf as his own; ſo the Apoſtle argues (1 Cor. 6. 19.) Know ye not that your Body is the Temple of the holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? No man is his own, he is Gods, who hath made him. Saints and believers eſpecially are not their own in that reſpect; as alſo becauſe their Bodies are the Temple of the holy Ghoſt; that is, the holy Ghoſt hath ſanctified them for himſelf, for his peculiar ſervice, and for his habitation. Now as the Bodies of Saints are the Temple of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe he doth ſanctifie them; ſo they are the Temple of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe he hath reared them up, and built them. That conſideration ſhould urge us to duty; our Bodies are Temples built, as well as Temples ſanctified by the holy Ghoſt; and therefore we are not our own at all, nor in any reſpect; and if we are not our own at all, but the Lords, then we ought to be always for the Lord,

Hence, Thirdly, Hath the Spirit of God made us? (as Elihu ſaith) then let the Spirit uſe us; how ſad is it, that when the Spirit of God hath made our Bodies and Souls, we ſhould let the wicked Spirit uſe either (as he doth both the Bodies and Souls of carnal men) to his baſe ſervices. The evil Spirit did neither make our Bodies nor our Souls, why ſhould he have the command of either? Therefore as your members have been weapons of unrighteouſneſs to ſin, ſo let them be inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God. Seeing the holy Spirit hath made us, let not the evil Spirit uſe ſo much as a little finger of us; for, he hath not made not only ſo much as a little finger of our hand, but ſo much as the leaſt hair of our heads (as Chriſt ſaith we our ſelves cannot, Matth. 5. 36.) white or black. And therefore let not the evil Spirit make uſe of one hair of our heads white or black, as a flag of pride and vanity, or to be an occaſion of ſin to others. He that maketh the Houſe ought to have the poſſeſſion and ſervice of it, either to dwell in it himſelf, or to receive rent and profit from him that dwells in it. The Spirit having made us, ſhould not only have the rent and revenue, but the full poſſeſſion of us for ever. That which is of God ſhould be for God, for him always, and only for him.

Secondly, In that the making of man is attributed to the Spirit,

Obſerve, The Spirit of God is God.

The holy Ghoſt is not only a power of God, or a word gone out from God, but the holy Ghoſt is God. This is clear from the efficiency of the holy Spirit; The Spirit of God hath made me. The work of Creation is attributable to none but God. That power which at firſt ſet up man in his Creation, continueth him to this day; this power and great prerogative is given to the Spirit; therefore the Spirit is God. (Pſal. 33. 6.) By the word of the Lord (his ſubſtantial Word or Son) were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them, by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth; that is, Jehovah by his eternal Son and Spirit made all things. The Heavens and their Hoſt, are there expreſſed by a Synecdoche of the part, for the whole Creation, or for all Creatures both in Heaven and in Earth. Again (Pſal. 104. 30.) Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are Created; The Spirit of God Creates every day: what is it that continueth things in their Created being, but providence? That's a true axiome in Divinity; Providence is Creation continued; now the Spirit of God who Created at firſt, Creates to this day; Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are Created. The work of Creation was finiſhed in the firſt ſix days of the World, but the work of Creation is renewed every day, and ſo continued to the end of the World. Succeſſive providential Creation as well as original Creation is aſcribed to the Spirit.

The Scripture is full of arguments to prove that the holy Ghoſt is God; which (becauſe this fundamental truth is blaſphemouſly ſpoken againſt) I ſhall a little touch upon.

Firſt, As the Spirit Createth and maketh the natural man conſiſting of Body and Soul, ſo he regenerateth (which is a greater Creation) the whole into a ſpiritual man; therefore he is God. (John 3. 5.) Except a man be born again of water, and of the Spirit (that is, of the Spirit who is as water) he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. The holy Ghoſt is alſo call'd, The ſanctifier; ſanctification is regeneration in progreſs, and motion; regeneration is ſanctification begun, and ſanctification is regeneration perfecting from day to day. (2 Theſ. 2. 13.) We are bound to give thanks to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, becauſe God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth. And the Apoſtle Peter writes to the Elect (1 Pet. 1. 2.) according to the foreknowledg of God the father, through ſanctification of the Spirit. Now, who can do theſe great things but God? Who can regenerate, or give a new nature, who can ſanctifie or perfect that new nature but God alone? Men and Angels muſt let their works alone for ever, or (as we tranſlate, Pſal. 49. 8.) theſe acts ceaſe for ever from men and Angels, as much as the redemption of man from the grave, or from Hell, from corruption or condemnation.

Secondly, The Spirit is omniſcient, He knoweth all things, (1 Cor. 1. 12. & 2. 10. 19.) The Spirit knoweth all things, yea the deep things of God. He is not only acquainted with, and privie to the ſurface and outſide of things, but he ſearcheth things to the bottom of them. Nor doth he ſearch only the deep or bottom things of common men, or of the chiefeſt of men, Kings and Princes, (whoſe hearts are uſually as much deeper then other mens, as their perſons and places are higher) but the Spirit ſearcheth the deep things, the bottom things of God, the things of God that lie loweſt, and moſt out of ſight, the Spirit underſtandeth, therefore the Spirit is God. For (as the Apoſtle argueth, 1 Cor. 2. 11.) No man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the Spirit of a man that is in him; even ſo the things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God, or, he that is God; if the Spirit that is in man, were not man, or the intellectual power in man, it could never know the things of man; and if the Spirit of God were not God, he could never ſearch and know the deep, the deepeſt things of God.

Thirdly, As the Spirit of God knoweth all things, as he ſearcheth the deep things. even all the ſecrets, and myſteries of God; ſo he teacheth all things, even all thoſe ſecrets and myſteries of God. which 'tis needful or uſeful for man to know. The Spirit is a teacher, and he teacheth effectually (John 16. 13.) When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: For he ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf (that is, he ſhall not teach you a private doctrine, or that which is contrary to that ye have learned of me) but whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak, and he will ſhew you things to come. Which laſt words are

A fourth argument that he is God. As the Spirit teacheth, ſo he foretelleth all things (1 Tim. 4. 1.) Now the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing Spirits and doctrines of Devils. The Spirit of God clearly foreſeeth and infallibly foretelleth what ſhall be, before it it is, therefore he is God. The Lord by his holy Prophet (Iſa. 41. 23.) challengeth all the falſe Idol gods of the Heathen to give that proof of their Divinity; Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are Gods. As if he had ſaid, do that and we will yield the cauſe. Men and Devils may gheſs at, but none can indeed ſhew things to come but God.

Fifthly, The Spirit appoints to himſelf Officers and Miniſters in the Church, therefore he is God, (Acts 13. 2.) The holy Ghoſt ſaid, ſeparate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

Sixthly, The holy Ghoſt furniſheth thoſe Officers whom he calleth with power and gifts, as he pleaſeth, that they may be fit for the work or miniſtry of the Goſpel (1 Cor. 12. 8, 11.) To one is given by the Spirit, the word of wiſdom, to another the word of knowledg by the ſame Spirit, &c. But all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every man ſeverally as he will. Now, who can give wiſdom and knowledg, who can give them prerogatively, following in this diſtribution, or diviſion of gifts, no rule, nor giving any other reaſon of it but his own will, except God only?

Seventhly, The holy Ghoſt is ſinned againſt; therefore he is God. Some, poſſibly may object and ſay, this is not a convincing or demonſtrative argument, that the holy Ghoſt is God, becauſe he is ſinned againſt; for man may ſin againſt man. All ſecond table ſins are ſins againſt our Neighbour; and the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians (1 Eph. 8. 12.) that while they uſed their lawful liberty in eating with offence, they ſinned againſt the Brethren. I anſwer, whoſoever is properly ſinned againſt is God, becauſe God is the Law giver. And, though many actions of men are direct wrongs to man, yet in every wrong done to man, God alſo is wronged, and, in ſtrict ſence, he only is ſinned againſt by man. For the reaſon why any action is a wrong to man, is becauſe it is againſt ſome Law of God. And if to be ſinned ſinned againſt in ſtrict ſence, be proper to God only; then the argument ſtands good, that the holy Spirit is God, becauſe he is ſinned againſt; eſpecially, if we conſider, that there is ſuch an Emphaſis put upon ſinning againſt the holy Ghoſt in the holy Scripture (more if poſſible then upon ſinning againſt the Father, or the Son) (Matth. 12. 31.) Wherefore, I ſay unto you (ſaith Chriſt) All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men, but the blaſphemy againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto men; As if he had ſaid, Though you ſin againſt the Father, and the Son, it ſhall be forgiven you, but if you ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt it ſhall not be forgiven either in this World or in the World to come; that is, it ſhall never be forgiven. Seeing then there is more in ſinning againſt the holy Ghoſt then againſt the Father, or the Son, who are God, the holy Ghoſt muſt needs be God. For though there is no degree or gradual difference in the deity, each perſon being coeternal, coequal, and conſubſtantial; yet the Scripture attributes more in that caſe, as to the point of ſinning againſt the holy Ghoſt, then to ſinning againſt the Father, or the Son; therefore certainly the holy Ghoſt is God.

Laſtly, The holy Ghoſt is the object of divine worſhip; are not we baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt? Is the Father, and the Son God, and the holy Ghoſt not God, who is joined with them in the ſame honour? Shall a Creature come in competition with God? And doth not the Scripture or word of God, direct us to pray for grace from the Spirit as well as from the Father or the Son? (2 Cor. 13. 13. Rev. 1. 4.) Thus we ſee how full the Scripture is in giving the glory of the ſame works upon us, and of the ſame worſhip from us to the Spirit, as to the Father and the Son: And therefore from all theſe premiſes we may conclude, that the holy Ghoſt with the Father and the Son, is God bleſſed and to be glorified for evermore. The Spirit of God hath made me,

And the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

נשמה Spiritus ex ore egrediens, halitus, flatus, anima, proprie ſignificat halitum, per metonymiam effecti, animam; per ſynecdochen membri animal. Piſc. in Deut. 10. 16.

The words carry an alluſion (as Interpreters generally agree) to that of Moſes deſcribing the Creation of man (Gen. 2. 7.) And the Lord God formed man out of the duſt of the Earth, and breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life, and man became a living Soul. Elihu ſpeaks near in the ſame form, fully to the ſame effect; The breath of the Almighty hath given me life, or, enlivened me; As if he had ſaid, That Soul which the Lord hath breathed into me, hath made me live. The Soul of man may be called the breath of the Almighty, becauſe the Almighty is expreſſed infuſing it into man at firſt by breathing. And therefore the word Neſhamah, which properly ſignifies the breath, doth alſo by a Metonymie of the effect ſignifie the Soul it ſelf which cauſeth breathing. Thus our tranſlaters render it (Iſa. 57. 16.) I (ſaith the Lord) will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth, for the Spirit ſhould fail before me, and the Souls which I have made. As the Soul of man was breathed in by God, ſo the Soul is that by which man breaths. Breath and Soul come and go together. Some comparing the Original word (Shamaiim) for the Heavens, with this word (Neſhamah) which here we tranſlate breath, take notice of their near affinity, intimating that the Soul of man is of a Heavenly pedegree, or comes from Heaven; yea the latine word (mens) ſignifying the mind, is of the ſame conſonant letters with the Hebrew Neſhamah, and, as ſome conceive, is derived from it.

So then, I take theſe words, The breath of the Almighty, as a deſcription of that part of man which is oppoſed to his dody; The Spirit of God hath made me; that is, hath ſet me up as a man, in humane ſhape, And the breath of the Almighty hath given me life; that is, this Soul which the Almighty hath breathed into me, hath made me a living man, ready for any humane act, or (as Moſes ſpeaks) God breathing into my noſtrils the breath of life, I became a living Soul.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The Soul of man floweth immediately from God.

'Tis the breath of God; not that God liveth by breathing; the way of his life is infinitely above our apprehenſion; but 'tis clear in Scripture, that the Almighty breathed into man the powers of life. And therefore he is called (by way of Eminence) The father of Spirits, (Heb. 12. 9.) For though the Almighty is rightly entituled the Father of the whole man, though both Body and Soul are the work of God, yet he is in a further ſence, the father of our Spirits, or Souls, then of our Bodies. And here Solomon ſhewing how man is diſpoſed of when theſe two are ſeparated by death, ſaith (Eccleſ. 12. 7.) Then ſhall the duſt (that is, the Body) return to the Earth as it was, and the Spirit (that is, the Soul) ſhall return to God who gave it, The Body is the gift of God, but the Body is not the breath of God, it is not ſuch an immediate gift of God as the Soul is; when the Body of man was made at firſt, God took the duſt of the Earth and formed his Body out of it, but when he gave him a Soul, he breathed that from himſelf; it was an immediate effect of Gods power, not dealing with, nor working upon any præ-exiſting matter. The Spirit or Soul of man is purely of God, ſolely of God. And hence we may infer.

Firſt, Then the Soul is not a vapour, ariſing from the craſis or temperament of the Body, as the life of a Beaſt is.

Secondly, Then the Soul of man is not traduced from the parents in generation, as many learned men affirm, eſpecially, to eaſe themſelves of thoſe difficulties about the conveyance of Original ſin or defilement into the Soul.

Thirdly, We may hence alſo infer, then the Soul is not corruptible; it is an immortal ſubſtance. How can that be corruptible or mortal, which hath its riſe (as I may ſay) immediately from God, or is breathed in by the Almighty, who is altogether incorruptible and immortal. And whereas there is a twofold incorruptibility; firſt, by divine ordination, that is, God appoints ſuch a thing ſhall not corrupt, and therefore it doth not; ſo the Body of man in it's firſt Creation was incorruptible, ſorthough it were in it ſelf corruptible, being made out of the Earth, yet by the appointment of God, if man had continued in his integrity he had not died. And therefore it is ſaid, By ſin came death; yea doubtleſs if God ſhould command and appoint the meaneſt worm that moves upon the Earth to live for ever, or the moſt fading flower that groweth out of the Earth to flouriſh for ever, both the one and the other would do ſo. Secondly, there is an incorruptibility in ſome things, not merely by a Law or ap- appointment of God, but as from that intrinſecal nature, which God hath beſtowed upon them, and implanted in them. Thus the Angels are immortal, they have an incorruptible nature, and likewiſe the Soul of man, being breathed from the Almighty, is in it's own nature incorruptible; it hath naturally no ſeeds of diſſolution in it, becauſe no contrariety, no contrary qualities in it, as all Bodies or corporeal ſubſtances have. I know the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 16.) God only hath immortality; it's true, he only hath it in himſelf independently, originally, but he derives and gives it as a talent to ſome Creatures in a way of dependance upon himſelf.

Secondly, Obſerve, The Soul brings in the life of the Body, the life of man.

What is the Body without the Soul, but a lump of clay; as ſoon as ever the Soul departs, life departs, man dieth and becomes a putrifying Carkaſs; yet ſuch is the folly of moſt men, that all their care is for the life of the Body, which is (at beſt) a dying life, they utterly neglect the Soul, which, as it is the life of the Body, ſo it ſelf never dieth. The Soul is the Jewel, the Body is but the Cabinet, the Soul is the Kernel, the Body is but the Shell. Will you be ſolicitous, about a Cabinet, and a Shell, and ſlight the Jewel, or throw away the Kernel? Will you take care of that which liveth, the Body, and will you not take care of that which holds your life, the Soul? Again,

Note, Life is the gift of God.

If the Soul which is the cauſe of life in man, be of God, then the life of man is of God alſo. The cauſe of the cauſe is the cauſe of the effect or thing cauſed. But we need not argue it from Logick rules, Scripture teſtimony being ſo abundant in this thing. (Acts 17. 25.) He giveth to all, life and breath, and all things. And (v. 28.) In him we live and move and have our being. Spiritual and eternal life, are the gift of God, ſo alſo is natural life. And if ſo, Then

Firſt, Live to God; Secondly, ſeeing God gives us life, we ſhould be willing to give up our lives to God. Yea

Thirdly, we ſhould therefore be ready to give up, or rather to lay down our lives for God. And as we ſhould give up our lives to God when he calls for them by natural death, ſo we ſhould give up our lives for God, when he calls us to bear witneſs to his name and truth by violent death.

I ſhall yet take notice of one thing further, before I paſs from this verſe; The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

Some, upon good grounds, refer the firſt clauſe; The Spirit of God hath made me, to the Creation both of Soul and Body; and the ſecond or latter clauſe, the breath of the Almighty hath given me life, to that quickning which we receive by the Spirit to the duties whereinto we are called in this life. The breath of the Almighty hath given me life; that is, hath fitted and prepared me for the ſeveral offices and ſervices of life. As if Elihu had ſaid, The Spirit of God hath not only made me a man, but a man for work, yea the Spirit of God hath quickned me to the preſent work and buſineſs I am come about. Thus, life imports not only ſpiritual life in the being of it, but all the furniture, ornaments, and abilities of a ſpiritual life, The Septuagint render this profeſſion made by Elihu expreſly, to this ſence, holding out a ſtrong aſſurance which Elihu had, that God had both called and prepared him for the ſervice he was come about and ingaged in. The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath inſtructed me. Another of the Greek Interpreters ſpeaks as much; I am not ignorant, that of my ſelf I am able to do nothing, but I have received this power from God; As if Elihu had ſaid, The Spirit of the Almighty hath quickned me to this work I am now upon, and taught me what both to ſay and do in thy caſe, O Job.

Πνοὴ δὲ παντοκράτορος ἡ διδάσκουσά με. Spiratio omnipotentis eſt quæ docet me. Sept. Haud me latet non à meipſo, ſed à Deo hunc prudentiæ ſenſum me accepiſſe. Nicet.

Hence Note, God giveth not only the life of nature unto men, but he fits them for all the duties, and ſervices of this life.

We, indeed, are ſcarcely to be reckoned among the living, if we have no more but a natural life; what is it to be able to eat and drink, to hear, and ſee, and ſpeak? unleſs we have more then this, we deſerve not to be numbered or written among the living; we are upon the matter, but dead lumps, and clods of clay. It is the breath of the Almighty that quickens us and ſuperadds ability to do good, that frames, faſhions, and fits us for every good word, and work; This is the life of man; when a man is fitted for duty, and ſervice, when he is furniſhed for imployment, to ſtand God, and his Brethren in ſome ſtead while he is in this World, then he lives. The motions, impulſes and influences, the teachings and guidings of the Spirit of God, are the life of our lives. We can do nothing of our ſelves, till the Almighty beſtows a new life upon us, and as we can do nothing at all in ſpirituals, till he gives us a new life, ſo we can do nothing to purpoſe till the Spirit acts and ſtirs up that life in us. It is the Spirit who firſt beſtows; ſecondly, increaſeth; thirdly, excites our ſpiritual life, and puts the new Creature into motion. All our good thoughts and holy actings, all our uprightneſs and ſincerity, all our ſtrength and ability flow from the Spirit; until the holy Spirit works in us, we ſit ſtill; and when the Spirit worketh, we muſt not ſit ſtill; I (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 15. 18.) will not dare to ſpeak of any of thoſe things, which Chriſt hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient by word, and deed; As if he had ſaid, My own works are not worth the naming, I will not ſo much as mention any thing that Chriſt hath not wrought in me by the Spirit; That was a mighty work which he was enabled to do, to make the Gentiles obedient in word, and deed. Chriſt did not leave him to do it in his own power. The breath of the Almighty enabled him; and ſo he doth all thoſe that are able and willing, ready for and ſucceſsful in any ſuch holy work.

Let us therefore aſcribe all to his working and quickening; let us ſet down our ſeveral Items of receit in our account-books, confeſſing that we have nothing of our own. This gift, that grace, that ability to do, to ſpeak, to ſuffer, to act, we have received from him. Let the whole Inventory of our Souls riches, have God's name written upon it, and aſcribed to his praiſe alone. And if we thus uncloth our ſelves, by giving God the glory of all, we ſhall loſe nothing by it, for God will apparel and furniſh us, deck and adorn us better every day. The poorer we are in our ſelves, the richer will he make us. To be thus diminiſh't is the beſt way to our increaſe. 'Tis the breath of the Almighty that teacheth us, and if we can but humbly enough, that is, heartily acknowledge it, we ſhall be taught and learn enough.

So much of theſe words as they are a direct aſſertion. I ſhall conſider them a little in their connection, and reference both to what went before, and to that which follows after; which was the ſecond conſideration of this verſe at firſt propoſed,

Firſt, This verſe may be connected with the three former verſes, and then the ſence appeareth thus; As if Elihu had ſaid, O Job, I have moved thee to hear me patiently, and attentively, and let it not ſeem grievous to thee to do ſo; for, though I am thy inferiour in age, and degree, yet I am a man as well as thou, and I have a Soul and Body like thine, yea the Spirit of God that made me, hath alſo furniſhed me; I have received ability from God as thou haſt, I ſtand upon even ground, or equal terms with thee, as to Creation, and I am not altogether void of inſtruction; and therefore as a man I have a poſſibility to underſtand reaſon; and as a man indowed by the Spirit of God, I have a capability to direct thee about the ways of God, or how to underſtand and comport with his providences towards thee. Thou haſt been long under the hand of God, and long in the hands of men, who have rather intangled and troubled thy mind then eaſed it; who knows but that I, who all this while have been but a looker on, may ſee ſomewhat in thy caſe, which hath hitherto been hid from thy former undertakers? Therefore pray favour me (it may prove in the iſſue a favour to thy ſelf) with an hour or two of patient attention. Take this note from it;

> The conſideration of our common original, that we have all one maker, or are all come out of the hand of God, ſhould make us willing to hear, and learn of one another.

Thus Elihu argueth; Hear me; why? Becauſe the Spirit of God hath made me, as well as thee; do not deſpiſe what I have to ſay, as if you were a man of another mould, or pedigree, the ſame God, out of the ſame matter, by the ſame Word, and Spirit, hath form'd us both. Some pictures are more highly prized then others of the ſame perſon, becauſe drawn by a better hand, by an Apelles, or a Michael Angelo. The fame of the Artiſt or workman puts a value upon the work; and the title of the Author doth ſometimes commend a piece more then, in truth, either the form or matter. But come among the Sons of men, all their faces and features are drawn by one hand; the ſame moſt exact hand of God hath wrought and faſhioned them all; both as to their outſide, and inſide, both as to the former of theſe Houſes of Clay, and as to all the ornaments and beautifyings of them. As we all walk upon the ſame Earth, drink out of the ſame Water, breath in the ſame Air; as we are all covered with the ſame Canopy of Heaven, and lighted with the ſame Sun, ſo we are all made with the ſame hand; the Spirit of God hath made one as well as another; this man hath not had a better pencil nor a more ſkilful Limner then that. Thus we may argue from the common condition of man in Nature, to a mutual condeſcenſion among men. Indeed Chriſtians, who have higher principles, have alſo higher topicks and arguments then that, why they ſhould condeſcend one to another; and (as the Apoſtle directs, Eph, 4. 4, 5, 6.) Keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Saints ſhould be lowly and meek with long-ſuffering, forbearing one another in love, (as the Apoſtle there exhorts) not only becauſe one hand hath made all their Bodies, but becauſe they are one Body; though they are many natural Bodies, yet one myſtical Body; There is no Body, and one Spirit; as one Spirit hath made them, ſo they are made one Spirit; There is alſo (as it followeth) one Hope, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptiſm, one God, and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. How ſhould all Saints be one, who are comprehended and united under this ſeven-fold oneneſs? That we have all one maker in Nature, is a very moving argument to meekneſs, love, and unity, but that all believers are made one by Grace, is a much more moving argument.

Again, we may conſider theſe words in connection with the three following verſes, and then, as in connection with the former, they are a prevention of Job's pride, ſo in this, they are a prevention of his fear, or an incouragement of him to a chearful hearing of what Elihu had to ſay. Job had been dealt ſeverely with by his three friends, and the terror of God was upon him, he was under much deſpondency of Spirit. Now (ſaith Elihu) Anſwer me if thou canſt, ſtand up, ſet thy words in order before me, for the Spirit of God hath made me, and given me life; I am a Creature, and I am but a Creature, I am no more then thou art, I am made of God, and thou art made of God as well as I, I was made out of the duſt, as thou art; I am not God to terrifie thee, but I am ſent of God, to counſel and comfort thee, my hand ſhall not be heavy upon thee, I promiſe to deal tenderly with thee, I am ſuch a one as thy ſelf, as I am not worſe, ſo I am not better, we ſtand alike together in this diſpute; therefore thou mayeſt freely come forth, and anſwer me, who am but a poor Creature, as thy ſelf is. Thus Elihu beſpeaks Job in the ſixth and ſeventh verſes; If thou canſt anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me, ſtand up, Behold, I am according to thy wiſh. Speak freely, and clear thy ſelf, if thou art able, thou haſt free leave for me.

Verſe 5. If thou canſt anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me, ſtand up.

This verſe may have a four-fold reſpect.

Firſt, To the inſufficiency, or incompetency of Job's parts and intellectuals to deal with Elihu in this matter; as if they were a daring challenge, anſwer me if thou canſt, do thy worſt. And hence ſome of the Ancients charge Elihu, as if he came upon Job boaſtingly, and ſpake thus in the pride of his own Spirit, and in the diſdain of Job, at once to ſhew and ſlight his weakneſs, If thou canſt anſwer me. As if (like ſome irrefragable Doctor) he had ſaid; I ſhall ſpeak ſuch reaſon, as I know thou canſt not anſwer: do what thou canſt, ſet all thy wits awork, and beat thy brains as much as thou wilt, thou wilt but loſe thy labour, and weary thy ſelf in vain. Thus the meaning of, Anſwer me if thou canſt, is, Thou canſt not anſwer. But I ſuppoſe Elihu, (though hot ſpirited enough) was yet of a better Spirit and temper then to ſpeak either thus proudly of himſelf, or deſpiſingly of ſo worthy a man as he had before him; nor did Elihu look upon Job as ſuch a puny to him, or ſo much his underling as that he durſt not hold up the Bucklers in diſpute againſt him. Elihu knew Job was an old experienced Souldier, well verſ'd in the ways and things of God. And therefore

Secondly, (If thou canſt) may rather refer to the weakneſs and ſoreneſs of Job's body, to the wounds or troubles which he had received and felt from the Almighty in his Spirit, then to any inability of his mind for argument. As if Elihu had ſaid; I conſider how it is with thee, thou art a man diſeaſed and diſtempered in thy Body, fitter to lie upon or keep thy bed, then to ſtand up to a diſpute, fitter for a Hoſpital then for the Schools. Thou alſo haſt a troubled and an afflicted Spirit, I doubt thou art not in caſe to anſwer me, or to ſtand up longer in a way of diſpute; but thus I ſay, if thou canſt anſwer me, pray do: Set thy words in order before me. I will not lay this burden upon thee, unleſs thou art willing to take it, unleſs thou findeſt thou haſt ſtrength and ſpirit to bear and carry it through. Anſwer me if thou canſt, otherwiſe I will ſpeak my thoughts out, and make what uſe of it thou pleaſeſt.

Thirdly, I conceive Elihu might here intend to let Job underſtand, that he was reſolved to put him to the utmoſt, that he was reſolved to bring the ſtrongeſt arguments, and uſe the quickeſt way of reaſoning for his conviction that he could; and that therefore he alſo adviſeth Job to do the like, to do his beſt, to buckle himſelf to the buſineſs with all his might, for he was not come to dally with him: He would have him ſet his ſhoulders to the work, and gather all the forces of his Soul to the battail, he bids him bring forth even his Horſemen for his defence (as I may ſpeak in alluſion to that in the 12. of Jeremy; If thou haſt run with footmen, and they have wearied thee, how ſhalt thou contend with horſes?) Elihu was purpoſed and reſolved to bring out his greateſt ſtrength, his horſemen to the battail, and therefore wiſheth Job do ſo too. Thus he gives him fair warning, If thou canſt, anſwer me; do thy utmoſt, I am ready for thee.

Fourthly, While Elihu ſaith, If thou canſt, anſwer me, ſet thy words in order before me, ſtand up. We may take his words as a gentle and ſweet invitation to the work; as if he had ſaid, If thou haſt ſpirits enough left to hold diſcourſe with me, or to reply upon me, come friend, ſpare me not, ſet thy words in order before me, I will not be a terror to thee. Or there may be this condeſcending ſence in theſe words of Elihu; Do not think (O Job) becauſe I begin to ſpeak, that therefore I mean to ſpeak all, or to have all the diſcourſe my ſelf; aſſure thy ſelf, I have no purpoſe to hinder thee in any defence which thou art able to make for thy ſelf: No, though I am come with my beſt preparations to urge thee, and reply upon thee, as to all that hath paſt between thee and thy friends, yet I am as willing that thou ſhouldeſt anſwer, as I am ready prepared, and preſt to ſpeak; thou haſt free leave to make thy Apology, to ſay what thou canſt for thy ſelf, I intend not to impoſe upon thee, nor by any authority to compel thee to ſtand to my ſentence, as if I were thy Maſter, or would Lord it over thee; Do and ſpeak thy beſt for thy own vindication, I am ready to receive it from thee, and give thee a fair account of my thoughts about it. If thou canſt, anſwer me,

Set thy words in order before me.

'Tis a metaphorical ſpeech, often and moſt properly uſed for the marſhalling of an Army; and ſo is elegantly apply'ed here in this matter of controverſie, or polemical diſcourſe. Set thy words, thy reaſons, thy arguments, as it were in battail aray againſt me; we had the word in the former Chapter at verſe 14. It is applyed alſo to the exactneſs of the heart in prayer, not an affected exactneſs or curioſity about words, or to word it with God, but it notes exactneſs or ſpiritualneſs rather in meditating and diſpoſing the ſtrongeſt Scripture reaſonings, to prevail with God in prayer. Prayer is, as it were, a battail fought in Heaven, not in wrath or revenge, but with faith and holy ſubmiſſion. Thus did Jacob when he wraſtled with the Angel, (Gen. 32.) And thus David ſpeaks (Pſal. 5. 3.) In the morning I will direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up, or, I will marſhall my prayer, I will bring up petition after petition, pleading after pleading, even till I am become like Jacob a Prince with God, till I have won the field, and got the day. Thus the word is applyed by a metaphor both to diſputations with men, and ſupplications to God. Further, we may take the meaning plainly without any ſtrain of the rhetorique, Set thy words in order before me. Method is good in every thing, either an expreſs or a covert method. Sometimes 'tis the beſt of art to cover it; in ſpeaking there is a ſpecial uſe of method; for, though, as one ſaid very well (ſpeaking of thoſe who are more curious about method, then ſerious about matter) Method never converted any man; yet method and the ordering of words, is very uſeful. Our ſpeeches ſhould not be heaps of words, but words bound up, not a throng of words, but words ſet in aray, or, as it were, in rank and file. The Prophet (Joel 2. 5.) deſcribes a terrible Judgment of God by a ſtrong people ſet in battail aray. In purſuance of which ſence, Mr. Broughton renders the next words, not (as we) ſtand up, but ſtand to it, as Commanders ſay to their Souldiers, ſtand to it; and the Italian tranſlation thus; Set thy words in order before me, preſent thy ſelf to the Combate. Thus he continues the metaphor; as if he had ſaid; Chuſe thy ground, and maintain it like a valiant Champion; I do not deſire thou ſhouldſt yield me an inch of ground, yield to nothing but the truth, diſpute every patch with me, ſtand up, ſtand to it; ſtand as if thou wert to fight a battail, not only for thy honour, but for thy life. The Apoſtle (1 Cor 16. 13.) ſpeaks in that language about our ſpiritual War; Watch ye, ſtand faſt, quit your ſelves like men; man it, be ſtrong. There is ſuch a ſence in Elihu's exhortation here to Job; Set thy words in order before me, ſtand up.

Sta quaſi in acie, ad pugnandum contra me & convincendum me rationibus. Druſ.
'Ανδρίζεσθε viriliter agite.

Now, in that Elihu when he was thus bent to ſpeak, and was ſo full of matter to ſpeak, that as he tells us in the former Chapter, He was like bottles of wine, and that he could not hold, yet gave Job fair law, and bids him anſwer, if he could.

Note Firſt, In all matters of difference we ſhould be as willing to hear what others can anſwer, as we are deſirous that others ſhould hear what we can object.

If thou canſt, anſwer me. It is good to ſpeak in a right cauſe, eſpecially to ſpeak rightly, and it is very good to learn what can be anſwered.

Note Secondly, Elihu looking upon Job as a man in a weak condition, ſpeaks incouragingly, ſtand up; as much as to ſay, Take heart.

It is our duty to refreſh thoſe that are troubled, or to comfort thoſe that are weak, whether in body or in mind.

We ſhould do our beſt to put ſtrength and infuſe ſpirits into ſinking hearts and fainting ſpirits. Thus God dwells (Iſa. 57. 51. and ſo ſhould we) with him that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit, to revive the ſpirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

Thirdly, As theſe words, If thou canſt, anſwer me, import that as Elihu intended to put Job to the utmoſt, ſo he would have Job beſtir himſelf to the utmoſt.

Hence Note, Every man ſhould do his beſt for the clearing or maintaining a good and righteous cauſe.

'Tis ſinful to be ſlight in matters of moment. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all my might (ſaith Solomon, Eccleſ. 9. 10.) we ſhould eſpecially do theſe two things with all our might; firſt, maintain the truth of God; ſecondly, our own integrity. The former of theſe was chiefly upon the hand of Elihu in this undertaking, the latter upon the hand of Job. To betray the truth of God, is the worſt kind both of cowardiſe and treachery; and to betray our own integrity is next to that. There is nothing more unworthy a man, much more a Chriſtian, then to leave either truth, or our own integrity to ſink or ſwim, to ſhift for themſelves. Thus Elihu provokes Job to the combate, and ſends him a friendly challenge, which leſt he ſhould refuſe or not accept, he gives him a comfortable account (as a cordial) what manner of man he ſhould find him to be, even a man moulded and modell'd to his own heart, or minted to his mind, as will appear in the next verſe.

Verſe 6. Behold, I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead.

Here we have a very winning argument (as was ſhewed in opening the whole Context) to incourage Job both to hear and anſwer. If ever a man will ſpeak when he comes to a buſineſs, it is when things and perſons are according to his wiſh. Job had oftentimes wiſht that he might be mildly heard by God, and not ſo harſhly dealt with by man; his friends having been ſo over-ſevere and rigorous toward him, that he was even compelled in the bitterneſs of his Soul, to cry out, He that is afflicted, ſhould have pitty from his friends. Yea, when Job wiſht to be heard by God, he, with much earneſtneſs deprecated his ſeverity, (Chap. 9. 34. and Chap. 13. 24.) Let not thy dread make me afraid. Thus, Job had wiſht for a mild and gentle treatment from all hands. In anſwer to which deſire Elihu preſents himſelf to him.

Behold, I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead.

Thoſe words (according to thy wiſh) may have a twofold interpretation, firſt, as we render, according to thy wiſh, is, according to what thou haſt heretofore ſpoken or drawn out in wiſhes; thou haſt thy vote, thy wiſh, and what wouldſt thou have more? As if he had ſaid; O Job, I have heard the wiſhing ſuch wiſhes, that thou mighteſt be more tenderly handled; that God not oppreſs thee with his Majeſty, nor thy friends with their ſeverity. Now thou haſt thy deſire, and I do here promiſe my ſelf ſuch a one to thee as thou haſt deſired; for as I will be a faithful advocate for God, ſo, I, who am in Gods ſtead, will not (as thou haſt prayed God would not at the hearing of thy caſe) be terrible nor dreadful to thee; I doubt not but to carry the matter with thee to thy hearts content. I am according to thy wiſh.

Hence Note, We ſhould labour as much as in us lieth to anſwer the deſires and wiſhes of others in all things lawful, eſpecially when they are weak and labouring under ſore burthens of affliction and infirmity.

It is not good to be croſs-grain'd at any time to our brethren, much leſs at ſuch a time; ſome love (as it were) to lie thwart in every buſineſs, nor is any thing more deſireable to them, then to oppoſe another mans deſire. The ſweetneſs and ingenuity of theſe words, I am according to your wiſh, in what I ſafely may, is ſeldom heard among brethren. Some indeed are too forward to be according to the wiſh of others in things that are ſinful. When Thieves and Murderers ſay to them, Come, come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cauſe, &c. Caſt in your lot among us, let us all have one purſe, They ſay, we are according to your wiſh, we will go with you. When the prophane ſay, come run with us into all exceſs of riot, to drunkenneſs and uncleaneſs, they anſwer, we are according to your wiſh, we are for you. It is good to lie croſs to the ſinful deſires of men; but to comply with their honeſt deſires, and to anſwer every good wiſh of their Souls, is a great part of our goodneſs, and of our fulfilling the Law of love: We ſhould ſtrive in that ſence, to fall in with every ones wiſh, and to become all things to all men, both for their edification and conſolation. Behold, I am according to thy wiſh.

Secondly, Theſe words are rendred ſtrictly out of the Original thus, I am according to thy mouth, or meaſure; I am in the ſame condition and ſtate as thou art. Thus alſo they are words of incouragement to Job, aſſuring him that he ſhould not be overpower'd, nor born down by force. This form of ſpeaking is uſed frequently in Scripture, to note the ſutableneſs or proportion of things. The Iſraelites (Exod. 16. 21.) gathered Manna every morning, Every man according to his eating. The Hebrew is, Every one did gather to the mouth of his eating, that is, according to the meaſure of his eating, ſuch was the meaſure of his gathering. The Nazarite was to offer according to the vow which he vowed (Numb. 6. 21.) The Hebrew is, according to the mouth of his vow. Again 'tis ſaid (Numb. 7. 5.) Moſes was to give the offerings of the Princes of Iſrael to the Levites, to every man according to his ſervice, or, according to the mouth (that is, the condition and degree) of his ſervice. Once more, Solomon (Prov. 12. 6.) preſſing the good and genuine education of Children, expreſſeth it thus; Train up a Child in the way that he ſhould go; the Original upon the mouth of his way; that is, in ſuch a way as is not only good and honeſt in it ſelf, but moſt proper and congenial to the Spirit, diſpoſition, and capacity of the Child. As Children are to be fed with ſuch meats, ſo to be taught in ſuch a manner as they can moſt eaſily and profitably digeſt. After this manner, or to this ſence, Elihu ſpeaks to Job, Stand up, I am according to thy mouth or meaſure; as if he had ſaid; God indeed is infinitely above thy meaſure, but I, who am come to deal with thee in Gods ſtead, am according to thy mouth or meaſure, therefore take courage; one man is like another, the meaſure of one man is the meaſure of another. There are I grant ſeveral differences among men, both as to civils and ſpirituals; there are ſeveral gradual and perſonal differences, but no ſpecifical difference among men; every man is according to the mouth or meaſure of any other man: In that God only tranſcends the meaſure of all men; My thoughts are not as your thoughts, nor my ways as your ways; but look as the Heavens are high above the Earth, ſo my thoughts are above your thoughts, and my ways above your ways, ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 55. 8, 9.) But the ways of one man are like the ways of other men, and the thoughts of one man are like the thoughts of other men; there is no ſuch tranſcendency among men; they are all (as men) of one meaſure, that is, not only finite, but they are all ſhort and narrow, even they who carry the greateſt length and breadth among the ſons of men. If we conſider man with man, as to his ſinful condition, ſo one man is perfectly like another; one man is of the ſame meaſure with another; as Solomon expreſſeth it (Prov. 27. 19.) As in water face anſwers face, ſo the heart of man to man. If man look down into the water, that face which he ſeeth in the water is like that face which ſeeth the water. Thus the hearts of the Children of men anſwer one another, heart anſwers heart, as face anſwers face: And as man anſwers man fully, as to natural ſinfulneſs, ſo moſtly as to natural abilities, as for thoſe which are acquired, though the difference may be ſo great that one man may be clearly diſcerned to excel another, yet that man who excels moſt, doth not exceed man; and therefore may be compaſſed by man. It is ſaid (Rev. 21.

(Rev. 21. 17.) That the wall of the new Jeruſalem was meaſured according to the meaſure of a man, that is, of the Angel. There is one meaſure of an Angel, and there is another meaſure of a man; Angels have a meaſure above men; why then doth he ſay according to the meaſure of a man, that is, of the Angel? I anſwer, he ſpeaks ſo becauſe the Angel appeared in the ſhape of a man, to do that work. Now as the meaſure (that is, the Ability) of an Angel is above mans; So God hath a meaſure infinitely above both men and Angels. But men are of a meaſure. I am according to thy mouth or meaſure.

Hence Note, Firſt, Man and man are of a meaſure.

Let us not make a God of any man, no nor an Angel. The Apoſtle Jude reproves thoſe who had the perſons of men in admiration. Men will be leſs to us then was expected, if we expect too much from them, or more from them, then is meet. For though one man may have a little more height and largeneſs of parts and gifts, in that which is either acquired or infuſed, then his neighbour, yet what man is there in the world, but hath his match, and ſhall find his meaſure in ſome other men? Yea, though ſome men exceedingly out-go others, yet their equals may be found among men, no man out-goes all men. The beſt of men have but the meaſure of a man.

Secondly, Take this Caution from it; Let no man make a God of himſelf, or look upon himſelf as if he were in his meaſure beyond all other men. We are very apt to do ſo. And if we have but little more then ſome others, we are ready to think we have more then all others, or to look upon our ſelves as if we tranſcended the meaſure of mankind, and ſo ſwell preſently with pride and ſelf-conceit; then which nothing is more uncomely or unmanly. Not a few eſteem themſelves ſo unparallel'd in the parts and beauty of their bodies, that they deſpiſe others, and many do it in reference to the endowments and abilities of their minds; they have ſuch a quickneſs of underſtanding, ſuch a ſtrength of memory, ſuch a fluency of ſpeech, ſuch a depth of reaſon, ſuch power of arguing, as they ſuppoſe none can match them or meaſure with them. All ſuch have forgotten that they are but men. Therefore as no man ſhould admire another ſo let him not think highly of himſelf, let him rather think that though poſſibly there are ſome below him, yet there may be many, yea a great many more above him, and enow that are upon the ſame level with him. I am according to thy wiſh or meaſure, ſaith Elihu,

In Gods ſtead.] But how came Elihu to be in Gods ſtead? Had he a Commiſſion from God to undertake Job? Was he, as I may ſay, Gods Delegate or Ambaſſador? Did God ſend him out upon this errand? If not, why did he take ſo much to himſelf, as to ſay, I am according to thy wiſh in Gods ſtead?

I cannot ſay, that Elihu had any formal Commiſſion to come out, and appear in Gods ſtead, as an Atturny appears in ſtead of his Client, or as an Ambaſſador in the ſtead of his Prince; but doubtleſs Elihu had an equivalent or virtual Commiſſion, even a mighty impreſſion upon his ſpirit, by the Spirit of God to do ſo; his heart was drawn out ſecretly, but ſtrongly to ſtand up and undertake for God, towards the determination of this long continued diſpute. I am (ſaith he) in Gods ſtead or place; in that place which if God himſelf ſhould ſupply, he would be a dread and a terror to thee. But I a man of like paſſions as thy ſelf, and being here in Gods behalf, and by his authority, in his name and for his glory to ſpeak unto thee, I ſhall yet ſpeak according to the meaſure of a man, and therefore, thou needeſt not fear that my terror ſhould make thee afraid, I am in Gods ſtead.

Hence Note, They who ſpeak to others about the things of God, ſhould ſpeak as God, or as put in Gods place and ſtead.

'Tis enough to make all the Miniſters of Chriſt tremble and cry out in the Apoſtles words, Who is ſufficient for theſe things? To remember that when they ſpeak to men, they ſpeak in Gods ſtead. We (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. 20.) are Ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us, we pray you in Chriſts ſtead, be ye reconciled to God. Thus ſpake he who had indeed an immediate call and commiſſion from God; and they who have not ſuch an immediate call and commiſſion as he had, yet ſpeaking of or about the things of God; and coming in the name of God, they ſhould ſpeak as placed in Gods ſtead. And if the Miniſters of Chriſt ought to ſpeak as in Gods ſtead, then ſurely they that hear, ſhould hear them a ſpeaking in Gods ſtead. The Apoſtle teſtifies of the Galathians (Gal. 4. 14.) My temptation which was in my fleſh ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected, but received me as an Angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus. Ye received me not only as an Angel or Meſſenger of Chriſt, but as if Chriſt had been there in perſon, ſo did ye receive me. He gives the ſame teſtimony of the Theſſalonians (1 Theſ. 2 13.) For this cauſe alſo thank we God without ceaſing, becauſe when ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of man, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe. I do not ſay, that what every man ſpeaketh about the things of God, is preſently to be taken for the Word of God, or as if God ſpake it. But if that be his ſcope and purpoſe, if that be his Theme and his buſineſs, if that be the ſubject matter and ſubſtance of his ſpeech, Then he (as to the body of his ſpeech) is to be lookt upon as uttering the word and mind of God in Gods ſtead. 'Tis a very great means to advance our profit in hearing the Word, when they who ſpeak it are lookt upon as ſpeaking in Gods ſtead, and not bringing an errand of their own.

Before I paſs from this firſt clauſe of the verſe, I ſhall briefly touch two other readings and interpretations of it.

Firſt, Thus; Behold, I am, as if thy mouth were to God; that is, thou needeſt not as thou haſt wiſhed to go or adreſs to God himſelf for the laying open of thy cauſe, the matter may be done between me and thee, even as if thou hadſt ſpoken to God himſelf.

Ecce ego quaſi eſſet os tuum ad deum. Coc.

Secondly, Some render thoſe latter words not in Gods ſtead as we, But, in reſpect of God. As if he had ſaid, In reſpect of God, I ſtand in the ſame proportion, or upon the ſame terms with thy ſelf, for he is the God of us both, nor did God make me of any better or more excellent matter then thou art made of; which he fully expreſſeth in the cloſe of the verſe, as it followeth,

I alſo am formed out of the Clay.

Theſe words are another argument (as was ſhewed when I gave the proſpect of the whole Context) why Job ſhould hear Elihu; I am in Gods ſtead indeed, but I am a poor creature, moulded out of the duſt, made up of earth, as thou art; I alſo am formed out of the Clay; therefore ſtand up, anſwer me, and fear not; anſwer me and ſpare not. The higheſt and holyeſt that ever diſpenſed the mind of God, in Gods ſtead, to his Church and people here on earth, were made of earth, and were formed out of Clay. The Apoſtle makes that humble confeſſion of himſelf and fellow-Apoſtles (2 Cor. 4. 6.) We have this treaſure in earthen Veſſels, that the excellency of the power might be of God. The weakneſs of the inſtrument lifts up the glory of the ſuperior agent. They who by commiſſion are the Miniſters of God, and ſo in Gods ſtead, are yet but as other men in their natural ſtructure and conſtitution. (Acts 10. 26.) when Cornelius gave too much reſpect, a kind of Adoration to Peter, he forbad him, ſaying, Stand up, I alſo am a man. As if he had ſaid with Elihu, I am formed out of the Clay as well as thee. There is a reſpect due to the perſons of men, and much more to the Meſſengers of God, yet too much may ſoon be given; I will none of that, ſaith Peter; I alſo am a man. So Paul and Barnabas (Acts 14. 15.) when the people were ſo heightned in their ignorant reſpects, that they would have ſacrificed to them, as Gods, They rent their cloaths (as in caſe of blaſphemy) and ran in among the people, crying out and ſaying, Sirs, why do ye theſe things? We alſo are men ſubject to like paſſions with you, &c.

I am alſo [formed] Or as the Hebrew ſignifies, Cut out of the Clay. As the Potter cuts off a rude lump of Clay from the whole maſs of Clay before him, to make a Veſſel of it; ſo man is cut out of that maſs of mankind; for though the birth and original of man is now by another way, then the firſt mans was, yet we may all look upon our ſelves as having the ſame original; we are cut out of the Clay, and formed out of the duſt.

Hence Note, For the matter all men have one original. I am formed out of the Clay.

I have heretofore met with this point, and therefore paſs it here.

Secondly, From the ſcope of Elihu, Note, The conſideration of our common condition ſhould fit us with compaſſion one to another; much more ſhould it keep us from inſulting over one another.

Elihu uſed this expreſſion, to aſſure Job that he would deal very tenderly with him; What, doſt thou think, that I who am a piece of clay will inſult over thee, who art as good a piece of clay as I? Why ſhould one earthen veſſel daſh hard upon another? When we are tempted to pride in our ſelves, let us remember that we are clay, when we are provoked to anger againſt our brethren, or to any harſh and rigorous dealing with them, let us remember that we alſo are clay, that our pedigree and our ſtock is from the duſt as well as others. If our feet be but a little fouled, we think our ſelves ſomewhat humbled by it, if but a little dirt ſtick to our ſhoes, or hang about our clothes, we are ſomewhat aſhamed of our ſelves, yet the truth is, we are all duſt, all clay, all mire, we are nothing as to our bodies, but a little living duſt and breathing clay, why then ſhould we be lifted up in high thoughts of our ſelves? I might hence alſo give a third Note; 'tis a common Theme, but of important uſefulneſs.

Man is a very frail creature, he is clay.

But having had occaſion to ſpeak to this alſo heretofore, I ſhall not ſtay upon it. Only conſider, that as man is clay, ſo he is returning to clay, yea, turning into clay. We are but a little well compacted and compounded duſt, and we ſhall ere long crumble into duſt. We are every day going back, and ſhall ſhortly be gone back to what at firſt we were. Theſe conſiderations ſhould wither and nip the buddings of ſelf confidence, and bring down the height of mans ſpirit; I alſo am formed out of the clay.

We may take notice of one thing farther, Elihu ſpeaking here of his own natural formation, gives it in this ſtile; I alſo am formed out of the clay. This is a peculiar Scripture-expreſſion, or the proper phraſe of the holy Ghoſt, not of a heathen Author, Poet, or Orator. They at beſt had only ſome rude notions about this myſtery of mans original, his formation by the power of God out of the earth. Which may inform us, that the Saints and people of God in thoſe elder and darker times, were familiarly acquainted with the doctrine of the creation, and knew well how to ſpeak in a Scripture language, though they had not then the written Word or Scriptures; for 'tis a queſtion whether theſe tranſactions were before the giving of the Law or after; however, they were verſed in Scripture truths, and in thoſe forms of ſpeech by which God gave out his mind to their forefathers. Here's Scripture phraſe, I alſo am formed out of the clay. And therefore Elihu, as ſenſible of anothers frailty by the experience which he had of his own, ſubjoyns this aſſurance of his reſpect to Job's weakneſs in what he ſhould further ſay.

Gentes enim hoc de primi hominis facta à Deo plaſnatione & ex terra formatione myſterium peritus ignorarunt. Bold.

Verſe 7. Behold, my terror ſhall not make thee afraid, neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee.

Elihu had given Job much ſecurity already that he would deal fairly with him; and here he gives him a promiſe for it: As if he had ſaid, I give thee my hand, I plight thee my truth, that my terror ſhall not make thee afraid, nor ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee. The Vulgar tranſlation reads, My miracles (or what I will do in a ſtrange and unuſual way) ſhall not terrifie thee. Indeed Miracles have a kind of terror in them; but we need not put ſuch a ſtrain upon the Text. The word which we tranſlate terror, ſignifies that which is moſt terrible and dreadful to man, even the Magiſtrates throne, the preſence of great Princes; of which Solomon ſaith (Prov. 20. 28.) The King ſitting upon the throne, ſcattereth all evil with his eyes; that is, with the terrible looks of Majeſty which God hath ſtampt upon him. The Prophet (Jer. 50. 38.) uſeth this word to expreſs Idols or falſe Gods by; and he calls them ſo either in a holy ſcorn; O theſe dumb Idols which have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, feet and walk not, are doubtleſs very ſhrewd and terrible things, are they not? Have we not great reaſon to fear what theſe doughty Gods will ſay or do, who can neither ſay nor do any thing? Thus he might call them in a way of ſcorn; or he calls thoſe Idols terrible things Jebim, from the event, becauſe fooliſh, vain, ignorant men, did exceedingly fear them, or were much terrified by them, and God left them to their own fears and terrors, as he ſpake by the Prophet (Iſa. 66. 4.) I alſo will chuſe their deluſions, and bring their fears upon them. As if he had ſaid, Becauſe they being vainly deluded, have choſen to fear that which was not to be feared, therefore I alſo will make this my choice to bring that upon them which they feared, and hoped to avoid by following and worſhipping Idols, or by their idolatrous worſhip. Now whereas Job was afraid of the terror of the true God, Elihu, who preſented himſelf in Gods ſtead, tells him, My terror ſhall not make thee afraid. And we may well conceive, that Elihu ſpake this ironically concerning himſelf; for having ſaid before, I am but a piece of clay, ſurely then my terror cannot make thee afraid. What terribleneſs is there in a piece of clay, in a clod of earth? What are the moſt terrible of the ſons of men, that they ſhould be a terror to us? We ought not to truſt in the mightieſt among men, why then ſhould we fear them? Or what need we fear them? Who art thou (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 51. 12, 13.) that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of a man that ſhall dye, and of the ſon of man that ſhall be made as graſs? and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker. We never fear men unduly, till we do one of or both theſe things, either firſt forget God who made us; or ſecondly, forget of what other men are made. I am but a piece of clay (ſaith Elihu) what matter of terror can I be to thee I wonder?

Virtutamen miraculum meum te non terrebit. Vulg.

Vox אימתי terrorem denotat & ſepe illum, qui in facie regis, judicis, principis elucet.

Terror minimè poteſt eſſe in maſſa luti, qualis eſt omnis homo.

In that Elihu giveth Job ſuch a promiſe, Behold, my terror ſhall not make thee afraid

Note, Man ſhould ſhew himſelf fair and meek to men, eſpecially to a man in affliction.

It is poſſible for a man, though he be but clay, as another man is, yet to cloath himſelf, as it were, with terror, yea, as as the neck of the Horſe is ſaid to be cloathed (Job 39. 19.) with thunder. He may put on a kind of dreadfulneſs as a garment, and appear very formidable to his brother. Some men indeed appear to men as a Wolf to a poor Sheep, or as a Bear and Lion to a Lamb. Though but clay, yet how ſcaringly do ſome men look and Lord it over their brethren! they will roar upon them like a Lion, and rend them like a Bear; clouds and darkneſs are in their faces, and ſtorm ſits upon their brows. There is a terribleneſs of man to man. Thus the holy Prophet (Iſa. 25. 2.) ſaith, The blaſt of the terrible one is like a ſtorm againſt the wall. Yea, ſome men are not only dreadful, like ſavage beaſts, but like devils, they even act or play the devil with their brethren. How far have they departed from their duty, and broken all the laws of love, which command us to be as God one to another in kindneſs, in mercy and compaſſion? I grant, Magiſtrates by their place and office are ſaid to be terrible, yea a terror, but it is to evil doers (Rom. 13. 3.) Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil; that is, not to thoſe whoſe works are good, but to evil workers. And to them they ought to be a terror; For they do not bear the ſword in vain; that is, to hold it in their hands, or let it ruſt in the ſcabbard, and never ſtrike with it; As they are Miniſters of God, ſo Avengers towards men, to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. Again, Goſpel-miniſters in ſome caſes are to be terrible, they may be Boanergeſſes, ſons of thunder, to the obſtinate and rebellious, to the proud and preſumptuous ſinner; they muſt cut him out a portion to his condition, and ſave him (if it may be) with fear. But the general temper and carriage of the Miniſters of the Goſpel is meekneſs and gentleneſs, they ſhould be full of love and of compaſſion, Inſtructing even thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, if God peradventure will give them repentance, to the acknowledging of the truth (2 Tim. 2. 25, 26.) The Miniſters of Chriſt muſt not deal out terror, till there be a neceſſity of it: And alwayes they who do well, or are humbled for the evil which they have done, muſt be handled tenderly. My terror ſhall not make thee afraid.

Neither ſhall my hand be heavy upon thee.

Onus meum ſuper te non erit grave. Targ. Quidam vocem אכפי ita ſumunt quaſi veniat ab אכף quod eſt incurvare. q. d. opus meũ quod tibi imponam non erit tale, ut ſub eo incurveris, Bold. Inflexit ſe ſuper eum os ſuum. Mont.

My burthen ſhall not be heavy upon thee, ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſe, and ſo ſome tranſlate out of the Hebrew, taking the derivation of the word from a root which ſignifieth to bow down the back, as we do when a burden is laid upon us. So the word is rendred (Prov. 16.26.) He that laboureth labours for himſelf, for his mouth craveth it of him, that's our reading; and we put in the Margent, And his mouth boweth unto him. The mouth of a labouring man boweth to him, as begging that he would get and give it ſomething to eat, and ſatisfie the craving of his hungry ſtomack. 'Tis ſad to ſee ſome poor men ſo given to idleneſs, that they had rather ſtarve then work, and when (according to the propriety of this Text in the Proverbs) Their mouth boweth to them, that they would take pains to get a little bread to eat, they had rather endure the burthen of hunger, then the burthen of labour: But I inſtance this place only for that word which ſignifies a burthen, or to burthen. Thoſe dreadful Propheſies which were publiſhed againſt any people in Scripture, are called Burthens. The burthen of Duma; the burthen of Damaſcus; the burthen of Babylon; that is, a Propheſie which had a burthen of calamity in it, able to break the backs of the ſtrongeſt Nations. So ſaith Elihu according to this tranſlation; My burthen ſhall not be heavy upon thee.

Eloquentia mea non erit tibi gravis. Vulg.

Others render it thus, My eloquence ſhall not be heavy upon thee; that's far from the Text; yet there is a truth in the thing. As if Elihu had ſaid, Though I am about to ſpeak, and have much to ſpeak, yet I would not ſpeak ſuch words, nor ſo many (I hope) as ſhall be burthenſom to thee. I would not burthen thee with eloquence; that is, either with affected eloquence, or the over-flowings of eloquence. Multiplicity of expreſſion is very burthenſom; nor is any thing in ſpeech more grievous to a wiſe man, then an unneceſſary heap of words. They who have a fluency of ſpeech, are uſually more pleaſed to hear themſelves ſpeak, then others are to hear them. Elihu (according to this reading) ſpake diſcreetly, and to the purpoſe, while he thus engageth to Job; I will not burthen thee with my eloquence. But I paſs that alſo.

We tranſlate fully and clearly to the Text, My hand ſhall not be heavy upon thee. The hand is taken two wayes; properly, and improperly; it is not to be taken properly here; we cannot ſuſpect Elihu of any ſuch rude behaviour, that he would lay a violent hand on Job. Improperly the hand ſignifies any act of a man towards man; ſo a mans words may be his hand: A mans hand may be heavy on him, whom he never touched or came near, yea, a mans hand may be heavy upon him whom he never ſaw. Our hand is heavy upon others, not only by outward violence upon the body, but by any preſſure upon the mind or inward man; our vexing or troubling another, whether by doing or ſaying that which afflicts him, is the laying of a heavy hand upon him. That's the meaning of Elihu, My hand ſhall not be heavy upon thee; that is, I will do nothing, nor will I ſay any thing, which (in it ſelf) ſhall be grievous and vexatious to thee. We find David complaining (Pſal. 32.4.) that The hand of God was heavy upon him day and night; that is, God appeared as diſpleaſed with him, he could not get evidence of his love in the pardon of his ſin; this preſſed his ſoul like an intolerable burthen. Great afflictions of any kind are a heavy hand upon us. Elihu who ſaw the heavy hand of God upon Job already, giveth him this comfortable promiſe, That he would not add grief to his ſorrow, My hand ſhall not be heavy upon thee; I know thou haſt thy load already. Theſe latter words are of the ſame general importance with the former: And we may Note further from them,

> Meekneſs and gentle dealing becomes us while we would reduce others from their error, or reprove them for it.

My hand ſhall not be heavy upon thee.] The Apoſtle called God to record concerning the Corinthians (2 Cor. 1.23, 24.) that it was to ſpare them that he had not come as then to Corinth. As if he had ſaid, I was loth to lay ſo heavy a hand upon you, or deal with ſuch ſeverity as your caſe required. And yet he adds, What ſeverity ſoever I or others ſhall uſe towards you, we ſhall uſe it, Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but as helpers of your joy. We ſhall not come with Lordly power upon you, we purpoſe not to carry it by meer authority and command, but of intreaty and love; we will not Lord it over your conſciences, but only regulate them, that your comforts may flow in more freely. Hard words are oftentimes more preſſing then the hardeſt blows. Words may weigh much more upon the ſpirit, then a heavy burthen upon the back. I grant a heavy hand muſt be laid upon ſome, there is no other way to deal with them. The word is a hammer and a fire. But as I intimated before, we muſt diſtinguiſh of perſons and of cauſes, and accordingly lay our hand. God hath not made his Miniſters Lions to ſcare his Flock, nor Bulls to gore them, but Shepherds to feed them and watch over them. And eſpecially when the hand of God is upon any, our hand ſhould not.

Lavater.

For concluſion, take here the laws of a juſt diſputation. Elihu in this Preface (I have yet gone no farther) gives Job free leave to anſwer, and ſet himſelf to the battel with him, and promiſeth to deal with him in the faireſt and in the meeteſt way he could wiſh or deſire. It is the obſervation of a modern Expoſiter upon this place, conſidering the equanimity and gentleneſs with which Elihu engaged himſelf to mannage this diſpute. If ſuch a ſpirit (ſaith he) could be found as here Elihu profeſſeth in this controverſie with Job, how ſoon might all our controverſies be ended; but we ſee moſt men every where magiſterially impoſing one upon another, yea magiſtratically. If they cannot impoſe magiſterially, and make others believe what they ſay, becauſe they ſay it, then they will impoſe magiſtratically; the Magiſtrates ſword ſhall make way, if ſtrength of argument cannot. And (ſaith he) when they have diſputed a while and anſwer is made, they will not receive anſwer, but tell of priſons, of ſword and fire. Thus he taxed the Popiſh Magiſtrates of thoſe times, who laid indeed a moſt heavy hand upon all who ſubmitted not to the Babyloniſh yoak. And it were well if there were not ſomething of ſuch a ſpirit, a bitter ſpirit, an impoſing ſpirit, a ſpirit of dominion over the faith of others remaining at this day; but that we could with ſweetneſs and gentleneſs treat about our differences, and ſay as this man did (though a man full of zeal for truth) to our diſſenters, we will not terrifie you with the Magiſtrates ſword, nor will we deal by ſubtleneſs; we will not perſwade you by bonds and priſons; Our terror ſhall not make you afraid, nor our hand be heavy upon you; neither will we provoke other hands to be heavy on you; we will carry all things fairly, amicably, Chriſtianly, waiting in the uſe of proper means, counſels, convictions, and prayers, till God ſhall make way into every mans ſpirit to receive the truth.

Hactenus exordium, ſequitur propoſitio.

Thus far Elihu hath (like a ſubtle Orator) prefac'd it with Job, to prepare him for an attentive hearing, for a candid conſtruction of, and a ready condeſcenſion to what he had ready to propoſe, and ſay.

VERS. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Surely thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying,

I am clean without tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

Behold, he findeth occaſions againſt me, he counteth me for his enemy.

He putteth my feet in the ſtocks, he marketh all my paths.

ELihu having ended his ſweet, ingenuous, and inſinuating Preface, falls roundly to his buſineſs, and begins a very ſharp charge. Bitter pills will hardly down, unleſs gilded over and wrapped in Sugar; nor will any mans ſtomach receive and digeſt them, unleſs well prepared. Elihu was wiſe enough to conſider this; he knew well what he had to ſay, and with whom to do, and therefore laid his buſineſs accordingly.

In this charge (to give a brief of the parts of it) Elihu tells Job; Firſt, He had heard him ſpeak (ver. 8.) Secondly, He tells him what he hath heard him ſpeak: And that may fall under theſe two heads; Firſt, That he had heard him juſtifying himſelf (ver. 9.) I have heard thee, ſaying, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me. Secondly, He had heard him unduly reflecting upon God, and that two wayes: Firſt, As over-ſeverely obſerving him, as it were, to gather up matter againſt him, in the beginning of the tenth verſe, and in the latter end of the eleventh, Behold, he findeth occaſion againſt me, and marketh all my paths. That's one reflection, and a very ſore one upon God. Secondly, Elihu chargeth him with reflecting upon God, as over-ſeverely dealing with him. That we have (ver. 10. and 11.) He counteth me for his enemy, he putteth my feet in the ſtocks, &c. Theſe things (ſaith Elihu). I have heard thee, ſaying; and having ſaid all this, he had indeed ſaid enough to make him blame-worthy.

Verſe 8. Surely thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying.

There is nothing difficult in this verſe. That which we render, Thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, is in the Text; Thou haſt ſpoken in mine ear; that is, I have not gathered up what I bring againſt thee upon uncertain reports, but have been an ear-witneſs of them. I have been one of thine hearers, I have ſtood by thee attentively, while thou haſt been complaining ſo bitterly. Surely thou haſt ſpoken in mine ear,

And I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying,

Thus and thus, as it followeth in the next words: As if Elihu had ſaid, O Job, while I conſider thy preſent ſuffering condition, I deny not that thy affliction is great, and thy croſs heavy; I deny not that thy afflictions are many, and of long continuance; I deny not that in the debate held with thy friends, thou haſt ſpoken many things well, and haſt inſiſted upon very profitable and remarkable truths: nevertheleſs, I cannot diſſemble my diſlike of ſome things thou haſt ſpoken, and muſt tell thee plainly wherein, either through paſſion, or want of information, thou haſt been much miſtaken. And yet thou ſhalt ſee that I will not impoſe my ſenſe upon thy words, nor ſtrain nor torture them by undue and odious inferences to thy diſadvantage; but ſhall recollect and fairly repreſent ſome paſſages which have fallen from thee, and ſhew thee the error of them. I know thou canſt not deny that thou haſt ſaid the things which I am offended with; and I believe when thou haſt heard me a while, and conſidered better of them, thou wilt not undertake to defend them. Surely thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying, I am clean, &c.

Firſt, In that Elihu coming to charge Job about what he had ſpoken, profeſſeth he had been a ſerious hearer of him, while he was ſpeaking;

> Obſerve, What we object againſt others, we ſhould have good evidence and proof of it our ſelves.

There are two infallible witneſſes, or they may be ſo: Firſt, Eye-witneſſes, ſuch as have ſeen that which they ſay; the witneſs of the eye is ſureſt as to what is done. Secondly, Ear-witneſſes, and they are the ſureſt as to what is ſpoken. We ſhould not take up accuſations by hear-ſay, but be able to ſay, we have heard the accuſed ſay it. Thus ſaid Elihu, I have not taken up this matter by the way, from thoſe I met with, but I have been upon the place my ſelf; I ſtood by thee and heard while theſe words dropped from thy mouth. Many report what they never heard, they report upon report; as thoſe Accuſers in the Prophet (Jer. 20. 10.) Report (ſay they) and we will report it. They cannot ſay as Elihu, You have ſpoken it in our hearing, and we have heard the voice of your words, but we hear you have ſpoken it; or you are famed for ſpeaking it. How many tranſgreſs the rules of charity, and break the bonds not only of civil friendſhip, but of Chriſtian love, upon reports of what others report. 'Tis dangerous to report more of others, then we have heard them ſay, till (at leaſt) we are ſure the reporters heard them ſay it.

Again, When Elihu ſaith, Thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words; he would convince Job to the utmoſt.

> Hence Note, To accuſe or condemn any man out of his own mouth, muſt needs ſtop his mouth. Or, To be condemned out of our own mouth, is an unanſwerable condemnation.

When our own ſayings are brought againſt us, what have we to ſay? Chriſt told the evil and unprofitable ſervant, who would needs put in a plea for his idleneſs, and excuſe himſelf for hiding his Lords talent in a napkin (that is, for not uſing or improving his gift, Luke 19. 22.) Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked ſervant; I will go no further then thy own words. And we ſee, as that evil ſervant had done nothing before, ſo then he could ſay nothing, becauſe judged out of his own mouth. When the offenders tongue condemneth him, who can acquit him? (Pſal. 64. 8.) So they ſhall make their own tongue to fall upon themſelves. The tongues of ſome men have fallen upon them, and cruſht them like a mountain, and they have been preſſed down, yea, irrecoverably oppreſſed with the weight of their own words. The Apoſtle Jude tells us what the Lord will do when he comes to Judgment, in that great and ſolemn day of his ſecond Appearing (ver. 15.) He ſhall convince all that are ungodly, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. He ſhall ſay to them, are not theſe your words? Can you deny them? Or have you any plea for them? Have you not ſpoken theſe things in my hearing? And have I not heard the voice of your words, ſpeaking thus and thus reproachfully of my Wayes, Ordinances, and Servants? This is like wounding a man with his own weapon; 'tis like the act of David in cutting off the head of Goliah with his own Sword. He that is condemned by his own ſaying, dyeth by his own ſword. David ſaith of Sycophants and Slanderers (Pſal. 55. 21.) Their words were ſmoother then oyl, yet were they drawn ſwords. Such draw theſe ſwords with an intent to wound other mens reputation or good name, but they ofteneſt wound their own: And as their words, who ſlander others, rebound upon themſelves, and turn to their own diſgrace, ſo alſo do theirs, for the moſt part, who are much in commending or poſſibly only (which was Job's caſe) in vindicating themſelves. Surely thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, &c.

But what had Elihu heard Job ſpeak? The next words are an anſwer, or declare the matter of his ſpeech; and in them, as was ſaid before, in opening the Context; Elihu firſt chargeth him with an over-Zeal in juſtifying himſelf, I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying;

Verſe 9. I am clean without tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

This thou haſt ſaid, and this I charge upon thee as a great iniquity. For the clearing of theſe words, I ſhall do theſe four things, becauſe upon this charge the whole diſcourſe of Elihu throughout the Chapter depends.

Firſt, I ſhall give the ſenſe and explication of the words as here expreſſed by Elihu, and ſome brief Notes from them.

Secondly, I ſhall ſhew what matter of accuſation, or of fault there is in theſe words of Job, as brought by Elihu in charge againſt him, or how ſinful a thing it is for any man to ſay he is without ſin.

Thirdly, I ſhall enquire what ground Job had given Elihu to charge him with ſaying theſe things.

Fourthly, (Which followeth upon the third) I ſhall inquire whether Elihu dealt rightly and fairly with Job, in bringing this ſore and ſevere charge againſt him.

Firſt, To open the words, as they are an Aſſertion, Thou haſt ſaid, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me. Some diſtinguiſh the three terms uſed in the Text, as a denial of three ſeveral ſorts of ſin. Firſt, That, by being clean without tranſgreſſion, he intends his freedom from ſins againſt ſobriety, or that he had not ſinn'd againſt himſelf. Secondly, That, by being innocent, his meaning is, he had not done impiouſly againſt God. Thirdly, That, by having no iniquity in him, he clears himſelf of wrong done to man. Theſe three ſorts of ſin contain ſin in the whole latitude of it. All ſin is either againſt our ſelves, ſtrictly called intemperance, or againſt God, ſtrictly called impiety, or againſt man, ſtrictly called unrighteouſneſs. But though this hath a truth in it, as to the diſtinction of ſins, yet it may be over-nice to conclude Elihu had ſuch a diſtinct reſpect in theſe diſtinct expreſſions; and it may be queſtioned whether the words will bear it quite through. Therefore I paſs from it and leave it to the Readers Judgment.

Further as to the verſe in general, we may take notice, that the ſame thing is ſaid four times; twice affirmatively, I am clean, I am innocent; and twice negatively, I am without tranſgreſſion, there is no iniquity in me.

I am clean without tranſgreſſion.

The word which we render clean, implieth the cleaneſt of cleanneſs; 'tis rightly oppoſed to the word tranſgreſſion, which ſignifieth, a defection or turning off from God. Every ſin in the nature of it, is a defection from God; but ſome ſins are an intended or reſolved defection from him. Some even throw off the Soveraignty of God over them, and his power to command them, not being willing to ſubmit their backs to his burden, nor their necks to his yoak. Theſe are juſtly called Sons of Belial, they not only tranſgreſs the Law, but throw off the yoak of Chriſt from their necks, and his burden from their ſhoulders, and ſay (like them, Luke 19. 14.) We will not have this man reign over us. So then, when Job ſaid, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, he may be very well underſtood thus, Though I have many failings, yet I am free from defection, though I have many weakneſſes, yet I am free from rebellion and obſtinacy. I ſtill retain an entire love to God, and am ready to ſubmit to his will, though I often find my heart, through corruption, riſing up againſt my duty; I am turned aſide through the ſtrength of temptations, but I turn not aſide through the bent of my affections. This doubtleſs, or ſomewhat like this was Job's ſenſe when ever he ſaid, I am clean without tranſgreſſion.

Hence Note, Firſt, Tranſgreſſion is a pollution, or, Sin is a defilement.

If once men ſtep over or beſides the line and rule of holineſs, the Law of God (which to do is tranſgreſſion) they become unholy. Job ſuppoſed himſelf unclean, if guilty of tranſgreſſion. Sin is an unclean thing, and it maketh man unclean. This the Church confeſſed (Iſa. 64. 6.) We all are as an unclean thing, or perſon: As if they had ſaid, Time was, when there was a choice people among us, who kept themſelves pure from common defilements; but now the contagion and corruption is ſo epidemical and univerſal, that the whole body of our people looks like a lump of filthineſs and uncleanneſs. We are overſpread with a loathſome Leproſie from head to foot, from top to toe. Holineſs keeps us fair, and righteouſneſs ſweet.

Secondly, Note, A ſinleſs perſon is a clean perſon.

When we arrive at perfect freedom from ſin, we ſhall be clean indeed, perfectly clean. And according to the degree or proportion of our freedom from ſin in this world, is our cleanneſs in this unclean world.

Secondly, Thou haſt ſaid, I am innocent; ſo we read: There are two ſignifications given by the Learned, which are of very uſeful conſideration for the clearing up of this Text. Firſt, The Hebrew word which we tranſlate innocent, is derived from a root, which ſignifieth to hide, to cover, or protect; and that two wayes: Firſt, To protect actively, or to defend others: Secondly, It notes protection paſſively, or to be protected by another. Some conceive that Elihu here intended it of Job in an active ſignification, whereas we ſay, I am innocent, they ſay, I protect, and ſo refer to him, as a Magiſtrate I have protected the oppreſſed, I have protected thoſe whom the ſons of violence have proſecuted. Indeed Job ſpeaks his practice much in that (Chap. 29. 12.) I delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him; the bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me, and I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy. Job had been a great Protector of the poor; and by this word the Hebrews expreſs an Haven or Harbour for Ships; becauſe Harbours or Havens are places of protection to Ships: Firſt, They are places of protection to Ships from Winds and Storms, they are ſafe places from Rocks, Shelfs, and Sands; a Ship in harbour is under protection from the dangers of the Sea. Secondly, A Ship in harbour is under protection from Enemies and Pirats; while ſhe is abroad at Sea, if Enemies come ſhe muſt ſhift for her ſelf, ſhe muſt run or fight, but in the Harbour ſhe is under the protection of the State or Country where ſhe arriveth. Thus all Magiſtrates are or ſhould be; a juſt Magiſtrate is a good harbour for all that are in danger of the winds and ſtorms, of the rocks and rage of wicked men. Good Governours are an harbour, and Oppreſſors like ſtorms and rocks. That's one ſenſe of the word in the active ſignification. And taking it in this ſenſe, Job aſſerts highly for his own honour, while he ſaith, I have been a Protector of the oppreſſed, I have been a harbour, or a haven to the weather-beaten poor.

חנף · חף Tegere & protegere, unde חוף portus, in quo naves ſunt tectæ & tutæ à vento. Merc.

Secondly, Others take this protection paſſively, I have been protected. Job was once protected from all outward evil, from the invaſion of Devils and evil men. God made ſuch an hedge about him, that Satan could not touch him. But the ſenſe given of this protection here intended is ſpiritual, I have been protected from the evil of the world, or from the evil world, I have been kept from that pollution and corruption, which (as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks) is in the world through luſt. And that is a bleſſed, yea, the beſt part of a Saints protection, He is kept through the power of God through faith unto ſalvation; he is not given up to the defilements and apoſtacy of times or places, the Lord preſerves his ſpirit and his wayes pure and clean. Our tranſlation, I am innocent, compared with this, I have been kept or protected from ſin; the one is a very good expoſition and illuſtration of the other; For innocency is our ſafety, and integrity our beſt keeper. Innocency is our fair haven, and ſafeſt harbour. When the Winds are higheſt, and the Seas moſt rough and angry, there, if any where, we may ſhelter and anchor our ſelves from the ſtorm and tempeſt. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 25. 21.) Let integrity and uprightneſs preſerve me; that is, let me be preſerved in mine integrity and uprightneſs. And that he had been ſo preſerved, he tells us (Pſal. 41. 12.) As for me thou upholdeſt me in mine integrity. He that can ſay, I am innocent, ſhall have cauſe to ſay, I am protected; the innocent perſon is under covert; God protecteth the innocent, yea maketh innocency their protection. Man is never ſo well ſhelter'd, as by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and by his own innocency. 'Tis guilt which leaves our breaſt naked to every dart and thruſt.

Again to come a little nearer to our tranſlation (though this be very ſignificant) I am innocent; 'tis a Negative, I have done no hurt, or I have no guilt upon me. The Rabbins tell us, the word cometh from a root which ſignifieth to waſh; and ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe renders, I am waſhed: Others thus, I am bruſhed or comb'd: Mr. Broughton, I am neat, like a man that hath put on his apparel decently; ſome are in a ſlovenly habit, or their clothes are foul; but Job could ſay as to his better part and ſpiritual cloathing, I am innocent, waſhed, bruſhed, comb'd. I have no filth in my skirts, nor foulneſs in my hands. I go not in the naſty habit of ſin, but in the lovely, comely, beautiful dreſs of Grace. Thus various is the ſenſe of the word which we tranſlate innocent. Job's converſation was ſo well ordered, that it had not a plight nor an hair (common infirmities excepted) amiſs or out of order. Our tranſlation gives in his mind fully, yet it is not unprofitable to take in this plenty and copiouſneſs of elegant Metaphors riſing out of the original words, here rendred, I am innocent. But if we take the word ſtrictly, then to be innocent, is to do or to have done no hurt, to be harmleſs, and ſo guiltleſs of the hurt or harm of any.

חף Ex Rabbinico verbo חנף exponunt quod ſignificat pectere & ſe mundare. Lotus ego. Targ. Terſus ego ſum. Coc.

Hence Note, Sin is an hurtful thing.

It hurts, firſt our ſelves; ſecondly, it hurts others in whoſe ſight it is committed, either, firſt, by the ill example given them, or; ſecondly, by injury done to them; either, firſt, in their credit, or ſecondly, in their eſtates. Yea, thirdly, ſin hurts God himſelf; it hurts God in his honour. Innocency is properly that which doth no hurt; innocent perſons are harmleſs perſons; no man ever hurt himſelf, or others, much leſs the name and honour of God, while he holdeth his innocency.

Job's laſt aſſertion is, Neither is there iniquity in me. Iniquity is that pravity either of ſpirit or action which is contrary to all that righteouſneſs or rectitude which the rule of Gods Word requireth. It comprehends both the irregularity of our actions, and the irregularity of our thoughts or conceptions. 'Tis a departure from the way in which, and from the ſcope and mark, to which we ſhould direct our whole courſe. Iniquity is an unequal, an undue or crooked thing. It turneth others from their right, and is it ſelf a continal ſwerving from it. So much for the opening of theſe words, as they are a propoſition containing a charge brought againſt Job, I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying, I am clean from tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

The ſecond point propoſed was, to conſider what matter of accuſation there is in theſe words. Matters of accuſation ariſe from our evil deeds; That we are not clean from tranſgreſſion, that we are not innocent, that there is much iniquity in us, Theſe are properly matter of accuſation. But here Elihu makes it matter of accuſation, that Job ſaid, he was clean from tranſgreſſion, that he was innocent, that there was no iniquity in him. And indeed, to be charged with the greateſt tranſgreſſion, is not more then this, to be charged with ſaying, we are clean from tranſgreſſion. To ſay we have no ſin, is very ſinful, to ſay we are without iniquity, is a ſaying full of iniquity, (1 John 1. 8.) If we ſay we have no ſin (Here is Job ſaying ſo, as Elihu chargeth him) we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us. And (ver. 10.) If any man ſay, he hath no ſin, he maketh God a lyar, and his word is not in him. Now what greater ſin can there be, if we conſider the force of theſe two verſes, then for any man to ſay he hath no ſin? How extreamly ſinful this is, may be ſhewed in four things.

Firſt, It is extreme pride for any man to ſay; I have no ſin; What is pride? But an over-reckoning of our ſelves. When we value our ſelves, 'tis beſt to do it at an under rate, and to ſay leſs of our ſelves (if it may be) then we are, as Paul did, who called himſelf leſs then the leaſt of all Saints; Pride alwayes over-reckons and caſts us up more then we are worth. Some reckon their temporal and many more their ſpiritual eſtates at many thouſands (as I may ſay) when upon a true account they are worſe then nothing. So did the Church of Laodicea (Rev. 3. 17.) Thou ſayeſt I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have need of nothing, and knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. They who are ſoul-blind, cannot ſee either how bad they are, or what good they want; Nothing hinders the ſight of our wants ſo much as a conceit that we are full.

Secondly, It is the greateſt deceit, even ſelf-deceit, to ſay or ſuppoſe that we are (in this ſenſe) clean without tranſgreſſion; ſo ſaith that Text of the Apoſtle (ver. 8.) He that ſaith he hath no ſin, deceiveth himſelf. It is bad enough to deceive others, and woe to them that do ſo; but how bad is their condition who deceive themſelves! He is in an ill condition who is deceived by others; But if a man deceive himſelf, where ſhall he have his amends? Self-admirers, and ſelf-flatterers, are the greateſt ſelf-deceivers. And who or what ſhall be true to that man, who is falſe to himſelf?

Thirdly, It is a lye and the greateſt lye, (that's more then a bare deceit) for it is ſuch a lye as leaveth no truth at all in us. He that ſaith he hath no ſin in him, hath no truth in him; what hath he in him then, but a lye? Every ſin is a lye, and he that ſaith he hath no ſin in him, hath nothing of truth in him; what hath he then in him, or what is he, but a lye? (ver. 10.) The Word of God is not in him, which is the treaſury of all truth; and therefore he hath no truth in him, nor can have, till he hath repented of that lye.

Fourthly, (that ye may ſee there is exceeding much in this charge) To ſay ſo, is blaſphemy, and the higheſt blaſphemy; Why? Becauſe it makes God a lyar, he that ſaith he hath no ſin, doth not only deceive himſelf, but as much as in him lyeth, he makes God a lyar (ver. 10.) To deceive with a lye, is the worſt ſort of deceivings; and what lye is worſe then, or ſo bad as that which makes the God of truth a lyar, and turns the truth of God into a lye. Lay theſe four conſiderations together, and then it will appear how heavy a charge is contained in theſe words, when Elihu ſaith he had heard Job ſay, he was clean without tranſgreſſion, he was innocent, and no iniquity in him.

Therefore, Thirdly, Conſider a little further, what occaſion had Job given Elihu to ſay that he had ſaid, I am clean from tranſgreſſion, &c.

I anſwer, There are ſeveral paſſages upon which Elihu might pitch this charge; I will only name four Texts, out of which, poſſibly this might ariſe. Firſt, (Chap. 10. 7.) where Job ſpeaking to God himſelf ſaith; Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked. He appealed to the knowledge of God himſelf in the thing. The ſecond may be collected from (Chap. 16. 17.) Not for any injuſtice in my hand, alſo my prayer is pure. The, third from (Chap. 23. 10.) But he knoweth the way that I take, when he hath tryed me I ſhall come forth as Gold; My foot hath held his ſteps, his way have I kept and not declined. In the fourth place Elihu might take thoſe words (Chap. 27. 5.) God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie you, till I die I will not remove my integrity from me. My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go, my heart ſhall not reproach me as long as I live. All theſe are Job's aſſertions concerning his own innocency, and theſe or ſuch like paſſages as theſe, Elihu ('tis likely) being an attentive hearer, had obſerved and picked up as the matter of firſt part of his charge, Job*'s ſelf-juſtification.*

Fourthly, and laſtly, let us conſider whether Elihu did rightly bring this charge againſt Job from theſe ſayings; Or whether he dealt ſo ingenuouſly with Job as he promiſed, while from theſe or the like paſſages he ſaith Job had ſaid, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, &c.

For anſwer, Firſt, take notice that Elihu was not the firſt that had charged Job thus; he had been thus charged by his three friends before. Zophar ſaid (Chap. 11. 4.) Thou haſt ſaid my doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes; that is, in the eyes of God. Eliphaz ſeems to ſay as much (Chap. 15. 14.) What is man that he ſhould be clean? And he which is born of a Woman that he ſhould be righteous? While Eliphaz put theſe Queſtions, he intimated that Job had made ſuch affirmations. Bildad likewiſe was upon the ſame ſtrain with him (Chap. 25. 4.) How then can man be juſtified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a Woman? We ſee then, this was not the firſt time by three, that Job had heard this charge, and had made anſwer for himſelf. And as theſe charges, ſo Job's anſwers have been opened heretofore upon thoſe former paſſages, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay much upon the point here, Yet becauſe Elihu reaſſumes this argument, yea makes it his ſtrongeſt argument againſt Job, I ſhall a little conſider whether he did rightly or no in this thing.

To clear which, we muſt remember, that Job's innocency had received a three-fold Teſtimony in this Book.

Firſt, He received a Teſtimony from God himſelf, and that a very notable and glorious one (Chap. 1. 8.) Haſt thou conſidered my Servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man?

Secondly, He received a further teſtimony from the penman of this Book, who having recorded the ſeveral afflictions of Job, and his behaviour under them, repeats it twice (Chap. 1. 21. and 2. 10.) In all this Job ſinned not, nor charged God fooliſhly. The teſtimony which God gave him, referred to his former actions or converſation before his affliction. The teſtimony which the Writer gave him, referred ſpecially to his latter words or ſpeeches under his affliction. Beſides theſe Teſtimonies which are not at all queſtioned nor can be; we find a third teſtimony, and that he gives of himſelf. Now though Elihu did highly reverence the teſtimony which God had given (if we may ſuppoſe he had notice of it) and would alſo the teſtimony of the pen-man of the Book, had it then been written; yet he queſtioned the teſtimony which Job gave of himſelf. Now, that there was ſome ſeverity in this charge upon that ſuſpition, may appear by conſidering it in a few particulars.

Firſt, It muſt be ſaid on Job's part, or in favour of him, according to truth, that he never affirmed, he was not a ſinner. Nay we ſhall find him more then once, twice, or thrice, confeſſing the ſinfulneſs of his nature, and the ſins of his life. We find him alſo confeſſing that notwithſtanding all the righteouſneſs and integrity in him, yet he would own none of it before God; and that if he ſhould juſtifie himſelf, his own cloaths would abhor him. Therefore Job was far from ſaying he had no ſin in him, in a ſtrict ſenſe.

Secondly, Moſt of thoſe paſſages wherein he ſpeaks of himſelf as clean and righteous, may be underſtood of his imputative cleanneſs and righteouſneſs, as a perſon juſtified in the Redeemer, of whom he ſpake with ſuch a Goſpel ſpirit and full aſſurance of faith, that he might well aſſert this of himſelf, I know that being juſtified, I am clean and without ſin. It is no fault for a Believer to ſay, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, through free Grace, in the Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. Much of what Job ſpake in this matter is to be taken that way.

Thirdly, When Job affirms theſe things of himſelf, we may ſay this in favour of him, he means it of great tranſgreſſions. The words in the Text note defection and wilful ſwerving from the right way. His friends charged him with hypocriſie, with oppreſſion, with taking the pledge for nought, with ſtripping the naked of their cloathing. Thine iniquity is great (ſaid Eliphaz) and thy ſin is infinite. Now ſaith Job, I am clean, I have no ſuch tranſgreſſions. And he might well anſwer his friends charge of impiety againſt God, and iniquity towards men, with a flat denial, yea with an affirmation of the contrary; there is no ſuch iniquity in me, prove it if you can. He was unblameable in the ſight of man.

Fourthly, In favour of Job this may be ſaid; what he ſpake of himſelf and of his own righteouſneſs, was upon much provocation, or when his ſpirit was heated by his friends, who ſo conſtantly urged theſe crimes againſt him. In theſe heats he ſpake highly of himſelf, and though it doth not excuſe any mans ſin when he hath ſpoken ſinfully, to ſay I was provoked; yet it doth abate the greatneſs of the ſin. Good Moſes (who was the meekeſt man upon the earth) when through provocation he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips, felt the ſmart of it, and God reckoned ſorely with him for it: Yet to ſpeak amiſs upon provocation, is not ſo much amiſs, as to ſpeak ſo in cold blood, or unprovoked.

Fifthly, Elihu might have put a fairer interpretation and conſtruction upon theſe ſayings of Job; He might have taken them in the beſt ſenſe, as Job meant them, that he was righteous, clean and innocent in all his tranſactions with men, and had not wickedly at any time departed from God. And then there had not been ſuch matter of fault in what he ſaid, as was brought againſt him.

Yet, In vindication of Elihu, it muſt be granted, Job gave him occaſion to rebuke and blame what he had ſaid, and that chiefly upon theſe three accounts.

Firſt, Becauſe he ſpake many things of himſelf which had an appearance of boaſting, and ſo of vain ſpeaking. A little truly ſaid of our ſelves, or in our own commendation, may be thought too much, how much more, when we ſay much?

Secondly, He ſpake ſuch things as carry'd a ſhew of overboldneſs with God. He did not obſerve his diſtance, as he ought, when he ſo earneſtly preſſed for a hearing to plead his cauſe before God; eſpecially; when he ſo often complained of the ſeverity of Gods procedure with him, with which Elihu taxeth him directly in the two verſes following. Upon both theſe grounds Elihu thought (and was no doubt guided in it by the Spirit of God) to cut him to the quick, that Job might learn to ſpeak more humbly of himſelf, and more temperately to God. And therefore,

Thirdly, The Lord did righteouſly, yea and graciouſly let out the ſpirit of Elihu upon him in another way then his friends before had done. He did not charge him with wickedneſs in fact, but dealt with him about the unwarineſs of his words. Job could not ſay he had never ſpoken ſuch words, for ſuch words he did ſpeak, though he did not ſpeak them as Elihu took them. When words are out they muſt ſtand to the mercy of the hearers, and abide ſuch a judgment as may, with truth be made of them, though poſſibly, beſides the purpoſe of the ſpeaker. A man (in that caſe) is not wronged, he ſhould learn to ſpeak more warily, and not give occaſion of offence. Doubtleſs the Lord had a gracious intent upon Job, in ſtirring the ſpirit of Elihu to repreſent his words in the hardeſt ſenſe, that he might humble him. Job's ſpirit was yet too high and not broken enough, as it was afterwards. Nor doth Job reply or retort upon Elihu for this; And when the Lord himſelf began to deal with him, he ſaith, Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledge (Chap. 38. 2.) and Job himſelf being brought upon his knees confeſſeth (Chap. 42. 3.) I have uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not: I have been too bold I confeſs. Though it was not Job's purpoſe or meaning to ſpeak ſo (he had integrity in what he ſpake) yet his words did bear ſuch a conſtruction. And the Lord ſuffer'd Elihu to urge them upon him to the utmoſt.

Yet notwithſtanding all that hath been ſaid, I do conceive, that Elihu had not the leaſt imagination, that the meaning of Job in thoſe aſſertions concerning himſelf, was, that he had not ſinned at all, or that there was no ſin in him; but taking his words in the beſt and faireſt conſtruction they could bear, he yet ſaw cauſe to check and reprove him, for ſaying ſo much, in that condition, about his innocency; whereas he ſhould have been chiefly taken up in glorifying God, and humbling himſelf under his mighty hand. So much for the anſwer to the fourth query, what reaſon Elihu had to charge Job thus? It hath been ſhewed what may be ſaid in favour of Job; and alſo, that Elihu might without breach of charity charge him with theſe ſayings.

To ſhut up this verſe, take only two brief notes from the whole.

First, The beſt of men have their failings, and are apt to over-report themſelves.

Our moſt deliberate actions and ſpeeches have ſome tincture of the fleſh, how much more thoſe which paſs us in a paſſion? Though Job ſpake what was true, yet he ſpake more then was meet. And they that heard him might take juſt occaſion of offence, not knowing his ſpirit and the ſtrain of his heart in ſpeaking ſo. The Apoſtle James ſaith (James 3. 2.) If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, and able alſo to bridle the whole body. He hath a mighty command over his ſpirit, that can command his tongue; eſpecially when he is provoked. It is a real part of perfection not to offend in word. This good man ſpake many things well, yet all was not well ſpoken.

Again, In that Job ſpake thus, under the preſſure of affliction;

Obſerve, In times of affliction it is better to be much in bewailing of ſin, then in making reports wherein we have not ſinned.

There will no hurt come of that; but while we are reporting our innocency, and good deeds, though what we ſpeak be true, yet 'tis ſubject to conſtruction, and layeth us open to reproof.

Laſtly, We may learn from the dealing of Elihu with Job, That in all diſputations and matters of controverſie with others, we ſhould take heed, that we faſten no uncharitable interpretation upon the words of our Adverſary, nor add any thing of our own to them, nor wreſt them beſides their grammatical and genuine conſtruction; yet even thoſe ſpeeches which are true in ſome reſpect, if they exceed the bounds of modeſty, may freely be reprehended. For we ought not only to do that which is good, and ſpeak that which is true for the matter, but we ought to do and ſpeak in a good or becoming manner. Thus far of the firſt fault which Elihu found and reproved in Job, his overconfidence in ſaying he was not faulty, or in juſtifying himſelf. In the two next verſes, he blames him with reflecting overboldly and unduely upon the dealings of God; the particulars whereof were expreſſed before in opening the whole Context, and come now to be further opened.

Quærit adverſum me & invenit confractiones, i. e. ut confringat & irrita faciat omnia mea ſtudia, inſtituta & conatus, ut nihil aſſequar eorum, quæ quæro & inſtituo. Merc.

Verſe 10. Behold, he findeth occaſions againſt me, and counteth me for his enemy.

Ecce confractiones adverſum me invenit. Bez.

These words contain the firſt part of the ſecond charge. For the clearing of which I ſhall firſt explicate the words and then by way of obſervation, ſhew what matter of charge or evil there is in them.

Behold, he findeth occaſions againſt me.

I have heretofore ſhewed the emphaſis of that word, Behold; And therefore, I paſs it here; Behold,

He (that is, God) findeth occaſions againſt me, Or, (ſtrictly from the Hebrew) he findeth breaches.

Ex radix נוא Inde Hiphil הניא fregit, confregit, irritum fecit. Merc. Μέμψιν δὲ κατ' ἐμοῦ εὗρεν. Accuſatione autem adverſum me invenit. Sept. Qui querelas amat, quærit occaſiones unde illas excitat. Bold. Deus ſtudioſè quæſivit anſam me perſequendi.

The Verb is tranſlated Break (Pſal. 141. 5.) It imports ſuch a breaking as is alſo a bringing to nought (Pſal. 33. 10.) 'Tis likewiſe applyed to the breaking of the heart by diſcouragements (Numb. 32. 7.) And it is ſignificantly enough tranſlated here, He findeth breaches againſt me; that is, ſomething or other to make a breach upon me, ſomething to complain of againſt me. The word is rendred in theſe three ſenſes; Firſt, An occaſion; Secondly, A Breach; Thirdly (as the Septuagint) A complaint or accuſation. We may joyn all three together; for a complaint or accuſation is commonly an occaſion of Breaches among men; he that loves Breaches will ſeek, and ſeldom miſſeth occaſions of complaint. We ſay of a man that is of a troubleſome ſpirit, and given to contention (which is alſo Mr. Broughton's tranſlation) Behold, he picketh a quarrel againſt me; though I give him no juſt matter of offence, yet he either findeth or maketh one. Thus moſt of the Hebrew Writers carry it; he findeth occaſions to alter his former courſe with me, to caſt me off, to lay his hand upon me, even to ruine and break me to pieces.

Joſeph's Brethren were very ſuſpitious of this (Gen. 43. 18.) The men were afraid becauſe they were brought to Joſeph's houſe. and they ſaid, becauſe of the Money that was found in our ſacks mouth the firſt time, are we brought in that he may ſeek occaſion againſt us; As if they had ſaid, We well perceive he would gladly have ſome matter to accuſe us, and ſo to detain us upon that occaſion. Thus ſaid the King of Iſrael (2 Kings 5. 7.) when Naaman came to him with a meſſage from his Prince to deſire him that he would heal him of his Leproſie; the King of Iſrael began preſently to ſtartle, and thought it was nothing but a meer trick and a device to bring on ſome further deſign, what? Said he, Am I God to kill and make alive, that this man is come to me? Wherefore conſider I pray you, and ſee how he ſeeketh a quarrel againſt me. They may be judged to watch for a diſcourteſie who deſire courteſies of us beyond our power. This made the King of Iſrael jealous, that the King of Syria being confident of future ſucceſs, by his former ſucceſſes againſt Iſrael, was by this device only ſeeking an occaſion to renew the War. We have an eminent Scripture to this purpoſe (Dan. 6. 4, 5.) Daniel being advanced high at Court, it drew a great deal of envy upon him among the Princes and Preſidents; and therefore they reſolved to try their utmoſt to pull him down; and hereupon (ſaith the Text) they ſought occaſions againſt Daniel concerning the kingdom; that is, they enquired narrowly into his proceedings as to the management of that great power and truſt which the King had committed to him in civil things, but they could find no occaſion, nor fault, foraſmuch as he was faithful. They could not pick a hole in his coat (as we ſay) neither was there any error or fault found in him. When this would not do, then they would needs go another way to work (envy is reſtleſs) and becauſe they were diſappointed in their firſt attempt about civils, they proceeded to matters of religion; Then ſaid thoſe men we ſhall not find occaſion againſt this Daniel, except we find it in regard of the Law of his God. And we ſee in the following parts of the Chapter, what occaſion they found againſt him. This is hard dealing indeed, and it is quite contrary to the Law of Love in all the actings of it. The Apoſtle aſſures us (1 Cor. 13. 7.) Love beareth all things, Love hath ſtrong ſhoulders to bear wrongs and injuries, and Love believeth all things; not that a Believer is a vain credulous perſon, giving out his faith he knows not how, or to he knows not what; but he believeth all things to the utmoſt line of truth and reality, as alſo of appearance and probability; he that loves is very willing to believe that things are meant as they are ſpoken, and that they are intended as they are done. Thus he that loves much, believes all things, and further, Charity hopeth all things; it hopes the beſt, and puts the faireſt interpretation that may be upon thoſe things and doings which carry in them at leaſt ſome colour of ſuſpition; this is the Genius of Charity, the Character of Love. It beareth all things, it believeth all things, it hopeth all things. All which ſtand in direct oppoſition to the ſeeking of occaſions againſt our neighbour. And I ſhall briefly ſhew how much ſuch practices militate againſt and contradict the Royal Law of love, by ſeven ſteps.

Firſt, 'Tis againſt the Law of love, to be ready to take an occaſion when it is given; we ſhould be very ſlow and backward, in caſe of offence, to embrace or admit what is offered: Though indeed, it is with the heart of man, I mean with the fleſh in his heart in this point of the Law, as it is with the fleſh (that is, ſinful corruption) in the heart, as to the whole Law of God; of which the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 7. 8.) Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. And again (Ver. 11.) Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me: Sin took occaſion by the Law; the Law gave ſin no occaſion to work concupiſcence in Paul. The Law is far enough from being the cauſe of ſin, but it is (by accident not of it ſelf) the occaſion of ſin; yea, ſin preſently takes occaſion when it hath not indeed the ſhew of any juſt occaſion. The Law by its prohibition, by the ſtop and check which it puts upon the fleſh, by the diſcoveries which it makes of the contrariety of our corruptions to the holineſs of it, doth many times provoke and irritate, yea enrage and enflame them, but it affords not the leaſt countenance or encouragement to our corruptions. Now this (I ſay) is the wickedneſs of the heart of man, with reſpect to ſin in general, that it takes occaſion by the Commandment, to bend it ſelf againſt the commandment: And ſo as to any particular act againſt a Brother, to take an occaſion to do him a miſchief, is wickedneſs, and a work of the fleſh.

Secondly, It is ſinful to uſe our Chriſtian liberty, when it may be an occaſion of ſin, or the laying of a ſtumbling block before others, though we uſe it not with an intent or purpoſe to make them ſtumble or fall into ſin. The Apoſtle earneſtly cautions the Romans to take heed of this (Rom. 14. 13.) Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a ſtumbling block or an occaſion to fall in his Brothers way. St. Paul is there ſpeaking about the obſervation of dayes commanded, and the uſe of meats forbidden by the ceremonial Law. Now though ſome had a liberty in their conſciences, to obſerve the one and uſe the other, yet he would not have them do either with offence to weaker Brethren: Our care ſhould be, either firſt to keep our Brother from falling, or to raiſe him up when fallen. Is it not then very ſinful not to forbear thoſe things (which are no abſolute duties) by which another may fall? And if it be ſo ſinful to do many things which in themſelves are not ſinful, when we know they may be an offence or occaſion of falling to others, though we intend it not; then how extreamly ſinful is it to do any thing with an intent to make them fall! This is properly the Devils trade, and woe to thoſe who take it out of his hand, or joyn partners with him in it.

Thirdly, When any ſhall deſire and even hunger after an occaſion of accuſing others, this is a very great height of wickedneſs. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch (2 Cor. 11. 9, 12.) where he tells us that he did forbear his own right, not receiving maintenance for preaching the Goſpel; When (ſaith he, verſ. 9.) I was preſent with you and wanted, I was chargeable to no man. But why? He anſwers (ver. 12.) What I do I will do, that I may cut off occaſion from them which deſire occaſion. Some did, it ſeems, deſire an occaſion to charge him with covetouſneſs and worldly mindedneſs, that he preached the Goſpel for filthy lucre; therefore, ſaith he, I will do this, that I may cut off occaſion from them that deſire occaſion to charge me with. The heart of man is full of evil deſires, and this is one of the worſt of them, to deſire another might be found doing that, which might miniſter an advantage to render him odious or blame-worthy.

Fourthly, Which is yet higher, ſome even purſue and hunt for occaſions to calumniate and ſlander their Brethren. The good Prophet Jeremie had ſtore of theſe ill neighbours (Jer. 20. 10.) I have heard the defaming of many; fear is on every ſide; report, ſay they, and we will report it; all my familiars watched for my halting, ſaying, peradventure he will be inticed, and we ſhall prevail againſt him, and we ſhall take our revenge on him. As if he had ſaid, How glad would not only my open familiars, but cloſe Enemies be, of an occaſion againſt me? It would make them leap for joy to ſee me halt. By his halting they meant his ſinning, his doing doing that which was uncomely, or not ſuitable to his profeſſion; they watched, they lay at catch for his halting, not to hold him up, but to caſt him down. They ſaid, report, and we will report it; we will make ſomething or other of it, though in truth there be nothing. They had (which may be a fifth ſtep of this wickedneſs, a ſecret hope that he would halt and give them occaſion of inſulting. Peradventure (ſay they) he will be enticed, peradventure we ſhall catch him in this ſnare; this was their hope, and, if attained, their joy.

Which makes a ſixth ſtep of this wickedneſs; for ſo David deſcribes his enemies (Pſal. 38. 16, 17.) They rejoyce when my foot ſlippeth; for I am ready to halt, or (as we put in the Margin) for halting. There is a double halting, a halting by tranſgreſſion, and a halting by affliction; that I conceive David chiefly ſpake of in that place, becauſe he preſently adds in the cloſe of the ſeventeenth verſe, And my ſorrow is continually before me. He ſhews his Enemies poſſeſſed with the ſame evil ſpirit, and in the ſame poſture (Pſal. 35. 15.) In mine adverſity, or in my halting, they rejoyced. The ſame word is uſed in this Pſalm for adverſity which we had in the thirty eighth for halting. This is as true of evil men, as halting is taken in the other notion, for ſinning. The wicked are as, if not more, ready to rejoyce at falls, or halts, by ſinning, as at falls or halts by ſuffering. In both theſe caſes (as David found in this Pſalm 35. 15.) the very abjects will tear the beſt of men (as they did David) and not ceaſe. But what do they tear? Their fleſh if they can; but to be ſure (and ſo 'tis meant there) their good names and reputation by ſlanders and accuſations. O how contrary is this practice and that joy to the ſpirit of the Goſpel! The Apoſtle tells us, the Grace of Charity utterly abhors it (1 Cor. 13. 6.) Charity rejoyceth not in iniquity. It neither rejoyceth in doing iniquity it ſelf, nor to charge others with iniquity.

Seventhly, (which is the higheſt ſtep) Some rather then fail will form and frame occaſions againſt others; they will forge or fancy them in their own brain, and then accuſe their Brethren, as if they had been acting, what themſelves have been imagining. Such the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks of (1 Pet. 3. 16.) where admoniſhing Saints to much ſtrictneſs and exactneſs in walking, he gives this account, why they ſhould do ſo, That whereas they ſpake evil of you as evil doers, they may be aſhamed that falſely accuſe your good converſation in Chriſt. They who have not ſo much as a ſhadow of truth, will make ſomething out of a lie; they will falſely accuſe, and ſtrongly impeach, knowing that if they do ſo, ſome of the dirt (at leaſt) will disfigure the faces, and ſtick upon the skirts of thoſe who are impeached. Thus I have given ſeven Degrees of this wickedneſs, every one of which plainly diſcover, and all put together, mightily aggravate the ſinfulneſs of this ſin, the ſeeking of occaſions againſt any man whoſoever, much more againſt any good man. And therefore (which was the ſecond point propoſed for the clearing of this truth) you ſee how great a matter of charge was brought by Elihu againſt Job, when he ſaith, Job hath ſaid, He (that is, God) ſeeketh occaſions againſt me.

Hence Note, Secondly, To charge the Lord with a willingneſs to break with us, either upon no occaſion, or to ſeek an occaſion that he may, is exceeding ſinful, and diſhonourable to his Majeſty, neer to Blaſphemy.

How ſinful is it, that we who give the Lord ſo many occaſions againſt us, that he needs not ſeek any, ſhould yet ſay he ſeeketh occaſions againſt us? The people of Iſrael (as it appears) intimated, at leaſt, that God had broken with them, or ſought occaſion to do it (this word is uſed in that Text, Numb. 14. 34.) while the Lord to ſhew how ill he reſented ſuch thoughts and jealouſies of him, tells them, According to the number of the dayes in which ye ſearched the Land, even forty dayes (each day for a year) ſhall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe, or (as read in the Margin) my Altering of my purpoſe. As if he had ſaid, Ye ſhall know whether I have ſought occaſion againſt you, whether I have fruſtrated your hopes and endeavours, theſe forty years in the Wilderneſs or no; ye ſhall know whether I have done any thing to break and entangle you, or whether all this hath not proceeded from your own frowardneſs and unbelief. The Lord who ſearched their hearts, and ſaw the utmoſt ſcope of their complaints, found this evil thought lying at the bottom of all, that he ſurely had put them upon all thoſe difficulties, or brought them into thoſe ſtraits on purpoſe to break with them. And therefore, he ſaith, Ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe; Ye ſhall ſee one day, or at laſt, whether I have kept covenant, and ſtood to my engagement or you, whether I have ſought an occaſion againſt you, or you have given me occaſion to deal with you as I have done. So that when the Lord ſaid, Ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe; his meaning was, ye ſhall know that I have kept my promiſe to you exactly, or to a tittle, and that ye only have been the promiſe-breakers. 'Tis infinitely below the nature of God, to ſeek occaſions againſt the creature; And 'tis ſtrange that the Jews had any the remoteſt ſuſpition of him as doing ſo, after they had heard of thoſe glorious ſtiles and titles in which he proclaimed his name (Exod. 34. 6.) The Lord, the Lord God, gracious and merciful, ſlow to anger, abundant in goodneſs and in truth, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin. What can be ſpeld out of this name that ſhould yield the leaſt ſhadow of a jealouſie, that the Lord would ſeek occaſions againſt them. A good Prince deſires to find many good ſubjects who deſerve to be rewarded, but it troubles him to find any who deſerve to be puniſhed, or whom he is neceſſitated to puniſh; Now what is the goodneſs of the moſt benign and gracious Princes in the World, to the graciouſneſs and benignity of God! Again, his precious promiſes evidence the unworthineſs of ſuch a ſurmiſe; all which are full of mercy, and goodneſs, and patience, and pardon, and tenderneſs to poor ſinners: So far is the Lord from ſeeking occaſions to charge any one with what is not, that he ſeeks all the wayes and occaſions he can to do good, and to extend compaſſion to thoſe who have done amiſs. He even labours to deliver poor ſouls from their dangers, and from their ſins. How far is he then from deſiring to find them tripping and ſinning, or from urging ſin hardly, harſhly or cauſleſly upon them? Yea all the experiences of Saints bring in witneſs againſt this blaſphemous apprehenſion. They will tell us from what they have found and felt, that when they have given the Lord occaſion to deſtroy them, when they have put a Sword into his hand to ſmite them, when by their unbelief, and pride, and neglect of known duties, they have laid themſelves open to ruine and deſtruction, even then he hath held his hand and ſpared them. Is it not then a great, a groſs ſin, to charge the Lord, that he ſeeks occaſions againſt us? Yea indeed (as was touched before) the Lord needs not ſeek occaſion againſt any man, for as much as the beſt of men give him too much occaſion, and to often. He needs not ſtand to ſpy advantages againſt us, we lay our ſelves too open and naked to him continually. As in Fencing, when two that are very expert at that Art are ingaged, there is watching for an occaſion or advantage to get the maſtery; but if an expert Maſter of Defence be to deal with an ignorant fellow that knows not his poſtures, nor how to uſe his Weapon, he needs not ſeek occaſion, he may have him here and there and every where. It is ſo with the beſt of Saints, when they have to do with God; he needs not watch for an occaſion where to hit, or ſmite them, for they through their ignorance and folly, lay their naked breaſts open to his ſtroaks every day. Were he not infinite in mercy to cover our ſins, and to pardon our tranſgreſſions, we muſt needs periſh under his juſtice.

Cognoſcetis confractionem meam; ſi dici poſſit Latinè irritationem; non à verbo irrito ſed ab adjectivo irritus, q. d. videbitis ut ego omnia acta veſtra per hos quadraginta annos irrita faciam, & conatus ac inſtituta impediam. Merc.

Ecce invenit in me vacillationes. Scult. תנואות vocat ea quæ pii faciunt præter rectum, ſed citra animum à Deo averſum, &c. Coc.

Again, The word is rendred, Infirmities, failings, or leſſer ſins; that's another tranſlation of the Text, and 'tis a uſeful one; for as the former ſuppoſeth the Lord taking occaſion, where none at all was given; ſo this ſuppoſeth him to take the leaſt occaſion. As if Elihu ſuppoſed Job ſaying, Behold, he ſeeks out my little faults, my vacillations, my trippings, my ſtumblings, in a word, my infirmities. We may take them two wayes; Firſt, for his youthful ſins, the ſlips of his youth. Secondly, For his dayly ſins, commonly called failings. As if Job had ſaid, Though I can charge my ſelf, and freely do with many ſins and weakneſſes, yet I am not a man chargeable with any crimes nor wickedneſſes, mine are no black nor bloody ſins, no crimſon, no skarlet ſins;

Quæſivit Deus parva quædam, imo penè nulla peccata propter quæ, velut ſi nefanda crimina commiſiſſem, atroci me ſententia condemnavit. Bold.

ſins; I have not ſinned preſumptuouſly, or with a high hand, I have not given ſcope to my luſts, nor indulged my corruptions. I have not pleaſed my ſelf with diſpleaſing God; nor hath the bent of my ſoul been to break his commandments, as bonds, yoaks, or ſhackles put upon me by an Enemy; I have not rejected his dominion or rule over me in any wilſul defection or departure from his word. Yet notwithſtanding God finds out my infirmities and failings, and urgeth them ſorely againſt me, yea he deals with me as if I were his Enemy, even for thoſe ſins which I have committed through inadvertency or meer humane frailty: Some Interpreters inſiſt moſt upon this ſignification of the word, as if the matter which Elihu charged Job with, were that he ſhould ſay God carried it towards him as an Enemy for ſmall faults or leſſer ſins. Nor do I ſee any thing which hinders the joyning of this and the former reading together; for ſurely he ſeeks occaſions to puniſh and vex another, who inſiſts upon his leſſer ſins and imperfections, as if they were great and grievous crimes. From this latter or ſecond ſenſe of the word, > Obſerve, Firſt, In general, To take ſtrict notice of the failings, infirmities, or leſſer ſins of others, is a point of very great ſeverity.

Some are pleaſed with nothing more then to hear and diſcourſe of other mens failings. 'Tis a great fault to be picking up the leſſer faults of others; yet how many are there, who if they can but ſee, as it were, any bare place, they will be charging at it; if they ſee but the leaſt ſcratch or ſore, they as the Fly, love to be feeding upon it, or raking in it. 'Tis our holineſs to take notice of the leaſt ſin in our ſelves; and the more holy any man is, the more quick-ſighted and quick-ſented he is in taking notice of his leſſer ſins (when the leaſt neglect of duty and of the leaſt negligence in performance of duty, any ill frame of heart, any vain thought, any idle word, and undue carriage, any uncomelineſs, is taken notice of and corrected, this ſhews an excellent frame of ſpirit, and a great meaſure of Grace) but it is not good to do ſo by others, yea it is an argument we are very much wanting and failing in holineſs our ſelves, when we are ſo apt to take notice of and aggravate every want and failing in our Brethren. Yea, when as Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 7. 3.) We ſee a mote in our Brothers eye, we ſeldome ſee the beam in our own. And it is an argument men have beams in their own eyes, when they are ſo quick-ſighted in looking after motes in their Brothers eye. I grant, it is a duty to be watchful over one another as Brethren, and to take notice, for right ends, of the leaſt faylings and faults of any. This is a duty if we do it with a purpoſe to pray for them, that they may walk more circumſpectly; or that we may lovingly reprove, admoniſh, and counſel them; as alſo that we may conſider our ſelves and our own wayes, leſt we fall as they have done. Thus to take notice of the leaſt failings of others, is a great Goſpel duty. But to take notice of mens faults, to cenſure or defame their perſons, to inſult over them, or accuſe them, this is the ſpirit of a Cham, who mocked at his Fathers nakedneſs. And thus to be critical about the faults of others, argues that we are careleſs of our own.

Secondly, As to the particular caſe in the Text, for which Job is tax'd by Elihu, that he ſaid thus of God.

> Obſerve, To ſay or think of the Lord that he takes a ſtrict and ſevere notice of our infirmities to reckon with us rigidly for them is very ſinful.

Such thoughts are a great derogation from the goodneſs and mercy of God. The Lord doth not willingly ſee the faults of his people; though he ſeeth them, yet he doth not willingly ſee them; he is glad when it is with his people, as it was at that time with Iſrael (Numb. 23. 21.) He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he ſeen perverſneſs in Iſrael. But was there no ſin to be ſeen in Jacob? Was Iſrael altogether innocent at that time? Surely they, even they, and even then were a ſinful people, and had their faults, neither few nor ſmall, but becauſe there was no iniquity, no perverſneſs nor prevarication againſt God found among them at that time, therefore he over-looked all their ordinary failings and tranſgreſſions. As the Lord is ſo holy and of ſuch pure eyes that he cannot behold any ſin, the leaſt iniquity to approve of it (Habak. 1. 13.) ſo the Lord is ſo gracious and ſo full of compaſſion that he doth not ſeverely take notice of, nor look upon the leſſer ſins of his people. David exalts the name and glory of God at large for this (Pſal. 103. 8, 9, 10.) The Lord is merciful and gracious, ſlow to anger, plenteous in mercy, he will not alwayes chide. They are alwayes chiding, that are alwayes ſpying faults in Children, Servants or Relations; they who take notice of every little fault, ſhall find chiding-work enough in a family. But the Lord will not alwayes chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever, he hath not dealt with us after our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities: Like as a Father pittieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him. A Father doth not enquire into, much leſs puniſh every neglect of his Child. I will ſpare them (ſaith the Lord, Mal. 3. 17.) as a Father ſpareth a ſon that ſerveth him. If a Father ſeeth or is well perſwaded that his Son hath a heart to ſerve him, he will not curiouſly ſpy out the faults of his ſervice, but ſaith to his Child, It is well done, or at leaſt, I take that well which thou haſt done. Yea the Lord is ſo far from a ſtrict inquiry after ſuch faults, that he paſſeth by great tranſgreſſions (Mic. 7. 18.) Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his people? he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy. Though Aſa (1 Kings 15. 14.) was not through in the reformation; the high places were not removed, yet the Lord did not charge this upon him, for preſently it followeth in the ſacred Story; Nevertheleſs, the heart of Aſa was perfect with God all his dayes. Yea, though Aſa did fall into ſeveral ſins afterwards, impriſoning one of the Prophets, and oppreſſing ſome of the people, and in his ſickneſs ſeeking to the Phyſitians, and not to the Lord, yet the Lord did not charge theſe acts upon him; He was ſo far from a ſtrict inquiry after his leſſer ſins, that he took no notice of thoſe greater ſins, but ſaith, His heart was perfect all his dayes. So in the caſe of David, the Lord would not ſee many of his ſins, he would not blot David, nor burden his own memory with them, but paſſed an act of Oblivion upon them for ever. Sarah (Gen. 18. 12.) ſpake very unhandſomely when the Angel came to her and told her ſhe ſhould have a Son; yet the Apoſtle (1 Pet. 3. 6.) referring to that ſtory, gives Sarah a very high teſtimony or commendation for one good word that was mingled with a great many ill or undue ones, yea and actions too; for ſhe laughed; notwithſtanding all which, Peter ſets her as a pattern for all good Women profeſſing the Goſpel, to imitate: He would have them be in ſubjection unto their own Husbands; even as Sarah obeyed Abraham calling him Lord, whoſe Daughters ye are (ſaith he) as long as ye do that which is well. That one word which ſhe ſpake well, is recorded, yea reported to her praiſe, and all that were ill are buried in ſilence, forgotten and covered. The Lord hath reſpect to a little pure Gold, though mingled with a great deal of droſs, and owns a little good Corn, though a great deal of Chaff be in the ſame floor or heap. Surely then he will not bring our infirmities and ſlips to account againſt us, while our hearts are upright with him.

Thus you ſee what matter of charge there was in theſe words, when Job ſaid, God ſought occaſion againſt him, when he had given none, or that he had only given ſome ſmaller occaſion, and yet God dealt with him as an Enemy.

But did Job ever ſay, That God ſought occaſions againſt him, or took notice of his leſſer ſins ſo ſeverely?

I anſwer, Though ſome acquit Job wholly of this charge, and recriminate Elihu with this accuſation as a ſlander, yet Job had ſpoken words which might give occaſion to charge him thus (as was ſhewed alſo concerning thoſe former ſpeeches, I am clean from tranſgreſſion, I am innocent, there is no iniquity in me) though Job had not ſpoken theſe or ſuch like words, with that ſcope and ſpirit as Elihu might ſeem to alledge them; yet he had given Elihu cauſe enough to ſay ſo, while he ſpake more of himſelf then came to his ſhare, conſidering that he was a ſinful man, and more then did become him in his condition, being an afflicted man. Upon both which accounts, it had better becom'd him to have been much in humbling himſelf, either then at all in juſtifying himſelf. Now as Job had ſpoken words which might bear out Elihu in his former charge, Secundum veritatem neutrū dixit Job in ſenſu quem imponit in Elihu.

charge, ſo we find ſeveral ſpeeches or complaints concerning God, which may juſtifie him in this. As for inſtance (Chap. 14. 16, 17.) For now thou numbreſt (or numbring thou numbreſt) my ſteps; doſt thou not watch over my ſins? As if he had ſaid, thou watcheſt me ſo ſtrictly, ſo narrowly; that I cannot (in the leaſt) ſtep awry, but preſently I am obſerved and ſhall be ſure to hear of it; Yea, my tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag, and thou ſoweſt up mine iniquity; that is, thou keepeſt the memory of my ſins, thou doſt not paſs them by, but haſt them ready by thee. When chaſt Joſeph's wanton miſtriſs diſappointed in her luſt, was reſolved to ſeek an occaſion of revenge, ſhe laid up his Garment by her untill her Lord came home (Gen. 39. 16.) To lay up the evil deed of another preſageth ill to him. And therefore when Elihu heard Job ſpeaking thus, might he not ſay, Job hath ſaid, God ſeeketh occaſions againſt me, yea, (which is more) as it followeth in the verſe under hand,

And counteth me for his Enemy.

Theſe words having been inſiſted upon ſomewhat largely from other paſſages of this Book (Chap. 13. 24. and 19. 11. and Chap. 30. 21. In all which places Job ſpake this complaint ſometimes expreſly, alwayes equivalently) I ſhall not here ſtay upon the explication of them, only for as much as Job having ſaid, that God took hold of ſmall occaſions given, or ſought occaſions not given, is preſently charged further by Elihu, with ſaying, He counteth me for his Enemy. From this Connection of the former with the latter part of the verſe.

> Note, To ſeek or take eaſie occaſions againſt another, is an argument that we bear no good will to him, or, It is a ſign we look upon a man as an Enemy, when we are apt and ready to ſeek or take occaſions againſt him.

There are two things which we are very ready to do towards thoſe we bear no good will unto, or whom we account our Enemies. Firſt, To diminiſh the good which they do, to ſpeak lightly of, and under-value their moſt praiſe-worthy deeds. Ill will never ſpake well either of perſons or actions. Secondly, whom we love not as friends, eſpecially whom we hate as Enemies, we are prone to heighten their faults, and double their failings; we (moſtly) look on the evil deeds of an Enemy in a multiplying, or in a magnifying glaſs; we make one fault many, and a little one great. A true friend will ſpeak the moſt of what is well done, and the leaſt he can, with truth, of what is ill; he is ſo far from ſeeking occaſions againſt whom he loves, that he will hardly ſee them, when he finds them unſought. A noble Enemy will not ſeek occaſions againſt a man, much leſs will a cordial friend. It is no wonder when Job is taxed with ſaying, God ſought occaſions againſt him, that he ſhould alſo ſay, He counteth me for his Enemy.

From the matter of theſe words, He counteth me for his Enemy, take theſe two notes.

> Firſt, Even good men when they are ſorely grieved under the afflicting hand of God, are tempted to have hard apprehenſions of God, at leaſt to ſuſpect and fear that God is no friend to them.

And this comes to paſs upon a double conſideration; Firſt, Nature when pinched will ſhew it ſelf; Now, man naturally, hath not only hard thoughts of God, but an enmity againſt him. And when nature is pinched, all the corruptions working in man, work this way, unleſs over-power'd and checkt by Grace. Secondly, When tis hard with us from the hand of God, then Satan takes his time to prompt us with hard thoughts of God, and to foment that enmity to the uttermoſt, of which our corrupt nature hath ſuch ſtore. What? Will Satan ſay, Doth God love thee, and ſtarve thee? What? Doth God pretend kindneſs to thee, and deal thus with thee? Is God thy friend, who takes away thy friends? Is God thy friend, who leaves thee in the hand of Enemies? Doth he pitty thee, and yet keep thee in theſe pains? Is this his kindneſs to his friend? How can he ſay he loves thee? And haſt not thou cauſe enough yet to ſay, He counteth thee for his Enemy. Thus Satan takes his time to provoke nature, which is forward enough of it ſelf to think and ſpeak hardly of God, if at any time he is pleaſed and ſees it fit to deal hardly with us. And how great a combate hath many a gracious ſoul both with Satan and his own heart, to get and keep up good and honourable thoughts of God in a ſuffering condition, or under dark and (to ſenſe) diſmal diſpenſations.

> Secondly, Note, Whatſoever God doth to or with a godly man, he ſhould maintain good thoughts, and ſpeak well of God, or, when God deals moſt ſtrictly and ſeverely with his people, they ſhould not look upon it as an argument of any enmity or ill will againſt them, or that he counteth them his enemies.

Let us take heed of ſuch thoughts; David profeſſed (Pſal. 73. 1.) Truely God is good to Iſrael, even to them that are of a clean heart. He is good to them (that's David's intent here) not only when he doth them good, (as to outward things I mean, and to ſenſible appearances, for all is good in the iſſue to the Iſrael of God; now, I ſay, God is good to his people, not only when he in that ſenſe doth them good) but when he afflicts them, and layeth many outward evils upon them. When, as it is ſaid after in that Pſalm (ver. 14.) He plagueth them (that word imports ſoreſt troubles) all the day long, and chaſteneth them every morning; when he gives them their breakfaſt in ſowre Herbs, or with ſevereſt whippings, yet then, even then he is good to them, and means them no harm at all. Therefore how hardly ſoever God deals with us, let us not think he counts us Enemies. The Temptation was ſtrong upon David to take up hard thoughts of God in that caſe, yea it prevailed ſo far upon him, that he concluded (ver. 13.) Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. As if he had ſaid, A man hath little priviledge from the worſt of outward evils by his godlineſs; but the temptation did not prevail long, he ſoon recovered himſelf (verſ. 15.) If I ſay I will ſpeak thus (that is, that I have cleanſed my heart in vain) Behold, I ſhould offend againſt the generation of thy Children; that is, I ſhould wrong the whole kind or race of godly men throughout the World, as if hypocrites, or as if God did not love them, or were not good to them, for who is there among all thy Children whom either thou haſt not or mayeſt not chaſten as much as thou haſt chaſtned me. As no man can know the love of God by that which is before him, how proſperous ſoever it is; ſo it is moſt unſutable for any of the Children of God, to think that God is not good to them, or doth not love them, becauſe of the evil that is before them, how adverſe or diſaſterous ſoever it is. For, God having loved his people in Chriſt, he loves them for ever; when once he hath broken the enmity in our hearts towards himſelf, there is nothing ſhall ever be done by him towards us, which may ſpeak us his Enemies, or him our Enemy, though a Job in great affliction may ſay, He counteth me for his Enemy, And handles me like one too; as it followeth.

Verſe 11. He putteth my feet in the ſtocks, he marketh all my paths.

We had theſe words expreſly (Chap. 13. 27.) there they have been opened already, Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks, and lookeſt narrowly unto all my paths. That which hath been ſaid as to the general ſenſe and ſcope of that Text, may ſerve for this; and therefore I refer the Reader thither. I ſhall only add two or three Notes from the metaphor; He put my feet in the ſtocks, that is, he preſſeth me with very cloſe and ſore afflictions.

> Hence Obſerve, Firſt, To be in affliction, is to be in a painful condition; there is little eaſe in the ſtocks.

No chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous but grievous (Heb. 12. 11.) To be under a croſs is to be under a burden.

Secondly, Afflictions keep us under reſtraint. He hath little liberty as well as little eaſe that is in the ſtocks: Afflictions hold us in, they are as a Priſon to us. Afflictions are a reſtraint two wayes; Firſt, to our corruptions; yea, through the grace of God, afflictions are more then reſtraints to corruption, they become the death of corruption, they are appointed (among other ſervices) for the mortifying of corruption, that it may not live in us, much more are they a reſtraint to corruption, that it may not get out, nor work in us as before. Many times, when a good man hath the World at will, his corruptions think to have their will too; and when he is at liberty, luſts would grow licentious: Therefore God ſeeth it neceſſary to put his Servants in the ſtocks, that their luſts may be in the ſtocks too. Thus he told the Church (Hoſ. 2. 6.) Behold, I will hedge up thy way with Thorns, and make a Wall that ſhe ſhall not find her paths. The Thorn-hedge was as a ſtocks to ſtop them that they ſhould not walk diſorderly, nor act inordinately as they had done. This courſe God takes with many, he puts them in the ſtocks, that he may keep them from the wayes of ſin, or give check to ſome unruly affection. When we need this diſcipline, we may look for it, and 'tis a mercy to be under it. Will you not keep order? (ſaith God) then you ſhall to the ſtocks. Secondly, Afflictions are a reſtraint to our comforts, as well as to our corruptions. As this expreſſion notes the taking of luſts ſhort, ſo the taking of us ſhort as to lawful liberties and enjoyments. Sickneſs upon the body ſowres all that this World hath, to us, and will not ſuffer us to uſe much of it, how much ſoever of it we poſſeſs. Many have enough to eat, who never eat in pleaſure, as Job ſaid (Chap. 21. 25.) And when in our proſperity we run out and take unlawful liberty, God ſends an affliction, as his ſtocks, to hold us from our lawful liberties. When we have had vain out goings and exceſſes of ſpirit, all going well with us and comfortably in the world, we may expect the ſtocks next, or that things ſhould go ill with us, yet for our good.

Thirdly, To be in the ſtocks is a diſgraceful thing; it is not only a pain and a reſtraint, but it is a reproach; He that is in the ſtocks, or in the pillory, is expoſed to ſhame, every one points at him, and many revile him. Affliction as to the eye of the world, carrieth diſgrace with it, or, at leaſt, ſubjects the perſon afflicted to diſgrace; and it hath been ſhewed from ſeveral paſſages of this Book, how Job's afflictions were interpreted to his diſgrace; and he lookt upon, as I may ſay, like a vagabond in the ſtocks, that God had brought him thither, and clapt him by the heels for his miſdemeanours. Though afflictions diminiſh no mans honour or eſteem with God, or with his people (an afflicted Saint is as precious and honourable in their eyes, as when in the greateſt proſperity, The Clouds of trouble cannot eclipſe the glory of Grace, nor render the gracious contemptible to thoſe who know them ſuch) yet, as to the eye and opinion of worldly men they do. Job ſaid his afflictions were a witneſs againſt him, as if all were not right with him, yea, as if he had been very unrighteous. The ſtocks are a witneſs againſt a man, that ſurely he hath done ſome ill thing. Thus you ſee there is pain in affliction, reſtraint in affliction, diſgrace in affliction, eſpecially in the opinion of the world, and therefore to be in affliction is to be as in the ſtocks. He putteth my feet in the ſtocks.

He marketh all my paths.

Which ſome expound, as if when the Lord had let him out of the ſtocks, yet he was but like a Priſoner with his keeper at his heels; He marketh all my paths. I have ſpoken to this alſo before; I ſhall now only Note,

There is no ſtepping out of the eye or ſight of God.

He marks all our paths, not only our open paths, but our ſecret paths; not only what paths our feet walk in, but paths our hearts walk in. He marketh what our thoughts are, what our ſcope is, what our aims and ends are. He marketh not only our day-paths, but our night-paths; He watcheth all our paths. Take this Caution from it;

As the Lord marks all our paths, ſo it will be our wiſdom to mark our own paths.

If the Lords eye be ſo ſtrict over all our wayes, ſhall we be careleſs of our wayes? If he look upon our walkings, ſhall not we look to our walkings? There are many arguments (from love, from returns of thankfulneſs for received benefits) which ſhould provoke the people of God to heed and mark their own wayes; but ſurely this ought to be a very cogent argument, becauſe God marks them, He marketh all our paths. Therefore as the Apoſtle gives counſel and admonition (Eph. 5. 15.) See that ye walk circumſpectly, not as Fools but as wiſe. What our Wiſdom is, yea whether we have any wiſdom, whether we are wiſe or fools will be ſeen by our walkings. Some can talk and diſcourſe very wiſely, who yet walk very fooliſhly, and whoſe whole courſe is folly.

So much for the opening of this charge brought by Elihu againſt Job, his over-juſtifying of himſelf, and his reflecting upon the goodneſs and love of God. Elihu proceeds yet further to deal with and refute him, as alſo to anſwer for God. Behold, in this thou art not juſt, &c. This I charge thee with and will prove it, thou haſt ſpoken ſinfully and unbecomingſy of God and of thy ſelf in all this.

VERS. 12, 13.

Behold, in this thou art not juſt: I will anſwer thee, That God is greater then man.
Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? For he giveth not account of any of his matters.

IN theſe two verſes Elihu gives the firſt part of his anſwer, wherein we may take notice of theſe five things; Firſt, He tells Job that he had erred and was miſtaken, Behold, in this thou art not juſt; Secondly, He ſheweth him wherein he had been miſtaken, or what his error was; In this thou art not juſt, or, Behold this, thou art not juſt in it. Thirdly, Elihu lays down the general ground, upon which he intended to convince Job of his error and miſtake, the greatneſs of God, I will anſwer thee that God is greater then man. Fourthly, From that ground he draws out a check or reproof, in the beginning of the thirtieth verſe, Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? Fifthly and laſtly, he gives a reaſon of that reproof, which ariſeth alſo out of the former ground, the unqueſtionable Soveraignty of God; For he giveth not account of any of his matters.

Verſe 12. Behold, in this thou art not juſt.

Behold] He calls for ſerious attention, and diligent conſideration; Behold this; ſo the Hebrew rendred ſtrictly; we render, Behold, in this thou art not juſt; What is this? What's the antecedent to this? We may aſſign the antecedent in three things, or make it three-fold, according to what Elihu hath laid down before in way of charge againſt Job in the former Context; Firſt, This, that thou haſt boaſted thy ſelf ſo much of thy innocency and integrity. Verſe 8th. Thou haſt ſpoken in my hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, ſaying, I am clean without tranſgreſſion, &c.

Behold, in this thou art not juſt.] Secondly, In this, That is, in that thou haſt complained ſo much of the ſeveri- of Gods dealings and proceedings with thee (10. and 11.) Behold, he findeth occaſion againſt me, and accounteth me for his Enemy; he putteth my feet in the ſtocks, he marketh all my paths; Behold, in this thou art not juſt.

There is a third antecedent, which we may take up from ſeveral paſſages in the former part of the Book; and that is, becauſe thou haſt ſo often and ſo importunately deſired to plead with God, and haſt made ſo many ſuits for a hearing with him, as if thou hadſt ſomewhat to ſay, which might acquit thy ſelf and ſhew reaſon, why God ſhould not deal thus with thee; for though Job did not deſire to plead with God as having any intent to accuſe him of doing him wrong, yet he was therefore to be blamed, becauſe he deſired to plead with him; ſeeing it becomes man to ſubmit to the judgment of God without murmuring or complaining. So then Elihu had cauſe to charge him with this; God indeed paſſed it by, as knowing it did not proceed (as in the wicked) from malice, but from weakneſs and ignorance, as Job alſo himſelf humbly confeſſed at laſt. Behold (thou haſt too often called for Juſtice) in this thou art not juſt.

Hoc nomine juſtus non es, quod Deum in jus provocare auſus es. Merc.

Mr Broughton renders, Lo here thou art not in the right. Theſe words, in this, or here, may alſo have a negative reference to what Job had been charged wtih before by his friends. As if Elihu had ſaid; I do not charge thee with ſuch crimes as thy friends have loaded thee with heretofore, I do not burden thee with groſs impiety, nor with hypocriſie, I do not tell thee thou haſt oppreſſed the poor, or wronged the widdow and the fatherleſs, I have nothing of this ſort to ſay againſt thee. But in this or here, I have ſomewhat to ſay; wherein my judgment alſo is that thou art not juſt, nor in the right; for however thou art otherwiſe, or in other things upright and righteous, however juſt thou haſt been in thy tranſactions with men; and pure in thy worſhip toward God, yet in this I am ſure, and I dare ſay it openly and avowedly, thou art no ways juſtifiable, much leſs juſt in that thou haſt cryed up thy own innocency, and ſpoken ſo much of the hard dealings of God with thee; yea, haſt been ſo bold as to deſire a day of hearing even before God himſelf. Let this be the Queſtion or matter under debate; Whether or no, Job ſpeaking thus highly of himſelf, and thus boldly of God, hath done right or no? Elihu undertakes the negative, he engageth to prove that Job had not done well, or right, how innocent ſoever he was, in ſpeaking ſo much of his own innocency, or (how hardly ſoever God dealt with him) in making ſo many complaints of his ſeverity. Elihu undertakes to prove this negative; and Job never durſt undertake the affirmative, that he had done right or well in ſpeaking or doing ſo; and therefore in the cloſe of the buſineſs he ſits down convinced, that he had been too bold with God, and too forward in juſtifying himſelf.

His argument (which runs through this whole diſcourſe) to make good his negative aſſertion, may be formed up thus; He that ſpeaks much of his own righteouſneſs, and ſeems to reflect upon the righteouſneſs of God, at leaſt that God hath been over-rigorous with him, is not juſt; nor juſtifiable in this.

But thou O Job haſt ſpoken thus of thy ſelf, and thus of God in the extremity of thy pain, and in the anguiſh of thy Spirit.

Therefore in this thou art not juſt, nor juſtifiable. No man of underſtanding can take thy part, or be an Advocate for thee in this matter; As for me, I muſt needs be and am reſolved to be an Advocate for God againſt thee. The Major or firſt propoſition is not expreſt in the Text, the concluſion is given in the beginning of the 12. Verſe, and the aſſumption or 2. propoſition, is collected from Job's own mouth in ſeveral places of this Book.

Again; beſides the general ſcope of the words, and the tendency of Elihu in this diſpute, we may conſider the manner of his ſpeech, how he deals with Job; Behold, in this thou art not juſt. In this manner of treating with Job, the ſweetneſs of his ſpirit, and likewiſe the boldneſs of it are obſervable. Theſe two vertues or excellencies of an Advocate, ſhew themſelves plainly in this one paſſage; Behold, in this thou art not juſt. For conſider, Firſt, He expreſſeth his reproof negatively, he doth not ſay, Behold, in this thou art wicked, or thou haſt impiouſly blaſphem'd the name of God, but he ſpeaks at as low a rate, as may be, Behold, in this thou art not juſt, or juſtifiable, thou haſt not done right, or thou art not right; there is a great good temper of ſpirit, and a mixture of much meekneſs in ſuch negative expreſſions: it being much leſs to ſay to a man, in this thou art not juſt nor juſtifiable, then to ſay poſitively or directly, in this thou art unjuſt, and deſerveſt to be condemned. For though there be no difference in the thing between not being juſt and being unjuſt, yet there is much more mildneſs in the words; and a man takes leſs offence, when told that he is not juſt, then in being told that he is unjuſt. The imputing of a crime to a man, is more and worſe, then the denying him a vertue, or that he is vertuous.

> Hence Note, We ought to temper our reproofs with much gentleneſs and meekneſs.

We ſhould not ſpeak cutting words, if other words will ſerve the turn. Thus the Apoſtle directs us (Gal. 6. 1.) Brethren, if a man be overtaken with a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch a one with the ſpirit of meekneſs, conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted; deal as gently with a fallen brother, as thou wouldeſt with a man whoſe bones are diſlocated or broken (ſo much the metaphor there uſed imports) There is a time indeed when we muſt rebuke (as the Apoſtle gives direction, Tit. 1. 13.) ſharply, or cuttingly; we muſt go to the quick, that they may be ſound in the faith: but there is a great regard to be had to the ſtate and ſpirits of thoſe with whom we have to deal. As it is our duty to receive the word with meekneſs (James 1. 21. ſome receive the word proudly, rigidly, in the worſt ſence they can, yea they receive it rebellingly, now as we ought to receive the word with meekneſs) ſo 'tis good to ſpeak the word with meekneſs, with as much meekneſs and tenderneſs as the caſe will bear.

Secondly, Conſider this manner of ſpeaking, Behold, in this thou art not juſt, Elihu tells him plainly of his faults, he reported them before, and here he applyed them home to his perſon; Behold, in this, thou remembereſt thy own words; Thou canſt not but take notice what thou haſt ſpoken; now I tell thee, in this thing thou art not juſt; Elihu doth not ſpeak doubtingly nor fearfully, nor doth he tell Job what the thoughts of others were upon the matter, but he tells him directly, categorically, plainly from himſelf, in this thou art not juſt.

> Hence Note, We are to hold out our convictions and reproofs with plainneſs, and to lay our finger upon the very ſore; Behold, in this (or that) thou art not juſt.

We are to ſpeak meekly, but not at random, not uncertainly, not flatteringly (Pro. 29. 25.) A man that flattereth his neighbour, ſpreadeth a net for his feet; he doth but intangle and inſnare him, in ſtead either of counſelling or comforting him. When a man is out, it is beſt to tell him ſo; how elſe ſhall he get in again? Flattering words are inſnaring words; Behold, in this thou art not right. One of the Ancients ſpeaking to this point, tells us; It is more ſinful to flatter thoſe that do evil, then to do evil our ſelves. And, ſurely it argueth a more corrupt mind, or a worſer principle to dawb ſinners with the untempered morter of flattery, then to be dawbed with the mire of any particular ſin or iniquity. A flatterer is a dawber and pillow-ſower; A flatterer hath not a true ſight of ſin himſelf, and he doth what he can to keep others from the ſight of it. It is ſafer to make ſinners ſmart then itch. David invited a wounding rather then ſuch a ſkinning of his ſore (Pſal. 141. 5.) Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs, (that is, I will not only take it kindly, but ſhall find it a kindneſs) and let him reprove me, and it ſhall be an excellent oyle, which ſhall break my head; that is, it ſhall be ſo far from hurting, that it ſhall be (through Grace) a healing to me. No man had ever any cauſe to repent, either the giving or receiving of a wiſe and ſeaſonable reproof.

Majore ſupplicio dignus eſt qui male agentes laudat; quam qui male agit. Chry.

Behold, in this thou art not juſt.] But what is it, not to be juſt? I anſwer, not to be juſt, is not to give every man his due; yet Elihu intends it chiefly, of what Job had ſpoken unduely to God; Behold, in this thou art not juſt.

> Hence Note, They who do not give God his right, are unjuſt, as well as they who do not give men their right.

Yea not to give God his right, is by ſo much the greater injuſtice, then not to give man his right, by how much God is greater then man; look how much God is higher and greater then man, by ſo much is their ſin higher and greater, who give not God his right, then theirs, who give not man his right. Many think they are very juſt, very honeſt men, becauſe they give every man his due, they wrong, they defraud no man, not any neighbour, not any brother with whom they deal; come and charge them if you can. 'Tis very good, and more then moſt men can truly ſay of themſelves, when a man is able to ſay he is juſt to his neighbour, no man can challenge him of injuſtice. But many ſay this, who take no notice, how unjuſt they are to God; they are not at all ſenſible, how often they have denied God his right, nor how often they have done God wrong; they take no notice of this. They have ſecond-table Juſtice, but they have not firſt-table Juſtice; this is it that Elihu chargeth Job with. His friends charged him with ſecond-table injuſtice, that he was an oppreſſor, &c. But Elihu charged him with firſt-table Injuſtice, that he had done wrong to God. Therefore, remember, not to give God his due fear, his due love, his due truſt and ſubmiſſion (theſe are his rights by the firſt Commandment) is to be unjuſt; not to give God due worſhip according to his will, is to be unjuſt, becauſe in ſo doing you deny him his right in the ſecond Commandment; not to ſpeak or think reverently of the name, of the word, ways, and ordinances of God, is to be unjuſt to God, becauſe you deny him his right in the third Commandment. To break the Sabbath, to ſteal Gods time, and convert it to your own private uſe, to put it in your own purſes, as many do, this is Sacriledg, this is to be unjuſt to God, becauſe you give him not his right, nor that which is due to him by the fourth Commandment; ſo not to ſubmit to the rod of God, not to be quiet under the chaſtiſings of God, not to take all well at Gods hand, whatſoever he doth with us, or to us, is to be unjuſt to God, becauſe we then deny him the right of his ſoveraignty, and of that juſt power which he hath over his Creatures. Behold, in this thou art not juſt.

Elihu proceeds to give an account, diſtinctly, wherein this injuſtice lay.

I will anſwer thee, or (as Mr. Broughton) I will tell thee, God is greater then man.

We render well, I will anſwer thee, &c. There is a fourfold way of anſwering; Firſt, by information to a Queſtion propounded. Every Queſtion would have an anſwer. Secondly, by ſolution of an objection made; When any thing is objected againſt what is ſaid or held; then to unty the knot, is to anſwer. Thirdly, there is an anſwering by confutation of a falſe opinion or tenet; thus whole Books that hold unſound or heterodox opinions, are to be anſwered. Fourthly, there is an anſwer by way of reproof, or reprehenſion of faults or miſtakes, either in ſpeech or practice. Elihu his anſwer was of this laſt ſort. For he obſerving how Job had ſpoken, and what his carriage and demeanour had been, gives him a reprehenſive anſwer, Behold, in this thou art not juſt, I will anſwer thee. And what was his anſwer? even this, God is greater then man; or, I will anſwer thee, that God is more then man; The root of the word ſignifies to increaſe or grow great; but God is great, not by growth or increaſe, but in his eſſence and being. He who is infinite in greatneſs, can have no addition to his greatneſs. God is the great one, and he only is great. All men and things put together, are not only little nothings, but leſs then nothing compared to the great God. Further, the word by which God is here expreſt, notes the great power of God, the ſtrength of God; in oppoſition to which the word by which man is here expreſt, notes his weakneſs and pitiful frailty. And therefore Mr. Broughton tranſlates ſtrictly according to the propriety of the Original; I muſt tell thee the puiſſant is greater then the ſorrowful man; we ſay barely, God, he, the puiſſant, or the ſtrong, the mighty God; we ſay, God is greater then man, he, then ſorrowful man. There are three Original words, as I have ſometime noted, which expreſs man; Adam, importing the matter of which man was made, Earth; Iſh noting his beſt perfection; and Enoſh, intimating that ſad condition which was brought upon us by the fall; Surely the puiſſant is greater then ſorrowful man.

Reſpondebo tibi & reprehendam, idq; hac plane inſolubili ratione quia amplior eſt Deus & major multis partibus homine; ירבה i. e. יצדל amplior eſt. Merc.

But is not God greater then (Iſh) the wiſeſt and moſt accompliſht, the moſt perfect and mightieſt of men, as well as he is greater then (Enoſh) ſorrowful or miſerable man? I anſwer, the word Enoſh is not to be taken excluſively, as if when he ſaith, the puiſſant is greater then the ſorrowful man, he were not alſo greater then the greateſt or ſtrongeſt man; but it notes, that all men, or man conſidered in his beſt eſtate, is but weakneſs and wretchedneſs, when put in the ballance with the great God, or the puiſſant. Lord what is man (ſaith David, one of the beſt and greateſt of men, a King, Pſal. 144 3.) that thou takeſt knowledg of him? or the ſon of man that thou makeſt account of him? Now if it be even too much that God ſhould make any account of man, then what is any man in account to God? O what man or Angel is able to caſt up the account, how much the great God is greater or more then man. The words are plain, only there is ſomewhat yet to be added or touched upon, to clear up further the ſcope of Elihu in ſpeaking thus to Job, which I ſhall endeavour to clear and make out, when I have given a note or two from the words, as they are a plain propoſition; God is greater then man.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God is Great.

He that is greater then the greateſt, is certainly great; he that is higher then the higheſt, is high. This greatneſs of God is every where celebrated in Scripture. The Prophet (Iſa. 12. 6.) calls the inhabitant of Zion to cry out and ſhout; why? For great is the holy One of Iſrael in the midſt of thee; That is, the holy one of Iſrael who is in the midſt of thee, is both great in himſelf, and declares his greatneſs in thee. (Mal. 1. 14.) I am a great King, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, and my name is dreadful among the Heathens. I need not ſtay to give particular Scriptures to hold forth the attribute of Gods greatneſs, his greatneſs runs through all his attributes. Whatſoever God is, he is great in it; He is great in power (Pſal. 56. 3. Pſal. 147. 5.) he is great in all ſorts of power, great in authoritative power, and great in executive power. As God commandeth what he pleaſeth to be done, ſo he can do what he commandeth. The power of man in doing is not always commenſurate with his power in commanding; but Gods is. He needs no help, much leſs any leave to execute what he willeth. Again, God is great in wiſdom, he hath the compaſs of all things in his underſtanding; God is ſo wiſe, that he is called the only wiſe God (1 Tim. 1. 17.) The wiſdom of men and Angels is folly to his. God is great alſo in his goodneſs, ſo great that Chriſt himſelf as man would not be called good, but told him that called him ſo by way of rebuke, There is none good but one, that is God (Matth. 19. 17.) Holy David brake out into the admiration of that goodneſs which God hath laid up, yea of that which he dayly worketh for man. How much more did he and ought we to admire that goodneſs which is not ſo much in himſelf as himſelf? (Pſal. 31. 19.) O how great is thy goodneſs, which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou workeſt for them that truſt upon thee before the ſons of men? The goodneſs which God acts and puts forth for the creature, is a great goodneſs (Iſa. 63. 7. Neh. 9. 25.) but that goodneſs which is the goodneſs of his nature, is a goodneſs as great as God is, a goodneſs infinite in greatneſs. Again, how often is God called great, yea admired for his greatneſs in mercy? When David (2 Sam. 24. 14.) made choyce to fall into the hands of God; he gave this reaſon of it, For his mercies are great. He is alſo great in wrath; we read (2 Kings 23. 26.) of the fierceneſs of his great wrath. And how great is his Love? Firſt, in redeeming us by Chriſt (Joh. 3.16.) God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. God loved us ſo much in that gift, that no man could ever tell how much love he hath given us in it. Secondly, His love is great in quickning us with Chriſt (Eph. 2. 4.) God who is rich in mercy, for the great Love wherewith he hath loved us, even when we were dead in ſins, hath quickned us together with Chriſt. His love both in redeeming and quickning us is ſo great, that while we are called to the greateſt ſtudy after the knowledg of, we are told we cannot know the greatneſs of it, (Eph. 3. 18.) That you may know the Love of God which paſſeth knowledg. I will not ſtay upon this Attribute, the greatneſs of God, only take theſe five brief inferences from it; God is Great. Then

Firſt, God can do great things, the greateſt things, for us; every thing is in working as it is in being; they that are but little, can do but little; God being great in his being, that is, in his power, in his wiſdom, in his goodneſs, in his mercy, how eaſily can he do great things! The Scripture is abundant in ſhewing forth the great things which God hath done, and will do, 2 Sam. 7. 22, 23. Job 5. 9. Pſal. 71. 19. Pſal. 86. 10. Pſal. 92. 5. Pſal. 111. 2. Pſal. 126. 2, 3. Pſal. 136. 7, 17. Joel 2. 21. The works of God in all ages and in all places, have born the ſtamp of and given teſtimony to his excellent greatneſs. We ſay, There is nothing great to a great mind, or to a man of a great ſpirit. A great ſpirited man will overcome not only great difficulties, but ſeeming impoſſibilities, yea he is glad to meet with greateſt difficulties, becauſe they match the greatneſs of his mind. Then certainly the great God, doth nothing but great, and can do the greateſt things. 'Tis no matter how great the things are which we have need to be done for us, if we can but intereſt the great God in the doing of them. God can do great things in ways of mercy for his people, and he can do great things in ways of Judgment againſt his enemies. Though his Enemies be great Oaks and Cedars, he can hew them down (Amos 2.9.) Though his Enemies be as great as the greateſt mountains, he can remove and level them; Who art thou O great mountain before Zorobabel, thou ſhalt become a plain (Zech.4.7.) That is, the great power of God, with Zorobabel, can overthrow or overturn thoſe powers which oppoſe or ſtand in the way of his Church and people, though they appear as inſeparable and immoveable as a great Mountain.

Secondly, If God be great, then he can pardon great tranſgreſſions; you that are great ſinners fear not. Were not God a great God, the leaſt of our ſins could not be pardoned; were not he great in mercy, and great in goodneſs, our hearts would fail us, yea our faith could have no bottom to come to him for the pardon of our great ſins; But why ſhould great ſins diſcourage us to ask their pardon of God, who is great in mercy? David made the greatneſs of his ſin his argument to move the Lord to pardon it (Pſal. 25.11.) Pardon my ſin for it is great; who could ſpeak thus, unleſs he had that upon his heart that he ſpake to the great God, who is greater in nothing, and hath magnified his greatneſs in nothing more then in acts of mercy to greateſt ſinners?

Thirdly, If God be a great God; then he muſt have great ſervices and duties; He muſt have great praiſe (Pſal. 48.1.) great is the Lord and greatly to be praiſed; he muſt have great love, we muſt love him even with all our heart, and with all our might. He muſt have great fear (Pſal. 89.7.) great faith (Matth. 15.28.) great honour from all his people. When David was about to make great preparations for the building of the Temple, he ſaith (1*Chron.* 29.11.) Thine O Lord is greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, &c. And when Solomon was about to build the Temple, he ſaith (2*Chron.*2.5.) The houſe which I build is great, for great is our God above all Gods. We ſee David prepared and Solomon builded in proportion to the God for whom the one prepared and the other built a houſe. Thus I may ſay of all you do for God or to God, let it be the greateſt your ſtock and ability can reach to, becauſe he is a great God The Lord himſelf uſeth that argument by the Prophet to urge his people to do their utmoſt in whatſoever they were called to do (*Mal.*1.14.) Curſed be the deceiver which hath a male in his flock, and voweth and ſacrificeth to the Lord a corrupt thing; (that is, who when he is able to perform a greater ſervice to the Lord, puts him off with a leſſer one) for I am a great King, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c. Therefore take heed of putting me off with weak female ſervices, I expect a male, your beſt, that ſervice which is moſt ſpiritual and maſculine.

Fourthly, If God be great, then, they who are but little themſelves, having an intereſt in God, may do great things too. The leaſt creature having an intereſt in the great God, is as great, yea infinitely greater then the greateſt in the world, who ſtand in their own ſtrength. Moſes ſaith (Deut. 4.38. Deut. 7.1.) that the preſence of God with Iſrael was ſuch, that by it they overcame Nations, greater and mightier then they; their littleneſs did not hinder them, becauſe the great God was with them in their works and ways; yea God loves to uſe ſmall inſtruments, that his own greatneſs who is the efficient may appear. That Queſtion which was twice put in the Prophet (Amos 7.2, 5.) is very often put in that caſe; By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe? for he is ſmall. That which made it ſo queſtionable whether Jacob ſhould riſe, was his ſmalneſs; And could we remember the greatneſs of the God of Jacob, we ſhould either never make ſuch Queſtions, or eaſily anſwer them.

Fifthly, Seeing God is great, we ſhould be always aſcribing greatneſs to God, we ſhould lift him up in his greatneſs. Thus Moſes exhorted others (Deut. 32.3.) Becauſe I will publiſh the name of the Lord, aſcribe ye greatneſs to our God. And David at once prophecieth the ſame of others, and promiſeth it for himſelf (Pſal. 145.6.) Men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible acts, and I will declare thy greatneſs.

Again, Conſider theſe words as they are expreſſed comparatively, God is greater then man; As God is great, ſo greater then the greateſt men. God is great above all Gods; that is, above all the Kings and Princes of the earth. Now I know (ſaid Jethro, Exod. 18.11.) that God is greater then all Gods (greater then Pharaoh and his Egyptian Princes) for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them. David challenged all the Gods on Gods behalf (Pſal. 77.13.) Who is ſo great a God as our God? Let any man name him if he can; He is a God above all Gods, that is, above the greateſt powers in this world who are called Gods. Thus Chriſt comforts believers with an aſſurance of ſafety for ever (John 10.29.) My Father is greater then all, then the Devil and all.

But ſome may ſay, who knoweth not this that God is great, or that he is greater then men or Devils? Job himſelf ſpake much of this ſubject, yea his friends made it their buſineſs to exalt the greatneſs of God, as we may ſee in ſeveral paſſages of this Book. So that Elihu ſeemeth to ſay no more here, then had been ſaid already, and doth no more then had been done already. Is not this then a cold way of arguing to tell Job that which he knew already?

For anſwer to this I ſhall ſtay a while (as was promiſed) before I go off from theſe words, to ſhew why, though for the matter this is no more then hath been ſaid already; that, yet Elihu had reaſon to bring this argument for the conviction of Job, that God is greater then man; for though the greatneſs of God hath been often ſpoken of in the courſe of this diſputation, between Job and his friends, yet neither Job nor his friends did handle or improve it to that point, or in that extent, as here intended by Elihu, as may appear by theſe following Conſiderations.

Firſt, When Elihu ſpake of the greatneſs of God, we are not to underſtand this greatneſs abſtractly or alone, but concretely or in conjunction with his goodneſs and righteouſneſs, with his mercy and faithfulneſs, &c. Job confeſſed the greatneſs of God, but he ſeemed to intimate ſeveral things, to the diſparagement of the goodneſs, mercy, and righteouſneſs of God. For though in his frequent complainings he did not queſtion, yet he did much darken and obſcure theſe Divine perfections. And therefore Elihu ſpeaking of the greatneſs of God, urgeth it in conjunction with all his perfections, and indeed they cannot be diſjoyned, except in notion or diſcourſe.

Secondly, Elihu inſiſted ſo much upon the greatneſs of God, to humble Job, and to convince him that he had done amiſs, in his bold appeals to him and complaints, about his dealing with him. Elihu doth wiſely to hold out the greatneſs and ſoveraignty of God, for the keeping down and repreſſion of his yet, unhumbled ſpirit.

Thirdly, Elihu mannageth this argument for another end and purpoſe, then his friends did. They uſed it to prove Job was wicked or had done wickedly in the former paſſages of his life; He to ſhew that Job ought to be patient under and quietly ſubmit to the preſent providences of God.

Fourthly, This argument which Elihu brings from the greatneſs of God, hath not at all the leſs force in it, becauſe grounded upon ſo common and generally received a principle, the greatneſs of God; yea, it hath therefore the greater force in it; for what is more unreaſonable then for man to intimate any thing which reflects upon God, or to complain of what God doth? when as God, by the common conſent of all reaſonable men, doth infinitely ſurpaſs all men, both in greatneſs, and in righteouſneſs, both in Juſtice, and in goodneſs. When the greatneſs of God appears in all theſe things, what can be more unreaſonable then for man to inſinuate any thing complainingly concerning God. From the conſideration of this ſcope which Elihu had in arguing from the greatneſs of God;

> Note, We may ſpeak and believe aright, that God is great, and that he is greater then man, and yet not anſwer it in our practice, nor be duly affected with it.

Elihu did not at all queſtion whether Job thought God greater then himſelf: that was not the point in controverſie: but he ſaw this principle was not anſwered in Job's practice, or that he did not demean himſelf ſutably to the greatneſs of God, which he had proclaimed to others, and profeſſed himſelf to believe. And thus it is with many, moſt of all with thoſe under great temptations and preſſing afflictions. How apt are they to ſpeak and act below, yea beſide thoſe principles which they believe and hold forth in their profeſſion! It is an eaſie matter to ſay, and in words to acknowledg what God hath revealed himſelf to be, but O how hard is it to live and walk up to ſuch ſayings and acknowledgments? Many tell us, God is greater then man, yet while they do not fully ſubject themſelves to God, they in effect deny that God is greater then man. Many acknowledg fully that God is righteous, yet when they reſt not in his dealings with them, they imply ſome unrighteouſneſs in God. Many ſay God is wiſe, only wiſe, yet while they will be their own Carvers, and are unſatisfied with Gods allowances and providences, they make themſelves wiſer then God, or at leaſt imagin things might be ordered with greater wiſdom then they are. Many ſay God is great in mercy, greater infinitely then man, yet when they ſhould act faith about the pardon of their ſins, they act it as if God had but the mercy of a man, or as if his thoughts were as our thoughts, and his ways (in diſpencing favours) like our ways, and ſo they bring God down to their own ſize and ſcantlings. If theſe had been asked the Queſtion, whether God hath not greater mercy then man, they would have anſwered, doubtleſs he hath; and yet they are no more in believing, then if the mercy of God were of the ſame meaſure with the mercies of narrow-hearted man. Thus we model the great God, and our Idea's or apprehenſions of him according to what we ſee in our ſelves, not according to what he is and hath ſaid of himſelf. And what are our righteſt notions of God, but hoverings in the air, till we bring them down into practice, or live up to them, till every thing we do be an expoſition of what we ſpeak and believe of God. And when we believe indeed that God is greater then man, we make our ſelves juſt nothing before God: if we are any thing to our ſelves, or glory in any thing of our own, be it little or great before God, we do not give God the glory of his greatneſs. The Lord ſpeaking of his own greatneſs by the Prophet, ſaith, All nations are but as the drop of the bucket to him, yea they are as a little thing, as nothing, leſs then nothing; if therefore you make not every thing little, yea nothing before God, you detract from the glory of his greatneſs. Again, they only acknowledg God in his greatneſs, who both agree to all he doth as juſt, and receive it as good, yea as beſt, how bad ſoever it be to nature, or bitter to their ſence. Once more, they only acknowledg God fully in his greatneſs, who though God changeth and varieth his diſpenſations every day with them, though he empty them never ſo often from veſſel to veſſel, yet ſit down and ſay, God is unchangeable to them. It is becauſe the Lord changeth not that we are not conſumed (Mal. 3.6.) therefore what changes ſoever his people meet with, his heart and thoughts towards them are not changed.

> Secondly, Note, The very reaſon why we do not ſtoop to God in ſilence, why we do not ſuffer him quietly to do with us and diſpoſe of us how he will, is, becauſe we do not lay to heart as we ought the greatneſs of God.

Did we remember, that the great God is great in goodneſs, and great in wiſdom, as well as great in power; in a word, did we, when we ſay God is great, and greater then any man, know what we ſay, it would preſently ſtop our mouths, and for ever ſilence all our diſcontents and complainings, whether in reference to our perſonal or the publick concernments. We may pray that God would remove any affliction or evil that is upon us (to do ſo is not only our liberty but our duty) but we may not complain of any affliction, as an evil to us, nor would we ever make ſuch a complaint, if our hearts were taken up with this thought, that God is great in goodneſs. Why do we ſay, at any time, Surely we have ſuffered enough, or too much already? Why do we demand ſo curiouſly wherefore God ſhould uſe ſuch ſeverity againſt us? What is the reaſon of all this? even this, we do not conſider enough of his greatneſs. All our inward troubles at our outward troubles ariſe from this, becauſe we do not enough believe or not remember who God is. We by our ignorance and unbelief diveſt God (as much as in us lyeth) of his great goodneſs and wiſdom, when we fear, eſpecially when we conclude, things are not ordered for our good. And though every man is ready to ſay, he loaths yea trembles at ſuch thoughts, yet we may lodge many ſuch gueſts before we are aware. Whenſoever we are over-grieved at any affliction, our own or others, or would (without much free ſubmiſſion to the will of God) have things go otherwiſe then they do, we, upon the matter, make our ſelves greater and wiſer then God. And though this be far from our purpoſe, yet we cannot avoid the imputation of it. That which is not (as ſome diſtinguiſh) the aim, ſcope, and intendment of the ſpeaker or actor may yet be the aim and ſcope of his action, work or ſpeech; no doubt Job was very far from the leaſt thought of diminiſhing much more of denying the greatneſs of God, either in his power, wiſdom, or goodneſs, yea (as was granted before) he ſpake very highly of him in all theſe his glorious and divine perfections; It was not his end when he ſpake ſo impatiently and complainingly, to rob God of that honour of his greatneſs, yet Elihu did him no wrong when he ſaid his impatience and complainings did it. And if any ſhall be found complaining like Job, though they do not formally deny, that God is greater then man, yet that interpretation and conſtruction may juſtly be put upon their complaints.

Finis operis licet non operantis.

But ſome may here object and ſay, how was Job ſuch a mirror, ſuch a pattern of patience, as the Apoſtle James makes him (Chap. 5. 11.) If he manifeſted ſo much impatience as might be interpreted by others, though not intended by him a denial of the greatneſs of God?

I anſwer, though all agree (and the teſtimony of the Spirit of God is enough to confirm it, though all ſhould not agree) that the patience of Job was exceeding great, yet no man may ſay (nor doth the Spirit of God, in Scripture, ſay it) that his patience was perfect; his patience was ſuch as exceeded the moſt, yea (for ought that we know) the beſt of men, yet his was but the patience of a man, of a man compaſſed about with the like paſſions as other men. His patience was ſincere and without hypocriſie, but his patience was not compleat nor without infirmity; or his patience (we may ſay) was perfect as to the kind, but it was not perfect as to the degree. His patience deſerved both commendation and imitation; yet he ſhewed (at times) ſuch impatience as deſerved reproof, and ſhould not be imitated but mortified and avoyded. Good men do not only act leſs in goodneſs ſometimes, but ill and much amiſs. And while we ſee talleſt Cedars fail (they ſhall not utterly fall, Job did not) Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth (that is, who hath a ſtrong opinion of his own ſtrength) take heed leſt he fall, (as the Apoſtle cautions him, 1 Cor. 10.12.) for even the impatient complaints of Job in his ſufferings (like thoſe ſufferings of the Iſraelites for their ſins ſpoken of in the former verſes of that Chapter) fell from him for an enſample (or type) and are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the World are come.

Thus you ſee the reaſon why Elihu took up this common principle, which every Child learns out of a Catechiſm, to convince this holy man with. What was more known to Job, or to any knowing man, then this, that God is greater then man? Yet Elihu choſe this as the moſt commodious and effectual argument, to compoſe his ſpirit, and quiet him after all his diſtempered and tumultuating complaints; nor hath Elihu yet done arguing down the height and unquietneſs of Job's Spirit. We have him both reproving him for it by way of Queſtion, and giving him another unanſwerable argument againſt it, in the next Verſe.

Quæ pueris ipſis decantata ſunt nobis in gravi lucta & perturbatione, ut nova quædam proponenda ſunt. Mert.

Verſ. 13. Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him, for he giveth not account of any of his matters?

The words are a reproving Queſtion; As if he had ſaid, Thou doſt ill, very ill to ſtrive. There is a four-fold ſtriving, three of which are held forth in Scripture under the word of the Text.

First, There is a ſtriving with outward force and power, either perſonally man with man (properly called contention) or more generally, Nation with Nation, properly called War.

Secondly, There is a legal ſtriving, a ſtriving by way of plea, about matters of right and title. The word in the Text chiefly imports ſuch a judiciary ſtriving, a ſtrife in law, when the adverſe party or Plaintiff impleads and commenſeth his ſuit againſt the Defendant. Striving is taken in this cence and joined with warring in the deſcription of that conteſt which Jephtah had with the King of the Children of Ammon (Judg. 11.25.) And now art thou any thing better then Balack the Son of Zippor King of Moab? Did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael? Or did he ever fight againſt them? That is, did he either make War with Iſrael, or did he ſo much as challenge and plead his right to their Land by Law? That other name which Joaſh Gideons father occaſionally gave him (Judg. 6. 31, 32.) takes part from this word; Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, ſaying, Let Baal plead againſt him, becauſe he hath thrown down his Altar. As if he had ſaid, Let Baal come and enter his action againſt my Son if he pleaſe; and let my Son alone to anſwer him.

Thirdly, there is a logical ſtriving, or a ſtriving by dint of argument and reaſon. Thus diſputants ſtrive; and Books of controverſie abovt matters of faith and worſhip are called Books of Polemical Divinity. Nor indeed hath any kind of ſtrife been carried on with higher and hotter animoſities then thoſe managed by tongue and pen in writing and diſputing.

Fourthly, The word is applyed to any angry paſſionate chiding and complaining. Thus 'tis uſed in that famous Hiſtory (Exod. 17.) where the people of Iſrael (having journied from Sin and pitched in Rephidim, verſ. 1.) did chide with Moſes: From which act (verſ. 7.) He called the place Maſſa and Meribah, becauſe of the chiding of the Children of Iſrael, and becauſe they tempted the Lord, ſaying, Is the Lord among us or not? Becauſe the people of Iſrael ſtrove with Moſes, or rather with God himſelf, therefore to keep them under the ſence of this ſin and provocation, Moſes called the name of the place Meribah, which ſignifieth Striving. In this laſt ſence, as ſtriving is uſed by way of chiding and complaining we are to underſtand it here. Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? (ſaith Elihu) That is, why doſt thou chide and complain about the dealings of God with thee? Or becauſe he will not render thee a reaſon of his dealings with thee in this affliction. Job made many ſtriving and chiding complaints, his firſt were eminently ſuch (Chap. 3. 11.) Why died I not from the womb? Why did I not give up the ghoſt when I came out of the belly? Why did the knees prevent me, or why the breaſts, that I ſhould ſuck? He chideth hard about the hardneſs of his condition in this life, who chideth becauſe he liveth. Read him in the ſame language (Chap. 10, 18.) and in a language not much unlike it in ſeveral other places. Yea Job doth (I ſay not formally yet vertually) call out or challenge God more then once to plead with him, and make good his cauſe againſt him. Why doſt thou ſtrive with him?

For he giveth no account of any of his matters.

ענה

The word ſignifieth properly to anſwer, and ſo the Text might well enough be rendred here out of the original, he anſwereth not. Mr. Broughton ſaith, He will not ſpeak for all his dealings. If any man demand of God a reaſon of his doings, he may chuſe whether he will give it him or no: He will not be brought to a reckoning: He will not, he needeth not to anſwer, or give an account

Of any of his matters, or, of any of his words.

'Tis frequent in the Hebrew to expreſs matters or things, by this word, which in ſtrictneſs ſignifieth but a word. (Chap. 19. 28.) Seeing the root of the matter (the Text is the root of the word) is found in me. So here, He giveth not account of any of his words or matters. Again, the Original ſaith, He giveth not account of all his matters. We tranſlate full and right to the ſence, when we ſay, He giveth not account of any of his matters. For the meaning of Elihu is not that God giveth an account of ſome (though that be a truth) but not indeed of all his matters, he hath ſome reſerved caſes and counſels, but his meaning is, that he is not oblig'd to give any man an account of ſo much as of any of his matters. And then, that univerſal is to be taken diſtributively, All for any. So we render it (Pſal. 147.20.) where the Pſalmiſt ſhewing the ſpecial priviledges of Gods people, ſaith, He hath not dealt ſo with all Nations; we tranſlate more emphatically, He hath not dealt ſo with any Nation. God was ſo far from giving the ſame priviledg to all Nations, which he gave to his Iſrael, that he gave not the ſame to any Nation. As if he had ſaid, God hath honoured his peculiar people with peculiar favours, go enquire and ſearch all the Nations of the World, and ye ſhall not pick out a people upon whom God hath beſtowed ſuch rich and precious mercies, as he hath upon his Iſrael. And to this day the Iſrael of God in every Nation enjoy ſuch ſpiritual priviledges and mercies as the Nations with whom they are civilly mingled know not of. But, to the point; thus here, He giveth not account of all; that is, not of any of his matters.

לבל צוי.

Moſt of the Greek tranſlaters render (according to the ſtrictneſs of the letter) not matters but words: Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? For his words are ſuch as to which none can anſwer. As if the meaning of Elihu were; when God ſpeaks, no man is able to reply upon him, or contradict him. His ſayings are indeed irrefragable. Thus they gloſs their tranſlation; Why doſt thou call him into Judgment, or ſtrive with him? For all his ſpeeches are ſuch as cannot be contradicted. If God oppoſe, who can anſwer, and if God anſwer, who can oppoſe him? That's a good ſence, though not a good tranſlation.

Quid igitur ipſum vocas in judicium? omnes enim ſermones ejus ſunt ejuſmodi, quibus contradici non poſſit. Theod.

Some others interpret the latter part of the verſe as containing Job's anſwer to the queſtion put by Elihu in the firſt part of it; Why doſt thou ſtrive with God? (ſaith Elihu) To which Job is ſuppoſed, replying, Becauſe he gives me not an account of my matters; God doth not anſwer to my words, and therefore pardon me, if I complain or ſtrive with him: I hope while I am thus unanſwered you will hold me excuſed if I move again and again, yea, even ſtrive for an anſwer. But the Grammar of the Text is againſt this reading, the words being plainly in the third perſon, his matters, not in the firſt, my matters; and 'tis too great a boldneſs with the Text, to make ſuch a change in the tranſlation. Beſides 'tis more agreeable to the ſcope of the place, to take the latter part of the verſe as a reaſon given by Elihu, why Job ſhould not ſtrive with God, then to take it as a reaſon given by Job why he did.

Græci in prima perſona דברי verbis meis, & non in tertia ut nos legimus דבריו verbis ſuis; quaſi Elihu mimicῶς verba Jobi referat, cur cum eo auſus es contendere, dicens, Quia omnibus verbis meis non reſpondet, &c. Bold.

I find a learned tranſlater among the Moderns who taking the latter part of the verſe as a reaſon given by Job of his ſtriving with God ſpoken of in the firſt, yet keeps to the third perſon; Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? Becauſe he will not give an anſwer (or an account) of all his matters. As if Elihu had ſaid, I plainly perceive the cauſe why thou (O Job*) art ſo unquiet, and ſtill perſiſteſt ſtriving with God, 'tis even becauſe he doth not anſwer thy ſo often repeated deſire, to ſummon thy appearance before him, and then to give thee an account of his proceedings with thee. But conſider, man; Art thou well in thy wits? Knoweſt thou what thou doſt, or ſayeſt? Wilt thou a poor narrow-hearted Creature take it ill at the hands of the great God, and as it were ſtrive with him, becauſe de doth not render a reaſon of all his matters, and expound all his doings unto thee?* The argument may be formed thus.

Quare adverſus eum litigas quod de omnibus rebus ſuis non reſpondeat? Jun.

He is not juſt or right who ſtriveth with God, becauſe God doth not give him a reaſon of all his actions and adminiſtrations.

But thou ſeemeſt to ſtrive with God, becauſe he hath not given thee an account or reaſon of his adminiſtrations towards thee; therefore thou art not juſt.

This is a fair and proper ſence; yet I ſhall keep to our reading, and make this latter part of the verſe, as a ground or reaſon given by Elihu why Job ought not to ſtrive with God, as thoſe two other readings make it a reaſon why he did; as if Elihu had ſaid, Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? Conſider as God is greater then man, ſo he is abſolute in his greatneſs, or his is a ſoveraign greatneſs. For he giveth not account of any of his matters.

This I conceive the beſt and cleareſt rendring of theſe words, which thus underſtood yields us ſeveral uſeful obſervations: Firſt, upon the whole matter, thus:

Gracious men do not always hold out the ſame gracious frame of Spirit.

There was a time when Job was ſo far from ſtriving with God, far from doing or ſpeaking any thing which had the leaſt ſhadow or ſavour of it. Time was, when Job was altogether for, and in ſubmitting to God; Let God do what he will with him, he had not a word to ſay againſt him. After all the ſad reports and meſſages which were brought to him of the devaſtation of his whole eſtate in the field, yea of the diſaſterous death of all his children in one day, and at once; did Job ſtrive with God? Did he utter one word of complaint, or ſo much as of any diſſatisfaction? No, not one, but gave glory by this confeſſion; The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Was not here a clear yielding of himſelf up to God, to do what he would with him? Did he not freely lay himſelf low, when God had layed him at the loweſt? Who ever heard or read of a more perfect work of patience in a meer mortal man? Yet in the proceſs of the buſineſs, Job did not only ſpeak ſuch words as carried a ſhadow of ſtriving with God, but were real ſtrivings and uncomely pleadings with him. His heart did not retain that firſt ſweet ſubmiſſive frame throughout the affliction, which appeared to admiration at the beginning of it. The ſtate of grace abideth always, 'tis not (as ſome affirm) loſeable; 'tis not, like the beſt things of this world periſhing. But though a ſtate of grace abideth always, yet every mans grace (if any mans) doth not always abide in the ſame ſtate. A true frame of grace ſhall never be deſtroyed, but the heart of a gracious man doth not always continue in the ſame frame. The heat of grace may be cooled, the height of it abated, the ſtrength of it weakned, and the beauty of it faded. He that a while ago walked and acted very humbly, may upon another temptation act very proudly, and walk as if he were above all his brethren. He that one while hath acted very ſelf-denyingly, may at another time act very ſelf-ſeekingly. He that hath acted very lovingly, (the very law of love being ſtamped upon his words and works) may at another time act very unlovely and loveleſly, and do things which are very much beſide and below, yea contrary to the fulfilling of that Royal Law; He may be ſo far from bearing his brothers burden, (which is the fulfilling of that Law of Chriſt, *Gal.*6.2.) that he may be a burden to his Brother. And while at one time you might have done and ſpoken almoſt what you would to him, and he could bear it, at another time, do what you can, or ſpeak what you can, he is offended. Such changes and varieties are found upon the moſt gracious frames of ſpirit, which the beſt of Saints have in this world; We have only this to hold to, the ſtate of grace is unchangeable, and we are waiting for ſuch a frame of grace as ſhall never change. That gracious frame in which the hand of God will ſet us up in the day of our reſurrection to glory, ſhall never change, nor decline a hairs breadth to all eternity. We ſhall be as pure, and as holy, and as ſpiritual, and as heavenly, and as meek, and as full of the praiſe of God for ever, as ever. As full to eternity as in the very firſt moment in which that glorious frame ſhall be ſet up. But in this life to how great a degree of grace ſoever we attain, we ſeldom retain the ſame degree, but are flowing and ebbing like the water, waxing and waining like the Moon. Job was found ſtriving with God, who a little before had ſo humbly ſubmitted and was ſo fully reſigned unto him.

Secondly, Obſerve, There is a ſpirit in man very apt to ſtrive with God.

Do ye think (ſaith the Apoſtle, *Jam.*4.5.) that the Scripture ſaith in vain, The ſpirit that dwelleth in us, luſteth to envy, or (as the margin hath it) enviouſly; ſurely no; the Scripture doth not ſpeak this in vain, and if any think it doth, their thoughts are vain. Now, as there are luſtings in men to envy againſt their brethren, becauſe of the gifts and good things of God which they enjoy; ſo there are luſtings in men to diſcontent againſt God, becauſe of the evils which themſelves ſuffer. When God ſeems to contend with us, we really fall to contending with God. The waters of Meribah will be an everlaſting witneſs of this; of which Moſes ſaid (Numb. 20. 13.) This is the water of Meribah, becauſe the children of Iſrael ſtrove with the Lord, and he was ſanctified in them. The Apoſtle doth more then intimate this readineſs of man to ſtrive with God, while by a vehement expoſtulation he checks it, and reproves all men for it. (1 Cor. 10. 22.) Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie? are we ſtronger then he? They preſume much upon their ſtrength, who are forward to ſtrive, they eſpecially who provoke and challenge others to ſtrive with them. There is a ſpirit in man which ſtouts it with God, even to a provocation of ſtrife with him.

But you will ſay, When may we be ſaid to ſtrive with God? I anſwer, we do it theſe four ways.

Firſt, Man ſtriveth with God by diſobeying his commands; that's a ſtrife with his holineſs. The Laws of God bear the image or ſtamp of his holineſs. All diſobedience is an unanſwerableneſs to the Law, wilful diſobedience is a making void the Law. He that is reſolved to ſin, wiſheth there were no Law to ſtop him from ſinning, or to puniſh him when he hath ſinned. What greater ſtrife can be raiſed againſt the Law-giver, then to wiſh he had given no ſuch Law?

Secondly, Men ſtrive with God, by not believing or diſtruſting his promiſes. That's a ſtrife with his faithfulneſs, or with his power. Unbelief is one of the worſt ways, if not the worſt of all the ways of ſtriving with God. The reaſon why that place at the rock in Horeb was called Meribah (Exod. 17. 7.) was becauſe the people did not believe. They thought they muſt die with thirſt in the wilderneſs when they ſaw no water. They fell to this ſin again a ſecond time upon the like occaſion, while they abode in Kadeſh (Numb. 20. 1, 2, 3.) And as the people ſtrove there with God by their rebellious unbelief, ſo alſo did Moſes and Aaron by their unbelief, that God would give water to ſuch rebels, as it follows in the ſame Chapter (*Ver.*10, 11, 12.) There is no ſin ſo often, or ſo properly called a provocation as unbelief is. Yea by unbelief we ſtrive ſo much with God, that we are ſaid to weary him (*Iſa.*7. 13.) O how do they weary God, who either think him ſo weak that he cannot, or ſo unfaithful that he will not make good his word, or perform his promiſes! The firſt of theſe is always in unbelief, the latter often.

Thirdly, We ſtrive with God by not bearing his hand, or by our impatience under the croſs which his hand layeth upon us: while we quarrel with the rod, we quarrel with God who chaſteneth us with it. This was the moſt ſpecial way in which Job ſtrove with God; and the ſinfulneſs of it, hath been ſeveral times toucht upon in this Book.

Fourthly, Any murmuring word about, yea any diſcontented thought with our own condition, though not vented by words, though it be kept in, and lie cloſe in the boſom, is a ſtriving with God. And ſo likewiſe is any tumultuating thought about his providences towards others and his ſtating of affairs in the World.

Now as there is ſuch a ſinful principle in man to ſtrive with God; ſo conſidering, as hath been ſhewed, how many ways it works (and many more ways of its working might be ſhewed, this, I ſay, being conſidered) we may be found ſtriving with God before we think of it, yea while we oppoſe the very thought of it. Therefore (as Gamaliel warned the Jews, ſaying (Acts 5. 39.) Take heed what ye do, leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God; Thoſe Jews did not think their oppoſing the Meſſengers and Miniſters of Chriſt, was a fighting againſt God; But Gamaliël told them plainly it was.) So in many other caſes, we may do and ſay that which brings us under the ſame charge of ſtriving with or againſt God, though we have no purpoſe (as Job had not) to ſtrive with him.

Again, As this Text ſheweth us Job ſtriving with God, ſo it ſheweth us Elihu ſtriving with or queſtioning Job about it. This Queſtion or expoſtulation, Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? was a chiding ſevere reproof of him for doing ſo.

Hence Note, For man to ſtrive with God is moſt uncomely.

Doth it ſuit the condition, or become the ſtate of man to do ſo? It doth not become man as a creature to ſtrive with God, much leſs as a new creature, as a profeſſed ſervant of God, as a Saint, as a Chriſtian. We never act ſo unlike either creatures, or new creatures, Saints, and Chriſtians, as when we ſtrive with God. 'Tis a ſhame for a child to ſtrive with his Father, or for a ſervant to ſtrive with his Maſter, how much more for a creature to ſtrive with his Creator, man with God?

Fourthly, The rebuke which Elihu gave Job, did not only import the uncomelineſs of his ſtriving with God, but the ſinfulneſs of it.

Hence Note, To ſtrive with God (in any of thoſe ways before deſcribed) is a ſin exceeding ſinful.

How extreamly ſinful it is for man to ſtrive with God, appears by all the relative duties of man to God: Every ſervant and ſon of God, is bound, firſt, to ſubmit to God; is it not exceeding ſinful to ſtrive where we ought to ſubmit? Secondly, Every godly man by theſe relations to God, is bound to be content with (which is more then barely to ſubmit to) all his dealings; Do not they ſin, who in ſtead of being content, ſtrive with God becauſe he deals ſo with them? Thirdly, Man ought, not only to be content, but to be well-pleaſed with what God doth; How far are they departed from a well-pleaſedneſs with God, who ſtrive againſt him, which is an act of high diſpleaſure? It is ſaid of David (2 Sam. 3.36.) Whatſoever the King did pleaſed all the people. The people did not ſay to David their King, do what you will, we will be pleaſed with it; But David was ſo gracious a Prince, ſo good a King, that he did nothing that was juſtly diſpleaſing to the people. 'Tis more then comes to the ſhare of a man, though a King, to ſay, Let him do what he will, we will be pleaſed with it; but 'tis certainly our duty to ſay to God, Do what you will, do your pleaſure with us, and to us, we will (through grace) be pleaſed with it. Is it not very ſinful to ſtrive with him about any thing he doth, in and with all whoſe doings we ought to acquieſce, and be well pleaſed?

Fifthly, Theſe words, Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? import a high preſumption in thoſe who do ſo.

Hence Obſerve, Striving with God is a preſumptuous Sin.

The Prophet ſaith, (Iſa. 45. 9.) Woe unto him that ſtriveth with his maker. Let the potſherd ſtrive with the potſherds of the earth: Shall the clay ſay to him that faſhioneth it, what makeſt thou? or thy work, he hath no hands? When the Prophet ſaith, Let the potſherd ſtrive with the potſherds of the earth; his meaning is, let man ſtrive with man, but let not any man preſume to ſtrive with his maker; for then the potſherd ſtriveth with [illegible] potter. In all which he doth not encourage man to ſtrive with man, (though his match) but ſheweth how inſufferable a boldneſs it is for any man (how matchleſs ſoever among men) to ſtrive with God. The King of Judah having ſent a challenge to the King of Iſrael, He returned this anſwer (2 Kings 14. 9.) The thiſtle that was in Lebanon ſent to the Cedar that was in Lebanon, &c. As if he had ſaid, What a preſumption is it for a thiſtle to equal it ſelf with a Cedar? And therefore he adviſeth (Ver. 10.) Thou haſt indeed ſmitten Edom, and thy heart hath lifted thee up: glory of this and tarry at home; for why ſhouldeſt thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou ſhouldeſt fall, thou and Judah with thee? As if he had ſaid, thou canſt get nothing by medling with me but blows, and moſt probably, thine own ruin to boot. Now if an earthly King ſhall look upon it as a preſumption for another King his equal in dignity to contend with him, how much more may the God of Heaven, who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, count it an high preſumption for any man, though the greateſt King on earth, to ſtrive with him?

Sixthly, We uſe to ſay to thoſe who act fooliſhly, Why do you thus? And therefore when Elihu ſaith to Job, Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him?

We learn, Striving with God is a fooliſh and a moſt irrational thing.

Sinners are fools, all ſin is folly, irrationality is ſtampt upon every ſin. Striving with God is a ſin ſo eminently fooliſh as may carry away the bell, for fooliſhneſs, from all other ſins. I will give you three things, to ſhew why it muſt needs be ſo.

Firſt, We cannot help our ſelves by ſtriving with God. Chriſt argues the folly of inordinate cares from this ground (Matth. 6. 27.) Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his ſtature? It is not mans care, but the preſence and bleſſing of God which increaſeth both the ſtature of man and his eſtate. Cares may break our ſleep, yea break our hearts, but they cannot fill our purſes, nor heighten our perſons, either in a natural or in a civil notion. Is it not then a fooliſh thing to take inordinate care? is it not greater folly to ſtrive with God? Seeing as by caring you cannot get any of the good things of the world, ſo by ſtriving with God, you cannot get off any of thoſe evils which he layeth upon you. Secondly, Is it not a very fooliſh thing to ſtrive with God, ſeeing we are ſo far from helping our ſelves out of trouble by it, that we do but increaſe our trouble, and the more entangle our ſelves by it? What do we by ſtrugling but ſtraiten the bonds of our affliction, and get wearineſs, in ſtead of expected eaſe? till we are quiet with God, how can we hope that he ſhould ſend us quietneſs? Thirdly, It is a fooliſh thing to ſtrive with God, becauſe by ſtriving with him in reference to any miſery that is upon us, we hinder our ſelves from taking comfort in any remaining mercy. Though God takes away many mercies, yet while life remaineth there is ſomewhat of mercy remaining. When Job was ſtripped to his skin, yet he had ſomewhat left, which was a ground of his bleſſing God. The greateſt loſers have ſomewhat left, they eſcape at leaſt (as Job ſaid he did at worſt, Chap. 19. 20.) with the skin of their teeth. But while we ſtrive with God about the mercies we have loſt, we loſe the comfort of all the mercies we ſtill enjoy. And is it not extream folly to deprive our ſelves of what we have by complaining about what we have not? Why doſt thou ſtrive? Thus much from the emphaſis of the former part of the verſe, as 'tis put into a chiding or reproving Queſtion, Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him? From the latter branch. He giveth not account of any of his matters.

Obſerve, Firſt, The power and dominion of God is abſolute.

God is not ſubject to any reckonings with man whatſoever he doth. He that may do what he will, and can do nothing but what is right, neither may nor can be brought to any account for what he hath done. He that is unaccountable is abſolute in power.

Further, God needs not give man any account, upon theſe three grounds. Firſt, He oweth no man any thing; He hath received nothing of us, and if a man hath not received, he needeth not account. They that have any truſt from men, are to give account. But what hath God received from man? Man receives his all from God. Why then ſhould God give any account?

Secondly, Conſider, the Lord hath wronged no man, nor can he. He is infinitely juſt and righteous in all his ways; He not only doth juſt things, but things are juſt becauſe he doth them. Why ſhould he give an account of any of his matters, who neither doth nor can do any matter which is unjuſt. If we knew and were fully aſſured of a man (in whoſe hands we have truſted much) that he were ſo juſt, that he would not (though he had opportunity) deceive us of a farthing, we would never call him to an account. As it is ſaid of thoſe treaſurers in the ſtory of the Kings (2 Kings 12. 15.) They reckoned not with the men into whoſe hand they delivered the mony to be beſtowed on workmen, for they dealt faithfully. An example hardly to be parallel'd in an age by the ſons of men. Many are more deſirous of truſts, then careful to diſcharge them; They love to have much treaſure paſs through their hands, that ſome of it may, in paſſage, ſlip into their own pockets and purſes. Juſtice and faithfulneſs are rare Jewels among men, and therefore it is but need they ſhould have a check upon them, and be called to an account. But the holy God is altogether juſt and faithful, therefore to what purpoſe ſhould he be called to an account. Let us reſt quiet in this acknowledgment, That he whoſe will is the higheſt reaſon; can do nothing without reaſon. Man was created under God, and then he returns to the order of his creation, when he prefers the judgment of God, even when he doth not underſtand it, before his own.

Thirdly, There is no man, no nor Angel, that hath any authority to call God to an account. They that are accountable to others, are under their power, either as being in degree above them, or as having made a compact and Covenant with them (though their equals) to give them an

an account. But who ſhall call God to an account, who is higher then the higheſt? And though God hath condeſcended to make a covenant with man, and therein given him aſſurance that he will do him good, yet God hath engaged himſelf to give us an account how or in what way he makes good or performs his Covenant. Man muſt give an account to God how he hath performed the Articles of the Covenant, not God to man. As man is a frail dying creature, ſo he is an accountable creature (Luke 16. 2.) Give an account of thy Stewardſhip, for thou mayſt be no longer Steward (Rom. 14. 12.) So then every one of us ſhall give an account of himſelf to God. God will call every man to a ſtrict account of his receits and expences, what talents of time and opportunities of parts and abilities, of Power and Authorities, have been put into his hand, as alſo how he hath husbanded and improved them. We, alas poor creatures, by ſtriving with God, call him (upon the matter) to give us an account of his matters; And in the mean time forget the account which we muſt give to him of all our matters. It is our duty and will be our wiſdom to account ſo with our ſelves every day, that we may be ready for our account in that great and laſt Audit-Day; And as to remember and prepare for our own account in that day, will keep us from doing or ſaying any thing which may be interpreted a calling of God to an account all our days: ſo that remembrance will make us ſtrive how to improve and be bettered by the afflictions and troubles wherewith we are exerciſed in the world, in ſtead of ſtriving with God, becauſe he puts us upon thoſe ſeverer exerciſes; for how we have improved our afflictions will be one part (and that a very conſiderable one) of our account to God in that day.

Laſtly, The two parts of this Verſe connected and conſidered together, (Why doſt thou ſtrive againſt him, for he giveth not account of any of his matters?) The latter being a reaſon of the former, give us this Obſervation;

> God being abſolute in power we ought to ſit down quietly under all his dealings: Or thus, The conſideration of Gods abſolute Soveraignty, that he gives not account of any of his matters, ſhould ſtop all our ſtrivings and pleadings with or againſt God.

Our ſtrivings againſt God are of two ſorts, or in a double reſpect; They reſpect either our eternal, or our temporal eſtate.

Firſt, With reſpect to our eternal ſtate (for about that we are apt to call God to account.) O what ſtrivings are there in the hearts of men about Gods abſolute Soveraignty in electing of ſome and rejecting of others. The Apoſtle is much upon it (Rom. 9.) where having repreſented the Lord ſpeaking thus by Moſes (Verſ. 15.) I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion: He preſently prevents an Objection or the ſtriſe of man with God about that ſaying, (Verſ. 19.) Thou wilt ſay then, why doth he yet find fault? (As if men might find fault with God, if he in that caſe ſhould find fault with them?) For who hath reſiſted his will? This is mans plea againſt the ſoveraign will of God. But what ſaith the Lord by the Apoſtle to ſuch a pleader? We have his reproof of him for an anſwer in the next verſe, Nay but O man, who art thou that replyeſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power over the clay? The Apoſtle brings in this Argument as to mans eternal ſtate; he muſt not ſtrive with God about that. He muſt not ſay, why doth God find fault with man? O man, who art thou that doſt logick it thus with God? His abſolute power is his reaſon why he diſpoſeth thus or thus of thee, or any man elſe. He will give thee no account why it is ſo, but his own will to have it ſo. For ſhame ſit down, ſtop thy mouth for ever, ſpeak not thus to God. If thou art, as thou canſt not deny, a thing formed by God, then ſay not why haſt thou made me thus. And as now thou ſtriveſt with God about that which thou canſt not underſtand, ſo at laſt (though now thou doſt not) thou ſhalt underſtand that thou oughteſt not to have ſtriven with him about it. And indeed if men have a mind to ſtrive with God, they may find as many occaſions for it in the doctrin of his conditional decrees of foreſeen faith, repentance, and preſevering obedience, as in his abſolute. We ſhall never want matter of quarrelling with God, till we have learned ſimply, that is, graciouſly to ſubmit.

Secondly, This truth ſhould much more quiet our ſpirits, and ſtop our ſtrivings in reference to our temporal eſtate. And that,

Firſt, As wrapt up in common with others. Did we conſider the Soveraign power of God in ordering the affairs of Nations and Churches, we would glorifie him in a gracious ſilence however we ſee things go with them. The Scripture urgeth us often to this fixedneſs of mind in the midſt of all publick revolutions and changes upon this only account. Hear David (Pſal. 46. 9, 10.) Come behold the works of the Lord, (What works? ruining works) what deſolation he hath made in the earth. God made ſtrange work in the World at that time, Thoſe Countrys which before were as the Garden of God, became like a deſolate Wilderneſs; who was able to bear this with patience? Yet the Spirit of God ſaith in the next words, it muſt be patiently born. When God lets men ſtrive and war with one another to a common confuſion, yet no man may ſtrive with God about it; and the reaſon given why no man may, is only this (which is indeed all the reaſon in the world) He is God. So it follows in the Pſalm, Be ſtill and know that I am God; As if the Lord had ſaid, not a word, do not ſtrive nor reply, whatever you ſee, hold your peace; know that I being God I give no account of any of my matters. Thus the Prophet cautions the whole world (Zech. 2. 13.) Be ſilent O all fleſh before the Lord, (do not diſpute the doings of God, do not murmure at them) for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation: That is, God is going to work (as a man raiſed out of his bed is) therefore do not you trouble your ſelves, nor riſe up againſt him in your words or thoughts what work ſoever he makes. Like counſel is given (Pſal. 75. 5.) Lift not up your horn on high, ſpeak not with a ſtiff neck; for promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South: But God is the Judg, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. All great changes proceed from his judgment; take heed of judging the ſentence of the great Judg. Remember, That he whoſe name alone is Jehovah, is the moſt high over all the Earth. (Pſal. 83. 18.)

Again, This is as true if we reſpect the private or perſonal eſtate of any man. If God makes a man poor in eſtate or deſpiſed in the World; if he make him ſick or weak in body, he muſt not ſay unquietly, why doth God thus? If he taketh away our Relations, if he empty our families we muſt not ſtrive with him. When old Eli had received one of the ſaddeſt meſſages that ever was ſent man. It is the Lord (ſaith he) let him do what ſeemeth him good (1 Sam. 3. 18.) So David (Pſal. 39. 9.) I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it (Pſal. 62. 1.) Truly my Soul waiteth patiently upon God. The word is, my Soul is ſilent before God. And (Pſal. 42. 5.) How doth David chide his Soul for making a noiſe? Why art thou diſquieted, O my Soul? hope thou in God.

But you will ſay, May we not at all ſtrive? What ever God doth in the World, or with us, muſt we ſit down under it, or reſt ſatisfied in it, and ſay nothing?

I anſwer, Firſt, we may and ought to be very ſenſible of all the dealings of God; but we muſt not be unquiet under any of them. It is one thing to feel the ſmart, and another thing to diſpute the rod. Some are under a kind of Stoical ſtupidity; they do not ſtrive with God, becauſe they do not mind what God doth, they are not ſenſible. Others are ſtout, ſturdy, and proud ſpirited, they care not for the croſs, they ſlight and deſpiſe rebukes. Thus or upon theſe grounds not to ſtrive with God is as bad, if not worſe then that ſtriving with him which this point diſſwades and diſapproves. We may, yea we ought to take notice of every ſtroak we receive from God.

Secondly, As we ſhould be ſenſible of the hand of God at any time upon us, ſo we may pray for the removing of his hand; 'Tis not a ſinful but a gracious act, to ſtrive with God by prayer for deliverance out of trouble.

Thirdly, A man under the Rod may uſe means to get it off, and free himſelf from it, even while he is quiet under it, So then, the quietneſs of mind in our afflicted condition here intended and preſſed, is oppoſed only, firſt, to fretting and repining. Secondly, to vexing and tumultuating. Thirdly, to diſtracting cares. Fourthly, to deſponding fears. Fifthly, to killing ſorrows. Sixthly, to uncompoſedneſs of ſpirit for our callings. Seventhly, to hard thoughts of God. Eighthly, to the uſing of any unlawful means to help to reſcue our ſelves out of the hand of evil.

And that we may be preſerved from all theſe ſtrivings againſt God, and unquietneſs of ſpirit under any of his ſaddeſt and darkeſt diſpenſations, which will certainly run us upon ſome of, if not all thoſe eight moſt dangerous rocks, laſt mentioned, Let me lay down a few conſiderations, why we ſhould not ſtrive with God in ſuch a manner: And preſcribe ſome preſervatives to keep us at the greateſt diſtance from it.

Firſt, Conſider, to ſtrive with God diſhonours God and darkens his glory; for hereby we call his wiſdom and goodneſs, yea his truth and faithfulneſs to us in Queſtion. What can be done more diſhonourable to God then this? God reſented it as a great diſhonour, that Moſes and Aaron did not ſanctifie him (that is, give glory to his name) before the Children of Iſrael (Num. 20. 12.) and therefore told them, Ye ſhall not bring the Children of Iſrael into the land which I have given them. As if he had ſaid, Ye have not honoured me as ye ought in this thing, and therefore I will not honour you in that. But what is it, that Moſes and Aaron did not ſanctifie God in? it was (ſaith the Text) in not believing. And what is that (at beſt) but a ſtriving with God, as to the truth of his word and his faithfulneſs in fulfilling it?

Secondly, Such ſtriving with God hinders the exerciſe of grace, and ſtops the work of the new creature. He that ſtriveth with God by way of murmuring, can never ſtrive with God by praying and believing.

Thirdly, Such ſtrivings with God are the exerciſings of our luſts and corruptions. Then is the time for anger and diſcontent, or any evil affection to come forth and act their part.

Fourthly, Striving with God is an argument that ſin hath much ſtrength in us, and that corruption hath got a mighty hand over us.

Fifthly, Striving with God layeth us open to all the temptations of Satan, to all the fiery darts of the Devil. Our ſhield is gone, when once we ſtrive with God, who is our ſhield in all Satans ſtrivings and aſſaults againſt us; And then we ſtand naked before that armed Enemy.

Sixthly, Striving with God, doth at once unfit us for every good duty, and putteth us further off from every deſired mercy.

Seventhly, and laſtly, Striving againſt God, makes man moſt like the Devil, who is the moſt unquiet and diſcontented creature in the world, and is always both ſtriving with God, and vexing at his own condition. The Devil's ſin at firſt was ſtriving with God, and 'tis the ſum of all his actings and workings againſt man ever ſince. None reſemble the Devil more lively then male-contents; and who are they but ſuch as ſtrive and ſtruggle againſt the afflictive providences of God.

Now for the preſerving and keeping of our hearts from this great, this complicated ſin, a ſin containing many ſins in it, and diſpoſing us to all ſin. Lay theſe things to heart.

Firſt, Let us conſider our own nothingneſs in compariſon of God. God is all, and what are we? we are nothing, and ſhall we ſtrive with God? ſhall folly ſtrive againſt wiſdom, and weakneſs againſt ſtrength? When the Prophet would comfort the people of God againſt the ſtrivings of the Nations with them, he doth it upon this conſideration (Iſa. 40. 17.) All nations before him are as nothing, and they are counted to him leſs then nothing, and vanity; To whom will ye compare him? And ſurely we may by the ſame argument, much more deter all men from ſtriving with God. Shall ſingle perſons ſtrive againſt him, to whom not only they, but whole nations are nothing, yea and leſs then nothing?

Secondly, Do we find our ſelves under a croſs, or in a hard condition? Remember we have deſerved no better. As we are nothing, ſo we have deſerved nothing. Jacob to keep his ſpirit quiet in a time of great diſtreſs confeſſed (Gen. 32. 10.) Lord I am unworthy of the leaſt of thy mercies. As if he had ſaid, I have no reaſon to complain, or be angry, to fret or vex at this diſpenſation, yea though thou ſhouldſt let the cloud of my brothers wrath break upon me, and ſwallow me up, for what am I? If we conſider we have deſerved no good, we ſhall never ſtrive with God about any evil that befalls us; eſpecially, if we conſider,

Thirdly, That we are ill-deſerving, or ſuch as deſerve the greateſt evils. None of us ſuffer but what our own ſin hath procured, yea ſin might have procured us ſorer ſufferings. Every ſin hath a croſs in the belly of it. And ſhall we ſtrive with God becauſe of our croſſes, when our ſins have made them?

Fourthly, Why ſhould we ſtrive with God about theſe things? Are they worth the ſtriving with God about? Surely they are not worth the ſtriving with men about, much leſs with God. If we were in the beſt outward eſtate that ever any man enjoyed in this World, yet we were not then got a ſtep beyond vanity (Pſal. 39. 5.) Every man in his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity. Suppoſe God ſhould give you a blank, and bid you ſit down and Write what you would have as to your outward ſtate, and then beſtow it upon you, yet in this beſt eſtate, you and your all are altogether vanity. And will ye ſtrive with God for taking a vain thing from you? Will you be ſo much diſſatisfied for the taking away or want of that which could not ſatisfie you when you had it, nor can when you have it again? If a man had all theſe comforts which he ſtrives for, they could not make him happy, why then ſhould he ſtrive becauſe they are removed from him? But as they are vanity, becauſe unable to ſatisfie when we have them, ſo they are vanity, becauſe of our uncertainty to hold them; Yea ſuppoſe we hold them as long as we can have them, it is but a while. And ſhall we ſtrive with God about loſing that which at longeſt we cannot keep long? To be ſure theſe things are not neceſſary for us: Chriſt ſaid to Martha, There is one thing neceſſary (Luke 10. 42.) But a worldly comfort of any kind is not the neceſſary thing which Chriſt there intends; And ſhall we ſtrive with God about unneceſſaries?

Fifthly, Know, afflictions are the portion of the people of God in this life. They are the corrections of a Father, and there is no ſon but hath his correction, or may have it. And ſhall we ſtrive with God for ſending us our portion, our ſon-like, child-like portion?

Sixthly, I would ſay this to believers, Why will ye ſtrive with God about any of your afflictions? they are for your good and benefit. And will ye ſtrive with God, becauſe he is doing you good? Let your afflictions be never ſo ſad, never ſo ſore, and to ſence never ſo bad, yet God is doing you good by them; be not angry with your own good?

Laſtly, Why do we ſtrive with God under our afflictions; He loveth us as much under affliction, as in a proſperous condition. God is tender to his in their troubles, and ſhall they be harſh to him, when he is ſo tender towards them? A parent that hath but nature, will tender his child moſt when ſick and weak, and will not God? Let us take heed we be not found ſtriving with, or having hard thoughts of God while the bowels of his moſt tender compaſſions are moving towards us.

To ſhut up this whole point. As Chriſt when he ſaw his Diſciples in danger to be carried away with the fear of man, ſaith to them (Luke 12. 4, 5.) Be not afraid of them that can kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; But I will forewarn you, whom you ſhall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to caſt into Hell, yea I ſay unto you, fear him. Now, as becauſe men are apt to fear, yea moſtly to fear that which they ſhould not, Chriſt ſheweth them whom to fear. So (as hath been ſhewed) becauſe men are very apt to ſtrive, but they commonly ſtrive with thoſe, and about thoſe things, which they ſhould not. Therefore I will tell you with whom and with what ye ſhould ſtrive. If ye will needs be ſtriving, pray

Firſt, Strive with the ſin in your own boſoms, ſtrive with your own luſts and corruptions. One of the great Goſpel duties which we are called to, is to mortifie our earthly members. To ſtrive with all inordinate affections, with pride, with envie, with love of the world, and with uncharitableneſs to the death, is our duty, if ye will needs ſtrive, ſtrive with theſe.

Secondly, If you will needs be ſtriving, then ſtrive with the ſins of others in a gracious and zealous manner, as Nehemiah did, who contended with the Nobles for their prophanation of the Sabbath, and their unlawful marriages (Neh. 13. 17. & 25.) We ſhould ſtrive with one another to hinder that which is evil. Gideon broke down Baals altar, he ſtrove with Baal, and was therefore ſirnamed Jerubbaal (Judg. 6. 32.) So let us ſtrive with the corrupt practices, courſes, and cuſtoms of the times, we live in, not dally and comply with them as many do. The Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 12. 4.) Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, ſtriving againſt ſin, This is, either the ſin of others, or the ſin which others would force you to. Though we ſhould ſtrive againſt our own ſins eſpecially, yet 'tis good to ſtrive againſt ſin in whomſoever we ſee it.

Thirdly, If you will be ſtriving, then ſtrive with Satan, The Adverſary; Submit to God, and reſiſt the Devil, contain the whole duty of man, (James 4. 7.) Our buſineſs is not to ſtrive with God, but to ſubmit to him; And our buſineſs is not to ſubmit to the Devil, but to ſtrive with him. How do moſt run a contrary courſe? They reſiſt God, and ſubmit to the Devil. O ſad! Here's a threefold bleſſed ſtriſe; Firſt, Strive with the luſts and corruptions of your own hearts; Secondly, Strive with the ſins of others, and their ſollicitations of you to ſin: Thirdly, Strive with the Devil and his temptations. Do not ſtrive with God, why ſhould we ſtrive with God at any time, or in any thing, whom at all times, and in all things, we ought to ſerve, honour and obey? So much of this chiding Queſtion, in which Elihu reproves Job, and he had given but too much occaſion for it. Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? he giveth not account of any of his matters.

VERS. 14.

For God ſpeaketh once, yea, twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

IN this Verſe and the context following, Elihu begins his ſecond anſwer to Job, which is alſo continued to the end of the Chapter. His anſwer is laid down, Firſt, In general at the 14. Verſe.

Secondly, In particulars by way of inſtance, from the 15. Verſe to the 29.

Thirdly, He ſums up or recapitulates the whole of his diſcourſe, in the 29. and 30. Verſes.

Fourthly, Concludes, ſeriouſly inviting Job to anſwer what he had ſaid, as alſo, what he had yet to ſay, Verſ. 31. 32, 33.

This 14. Verſe hath ſome difficulty in it; And though the croſs and various thoughts of Interpreters about it have made it more difficult, yet there is one thing wherein all center and agree; That, Elihu in this 14. Verſe and ſo forward propounds certain ways by which God is pleaſed to reveal and manifeſt himſelf unto man. Firſt, to humble and bring man to a true ſenſe of himſelf; Secondly, to work in him an acknowledgment of his great goodneſs and righteouſneſs in all his dealings with the Children of men. For having ſaid at the 13. Verſe, God gives not account of any of his matters; He is above all reckonings and days of Audit (having thus, I ſay, aſſerted the abſolute ſoveraignty of God over man) he adds, to mitigate and allay the ſeeming ſeverity of this aſſertion, That although God be ſo high and great, that he is not at all obliged to give any account of himſelf or of his ways to the creature, nor will allow any man to be ſo bold as to ſtrive with him about, or queſtion any of his matters, yet he is pleaſed freely and graciouſly to condeſcend unto man many ways; and not only once but often, not only often in one way, but by ſeveral ways to give him clear intimations what his will is, what he requires of him, and calls unto him for, if man had but will and underſtanding to perceive it; for he ſpeaketh once, yea, twice, yet man perceiveth it not. So then, man hath no reaſon to complain (as Job ſometimes had done, and many others in like diſtreſſes do) that he is in the dark, and doth not perceive the mind of God towards him, why he is ſo afflicted, and why God contendeth with him; for God doth give touches, hints, and admonitions, ſometimes more privately, ſometimes more openly, and if man doth not perceive them, it is his own fault.

Deus nemini rationem reddere tenetur. Tanto tamen amore nos complectitur ut ſæpius judiciorum ſuorum rationes aperire dignetur, etſi id non ſemper obſervamus. Lavat.

Verſ. 14. For he ſpeaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

We render the firſt word of this verſe by that cauſal particle, For; yet becauſe the Text doth not ſtrictly carry a reaſon in it of what was ſaid before, but is rather an explication or an accommodation of it; therefore ſome begin the verſe, not with that cauſal particle For, but with an adverb of time, When. So Mr. Broughton, When the omnipotent ſpeaketh once, &c. And the reaſon of it is, becauſe we find another adverb of time anſwering this at the 16. verſe, When God ſpeaketh once or twice, and man perceiveth it not, &c. Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction. As if Elihu had ſaid; If ſpeaking will not do it, ſomewhat elſe ſhall; or when God having ſpoken once or twice, yet finds man unattentive and unſenſible, he takes another courſe; then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth up their inſtruction. If they underſtand not his meaning by dreams and viſions, he will awaken them to purpoſe. We ſay,

For God ſpeaketh.] As if here a reaſon were given why God ſhould not be called at all (as being ſo great he ought not) to give man an account of any of his matters, for he ſpeaketh once or twice, he is aforehand with man.

For God ſpeaketh.] To ſpeak, in ſtrict ſence, as ſpeaking is the forming up of words by an articulate voyce, is proper to man; yet in Scripture God is ſaid to ſpeak, when or howſoever he maketh known his mind to man. Which he always doth in ſuch a way, as is moſt ſuitable to his own greatneſs, with reſpect to mans weakneſs. When God giveth us any intimation of his own will, and of our duty, of what he will do for us, or of what he would have us do, then he is ſaid to ſpeak to us. (Heb. 1. 1.) God who at ſundry times and in divers manners ſpake in time paſt unto the Fathers by the Prophets, hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken to us by his Son. God ſpake to the old Fathers, as at many times, or by many parts, ſo in divers ways and manners; he delivered his mind unto the people uſually by the Prophets, and to the Prophets in dreams and viſions. The ſpeaking of God was either immediate from himſelf in thoſe dreams and viſions to the Prophets, or mediate by the Prophets. And though now God doth not ſpeak to us immediately as he did to the Prophets before Chriſt came in the fleſh, and to the Apoſtles after he was come in the fleſh, yet all the Prophetical and Apoſtolical writings are the ſpeakings of God to us, beſides what he dayly ſpeaketh to us (anſwerable to what is written) both inwardly by the workings of his Spirit, and outwardly by the works of his providence. For he ſpeaketh once, &c.

Dei admonitio vocis & ſermonis ſæpe loco eſt, etſi non ſemper ipſe & loquatur ut ſæpe veteribus patribus loqui ſolebat quocunq; tandem modo admoneat. Merc.

Hence Note, In what way ſoever God reveals his mind unto man, he ſpeaks unto him.

Every manifeſtation of the will of God to us is a Sermon; what man ſpeaketh to us according to the word of God, is to be received as the word of God. For as God ſpeaketh to us, though not formally, yet expreſly in the holy Scriptures, which are his word, ſo he ſpeaketh to us vertually, though not expreſly by his works. And that, Firſt, by his works of creation; by them God is continually opening and manifeſting himſelf to man in his wiſdom, power, and goodneſs. He ſpeaketh to us, Secondly, by his works of providence, whether firſt they be works of mercy (every mercy hath a voyce in it, every bleſſing a ſpeech) or ſecondly, whether they be works of judgment (Micah. 6. 9) The Lords voyce cryeth unto the City, and the man of wiſdom ſhall ſee thy name; hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it. Sickneſſes and loſſes, the croſſes & troubles that we meet with in the world, cry aloud to us, eſpecially when they make us (as they often do) cry aloud. As the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work, day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and night unto night ſheweth knowledg (Pſal. 19. 1, 2.) ſo thoſe things that are done and acted night and day, utter the mind and ſpeak out the heart of God unto man.

For God ſpeaketh once, yea twice.] The Hebrew is, in once, That is, for one Turn or Time, or by one means or way. The word once, hath a threefold ſignification in Scripture, all which are applyable to the Text in hand.

Firſt, Once, is as much as ſurely, certainly, verily, irrevocably. Thus (*Pſal.*89. 35.) Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, that I will not lie unto David; That is, I have ſurely ſworn, certainly ſworn, irrevocably ſworn, my word, yea my Oath is out, and it is immutable; That which God (in this ſence) once ſaith, it is always ſaid, or 'tis ſaid for ever; how much more that which he ſweareth? Thus the Apoſtle argueth (*Heb.*6. 17, 18.) God willing more abundantly (or more then needed as to him and the truth of the thing in it ſelf) to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel confirmed it by an Oath, that by two immutable things, in which it is impoſſible for God to lie (namely, his promiſe and his Oath) we might have ſtrong conſolation, &c. In like notion we may expound that once, which we find (Heb. 9. 27.) And as it is appointed unto men once to die (or to die once) and after that cometh the judgment. Some refer, once, to die, as if the meaning were, it is appointed unto men to die once, that is, men muſt expect to die a natural death, which happens but once, and once (at leaſt equivalently) will and muſt happen to all men. Others refer the once to appointed in the ſence of this preſent expoſition; It is appointed once; That is, God hath certainly and firmly appointed eſtabliſhed and decreed this thing, he hath ratified it in Heaven, that men muſt die; This ſtatute is irrevocable; The thing is appointed, and there is no reverſing or revoking of that appointment. This is a good ſence, and ſutable enough to the ſcope of Elihu; God ſpeaketh once, that is, what he ſpeaketh is a ſure and certain word, an infallible word; the word ſetled for ever in Heaven (Plal. 119. 89.) his promiſe is not only ſure but moſt ſure. As the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Pet. 1. 18,19.) And this voyce which came from Heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy Mount. We have alſo a more ſure (the Comparative imports the Superlative, a moſt ſure) word of Prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts. As the whole prophetical, ſo the whole Hiſtorical and Doctrinal word of God is moſt ſure, being once ſpoken it is ſpoken for ever, And written as with a pen of Iron, and the point of a Diamond, and that upon a Rock which cannot be removed. That which was vain-glorioully, and beyond the line of man, ſaid of the Law of the Medes, and Perſians, (Dan. 6. 8.) is only true of the word of God, it altereth not.

Semel loquitur Deus, & ſecundo id ipſum non repetet. Vulg. Quia quod ſufficienter factum eſt iterare ſuperfluum eſt. Aq.

Secondly, This once ſpeaking, notes the ſpeaking of a thing ſo ſufficiently or fully, that there is enough ſaid at once, and ſo no more needs be ſaid. The vulgar tranſlation takes up this ſence, God hath ſpoken once, that is, he hath ſpoken fully or ſufficiently for mans inſtruction and admonition at once, and therefore he tranſlates the latter part of the verſe, thus; And he doth not repeat it the ſecond time. That which is done at once ſufficiently, needs not be done a ſecond time; This is a truth; There is a ſufficiency and a fullneſs in the word of God once ſpoken, there needs nothing to be added: Or as others expound this tranſlation; when once God ſpeaks, that is, reſolves and determines a thing, he doth not (as man who often repents of what he hath purpoſed) bring it into a ſecond conſideration, for he cannot erre, and therefore he needs decree but once. But though this be a truth, yet I do not conceive it to be the meaning of this place, becauſe it doth not well agree with what goes before, and leſs with that which followeth at the 29. Verſe; Loe all theſe things worketh God oftentimes, or (as our Margin hath it) twice and thrice with man. And therefore here Elihu rather intimates the variety of thoſe ways by which God reveals himſelf to man, then the ſufficiency of any one of them. For though we grant any one of them ſufficient, yet God out of his abundant goodneſs is pleaſed to reveal himſelf more ways then one, and more times then once.

Thirdly, This once, may be taken excluſively; ſo in Scripture, once is once and no more, once and not again; or as we ſay, once for all, and ſo it is oppoſed to the repeating and acting over of the ſame thing. Thus Abiſha ſaid to David (1 Sam. 26. 8.) God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day, now therefore let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear, even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time. Once ſmiting is there oppoſed to ſmiting more then once; As if he had ſaid, I will pay him home, or diſpatch him at once, there will be no need to fetch another blow. Thus when the Apoſtle had ſaid in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews (Chap. 9. 27.) It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment, preſently he addeth, So Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many; there alſo once is oppoſed to twice, or a ſecond time, excluding all repetition of the ſacrifice of Chriſt. As 'tis ſaid (Heb. 10. 10.) By the which will we are ſanctified, through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all. And therefore the ſame Apoſtle in the ſame Chapter (Ver. 26.) terrifieth Apoſtates with this dreadful doom; If we ſin wilfully after that we have received the knowledg of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins; That is, neither will Chriſt give up himſelf to be a ſacrifice again for ſuch as have (after light received about it, and ſome ſeeming cloſings with it) caſt off that his ſacrifice, nor can any other ſacrifice be given. In this ſence alſo ſometimes God ſpeaks, once, He ſpeaks once, and will ſpeak no more, once and not a ſecond time; though we have a twice here in the Text, yet, I ſay, in ſome caſes and unto ſome perſons, God ſpeaketh once and will not ſpeak again. Whence take this obſervation or Admonition rather.

It is dangerous refuſing the firſt call, the firſt Word of God. Poſſibly, you may never hear more of him or from him, once may be all.

God may ſpeak in thy caſe, not only once, that is firmly and certainly, not only once that is ſufficiently, but once (that is excluſively, once) and no more for ever. That moving caution of the Apoſtle is grounded upon ſuch a ſad poſſibility as this (Heb. 3. 7.) Wherefore as the holy Ghoſt ſaith, to day if ye will hear his voyce, harden not your hearts; and again (Verſ. 13.) Exhort one another dayly, while it is called, to day, leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin. As if it had been ſaid; hear to day, hear this hour of the day, for you know not, firſt, whether there will be a morrow or another day for you; Secondly, if you have a morrow, yet you know not whether you ſhall have a word to morrow; both time and ſeaſon, days and opportunities are in the hand of God; and he that neglects the ſeaſon of one day, hath no aſſurance of another day, much leſs of a ſeaſon with the day. Who knows whether the Cock ſhall crow twice or no? poſſibly the Cock may crow but once; in what a condition had Peter been if it had been ſo with him, for after he had (as Chriſt notwithſtanding all his confidence to the contrary, told him, Mark 14. 30.) denyed his maſter twice, he never called to mind the words of Chriſt, nor had any thought of humbling himſelf for what he had done, till (as 'tis ſaid, Verſ. 72.) The ſecond time the Cock crew. Every one hath not a promiſe (as Peter equivalently had) that the Cock ſhall crow twice, or that God will afford him means a ſecond time to awaken him out of his ſin. That which the Lord ſpake of affliction, to ſhew the fullneſs of it, may alſo be fulfilled concerning his warnings and admonitions (Nahum 1. 9.) I will make an utter end, affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time: We ſhould hear at firſt ſpeaking, leſt it ſhould prove that when the Lord hath ſpoken once, he ſhould make an utter end, and ſay, inſtruction and admonition ſhall not riſe up a ſecond time. And to be ſure, as Abraham after he had interceded for Sodom and Gomorrah ſeveral times, ſaid at laſt (Gen. 18. 32.) O let not the Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak yet but this once. So the Lord when he hath ſpoken oft to ſinners and is not heard grows ſo angry, that he comes at laſt and ſaith, I will ſpeak yet but this once. God will at laſt come to his but once more to all men; and with ſome he is at his once at firſt and no more for ever. There is a time when every man ſhall hear his laſt word, and God will ſpeak but that once; and ſometimes it is but once in all that God will ſpeak. Therefore take heed, it is dangerous deferring, if God ſpeaks once, if he call and knock once, it is our ſin and folly too, that we do not hearken to, and open at his firſt call and knock, though the Lord doth (I grant) uſually and moſtly exerciſe much patience towards ſinners, calling and knocking once and again, as it followeth in the Text, He ſpeaketh once,

Yea twice, or a ſecond time.] Several of the Jewiſh writers this twice of the two ſorts or ways of divine Revelation which are ſpoken of in the following parts of this context; God ſpeaks to man by viſions and dreams, and God ſpeaks to man by diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, as we ſhall ſee afterward. But I rather take it more generally, not only as to the diverſe manner and diſtinct ways of his ſpeaking, but as to the divers times, or reiteration of his ſpeaking; he ſpeaketh once, yea twice: As he ſpeaks ſeveral ways, ſo ſeveral times, twice or thrice, poſſible, in the ſame way; twice by viſions, twice by dreams, twice by ſickneſſes, and often by his Miniſters; He ſpeaketh once,

Yea twice.] I ſhall conſider this twice three ways, and give a brief note from each.

In duabus & ſemel vicibus. i.e. bis; quod uno verbo dicunt פעמים aut ſecundo, i. e. iterum ſemel iterumq; loquitur Deus una admonitione non ſemper contentus. Druſ.

Firſt, conſider twice as to number; twice ſtrictly taken is more then once. One is no number, but two is.

Hence Note, God is ſo gracious that he ſpeaks once and again, once and a ſecond time to ſinners.

Who is there among us that hath not had experience of Gods ſpeaking to him more then once? And that not only with reſpect to the various ways of ſpeaking, but with reſpect to various times of ſpeaking. He ſpeaks more then once by his word, more then once by his works, whether of judgment, or of mercy. Some ſinners are conſumed in a moment or at once, (as it is ſaid of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram with their confederates, Numb. 16. 21.) others die of a lingering conſumption. God waiteth to be gracious, and therefore he rarely ſpeaketh his all or ſtriketh his all at once. He gives precept upon precept, line upon line, he ſends ſorrow upon ſorrow, croſs upon croſs, that ſinners may at laſt remember themſelves, return and live.

Secondly, As twice notes a number, ſo it may be conſidered as a ſmall number, yea as the ſmalleſt number; twice or two is the firſt number, the firſt ſtep into number. They that do a thing more then once cannot do it leſs then twice, nor can that number which is more then one be leſs then two. When the woman in the Book of Kings told the Prophet (1 Kings 17. 12.) I am going to gather two ſticks. Her meaning was, a very few ſticks, only enow to make a little fire to bake a Cake with. And when the Spirit of God would ſhew how few, comparatively to the rout of the World, they are and will be that bear witneſs to the truths of Jeſus Chriſt, he calleth them two Witneſſes (Rev. 11. 3.) they are a number, yet expreſt by the leaſt number, that we ſhould not have our eyes upon the multitude, or think, that is not the truth which is not followed by great numbers, or the moſt of the World. The train of Chriſt is not large, nor are his ways throng'd, few there be that find them. As they whom he calls forth to be eminently his witneſſes are not many, therefore called two; ſo they that receive their witneſs are not many; The world wonders after the beaſt. Thus as two or twice imply a ſmall number; ſo in Scripture language, that which is done more then twice is ſuppoſed done often or many times (2 Kings 6. 10) When the Prophet had told the King of Iſrael where the forces of the King of Aſſyria would come, and by that means defeated him of his purpoſe; it is ſaid, And the King of Iſrael ſent unto the place which the man of God told him, and warned him of, and ſaved himſelf there, not once, nor twice; that is, many times, which made the King of Syria wonder how it came to paſs that he was ſo often defeated; He thought he had laid his plots ſo wiſely and cloſely that the King of Iſrael could not eſcape, but he ſaved himſelf not once, nor twice; more then twice is many, but bare twice is the narroweſt compaſs of number imaginable.

Hence Note, God hath not given us any ground to preſume upon frequent warnings or ſpeakings.

Though he ſpeak more then once, yet it may be but twice, poſſibly but twice preciſely, probably but twice reſtrainedly taken. The Lord would not have us build upon the hope of future ſpeakings, to the neglect of what is preſently ſpoken. Though God be very patient and long-ſuffering to ſinful men, yet he hath not given any man, the leaſt occaſion, no not by a promiſe of ſpeaking a ſecond day, to continue one day, much leſs to continue long in ſin. When God ſpake (as I may ſay) at the largeſt rate of his patience to ſinners, he ſaid (Gen. 6.3.) My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man; not always, that is, though it ſtrive long, yet it ſhall not ſtrive very long; and that he may know it, I will give him a day, yet his days ſhall be an hundred and twenty years. This was ſomewhat a long day indeed; But remember this hundred and twenty years, was all the time that was granted to all the men of that World, there was not ſo much granted to every particular man of that world, poſſibly the Spirit of God did not ſtrive a day longer with many a one among them. Therefore take heed of preſuming. When the Lord ſpeaketh once, do not ſay, I will ſtay till he ſpeaks a ſecond time, and if he condeſcend to ſpeak twice, do not believe that he will always ſpeak.

Thirdly, Twice, may be conſidered as a ſmall certain number, put for a ſmall uncertain number. 'Tis frequent in Scripture, to put a certain number of any kind, for an uncertain; Sometimes a certain great number, for an uncertain great number; and ſometimes a ſmall certain number, for a ſmall uncertain number. As twice is not to be tyed up ſtrictly to the ſmalleſt number; ſo not to any number whether ſmall or great.

Hence Note, No man knows how oft he ſhall be warned or ſpoken unto by God.

God doth not put an abſolute ſtint upon any of his actions. Beware of neglecting the leaſt twice, the firſt twice, which is the loweſt twice; for though we cannot bind God up ſtrictly to twice, it may prove three times or four times, yet whether it ſhall be ſo many, or how many it ſhall be, no man nor Angel knoweth. Twice cannot be very often, and 'tis uncertain how often. Therefore if you hearken not when God hath ſpoken once (take it ſtrictly) do not ſtop your ears at the ſecond ſpeaking. It is ſaid, Moſes ſmote the rock twice (that was twice beyond his Commiſſion, for he ſhould not have ſmitten it at all) and the water came out abundantly. How many rocks, that is, hard hearts, hath God ſmitten by his word and his works twice, and yet we ſee not the waters of Godly ſorrow flowing out; The rocks are ſmitten more then twice with the rod of God, with the rod of his mouth in the Miniſtery of his word, they are ſmitten with admonition upon admonition, with reproof upon reproof, with threatning upon threatning, and yet the waters came not out abundantly, yea ſcarce at all. May not they fear that they ſhall have penal ſorrow upon ſorrow (Paul took notice of the goodneſs of God to him, that he did not let him have afflictive ſorrow upon ſorrow (Phil. 2. 27.) but, I ſay, may not they fear they ſhall have penal ſorrow upon ſorrow) that is, everlaſting floods of ſorrow, who after the Lords ſpeaking upon ſpeaking, and reproving upon reproving, give no proof of their godly penitential ſorrow? O how angry was the Lord with Solomon, becauſe his heart was turned from the Lord God of Iſrael, which had appeared to him twice (1 Kings 11.9.) God appeared to him in Gibeon (1 Kings 3.5.) when he was firſt made King, putting him to his choice, or giving him a blank to aſk what he would, and he choſe well, he choſe wiſdom and had it. God appeared to him a ſecond time after the building and dedication of the Temple (1 Kings 9. 2.) And ſaid unto him, I have heard thy prayer, and thy ſupplication, that thou haſt made before me, &c. Thus the Lord appeared ſolemnly unto Solomon twice, and but twice, for any thing that appears upon record, in that ſolemn manner. Now when notwithſtanding theſe two appearings of the Lord to Solomon, the heart of Solomon was turned away from the Lord God of Iſrael, his anger was kindled againſt Solomon, and the Lord ſmote him once, yea twice, renting his kingdom, and pulling away ten tribes at once, from his ſon and ſucceſſor. O do not refuſe God ſpeaking to you twice, or the renewed ſpeaking of God; to do ſo is very ſinful, and therefore very dangerous. For as 'tis a ſign of a holy heart, of a gracious frame of ſpirit, to hear twice at once ſpeaking; as David profeſſed he did (Pſal. 62. 11.) God hath ſpoken once; twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God: alſo unto thee O Lord belongeth mercy. There are ſeveral rendrings and interpretations of thoſe words; But that which to me ſeems moſt intended by our rendring is, I heard what was once ſpoken twice at once, that is,

I

I heard it ſpeedily, and I heard it believingly; as ſoon as ever the word came to me, I received it, and I received it not only with my ear, but with my heart. That's a bleſſed way of hearing, and they who hear ſo, at firſt ſpeaking, may well be ſaid to hear that twice which God ſpeaketh once. But how ſad is it that God ſhould ſpeak twice, thrice, yea four times, and yet not be heard ſo much as once! When Job was brought upon his knees (Chap. 40. 5.) he ſaid, Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further. Job began to be ſenſible of that which Elihu was working him to, that he had been too forward, yea too forward with God; Job began to ſee his error, and recanted it; I have ſpoken once, yea twice, but I will proceed no further. 'Tis good, that after once or twice ſinning or failing, we yet ſay we will proceed no further. O how deplorable is mans condition, when the Lord ſhall ſay, I have ſpoken once, yea twice, but now I will proceed no further, I will ſpeak no more! And this uſually comes to paſs, when men are dull and ſlow of heart to underſtand what he ſpeaketh, which as natural men always, ſo godly men often are, as it followeth in this Text; He ſpeaketh once, yea twice,

Yet man perceiveth it not.] That is, apprehendeth not ſometimes that God is ſpeaking to him, and he ſeldom underſtandeth what God is ſpeaking to him.

There is a little variety in the expoſition of this latter clauſe of the verſe; The word man not being expreſly in the Hebrew, (and therefore we find it put by our tranſlaters in a diſtinct character) the Text runs only thus; God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, he perceiveth it not. This hath occaſioned the vulgar Latine interpreter to refer this laſt clauſe of the verſe to God alſo; giving out the ſenſe thus; God ſpeaketh once, and a ſecond time he doth not repeat it; As if here were a warning given, that all ſhould attend the very firſt motion of Gods voice to them; For he ſpeaketh once, and doth not repeat the ſame. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that, becauſe I ſee not how the Hebrew word by us rendred to perceive, can with any tolerable ſignificancy be rendred to repeat: yet, there is a ſecond rendring of the Text in the ſame tenour, giving a genuine ſenſe of that word, which is very profitable and proper enough to the ſcope of the place, God ſpeaketh once, and he doth not conſider upon it a ſecond time; That is, when God ſpeaks or decrees to give forth any thing, he doth not take it into conſideration again or review and bring it about upon ſecond thoughts, as men often do; yea it is their duty (though it be a duty ariſing from their frailty) ſo to do. Men ought to conſider often and review their own words as well as their works. But (ſaith Elihu, according to this reading) God ſpeaks once, and doth not conſider of it again; for he hath the meaſure and compaſs of all things ſo fully in himſelf, that he needs not turn back his thoughts upon any of his determinations, as if there could be a miſtake, or any error in them. This is a very glorious truth, highly advancing the name of God above every name among the beſt of the children of men. And it ariſeth clearly from the Text, leaving out the ſupplement which we make of the word man. Yet according to the opinion of the moſt and beſt Expoſiters, yea according to the cleareſt ſcope and tendency of the Text, that word man is rather to be ſupplied, God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, Semel loquitur Deus & ſecundo id ipſum non repetit. Vulg.

ושורבת à radice intendit oculos, proſpexit, animadvertit, viderit. Semel loquitur Deus & ſecundo illud non conſiderat. Scult.

And man perceiveth it not.] 'Tis common in Scripture to leave ſuch words unexpreſſed, as muſt neceſſarily be underſtood. And therefore I ſhall only inſiſt upon our own tranſlation,

Yet before I proceed to that, I ſhall touch upon another reading of theſe words, as referring unto man, which doth not ſo much carry a reproof of man's dulneſs, as a commendation of God's goodneſs, thus; God ſpeaks once, yea twice, if man perceiveth it not. As if he had ſaid, If man be ſo weak and dark, ſo dull and ſlow of apprehenſion, as not to perceive Gods mind at his firſt ſpeaking, yet God is uſually ſo gracious and condeſcending as to ſpeak twice, or a ſecond time even to that man. This reading doth exceedingly exalt and ſet forth the goodneſs and graciouſneſs of God; and we have frequent experience of it, that when God ſpeaks once, and finds creatures dull of hearing, he ſpeaks a ſecond time.

Loquitur Deus ſemel & duabus (vicibus) ad eum qui non conſideravit eum. Piſc.

Our reading gives in theſe words as a charge of mans darkneſs and ſlowneſs to apprehend the meaning of God ſpeaking to us either in his word or works. God ſpeaks once, yea twice,

Yet man perceiveth it not] The Hebrew is, man ſeeth it not. There is an eye in the underſtanding, the mind of man beholdeth the ſenſe of words, even as his bodily eye beholdeth the colours, and dimenſions of any material object: Yet the eye of mans mind is ſo bleared and dimlighted that though God ſpeak once, yea twice, he ſeeth, he perceiveth it not. That is, he doth not clearly perceive it. Elihu makes uſe of this word ſix times, Job thrice, Zophar once, in all which places, they intend an exact obſervation and through-ſpeculation of the matter which they treat upon, either in the affirmative or in the negative; here as a rebuke to man Elihu makes uſe of it in the negative, man perceiveth it not.

לא ישורנה Non viderit illud, ſc. homo quod deus loquitur. Verbo hoc שור Elihu utitur ſexies Job ter, Zophar ſemel. Videtur iſto verbo diligens & clara ſignificari ſpeculatio & obſervatio curioſa. Coc.

> Hence note, Man of himſelf cannot perceive the mind of God in ſpiritual ſpeakings, or God ſpeaking about ſpiritual things.

The Prophetical Sermons are called viſions; The viſion of Iſaiah the ſon of Amos, which he ſaw (Iſa. 1. 1.) yet when they preached them to the people, many of them ſaw nothing; their viſions were to the people as parables or dark ſayings. Man in general falls under a twofold conſideration; firſt, as unconverted or carnal; and in that ſtate he perceiveth not at all, when God ſpeaks once and twice, yea thrice, he perceiveth nothing. And that proceeds from a double ground.

Firſt, from the natural pravity of his heart, and the blindneſs of his mind. Of ſuch the Apoſtle ſaith (Eph. 4. 18.) They have their underſtanding darkned, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their heart. And hence he concludes (1 Cor. 2. 14.) The natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs to him, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned; ſpiritual objects muſt have a ſpiritual eye to ſee them.

Secondly, this comes to paſs ſometimes from the judgment of God upon carnal men; who as in mercy he cauſeth the blind to ſee, ſo in wrath he ſtriketh thoſe that have no mind to ſee with greater blindneſs, and puniſhed their former rebellion and obſtinacy againſt the word received with an impotency to perceive it. Yea God doth not only leave ſuch in the blindneſs of their mind and dulneſs of their underſtanding, but gives them up to it. The Prophet Iſaiah was a Goſpel Preacher, he held out the light clearly, yet his hearers were under ſuch a doom, that the very light which he held out blinded them; ſo that the more he ſpake, the leſs they perceived. (Iſa. 6. 10.) And he ſaid, go and tell this people, hear ye indeed, but underſtand not; and ſee ye indeed, but perceive not: make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes; leſt they ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed. This is a dreadful Scripture; The Lord is highly provoked indeed, when he judicially ſhuts up the eyes of men, and hardens their hearts againſt his own meſſages, not that he infuſeth any hardneſs or inſtilleth any ignorance into them; but gives them up to that ignorance, hardneſs and darkneſs which already poſſeſſeth them. And then though God ſpeak once or twice, or a hundred times, they perceive it not: They that harden their hearts, ſhall have them hardened by that which is the ordinary means to ſoften and melt them; and they that ſhut their eyes againſt any truth, are in danger of having them ſhut againſt all truth, even by that means which uſually openeth eyes. Thus we ſee that this firſt ſort of men, meer carnal men, cannot ſee or perceive when God ſpeaketh, and why it is ſo.

Secondly, (which I conceive rather to be the meaning of Elihu here). Man may be conſidered in his ſpiritual ſtate. That is, as converted and renewed in ſpirit, by the mighty working of the Spirit. Now to men in this eſtate God ſpeaks once, yea twice, and they perceive it not. They that are ſpiritual do not always perceive ſpiritual things. For,

Firſt, they have much corruption in them. Though they are renewed, yet they are renewed but in part; we ſee in part, and but darkly, yea ſometimes Saints can hardly ſee at all, eſpecially as to ſome diſpenſations and manifeſtations of God! he may ſpeak once, yea twice and thrice to them in ſuch a thing, or to ſuch a purpoſe, and they take little or no notice of it. He may point unto them by ſuch providences, and by ſuch Sermons, and yet they look upon themſelves as un-concerned, not making any home-application of what they outwardly hear or ſee, yea feel and ſmart under; and all this by reaſon of ſome prevailing corruption.

Secondly, this may proceed from their negligence and ſlothfulneſs; good men are not always careful as they ſhould, much leſs critical and wiſely curious to obſerve every providence of God, and to conſider why, or for what end ſuch or ſuch a word is ſent to them. As carnal men thruſt the word from them, ſo godly men fail much at all times, and at ſometimes wholly neglect to lay the Word to heart. They do not compare themſelves, that is, their lives and conſciences, their thoughts and ways with the Word, and then no wonder if they perceive not what is ſpoken to them. Even a Job may be hindred by his own indulgence from perceiving what God ſaith unto him. The Prophet complained of the people of God for not ſtriving to take hold of him. (Iſa. 64. 7.) There is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold on thee. And may we not complain that few ſtir up themſelves either to take hold of the Word of God, or that the Word may take hold of them? Paul exhorted Timothy (2 Tim. 1. 6.) to ſtir up the gift of God that was in him. They that have received both gifts and grace may be much wanting to themſelves in ſtirring them up. Though we deny man's natural power, yet perſons converted have a ſpiritual power, which they often neglect to ſtir up. When the ſervants of Benhadad (1 Kings 20. 32, 33.) came to Ahab upon that meſſage to beg his life, it is ſaid, The men did diligently obſerve whether any thing would come from him that they might take hold of, and urge it in favour of their Maſter; and as ſoon as Ahab had dropt that word, he is my Brother, as ſoon as they had that word, they did haſtily catch it, and applied it for their preſent purpoſe. So they that are godly ſhould obſerve what is ſpoken unto them, what corruption is ſmitten by the word or by the rod of God, and as ſoon as ever ſuch a word is ſpoken, they ſhould take it up and apply it to themſelves.

Thirdly, thoſe many luſts that are in the heart of a godly man, not yet fully mortified, as ſecret pride, ſelf-love, and unbelief, theſe hinder him from underſtanding the mind of God. And therefore we are counſelled by the Apoſtle James (Chap. 1. 21.) to lay aſide (that is, to get ſubdued and mortified) all filthineſs and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, and (ſo) receive with meekneſs the ingraffed word which is able to ſave our ſouls. As if he had ſaid, we can neither perceive nor receive the word ſavingly, unleſs our luſts are caſt out and caſt off. How much any man neglects this duty of mortifying his luſts, by ſo much is he rendred both unable to perceive the word, and unfit to profit by it.

Laſtly, Mr. Broughton renders the words thus, God ſpeaks once, yea twice, and man will not mark it. We ſay, man perceiveth it not; he ſaith, man will not mark it. As our reading ſhews the weakneſs and imperfections, or the negligence and ſlothfulneſs of man, when he doth not perceive what God ſpeaketh; ſo his ſheweth the obſtinacy of man. The will of man is as perverſe, as his underſtanding is blind. Man hath not only a wound or a weakneſs in his will unto that which is good, but he hath a rebellion in his will againſt that which is good, and that not by ſome occaſional diſguſt of ſudden guſt of paſſion, but he is naturally ſet and reſolved againſt that which is good. Man will not mark what God ſpeaketh in his word and works. Chriſt upbraids the Jews (Joh. 5. 40.) Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life; he chargeth the fault upon their wills. 'Tis certain, man hath a will not to come to Chriſt for life; yet that is a forced and far fetcht inference which ſome make from it, that man hath therefore power and will to come. Sure enough man hath a will not to come, he hath not only an inability, but an enmity and an oppoſition in his will againſt Chriſt: he will not come to Chriſt that he may be ſaved, but would take up his ſalvation ſomewhere elſe; he would be his own Saviour, or let any one ſave him, rather than be ſaved by Chriſt; all things conſidered, eſpecially this, that he muſt deny himſelf, and neither be found truſting to his own righteouſneſs, nor acting any unrighteouſneſs, if he deſires to be ſaved by Chriſt. And as there is a reſiſtance in the will of man againſt the true diſpenſation of Goſpel-grace; ſo againſt any other diſpenſation whereby God ſpeaketh to him. The unchanged will of man riſeth up againſt the will of God manifeſted in his works, as much as againſt his will manifeſted in his word (Iſa. 26. 11.) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up they will not ſee. If his hand be lifted up in publick judgments they will not ſee it, if in family or perſonal judgments and afflictions they will not ſee it, but ſhut their eyes and hoodwink their own underſtandings. Yea, they are oftentimes ſo wilfully, or rather ſo madly blind, that they had rather ſay it is the hand of blind Fortune, than the hand of the Almighty and All-ſeeing God. Now who is ſo blind as they that will not ſee? Till this rebellion againſt the holy will of God with which the will of man is filled be caſt out and ſubdued, let him ſpeak once, yea twice, let him ſpeak by word or works, by promiſes or by threatnings, by good or evil, yet man will not mark it. Thus much in general of God's revealing himſelf to man; In the next words we have the diſtinct ways ſet down by and in which he revealeth himſelf: In a dream, &c.

VERS. 15, 16, 17, 18.

In a dream, in a viſion of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men, in ſlumberings upon the bed:

Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction.

That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe, and hide pride from man.

He keepeth back his ſoul from the pit, and his life from periſhing by the ſword.

ELihu having ſaid in the former verſe, that, God ſpeaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not; proceeds to give inſtance of thoſe ſeveral ways by which God ſpeaketh to man. His firſt Inſtance is given (verſ. 15.) where he brings in God ſpeaking to man in dreams and viſions. And as he ſhews us God ſpeaking in dreams and viſions, ſo he ſets down his aims or ends in doing ſo, and they are three-fold.

Firſt, God aims at mans inſtruction (verſ. 16.) Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction.

The ſecond aim of God in ſuch diſpenſations, is repentance and humiliation (verſ. 17.) That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe, and hide pride from man.

The third and laſt end here expreſt why God ſpeaks by dreams and viſions, is mans ſalvation (verſ. 18.) He keepeth back his ſoul from the pit, and his life from periſhing by the ſword. Theſe are the parts and ſpecialties conſiderable in this context.

Verſ. 15. In a dream, in a viſion of the night, &c.

The root of the word rendred a dream, ſignifieth that which is thick, groſs or fat, and by a metaphor a dream, becauſe dreams are naturally cauſed by groſs and thick vapours, ariſing from the ſtomach and fuming up into the head. Sleep is cauſed immediately by vapours, and dreams are our work in ſleep. A dream is an Imagination which the mind frames and forms, or which is formed and framed in the mind while we ſleep; or, A dream is the work of the ſoul, while the body is aſleep. Sleep is the binding up of the outward ſenſes, hearing, ſeeing, feeling, &c. yet then the inward ſenſes, phantaſie and memory are at liberty and free to work. The phantaſie is very quick and nimble, when the body lieth as a log and ſtirs not. The phantaſie (as we ſay) builds Caſtles in the air, and makes ſtrange Chimera's in the brain by day, much more by night. In Dreams, there is an image of things or perſons repreſented to us. When Pharaoh dreamed, he ſaw ſeven lean kine, and ſeven thin ears, as alſo ſeven fat kine and ſeven full ears of corn. Jacob ſaw a ladder in his dream reaching up to heaven, and the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending. Joſeph ſaw his brethrens ſheaves doing obeyſance to his ſheaf, he ſaw alſo the Sun and Moon and eleven Stars, doing obeyſance to him. Nebuchadnezzar dreaming ſaw an Image with the head of gold, with ſhoulders and breaſt of ſilver, with belly and thighs of Braſs, and legs of Iron, &c. Theſe dreamers had images as clearly repreſented to their minds, as any thing can be to the moſt waking and wakeful eye of the body. And though in many dreams there are no ſuch formal ſimilitudes preſented to the mind, but only a voice heard ſpeaking, yet nothing can be declared to us in a dream without forming in our mind ſome kind of likeneſs. When it is ſaid that God came to Abimelech(*Gen.*20.and to *Laban*Gen.31.) and an Angel of the Lord to Joſeph (Matth.1.) ſpeaking to them in dreams, they had ſuch things exhibited to and impreſſed upon them, as gave the former two aſſurance that God ſpake to them, and the third that he was ſpoken to by an Angel of God.

Further, We may diſtinguiſh of dreams; Firſt, ſome are meer natural dreams; and they ariſe four ways; Firſt, from the temperature of the body, Melancholly and flegmatick perſons, have their ſpecial dreams, and ſo have men of a ſanguine and of a cholerick complection. The firſt incline to dream of ſad, the ſecond of ſottiſh, the third of pleaſant things, and the laſt of wrathful wranglings and contendings. Secondly, Natural dreams are cauſed by the diet or food which we eat, ſpecial meat inclining to ſpecial thoughts and imaginations. Thirdly, Meer natural dreams flow from the buſineſs or ſpecial work wherein we have been ingaged in the day; as Solomon ſpeaks (Eccleſ. 5.3.) a dream cometh thorow the multitude of buſineſs; that is, a man dreams at night of what he hath been doing in the day. Fourthly, Natural dreams ariſe from vehement affections to or deſires of what we want, and would have. Thus (*Iſa.*29.7.) The hungry man dreams he eats, and the thirſty man dreams he drinks; For being pincht with hunger, and parcht with thirſt, his appetite is not only ſtrong, but fierce and violent after meat and drink. Theſe and ſuch like are natural dreams. I call them ſo becauſe the riſe or reaſon of them is ſeated in nature, and they are ſuch as have no other cauſe but what is common and natural to man. Nature let alone or left under ſuch outward accidents will produce ſuch dreams.

Secondly, There are diabolical dreams; the devil knows how to ſtir the humours and work upon the phantaſies of the children of men. Satan is skilful and diligent in ſoliciting our luſts and corruptions both day and night, and they being once ſolicited or moved to work, cannot but work in us both ſleeping and waking. Yea the devil can inſpire falſe doctrines and opinions by dreams, as well as provoke to wicked practices. Of ſuch dreamers we read (Deut. 13.1, 3.) If there be among you a falſe Prophet, or a dreamer of dreams. Falſe Prophets had many dreams (*Jer.*23.25.) Such were wont to ſay, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. Becauſe the holy Prophets had their dreams from God, the Devil would give his unholy Prophets dreams too, which were lies and vanity, deceits and errors, leading them out of the way of God, whether we reſpect truth of doctrine, or purity of worſhip. We may reduce all diabolical dreams to theſe two heads; They are either, Firſt, falſe dreams, that is, dreams of falſhood, for he is the father and former of lyes; or, Secondly, they are filthy defiling dreams; for he is an unclean ſpirit, and the fueller of all filthy fires and uncleanneſſes, whether corporal or ſpiritual.

Thirdly, There are divine dreams, ſo called, Firſt, becauſe immediately ſent by God; Secondly, becauſe the ſubject-matter of them is divine and heavenly, or ſome manifeſtation of the holy will of God to man. There are five ſpecial Meſſages upon which dreams are ſent from God.

Firſt, To reprove or admoniſh; Thus God dealt with Abimelech in a dream, that he ſhould not meddle with Sarah (Gen. 20.3.) and with Laban, that he ſhould not hurt Jacob, nor hinder him in his journey back to his fathers houſe (*Gen.*31.24.) whereupon Jacob told him, God rebuked thee yeſter-night. That dream of Pilate's wife (Matth. 27.19.) was ſent to admoniſh Pilate about giving Judgment againſt Chriſt.

Secondly, God ſends dreams to inſtruct, and inform; There are teaching dreams, that of Joſeph (Matth. 1.21.) was not only to ſhew him what to do about Mary his eſpouſed wife, but to inſtruct him about that great myſtery of God manifeſted in the fleſh, to ſave loſt man.

Thirdly, Dreams are ſent for ſupport and conſolation in a time of trouble (*Gen.*28.12.) God comforted Jacob by that dream, when he was in a deſolate condition, and aſſured him of his preſence.

Fourthly, Some dreams are ſent of God upon a ſad meſſage to afflict and terrifie; Job bemoaned his ſufferings and ſorrows by ſuch dreams (Chap. 7.13, 14.) When I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint, then thou ſcareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions.

Fifthly, God foreſheweth what ſhall come to paſs, he reveals his own counſels, as to future providences, by dreams and viſions. The ſeven years of famine were revealed to Pharaoh in a dream. And the great things of the Church, and of the world too, were revealed to Daniel in a dream, and in viſions of his head upon his bed (*Dan.*7.1.) The meſſage of the dream in the Text was for inſtruction and admonition, as will appear at the ſixteenth verſe; God ſpeaketh in a dream; and further

In a viſion of the night.] Some take viſion here as a ſecond way of divine revelation. And 'tis true, the Scripture ſpeaks of dreams and viſions diſtinctly (*Numb.*12.6.) Others make viſions to be only appurtenances to dreams; For though there have been viſions without dreams, yet dreams are ſeldom, if at all, without ſome kind of viſion. This ſeems the intendment of this Text, In a dream, in a viſion of the night; That is, in a dream with the viſion of the night, as making the viſion to be nothing elſe, but either a repreſentation of the matter dreamed of, or of the manner wherein it was repreſented to the dreamer. And I conceive, that Elihu in this verſe is ſpeaking only of one, not of two ways of God's revealing himſelf to man; or rather of one, than two. Yet whether we take the viſion diſtinctly from or jointly with the dream, the ſcope of Elihu in this Text is equally anſwered and fulfilled.

Further, Elihu doth not only report the way of God's diſcovering himſelf, that is, in a dream, in a viſion, but he declares the time or ſeaſon of theſe dreams and viſions, or of theſe viſions in a dream; that is, the night, and the night conſidered under this diviſion.

Firſt, When deep ſleep falleth upon men.

Secondly, When they have their ſlumberings upon their bed; that is (as I apprehend) at the beginning of the night, and break of day (for thoſe are the ſlumbring times of the night) or in the middle of the night or midnight, for then uſually men are fallen into and abide in a deep ſleep, or as we render, Then

Deep ſleep falleth upon men.] Some ſleeps, as we may ſay, are but ſhallow ſleeps, ſlight ſleeps, in compariſon of other; Deep ſleep is that which we call, Dead ſleep. The word here uſed by Elihu, notes the ſtrongeſt and the ſoundeſt ſleep, and therefore 'tis fitly diſtinguiſhed from ſlumberings upon the bed.

There are three words in the Hebrew which ſignifie ſleep; whereof the firſt ſignifies ſleep in general; the ſecond, deep ſleep; the third, any ſlight ſleep, which we here tranſlate ſlumbering. Ordinary ſleeping is more than ſlumbring, and a deep ſleep, more than ordinary ſleep; we commonly ſay, ſuch a man is faſt aſleep, he is, as it were, bound hand and foot. Sleep is the binding of the ſenſes, and ſo, by conſequence the binding of all the members of the body. We often find this diſtinction in Scripture (Pſal. 132.4.) I will not give ſleep to mine eyes, nor ſlumber to my eye-lids; that is, I will not only not give my ſelf to fall aſleep, but I will not ſo much as (according to our manner of ſpeaking in that matter) forget my ſelf. We find the ſame diſtinction (Pſal. 121.4.) Behold, he that keepeth Iſrael ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep. The words are a deſcription of the exact watchfulneſs of God over his people, he that doth not ſo much as ſlumber, he that never lays his eyes together, he that doth not only not take a nap (as we ſay) but not ſo much as once nod (to ſo little the Hebrew word may be drawn down, which is likewiſe the importance of the Greek word; he, I ſay, that doth not ſo much as nod) is far from ſleep, furtheſt of all from deep ſleep. In both theſe degrees of ſleep, the Lord ſpeaks by Dreams, firſt, in deep ſleep; ſecondly, in ſlumbrings.

Some conceive that Elihu intended by theſe different words, to ſet forth two ſorts of dreams; Firſt, thoſe dreams which men have when extraordinary deep ſleep falls upon them; ſuch as that ſpoken of (Gen. 2.21.) God commanded a deep ſleep to fall on Adam, when he took the rib out of his ſide and formed the woman. We read alſo (Gen. 15. 12.) that a deep ſleep fell on Abraham when God revealed to him what ſhould become of his poſterity, and how they ſhould be in Egypt, and there much oppreſſed four hundred years, &c. It is ſaid alſo (1 Sam. 26. 12.) A deep ſleep from the Lord was fallen upon them; that is, upon Saul, and his guards, who lay round about him. And that might be called a ſleep from the Lord, both becauſe it was a ſleep which the Lord ſent, and becauſe it was an extreme deep ſleep. Secondly, there are dreams in ordinary ſleep, or in very ſlumbrings or noddings upon the bed, we may call them waking dreams. Thus Elihu ſheweth God taking ſeveral times or ſeaſons for the revealing of himſelf in dreams; ſometimes in deep ſleep, and often in the leaſt and ſlighteſt ſleeps, called ſlumbrings.

I ſhall not here inſiſt upon or diſcourſe the way of God's manifeſting himſelf to the Ancients, by dreams and viſions, but refer the Reader to what hath already been done upon the 4. Chapter at the 12. and 13. verſes; where Eliphaz ſpeaks almoſt in the ſame manner as Elihu here about viſions; And, indeed there is a very great conſent between their two parts in this book, that of Eliphaz, and this of Elihu; They were both holy and prophetical men, both of them had the ſame deſign in ſpeaking about dreams and viſions, namely, to convince and humble Job; and both of them expreſs themſelves in terms of a very near Cognation. So that if the Reader pleaſe to conſult that place (Job 4. 12, 13.) he will find theſe words farther cleared, as to the nature and ſeveral kinds of viſions. And if he turn to what hath been done upon the 14. verſe of the 7. Chapter, he may find the doctrine of dreams further opened.

Only let me add here a note or two.

Firſt, It hath been the uſe of God to reveal his mind by dreams.

And I may give you five reaſons why God uſed to apply himſelf to man in dreams: Firſt, becauſe in ſleep man is, as I may ſay, at beſt leiſure for God to deal with him; he is not diſtracted with buſineſs, nor hurried with the labours of this life, but is at reſt. Secondly, when we are awake we are very ready to debate and diſcuſs what we receive by our own reaſon, we are ready to Logick it with God; but in ſleep we take things barely as offered without diſcuſſions or diſputes. Thirdly, in ſleep when all is quiet, that which God repreſents, takes and leaves a deeper impreſſion upon the mind of man. Common experience teacheth us how dreams ſtick, and how thoſe apprehenſions which we have in our ſleep dwell and abide with us when awake. Fourthly, I conceive the Lord doth this chiefly that he may ſhew his divine skill in teaching and inſtructing man or that he hath a peculiar art in teaching; he teaches ſo, as none of the Maſters of learning were ever able to teach and inſtruct their Scholars. There was never any man could teach another when he was aſleep; they that are taught muſt at leaſt be awake, yea they muſt not only be awake but watchful; but now God is ſuch a teacher, ſuch an inſtructor, that when we are aſleep he can convey inſtruction and teach us his leſſons; this (I ſay) doth wonderfully magnifie the divine skill and power of God, who is able to make us hear and underſtand doctrine even when we are aſleep and cannot hear. There may be alſo a fifth conſideration moving God to this. Poſſibly God would hereby aſſure us, that the ſoul is a diſtinct eſſence, and hath its diſtinct operations from the body; and that even death it ſelf cannot deprive the ſoul of man of its working. For what is ſleep but a kind of death? ſleep is a ſhort death, and death is a long ſleep. Now when the body is (upon the matter) laid aſide, the ſoul can go to work: when the body lyes like a block and ſtirs not, the ſoul can beſtir it ſelf about many matters, and run its thoughts to the utmoſt ends of the earth, yea and raiſe them up to the higheſt heavens, in bleſſed intercourſes with God himſelf. There's no need to prove the matter of fact that 'tis ſo; what night, with reference to ſome or other, doth not utter this point of knowledg? nor need I ſtay to prove that this is, if not a demonſtrative, yet a very probable argument of the diſtinct ſubſtantiality of the ſoul from the body, namely its operations when the body (with all its proper and peculiar faculties and powers) is a ſleep, and contributes nothing to thoſe operations. For though it be granted that ſome irrational creatures (who have no immortal part, nor any thing ſubſtantial in them diſtinct from their bodies, though it be granted I ſay, that theſe) may have dreams; yet their dreams differ as much from thoſe of men, as themſelves do.

Secondly, Note, The revelation of the mind of God by dreams and viſions, was much, yea moſt uſed in thoſe ancient times. When God had not ſo fully revealed his mind by Scripture or his mind in the Scripture, then he ſpake often in dreams and viſions; and hence the old Prophets were called Seers.

The Apoſtle reports, God ſpeaking at ſundry times, and in divers manners in times paſt, unto the fathers by the Prophets, (Heb. 1. 1.) The Greek Text hath two very ſignificant words, the former moſt properly implying how God gave out his mind in divers meaſures, or how he parcelled it out, the other implying the ſeveral ways in which he gave it out. As the meaſures were various, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs of his mind about divine matters and myſteries being diſpenſed, ſo the ways, manners and forms of this diſpenſation were very various; yet the moſt uſual way was by dreams and viſions (Numb. 12. 6.) If there be a Prophet among you (ſaith the Lord) I the Lord will make my ſelf known unto him in a viſion, and ſpeak to him in a dream. Yea we find that in the firſt days of the Goſpel, dreams and viſions were frequent. The Apoſtle falling into a trance had a viſion (Acts 10. 10.) He ſaw heaven opened and a certain veſſel deſcend, &c. And when Chriſt would have the Apoſtle Paul carry the Goſpel into Macedonia, a viſion appeared to him in the night (Acts 16. 9.) There ſtood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, ſaying, come over to Macedonia and help us. The ſame Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 12. 1, 2.) I will come to viſions and revelations of the Lord, whether in the body I cannot tell, or out of the body I cannot tell. Paul's ſoul was wrapt up in ſuch high and intimate converſes with God, that he even forgot how it was with his body, or had little to do with it. Which ſuits well with that deſcription which the Apoſtle John gave of himſelf, when he had the whole mind of God concerning the ſtate of his Church to the end of the world, revealed to him in ſeveral viſions, I (ſaith he) Rev. 1. 10.) was in the ſpirit on the Lords day, &c. That's a famous promiſe, which was firſt reported by the Prophet Joel (Chap. 2. 28.) and after repeated by the Apoſtle Peter (Acts 2. 17.) I will pour out my Spirit upon all fleſh, &c. and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream dreams. Thus it is every where clear in Scripture, that dreams and viſions were frequent both in the Old Teſtament times, and in the beginning of the New;

Πολυμερῶς καὶ πολυτρόπως.

But now in theſe laſt dayes (as the Apoſtle ſaith Heb. 1. 2, 3. paſſing from thoſe former ways of Revelation deſcribed in the firſt verſe) God having ſpoken to us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the Worlds, who is [alſo] the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs Image of his perſon: God I ſay having ſpoken to us by his Son, and we having now a clearer manifeſtation of the mind of God than the old fathers had, the Son who once ſpake to us in perſon on earth, ſtill ſpeaking to us in the Goſpel every day; therefore now for any to look after dreams and viſions, or viſible apparitions for the revealing of the mind of God, is to go backward to the old ſtate of the Jewiſh Church, or to the infancy of the Goſpel Church, while the Canon or Rule of the Scripture as to all matters of faith and holy life was not fully finiſhed and compleated. And though we ought to be far from limiting God, yet he hath limited us from looking after any wiſdom in the knowledg of his will above that which is written (1 Cor. 4. 6.) The Apoſtle alſo teſtifying by the Spirit of God, that the Scripture is ſufficient to make every man wiſe to ſalvation and the man of God perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works (that good work eſpecially of helping others to ſalvation) 1 Tim. 3. 15. 17.

Luther obſerving how many were deluded in his time by dreams and viſions, which they falſely attributed to God, as the immediate Author of them; earneſtly prayed about two things: Firſt, that God would give him a ſound underſtanding of his mind revealed in the Scriptures. Secondly, that he would not ſend him dreams or viſions, yea, faith he, I even contracted with God that he would not. And doubtleſs leſs he did this upon a double ground. Firſt, to oppoſe the wild opinions and practices of thoſe, who had nothing to pretend for them but dreams and viſions. Secondly, to advance the honour of the written word in its ſufficiency, not only without the help of any humane tradition, but without any further divine revelation. And therefore though God ſhould pleaſe to ſpeak to us now by dreams and viſions, yet that were only (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks about his adding of an oath to his promiſe, *Heb.*6. 17.) to ſhew that he is (ex abundanti) more abundantly willing to ſatisfie our weakneſs by ſuch a condeſcenſion, than that there is a neceſſity of it, with reſpect to any deficiency of the Scriptures fulneſs. And hence it is, that if men ſhall profeſs they have received any thing from God by dreams or viſions, concerning what is either to be believed or done, the matter of thoſe dreams muſt be examined and weighed at the ballance of the Scriptures, and is no further to be credited than as 'tis found agreeable thereunto.

Ardentibus votis precatus ſum ut daret mihi Deus certum ſenſum ſcripturæ; & pactum feci cum Domino Deo meo, ne mihi viſiones vel ſomnia mitteret. Luth. loci com. quartæ claſſis.

It cannot be denied but that men may make profitable uſe of their dreams at this day; they may ſee much of themſelves when their eyes are ſhut up by ſleep. Evil men may ſee their luſts at work in the night, and find out what luſt is moſt working and wakeful in them. What is ſaid in Hiſtory of the ancient Perſian Kings, that they were ſeldom ſeen in the day, but came to view in the night, is true of a mans ſpecial ſin, or of that ſin which reigns and Kings it in him. What ugly apparitions of luſt hath many a man in his nightly dreams, eſpecially of thoſe filthy luſts which are moſt proper to the night? Thus alſo good men have ſometimes a clearer ſight of their graces in the night by dreams, than in the duties of the day. What holy frames of heart? what lively actings of grace? what ſweet and raviſhing communion with God have many godly men found and felt in dreams? That may at leaſt, be ſomewhat of David's meaning, when he ſaid (Pſal. 16. 17.) My reins alſo inſtruct me in the night ſeaſon.

Laſtly, Though we cannot make any certain concluſions, either what we are, or what we are to do from dreams; yet from them they who are wiſe and watchful may ſometimes gather ſtrong conjectures about both or either. To make dreams the rule or warrant of what we do is extreamly dangerous, yet that we may have hints what to do in a dream, I nothing doubt, nor can there be any danger in it, while the matter hinted is conſonant to the rule of the word, both as that which is lawful to be done, and lawful for us (all circumſtances conſidered) to do. Otherwiſe, whatſoever we may think our ſelves warned or warranted to do by dreams, is but a mock or trick put upon us by the Devil, or a deceit of our own fooliſh ſelfiſh hearts.

Thus we have ſeen the firſt way of God's ſpeaking to men of old, by dreams and viſions of the night; what work God is pleaſed to make with and in man by ſuch ſpeakings, will appear diſtinctly in the three following verſes.

Verſ. 16. Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction.

In this verſe Elihu gives us the firſt of thoſe gracious deſigns or purpoſes of God in ſending dreams or viſions of the night; then he openeth the ears of men. There is a twofold ear of man, firſt external, that organ of hearing placed in the head. Secondly, internal, that power of hearing ſeated in the heart. God can uncover or open both. There are but few who have their outward ear ſtopt, we rarely meet with a deaf man. But we every where meet with and ſpeak to thoſe who are internally deaf. The Lord openeth this inward ear, and he only is able to do it. God opened the heart (or internal ear) of Lydia to attend to the things which were ſpoken of Paul (Acts 16. 14.) The Septuagint render this place of Job expreſly ſo. Then he openeth the mind of men. Their tranſlation comes cloſe to the ſenſe, though not to the letter of the Original.

Τότε ἀνακαλύπτει νοῦν ἀνθρώπων. Sep.

Further, the Hebrew is (as we put in the Margin) He revealeth or uncovereth the ears of men. This revealing or uncovering of the ear, ſay ſome, noteth only private ſpeaking, and is a ſimilitude taken from a common cuſtom among men, who when they would convey their mind ſecretly to a friend that ſtands by, put their head near to his ear, and take up the brim of his hat, or put by his hair (if long) that they may whiſper in his ear. Thus in a dream God whiſpers and ſpeaks ſilently unto men. This ſeems to have a ſutableneſs with that (Chap. 4. 12, 13.) where Eliphaz ſpake of a thing brought ſecretly to him, or that was whiſpered or ſtoln into him. But I conceive there is more in this place than the intendment of a ſecret and private conveyance of the mind of God unto man in a viſion or dream.

Quidam hanc loquendi formulam natam eſſe putant ex Hebræorum conſuetudine, qui cum antiquis ſeculis prolixam alerent comam, eaq; aures operirent, ſi quis arcanum aliquid in illorum aures inſuſurrare vellet deducebat defluentes capillos & in apertas aures tacito murmure aliquid inſtillabat. Sanct.

Cynthius aurem vellit & admonuit, &c. Virg.

And therefore this opening of the ear imports the removing or taking away of that (whatſoever it is) which hinders the effectual hearing or obeying of thoſe meſſages which God ſends to men. When God ſpake in a dream, he did more than ſpeak, he opened the ear, yea, he gave an ear to hear: This powerful work of God upon the heart is elegantly expreſſed by opening the ear, becauſe when the ears are ſtopt, we cannot hear, till that which ſtops them is pluckt out or taken away; ſo that here we have ſpeaking with effect, or the clear and penetrating power of the Spirit of God ſweetly and prevailingly inſinuating his mind to man. God ſpeaks ſo as he will be heard.

Loquitur & audire facit. Aurem revelare vel aperire eſt inſinuare aliquid auribus, quod intimis ſenſibus reponendum ſit. Clariorem & penetrantiorem inſinuationem voluntatis divinæ denotat. Coc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The ear of man is naturally ſtopt againſt the teachings of God.

There are many things which ſtop the ears of man, or man hath many ear ſtoppers. I will name ſeven, all which God removes and takes away when he effectually reveals his mind to man. Firſt, the ear of man is ſtopt with Ignorance, that's a thick vail or covering upon the ear, and keeps out the mind of God till it be removed. And, Secondly, Unbelief is another ear-ſtopper; till the Lord removeth that we cannot hear. Thirdly, Impenitency or hardneſs of heart ſtops the ear, there are a number of Scriptures I might give for each of theſe. Fourthly, the love of any particular ſin is an ear-ſhutter or an ear-ſtopper, and the Lord removes that, when he opens the ear. Fifthly, Prejudices ſtop the ear, prejudices ſomtime againſt the perſon ſpeaking, ſomtime againſt the word ſpoken. That man will never hear a word to purpoſe, who hath a prejudice againſt the perſon, or a prejudice againſt the word, either a prejudice againſt the man, or againſt the matter. Sixthly, Pride ſtops the ear too, the proud man will not hearken, therefore God humbles and brings down the ſpirit, that the word may be heard. Seventhly, and laſtly, the World is a great ear-ſtopper, that locks up the ear againſt the word; the world in the profits of it, and the world in the pleaſures of it, and the world in the cares of it, and the world in the fears of it, the world by or in every one of theſe ſtops the ear, and by theſe the ears of all men naturally are ſtopped, ſo that they are as it is ſaid (*Pſal.*58.4.) like the deaf adder, that ſtops her ear, and will not hear the voice of the charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely. Till all theſe ſtoppers are removed, and the ear opened, there is no receiving of the word.

Secondly, Obſerve, God is able to open and unlock the ear of man.

Though it hath never ſo many ſtopp'es in it, he can pull them out, never ſo many locks upon it, though all the ſeven ſpoken of, and ſeven more obſtruct the ear, yet he can open them all, and make a free and uncontroulable paſſage for his word into the remoteſt and cloſeſt chambers of the ſoul. God can ſpeak loud enough, not only to make the deaf, but the dead hear his voice. Verily, verily I ſay unto you (ſaith Chriſt, Joh. 5. 25.) the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear ſhall live. By the dead he means not thoſe who are corporally, but ſpiritually dead, that is, dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, and in danger of eternal death for their ſins and treſpaſſes, even theſe heard the voice of the Son of God then ſpeaking perſonally, and heard it afterwards miniſterially, in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, and that voice revived them, not only by giving them the comfort of that natural life which they had before, but by bringing in a new ſpiritual life which before they had not. Then the internal ear is opened to purpoſe when thoſe internal or myſtically dark graves of ſin are opened, and the ſoul comes forth into the light of life.

Yet more diſtinctly, God may be ſaid to uncover or open the ears of men, when he doth theſe four things.

Firſt, When he makes us not only to hear but to attend, not only to hear but to hearken; or not only to hear but to give ear. Many give the word of God the hearing, but they do not give ear to the word of God.

Secondly, God opens the ear when he makes us not only attend, but underſtand, or when he takes the veyl off from our minds. The Apoſtle ſaith of the Jews (2 Cor. 3. 14.) The vail remaineth upon them untaken away to this day in the reading of the old Teſtament (and it doth ſo ſtill) ſo that as they could not, ſo yet they cannot, Look to the end of that which is aboliſhed; that is, to Chriſt, who was the end or ſcope at which the whole Ceremonial Law (now aboliſhed) did then aim. When once the ear is divinely opened, then the vail of ignorance and ſpiritual blindneſs is taken off from the mind, both as to that greateſt truth, and all other neceſſary truths. The opened ear is an underſtanding ear.

Thirdly, God openeth the ear when he cauſeth us to believe what we perceive and underſtand. As faith ſets the whole ſoul awork for God, ſo faith is the great work of God upon the ſoul. When the ear is opened, truth is not only known, but ſavingly believed.

Fourthly, This opening of the ear maketh the ſoul obedient; Jeſus Chriſt in that great prophecy of him (Pſal. 40. 6.) to ſhew his ready obedience to his fathers command, ſaith, Mine ear haſt thou opened (or digged) The ear of Chriſt was never ſhut in the leaſt, either through ignorance or unbelief; but he is ſaid to have his ear opened, only to ſhew his conſtant preparedneſs and readineſs for obedience. He came into the world with an open ear to all the will of God; and therefore it followeth in the 7. and 8. verſes of that Pſalm, Then ſaid I, loe I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God, yea thy law is within my heart. Chriſt is brought in by another Prophet ſpeaking to the ſame point with ſome little variety, but with very great ſignificancy of expreſſion (Iſa. 50. 4, 5.) He wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned; we uſually ſay, Sleep is in the eye, yet this prophecy intimates a ſleep in the ear, thou haſt wakened mine ear. What we are to underſtand by this wakened ear, is clear in the next words of the ſame prophecy, The Lord hath opened mine ear, that's the word of Eliphaz, and the conſequence of opening the ear, ſet down in the Prophet, is the ſame now given in this point, The Lord hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious. He doth not ſay, The Lord opened mine ear, and I heard, but, I was not rebellious; that is, I gave up my ſelf to obey the word or command, which I heard. The ſame Prophet (Iſa. 48. 8) deſcribing the rebellion of the Jews, puts this as the reaſon of it, Yea thou heardeſt not, (that is, thou didſt not attend) yea thou kneweſt not, that is, thou didſt not underſtand, yea thine ear was not opened; as if he had ſaid, thine unopened ear was the cauſe why thou didſt neither attend, nor underſtand, nor obey the word ſpoken to thee. So much of the firſt gracious deſign of God in ſpeaking to men by dreams and viſions of the night; Then he openeth the ears of men. The ſecond is given in the latter part of the verſe.

חתם ſignavit, obſignavit, confirmavit, perfecit.

The word ſignifies not only to ſeal, but to perfect or conclude, He ſealeth Inſtruction.

There is a threefold uſe of ſeals and ſealing; Firſt, to diſtinguiſh one thing from another; Secondly, to keep things ſafe and ſecret; Thirdly, ſealing is to confirm and ratifie; A Bond, Deed, or Evidence in writing, till it hath a Seal, is but a ſcrip of paper of no force, but when once the Seal is put to it, then it is confirmed, then there is ſtrength and force in it. A ſeal fortifies the writing, or maketh it authentick. He ſealeth their Inſtruction.] The word here uſed ſignifies both correction and Inſtruction, and ſo it is rendred by ſome here, He openeth their ears, or ſealeth their chaſtiſement. Mr. Broughton takes that ſenſe. And imprinteth why they are chaſtiſed; that is, (as himſelf expounds it) when he hath chaſtiſed them, he ſealeth up the decree of their judgment; or as another, He propoſeth it unto them as firm and concluded, if they do not repent and imprinteth in their mind the certainty of it, as alſo the true cauſe of it. We render fully to the ſenſe of the word and ſcope of the Text, He ſealeth their inſtruction; that is, upon the opening of the ear there is a ſealing or a ſetting home the word which is received. When the ear is opened to receive, God will make men hold what they have received. The ſealing of inſtruction, ſignifies the efficacy, energy, or effectual working of God with the word, he ratifies and confirms it to the ſoul, he maketh his word as ſure to them as a ſealed Bond, both with reſpect to the duty commanded, and the mercy promiſed. And, indeed, we have as much need to have Inſtruction ſealed, as to have the ear opened; for 'tis poſſible the ear may be opened, we may hear and underſtand, and in ſome ſenſe believe, yea obey, and yet not have the inſtruction ſealed. The inſtruction is then ſealed, when we keep what is received, as the ear is opened when we receive what is offered. Unleſs the inſtruction be ſealed, we hear and obey only for the preſent, not for the time to come, that is, we do not retain and hide the word received for uſe and practice.

Now, whether we take this ſealing in reference either to correction or inſtruction, it yields us matter of profitable meditation. Firſt, As it refers to correction.

Note, God aſſureth ſinful man that he ſhall ſmart for it, unleſs he hearken and obey.

It is as ſure that he ſhall, as if he ſaw it under hand and ſeal; or as if the ſentence were ingraven upon his conſcience, and fixt before his eyes. If the ear be not obedient to inſtruction, the back muſt ſubmit to correction; If the world will not do it, the rod muſt; if teaching will not ſerve the turn, chaſtning ſhall; He ſealeth their correction. Every correction threatned is not certainly inflicted; for Elihu ſaith afterward (verſ. 26.) He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable to him; but the meaning is, mans correction is ſealed in caſe he proceeds on in his ſin; if he does not give proof that his ear is opened by his obedience to inſtruction, there is no eſcaping correction. The correction of the deareſt children of God is ſealed, if they hear and do not. God will not cocker his ſtubborn children, nor ſpoil them by ſparing the rod; He will certainly meet with them one time or other, either by ſickneſs, or poverty, or reproach; the order, the warrant is ſealed for their correction.

Caſtigationem eorum obſignat. i.e. ſignificat eis ſe certo eos caſtigaturum niſi à peccato deſtiterint, non ſecus ac ſi ſententiam hanc literis mandaſſet, eaſq; literas obſignaſſet. Piſc.

Vellicans ipſorum aures & iminentes ipſis caſtigationes animis ipſorum inſculpent. Bez.

We may much more apply this to the wicked, to the ungodly and rebellious, who though they have their outward ears open, yet their hearts remain ſhut; If the correction of the godly be ſealed in that caſe, to be ſure, the deſtruction of the wicked is; they are ſealed for death, yea they are ſealed for hell; the writ of their eternal Judgment is ſealed. If Judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear? what ſhall the end of them be that obey not the Goſpel of God?

Further, Take it as we render it, referring to inſtruction, He ſealeth their inſtruction.

Whence note, God is able to ſet home his inſtructions effectually upon the ſoul.

He can leave ſuch an impreſſion upon the heart, as ſhall never be forgotten nor worn out. He can make every word ſtick; And ſo this is but a further illuſtration of what was ſaid before; he openeth their ears to receive the word, and then ſealeth inſtruction upon them. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of ſome perſons converted, who were the fruit of his miniſtry, ſaith, Ye are the ſeal of mine Apoſtleſhip (1 Cor. 9. 2, 3.) that is, ye confirm and ratifie my miniſtry, that it is of God, and that God is in it. Now as the converſion of ſinners, and the building up of Saints, is the ſeal of our miniſtry; ſo the ſealing of inſtruction upon the ſoul, is the converſion of ſinners, and the edification of Saints. When a ſinner is converted, his inſtruction is ſealed upon him, and when a Saint is built up and edified, and increaſeth in the things of God, then inſtruction is ſealed upon him alſo. And until we thus profit by the word, we have the word, as I may ſay, without a ſeal, nothing faſtens upon us.

Thus much of the firſt deſign of God in ſending dreams and viſions in thoſe times, it was to open the ears of men, and to ſeal their Inſtruction; This being only a general benefit aimed at by thoſe means, we have thoſe which are more ſpecial ſet down in the words which follow.

Verſ. 17. That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe and hide pride from man.

This 17. verſe contains two of thoſe bleſſed ends or deſigns of God in revealing himſelf to man by dreams and viſions, or by viſions in a dream, of which Elihu ſpake in the two former verſes; as then he takes an opportunity to open the ears of men, and ſeal their Inſtruction, to faſten and fix his word upon them, to make it ſtick and ſtay by them; ſo in all this his purpoſe is;

That he may withdraw man from his purpoſe.

הסיר auferre erit, vel mutare in melius.

The word rendred to withdraw, ſignifies, to take off, or put away, to remove or change for the better. (Iſa. 1. 16.) Put away the evil of your doings; that is, do no more evil, or (as the Lord ſpeaks by another Prophet, Jer. 44. 4.) O do not this abominable thing that I hate; we render the word in the other ſenſe (Job 27. 2.) He hath removed my Judgment far from me. There is in man a kind of ſetledneſs and reſolvedneſs upon his purpoſe, he will on; but ſaith Elihu, the Lord withdraws him, he ſtretcheth forth his hand, and pulls him back; He withdraweth

Man.] Adam, the earthly man; The proper name of the firſt man, is the common name of all men. Man is earthly by nature, and ſo are all his natural purpoſes. To draw an earthly man from that which is earthly, is no eaſie matter; only the power of God can do it; He withdraweth man מעשה à עשה fecit.

From his purpoſe.] The word which we render purpoſe, properly ſignifies a work; and ſo it is tranſlated not only elſewhere, but here by ſeveral Interpreters. Mr. Broughton is expreſs, That the earthly man leave off to work, and then by work, he means an evil work, as by purpoſe an evil purpoſe. The word work ſet alone uſually ſignifies an evil work, as the word wife put alone is taken for a good wife (Prov. 8. 22.) He that findeth a wife, findeth good; every one that findeth a wife doth not find good, (there are many bad wives) only he that findeth a good wife findeth good. So on the contrary, the word work ſtanding here alone, implyeth a bad work. And to withdraw man from his work, or from his purpoſe, is to withdraw him from his evil work or purpoſe: The Septuagint gives it clearly ſo, that he may withdraw man from unrighteouſneſs. And Mr. Broughton gloſſing his own tranſlation, ſaith, that he leave off mans work, and do the work of God.

Ut amoveat homo opus, ſc. ſuum & anim m malum. Jun.

ἀποϛρέψαι ἄνθρωπον ἀπὸ ἀδικίας. Sept.

Again, This term work, ſeems oppoſed to the thought or concupiſcence of the inner man; he withdraweth man from his work, that his hand may not effect what his heart hath contrived: that the bitter root may not bring forth evil and bitter fruit. Or if we follow our tranſlation, the ſenſe will be the ſame; He withdraweth man from his purpoſe, that is, he checks and ſtops the inward motions and workings of mans heart, and ſo keeps him from bringing it to perfection by an outward evil work. (Jam. 1. 15.) Then when luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin, and ſin, when it is finiſhed, brings forth death; God in great mercy takes man off from his purpoſe when he finds him upon an evil device or purpoſe; he cruſheth the Cockatrice's egg that it may not be hatched, and deſtroyeth the conception of thoſe Babyloniſh brats that they may never come to the birth. (Mich. 2. 1.) Woe to them that deviſe miſchief on their beds, when the morning is light they practiſe it, becauſe it is in the power of their hand. The work begins at the heart, there 'tis plotted and contrived; the heart is the work-houſe of ſin; now the Lord withdraws man from his purpoſe, and will not ſuffer the inward work to be accompliſhed by the outward work.

Ut avertat hominem ab iis quæ fecit. Vulg.

Further, we may refer theſe words either to what is paſt, or to what is to come; ſome tranſlate (referring it to what is paſt) that he may turn, or withdraw man from thoſe things which he hath done; that is, from thoſe evils to which he hath already ſet his hand; this is done by giving man repentance, which is our being humbled for, and turning away from any evil already committed.

Our tranſlation refers it to what is intended to be done, for that's a purpoſe. So the meaning is, God doth theſe things that he may keep man from doing that evil or miſchief which he hath reſolved upon, or at leaſt is forming and hammering in his thoughts. Abimelech had an evil purpoſe for the matter (though poſſibly the purpoſe of his heart was not evil) for he ſaid to God (and God ſaid he ſpake true) in the integrity of my heart, and innocency of my hands have I done this, Gen. 20. 5, 6. (he was I ſay about an evil purpoſe for the matter) when he thought to take Abram's wife from him, but the Lord came to him in a dream, and withdrew him from the evil of his purpoſe. Laban intended evil, or hard dealing to Jacob, but the Lord met him alſo in a dream, and withdrew him from his purpoſe, ſaying, (Gen. 31. 24.) Take heed thou ſpeak not to Jacob, neither good nor bad, that is, hinder him not in his journey, either by threatnings or by promiſes. Thus man is taken off or withdrawn from evil purpoſes by preventing grace, and from evil works by repenting grace.

I ſhall proſecute the words according to our reading only, which imports that when man hath ſome evil purpoſe upon his heart, the Lord viſits him in dreams and viſions of the night, to withdraw him from that purpoſe.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Man is very forward and eager upon evil purpoſes.

God himſelf muſt come to withdraw and fetch him off, or otherwiſe he will be driving them on. The heart of man naturally hath no other purpoſes but evil purpoſes, and upon them it is ſet (as I may ſay) to purpoſe; that is, he will effect and bring them about if he can. When Moſes reproved Aaron concerning the golden Calf which he had made, at the inſtance and violent importunity of the people, Aaron anſwered for himſelf (Exod. 32. 23.) Let not the anger of my Lord wax hot, thou knoweſt the people that they are ſet on miſchief, they are bent to it, they have ſuch a mind to it, that there's no turning them from it; they will hear no reaſon nor take any denyal, when the fit is on them. There is a ſetting of the heart of man continually upon evil; the wind blows that way, and no other way, the wind ſits always in that bad corner till God turneth it. There are two gracious acts of God, ſpoken of in Scripture, which do exceedingly ſhew forth the ſinfulneſs of man; every act of grace doth in its meaſure aggravate the ſinfulneſs of man, and always the higher grace acteth, the more is the ſinfulneſs of man diſcovered, eſpecially (I ſay) in this twofold act of grace, The former whereof conſiſts in drawing; the latter in withdrawing; there is a gracious act of God in drawing the ſinful ſons and daughters of men to that which is good. Man is drawn, Firſt, into a ſtate of grace or goodneſs, by this he is made good. He is drawn, Secondly, to acts of grace or goodneſs, by this he doth good. Of the former Chriſt ſpeaks (Joh. 6. 44.) No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me draw him, that is, no man can believe, (for by faith we come to Chriſt) except he receive power from on high. God draweth the ſoul to Chriſt, and that's a powerful act of divine drawing, though not a compulſory act: and as God muſt draw man into a ſtate of grace, which is our union with Chriſt by the Spirit in believing, ſo he draweth him to the acting of his graces. Of this latter the Church ſpeaketh to Chriſt (Cant. 1. 4.) Draw me, and I will run after thee. Theſe gracious drawings ſhew that we are not only utterly unable, but averſe to the receiving grace, and ſo becoming good, while we are in a ſtate of nature; as alſo that we are very backward to do that which is good, even when we are in a ſtate of grace. Now as God acts very graciouſly in drawing man to good, ſo Secondly, in withdrawing him from evil, from thoſe evil purpoſes and evil practices, to which all men are ſo eaſily, yet ſo ſtrongly carried. The Prophet (Jer. 2. 23, 24.) elegantly deſcribes the exceeding forwardneſs of that people to evil, while he compareth to the ſwift Dromedary, traverſing her ways, and to the wild Aſs in the Wilderneſs that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure (or the deſire of her heart) in her occaſion who can turn her away? As the wild Aſs ſet upon her pleaſure, and in her occaſion, when ſhe hath a mind to it, will not be turn'd away; ſuch is the heart of man. That other Prophet (Iſa. 5. 18.) telleth us of thoſe who draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with a cart-rope; that is, they ſet themſelves with all their might to do miſchief. When men are thus vainly bent upon vanity, 'tis a mighty work of God to withdraw them from their work. When, what men are purpoſed to do they are faſtened to it as with cords and cart-ropes, what but the power of the great God can withdraw them from it?

Whence note, Secondly, Unleſs God did withdraw and fetch us off from ſin, we ſhould run on in it continually.

When man is in an evil way, he hath no mind to return till God turneth him; let come on't what will, he will venture: 'Tis only through grace that the heart either abſtains or returns from evil. David ſaith (Pſal. 18. 23.) I have kept my ſelf from mine iniquity. David kept himſelf from his iniquity, yet he was not his own keeper: It was by the power of God that he kept himſelf from that ſin to which he was moſt prone, even from that ſin to which his own corruptions and the Devils temptations were always drawing him. David had ſome ſpecial iniquity to which his heart was inclined more than any other, and from that he kept himſelf, being himſelf kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation. Of our ſelves we can neither keep our ſelves from doing iniquity, nor leave off doing that iniquity, which we have once done. How can man withhold himſelf from ſin, while ſin hath ſo great a hold of him, yea the Maſtery over him?

> Thirdly Note, God is graciouſly pleaſed both to withdraw man from doing evil, and to draw him to repentance when he hath done evil.

Between theſe two the grace of God is daily working in and towards man, and it worketh for the effecting of both many ways.

Firſt, By his word, and that in a fourfold conſideration. Firſt, by the word of his command, he every where in Scripture forbids man to do any evil, and bids him repent of every evil which he doth. Secondly, by the word of his threatnings; they are as thunderbolts to deter him. Thirdly, by the word of his promiſes, they are divine allurements, ſweetly yet effectually to entice him. Fourthly, by the word of his perſwaſions, they are full of taking arguments to convince and win him.

Secondly, God withdraws man from ſin, and draws him to repentance when he hath ſinned, by his works: Firſt, by his works of Judgment, they break him to theſe duties. Secondly, by his works of mercy, they melt him into theſe duties.

Thirdly, God withdraws man from ſin and draws him to repentance by his patience and long-ſuffering. (Rom. 2. 4.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth them to repentance? As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, O man, if thou knoweſt not the meaning of God's patience towards thee, and that this is the meaning of it, thou knoweſt nothing of the mind and meaning of God towards thee.

Fourthly, The Lord withdraweth man from evil purpoſes by ſeaſonable counſels. David was going on in a very bad purpoſe (1 Sam. 25.) and God ſtirred up Abigail to meet him, and by good counſel to withdraw him from his purpoſe: This David acknowledged (verſ. 32, 33.) Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me. As if he had ſaid, I was fully purpoſed to revenge my ſelf upon Nabal, and had not ſurely left a man of his houſe alive by the morning light, if thou hadſt not met me; therefore bleſſed be God who hath ſent thee, and bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and haſt by thy good counſel withdrawn me from that evil purpoſe.

Laſtly, Conſider God withdraweth man from his ſinful purpoſe, all or any of theſe ways, by putting forth his mighty power with them. For his word alone, his works alone, his patience alone, the counſel of man alone would not do it, if God did not ſtretch forth his own arm in and with theſe means for the doing of it. Nothing is any further efficacious than as God is with it. (Numb. 22.) Balaam was going on in his wicked purpoſe, being ſent for by Balak to curſe the people of God: And though the Lord ſent his Angel to be an adverſary to him in his way (verſ. 22.) ſo that his Aſs turned out of the way into the field, yet Balaam went on in his purpoſe, yea though the Angel ſtanding between two walls cauſed his Aſs to turn ſo ſuddenly, that ſhe cruſht Balaam's foot againſt the wall (verſ. 25.) yet Balaam went on in his purpoſe: Once more though the Angel went further and ſtood in a narrow way, where there was no way to turn to the right hand nor to the left, ſo that the poor Aſs fell down under him (verſ. 27.) and ſpeaking (as the Apoſtle Peter expreſſeth it, 2 Epiſt. 2.) with mans voice rebuked the madneſs of the Prophet; Yet ſo mad he was that all theſe checks and warnings, could not withdraw him from his purpoſe. And what the Lord did at that time to Balaam by an Angel, that he doth by ſome other means and providences to ſtop many from their evil purpoſes, who yet will not be ſtopt. He ſpeaks to them in the miniſtry of his word, he ſpeaks to them in his works; he ſpreads their way with roſes, he hedgeth up their way with thorns, he beſtoweth ſweet mercies upon them, he ſends ſharp afflictions upon them, to withdraw them from their evil projects and purpoſes, yet on they go like Balaam, unleſs he ſend more than an Angel, even his holy Spirit to withdraw them.

Laſtly, Elihu reports it as a ſpecial favour of God to withdraw man from his purpoſe.

> Whence note, It is a great mercy to be hinder'd in ſinful purpoſes and intendments.

Diſappointments are acts of grace, when we are acting againſt grace; If God ſtop us from doing evil, not only by his word, but by blows, or by a hedg of thorns, yea if he ſtop us by a drawn ſword, it is a great mercy. Though God throw us to the ground (as he did Saul, afterwards Paul, when he went with a bloody purpoſe to vex and perſecute the Saints, Acts 9.) let us count our ſelves exalted, and rejoyce in it more than in any worldly exaltation. 'Tis a rich mercy to be kept from executing an evil purpoſe, though by our own poverty and outward miſery. The doing of that which is ſinful, is worſe than any thing that can be done to us, or endured by us, as a ſtop againſt ſin. Sin hath death in it; ſin hath wrath in it; ſin hath hell in it; ſin hath Devil and all in it; therefore to be kept from ſin, let it be by what means it will, if by pains and pining ſickneſſes, if by reproaches and diſgraces, yea if by death, we have cauſe to bleſs God. The greateſt and soreſt Judgment which God pours upon ſinful men, is to let them alone in or not to withdraw them from their ſins. To be ſuffered to go on and proſper in ſin, is the worſt of ſufferings, the laſt of Judgments, the next Judgment to hell it ſelf, and an infallible ſign of an heir of hell. Thus the wrath of God waxed hot againſt Iſrael when he gave them up to their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own Counſel (Pſal. 81. 11.) This was the higheſt revenge that God could take upon that ſinful people. He ſaid a little before, Iſrael would none of me; when God wooed them they were ſo coy, they would have none of him; and then, ſaid he, go on, take your fill of ſin; I give you up to your own hearts luſts. The Lord did not ſay, I gave them up to the ſword, to the famine, or to the peſtilence, but to their own hearts luſts, and to walk on in their own way; That perſon or people may be ſure, God hath purpoſed evil againſt them, whom he will not withdraw from their evil purpoſes. The ſeverity of the wrath of God againſt the Gentiles is expreſt and ſumm'd up in this (Rom. 1. 26, 28.) He gave them up to vile affections; he gave them up to a reprobate mind, to do things which were not convenient. A natural man left to himſelf, will ſoon do ſuch things as nature it ſelf abhorreth and bluſheth at. The ſame dreadful doom is denounced (Rev. 22. 11.) He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill. I will not withdraw him from his way, let him go on and periſh, let him go on and ſink down to the pit of perdition for ever. As St. John in the Revelation foretelling the Church, given up or left to (not in) great ſufferings of all ſorts; Here is the patience of the Saints. So when we ſee the world given up and left in great ſinnings of any ſort, eſpecially if to ſinnings of all ſorts, we may truly and ſadly ſay, Here is the wrath of God. 'Tis therefore a great mercy, if God will any way withdraw man from his ſinful ways and purpoſes eſpecially when he taketh ſuch gentle ways, as dreams and viſions, counſels and inſtructions, to withdraw man from his purpoſe, and (as it followeth in this verſe) to

Hide pride from man.] The word which we render to hide, is to hide by caſting a covering, a veyl, a garment, or any other thing, over what we deſire ſhould be hid, (Prov. 12. 23.) A prudent man concealeth knowledg; it is this word; he doth not pretend to know ſo much as he knoweth; he puts a veyl upon his own abilities, (as Moſes upon his face when there was ſuch a ſhining beauty imprinted there) rather than reveals them unneceſſarily or uncalled. 'Tis the fooliſh man, or he that hath but a ſhew of wiſdom, who loves and affects to be ſhewing it. But to the Text. The word is uſed alſo, to note that gracious act of God, his pardoning the ſin of man. (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered. God covers our ſins in the riches of his grace, by the perfect righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt.

Now there are two ways by which God hideth pride from man, Firſt, by pardoning it; Secondly, preventing it. Here to hide pride from man, properly, is not to pardon it when acted, but to prevent or keep man from the acting of it; God indeed hides the pride of man by pardoning it (and that's a high act of grace) and he hideth pride from man by keeping man from doing proudly, or from ſhewing his pride in his doings.

The word rendred pride, ſignifies Eminency, or Excellency, becauſe men are uſually proud of that wherein they are eminent and excel; there lyes the temptation to pride. And therefore as a man ſhould turn away his eyes from a beautiful harlot, leſt ſhe ſhould inſnare him, ſo God hides man's own beauties, eminencies, and excellencies, even his beſt works from him, leſt he ſhould be proud of them, and ſo go a whoring after them: or as God did with the body of Moſes, he not only buried him, but hid him (for 'tis ſaid, Deut. 34. 6. No man knoweth of his ſepulcher to this day) and 'tis well conceived that the reaſon why God hid his ſepulcher, was, leſt the people of Iſrael ſhould be drawn aſide to ſome undue or ſuperſtitious veneration of him. So God hideth (by ſome means or other) that which is moſt eminent in us, from us, leſt it ſhould draw us aſide to ſome undue eſtimation of it, and ſo prove but matter or fuel for pride to kindle upon. Thus the Lord hideth pride from us, when he hideth that from us, which (conſidering our corruption) may probably make us proud.

And the original word here uſed to ſignifie the man from whom God hideth pride, hath a near cognation to this notion about hiding pride it ſelf. Man is twice expreſt in this verſe, yet not by the ſame word; The firſt word notes man in the weakneſs of his conſtitution, an earthly man; This ſecond notes man in the powerfulneſs of his condition, a ſtrong man, a mighty man, an eminent man, a man with all his furniture, in the fulneſs of his earthly glory and greatneſs; when man hath much natural power, much civil power, with the various additions and ornaments of both theſe powers upon him, then man is in greateſt danger to be proud, and then God hideth pride from man. And who can hide pride from ſuch a man but God alone? Men commonly blow up ſuch men with pride by great applauſes, and ſuch men have moſtly great thoughts and high apprehenſions of themſelves, and are very forward to diſcover (which is the greateſt diſcovery of their weakneſs) their own pride. God only hideth pride from man; that is he makes it not to be, as well as hinders its appearing; that which is hidden is as if it were not. The word is uſed in that ſenſe (Job 3. 10.) Becauſe he did not hide ſorrow from mine eyes: Sorrow is hidden from us when the matter of ſorrow is ſo taken away, that we ſorrow not at all. To hide pride is to take away the matter and occaſion, the incentives and motives of pride, whatſoever is a nurſe of pride, or doth encourage the pride of our hearts, that's to hide pride from man.

Again, We may take this word, pride, in a large ſenſe, as comprehending all ſin, He withdraweth man from his purpoſe, and hideth pride; that is, ſin of all ſorts from man; and doubtleſs there is pride of one kind or other in every act of ſin; There is a heightening of the ſpirit againſt God, ſome diſſatisfaction with the mind and will of God, and thence a ſetting up of our will againſt the will of God in every ſinner, eſpecially in bold and wilful ſinners. Such ſinners would not let the will of God ſtand, but deſire that their own may. This is pride; This in ſome degree is mingled with every ſin, and pride leads to all ſin; therefore in Scripture ſometimes an humble or meek man is oppos'd, not only to a proud man in ſpecial, but to a wicked man in general (Pſal. 147. 6.) The Lord lifteth up the meek, he caſteth the wicked down to the ground. Where the wicked man in the latter part of the verſe, ſtands in oppoſition to the meek or humble man in the former part of it. Nor can it be denied, but that as pride is in it ſelf a very great wickedneſs, ſo it gives a propenſion and fitneſs for the doing of all manner of wickedneſs. And thus take it in the largeſt ſenſe, 'tis a truth that God hideth pride, that is, every ſin from man, otherwiſe he would ſoon ſhew forth any ſin as much as pride. But I rather keep to that ſtrictneſs of Interpretation here, as pride is oppoſed to humility, which is not only a choice grace, but the ornament of all thoſe graces which are hidden in the heart, and held out in the life of a gracious man. And thus the Lord by exerciſing man with dreams and viſions in his affliction, doth firſt ſtop and check the very purpoſes of evil, that they come not to act, and when man hath brought to paſs or acted any good purpoſe, he keeps him from oſtentation. He hideth pride from man.

It being the Lords deſign to hide pride from man, by thoſe fore-named diſpenſations.

Obſerve, Firſt, Man is naturally much diſpoſed and very prone to pride.

Thoſe things which Children are apt to abuſe or hurt themſelves with, their parents hide from them; They will hide edge-tools from them, leſt they get a wound by medling with them; They will hide fruit from them, leſt by eating overmuch they get a ſurfet. Thus the Lord our tender father often hides all the means and occaſions of pride from the eyes of his children, becauſe they are ſo ready to boaſt and lift up themſelves in pride. Man (as was ſhewed at the 13. verſe of the former Chapter) is a proud piece of fleſh, and hath much proud fleſh in him. The Prophet ſaith (Ezek. 7. 10.) Pride hath budded; pride hath a root, and it brings forth fruit. There is a twofold pride, or pride of two ſorts. Firſt, ſecret unſeen pride, or pride of heart; Secondly, open viſible pride, or pride of life. In alluſion to the Prophets Metaphor, we may ſay, there is pride in the bud, and pride in the root. Pride buddeth outwardly, Firſt, At the tongue, men ſpeak proud words, they ſpeak boaſtingly and vain-gloriouſly (Pſal. 75. 5.) Speak not with a ſtiff neck, that is, ſpeak not proudly. Pride budded at the tongue of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4. 30.) when he walked in his Palace and ſaid, Is not this great Babel that I have built for the houſe of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my Majeſty. Here was pride budding at the tongue.

Secondly, Pride buddeth alſo at the eye, in ſcornful lofty looks. David profeſt that his heart was not haughty, nor his eyes lofty (Pſal. 131. 1.) The haughtineſs of many mens hearts may be ſeen at thoſe windows of the body, the eyes, in lofty looks. Theſe are threatned with a downfall (Pſal. 18. 27.) The Lord will bring down high looks, that is, proud men who look highly. And again (Iſa. 2. 11.) The lofty looks of man ſhall be humbled, and the haughtineſs of man ſhall be bowed down. Once more ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 10. 13.) I will puniſh the fruit of the ſtout heart of the King of Aſſyria, and the glory of his high looks. There we have pride in the root, a ſtout heart, and pride in the fruit, high looks. (Iſa. 3. 11.) The ſhew of their Countenance teſtifieth againſt them; that is, they look proudly, though (which ſhould lay them in the duſt) they live very lewdly, yea they are proud of their lewdneſs.

Thirdly, How often doth pride bud in apparel, in vain faſhions, and new-fangled attires, in the affected adornings and trimmings of a body of clay? What are theſe but the buddings of pride? yea the flaggs and banners of pride. Some are as proud of their gay dreſſes, as the Peacock of his feathers. We commonly ſay, Fine feathers make fine birds, but how fooliſh are thoſe birds that are proud of Feathers!

Secondly, There is pride of heart, or pride budding in the ſpirit of man, which doth not ſhew it ſelf; only the mind ſwels within. When men have high thoughts of themſelves (though they do not (as the Apoſtle Jude hath it) ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity, yet they have great ſwelling thoughts of vanity, then pride buddeth in their ſpirits, their minds ſwell, and the mind will ſwell more than the tongue. The tongue ſwells mightily, but the heart much more. The ſpirit of man may lift up it ſelf on high, when the man looks very demurely. (Hab. 2. 4.) Behold, his ſoul which is lifted up, is not upright in him; If the ſoul be lifted up, the man falls; He that is high-minded, cannot be upright in his mind.

It may be queſtioned, Whence it cometh to paſs, that the ſoul of man is ſo much and ſo often lifted up with pride? What cauſeth this ſwelling and heaving of his ſpirit? I anſwer, Firſt, Some are proud of their birth, either, that they are born of great men, or that they are born of good men. The Baptiſt admoniſhed the Jews of this piece of pride (Matth. 3. 19.) Think not to ſay within your ſelves, we have Abraham to our father. As if he had ſaid, I well perceive what makes you (as we ſpeak proverbially) ſtand ſo much upon your pantaſles? and talk within your ſelves, at ſuch a rate of your ſelves, is it not becauſe you are of Abraham's ſtock? But I ſay unto you, let not your heart ſwell with theſe thoughts, we are Children of Abraham; for God is able even of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children to Abraham; that is, God will not want a people, though he ſhould lay you aſide, and entertain you no longer for his people.

Secondly, Others are proud of riches, yea they boaſt of the multitude of their riches (Pſal. 49. 6.) Even they who deſire to hide their riches as much as they can, yet cannot but tell the world they are proud of their riches, ſo proud, that they ſlight and contemn all men that have not as much riches as they; O what rejoycings have moſt rich men over their riches? Hezekiah a great King and a good man (a rare conjunction) had much of that upon his ſpirit (Iſa. 39. 2.) when Ambaſſadors came from Babylon, He was glad of them, and ſhewed them all his treaſure; He affected they ſhould ſee what a rich King he was, and what maſſes of Gold and Silver as well as what multitudes of men were at his command.

Thirdly, Many are proud of their honours and powers in the world; They are high-minded, becauſe they are ſet in high places; 'Tis a diſhonour to ſome great men that they have not truly great ſpirits. And 'tis the temptation of all great men to have proud ſpirits.

Fourthly, Not a few are proud of their bodily perfections and ſtrength; many a ſoul is defiled and deformed with pride of the bodies beauty and fairneſs; many look not after the beauty of holineſs, while they doat upon the beauty of their own comelineſs; they ſee themſelves in their beauty, till they are proud of it, and care not (which ſhould be our greateſt care, and ſhall be our greateſt priviledg, Iſa. 33. 17.) to ſee the King in his beauty. As ſome truſt in their ſpiritual beauty (Ezek. 16. 15.) ſo others over-ween their corporal; both are the effects of pride; and the firſt is by ſo much the worſe of the two, by how much it riſeth from a better object.

Fifthly, Many are proud of their natural parts, proud of their gifts, proud of their wit, proud of their memory, proud of their eloquence and abilities of ſpeaking. As knowledg it ſelf puffeth up (1 Cor. 8. 1.) ſo do all thoſe endowments which ſerve either for the getting or expreſſing of our knowledg. Gifts and abilities, whether natural or improved and acquired, do not more fit us for ſervice, than tempt us to and (unleſs grace work mightily) taint us with pride.

Sixthly, As many are proud of what they have, ſo others are proud of what they have done, they are proud of their actions, their ſpirits ſwell with the thoughts of their own works. Some are ſo wicked, that they are proud of their evil works. The Apoſtle ſaith, They glory in their ſhame (Phil. 3. 19.) David complained of many (Pſal. 4.) who turned his glory into ſhame; but theſe turn their ſhame into glory, that is, they are proud of that for which they ought to be aſhamed. Now if ſome are proud of the evil, of the miſchief which they have done, how eaſily may we grow proud of the good which we have done? proud of our duties, proud of our righteous deeds, proud of our charitable deeds to men, proud of our prayers to God, proud of our zeal for God, as Jehu was who ſaid, Come and ſee my zeal for the Lord. The heart of a good man may ſoon have too much to do with what he hath done, his thoughts may quickly work too much towards and upon his own works. But as for hypocrites and ſelf-ſeekers, who do good to be ſeen of men, they cannot forbear ſeeing it themſelves, and ſurely that ſight of the eye cannot but affect the heart with pride.

Seventhly, Pride riſeth often from the ſucceſs of what is attempted and done, men are proud of victories. The Aſſyrian is deſcribed (Iſa. 10. 13, 14.) triumphing and inſulting, becauſe he had put down the nations as a valiant man. And (Hab. 1. 16.) we have the Chaldeans ſacrificing to their net, and burning incenſe to their drag, becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous; that is, they boaſted of and gloried in their great atchievements in war; ſo it ſeems to be explained in the next words (verſ. 17.) Shall they therefore empty their net, and not ſpare continually to ſlay the nations?

Eighthly, Pride ſpringeth out of the very mercies and ſalvation of God. Thus 'tis ſaid of Hezekiah (2 Chron. 32. 25.) after he had received two great mercies; Firſt, deliverance from a great enemy; and, Secondly, from a great ſickneſs; He rendred not again according to the benefit done unto him, for his heart was lifted up. How lifted up? not in thankfulneſs, for he rendred not according to the kindneſs, but in pride and high-mindedneſs; for preſently it is ſaid (verſ. 26.) Notwithſtanding Hezekiah humbled himſelf for the pride of his heart.

Ninthly, The heart is lifted up and waxeth proud with Church-Priviledges; Some ſay, they are in the Church, or they are the Church; they enjoy pure ordinances and adminiſtrations of holy worſhip above others. For this kind of pride the Prophet reproved the Jews (Jer. 7. 3, 4.) Hear ye the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at theſe gates to worſhip the Lord, &c. Truſt ye not in lying words, ſaying, The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are we; The temple of the Lord are theſe; As if he had ſaid, Be not proud of the Temple (what we truſt to, beſides God, we are proud of) nor of your Temple-priviledges, you will find no ſanctuary, no ſecurity there, unleſs you amend your ways; theſe things will do you no good, except you be better. The Jews were taxed alſo by the Apoſtle for ſuch a proud cry (Rom. 2. 17.) Thou makeſt thy boaſt of God; and can a man do better than to boaſt of God? but they ſwell'd with pride, they did not rejoyce with thankfulneſs, they contemn'd others, as if God were a God to them only, and ſaw ſomewhat in them above others, as the reaſon why he choſe them for his people above others. This was pride of ſpirit, or ſpiritual pride. And again to the Jew (verſ. 22.) Thou that makeſt thy boaſt of the Law; And is it not our duty to boaſt of the Law or Word of God? But the Apoſtle ſaw them proud of the Law, not obedient to it; He perceived their hearts were lifted up in their priviledg of having the letter of the Law, while both their hearts and lives were unconformed and unſubdued to the ſpiritualneſs of the Law.

Tenthly, Pride is ready to riſe in the heart of man from that divine light and thoſe extraordinary Revelations which he receives from God; and it is hard to keep the heart under when God diſcovers very much of himſelf to man. This was Paul's caſe (2 Cor. 12. 7.) Leſt I ſhould be lifted up above meaſure through the abundance of revelations, there was given me a thorn in the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan to buffet me. Even Paul in that caſe needed a thorn in his fleſh to let out or prevent the Impoſtumation of his ſpirit. Some conceive the reaſon why the Prophet Ezekiel is ſo often called, Son of Man, was to keep him humble, while he had many revelations from God.

Eleventhly, Some have been proud not only of divine and heavenly, but of diabolical and helliſh Revelations. We read of one Theudas boaſting himſelf to be ſome body (Acts 5. 36.) This vain man pretended revelations from God, which were indeed from the Devil; And he ſwell'd with this conceit, boaſted himſelf to be ſome body, that is, he thought himſelf to be every body; as if the perfections of all men were center'd in him, or as if all others were no body, and he himſelf the only ſome body. The Apoſtle (Acts 8. 9.) ſpeaking of Simon, who had uſed ſorcery and bewitched the people of Samaria, ſaith, He gave out that himſelf was ſome great one; he ſwell'd with pride from his diabolical Revelations; giving out not only (as Theudas) that he was ſome body, but that he was ſome great one. Though indeed for a man to report himſelf ſome body, is (as both learned Grecians and Latines noted in the Margin tell us) to report himſelf a Great one. And who are greater in pride, than they who make great reports of themſelves, or report themſelves great?

Λέγων εἶναί τινα ἑαυτὸν, μέγας τις idem atq; μέγας. Hinc illud Pindari, τί δὲ τὶς; τί δ' ὔτις; Quid eſt Aliquis? i. e. qui ſe putat eſſe aliquem. σκιᾶς ὄναρ ἄνθρωπος. Umbræ ſomnium homo. Hinc illud. Eſt filius alicujus. i. e. egregij viri, non è media turba aut terræ filius. Et illud. Fac ut me velis eſſe aliquem. Cic. Lib. 3. ad Atticum Epiſt. 52.

How great a proneneſs there is in the heart of man to pride, may appear by all theſe inſtances; by which it appears that as there is much pride abiding in man, ſo by all or any of theſe occaſions it is daily budding out, unleſs God hide it from man, and nip it in the bud.

Yet here it may be queſtioned; Whence it cometh to paſs, that man is ſo prone to pride? or what is the ſpring of it?

I anſwer; Firſt, Pride ſprings from Inordinate ſelf-love, (2 Tim. 3. 2.) Men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, Covetous, Boaſters, Proud. They that are undue lovers of themſelves, or in love with themſelves, they preſently grow proud of themſelves. Self-love, and ſelf-flattery, are glaſſes in which if a man look upon himſelf, he appears double to what he is, or much greater than what he really is. Self-love is a multiplying, yea and a magnifying glaſs. 'Tis dangerous to ſee our ſelves through our own ſelf-love; That ſight of ſelf affects the heart with high thoughts of ſelf, which high thoughts the Lord would have all men caſt down, or caſt away, while he gives that admonition by his Apoſtle to the Romans (Rom. 12. 3.) Let no man think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think (that is, let him not think highly of himſelf at all) but (as it followeth in the ſame verſe) Soberly, or to ſobriety. For indeed many are drunken, yea mad, or mad-drunk with high, that is, proud thoughts of themſelves. Hence that of the ſame Apoſtle (Gal. 6. 3.) If a man think himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf; he that thinks himſelf to be ſomething, is he that hath proud thoughts of himſelf; and ſuch a ſomething, is a meer nothing, that is, is no ſuch thing as he thinks himſelf to be; as is clear in the caſe of the Church of Laodicea (Rev. 3. 16.) Hence

Secondly, Pride ſprings from an opinion that what we have is better than indeed it is; the proud man thinks all his ſilver gold, and his braſs ſilver. We ſpeak proverbially of ſuch, All their geeſe are ſwans; they always over-rate their own commodities.

Thirdly, Pride ſprings from this falſe opinion, that what we have, we have it from our ſelves, or that 'tis of our own getting. The Apoſtles Pride-confounding queſtion, is, (1 Cor. 4. 7.) What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? As if he had ſaid, the true reaſon why men boaſt, or the ground of all their proud boaſting is this, they think not themſelves beholding to any for what they have; all is of themſelves, or by a ſelf improvement; they have ſomewhat (they imagine) which they have not received.

Fourthly, The proud man thinks what he hath, he alone hath it; at leaſt, that he hath it in a greater meaſure than any other. He is the Cedar, others are but ſhrubs. He is the Giant, others are but dwarfs. Only the humble attain that rule (Rom. 12. 10.) In honour preferring one another: as alſo that (Phil. 2. 3.) In lowlineſs of mind, let each eſteem other better than himſelf.

Fifthly, Pride riſeth from this thought, that what we have, we ſhall always have. Holy David began to be blown up with pride, as ſoon as ever he ſaid in his proſperity, I ſhall never be moved. Babylon glorified her ſelf, having ſaid in her heart, I ſit a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow, (Rev. 18. 7.)

Secondly, In that God is here ſaid to hide pride from man;

Obſerve, Pride is a very vile and moſt odious ſin.

If God hide it from mans eyes, then ſurely God himſelf is of purer eyes than to behold it, and be pleaſed (Pſal. 138. 6.) The Lord knoweth the proud afar off; He that meets a ſpectacle or perſon which he cannot endure to look upon, avoids it, or turns from it while he is yet afar off; whereas if the object be delightful, he draweth near, and comes as cloſe as he can; when therefore 'tis ſaid, the Lord knoweth a proud man afar off, it ſhews his diſdain of him, He will ſcarce touch him with a pair of tongs, (as we ſay) he cannot abide to come near him. He knows well enough how vile he is even at the greateſt diſtance. Pride is the firſt of thoſe ſeven things which are an abomination to the Lord, (Prov. 6. 17.) And how abominable a thing pride is, may appear further by theſe ſix Conſiderations.

Firſt, The folly and Irrationality of pride, renders it odious to God; nothing is more odious to a wiſe man than folly, how odious then is pride to the moſt wiſe God! When Paul did any thing which had but a ſhew of pride in it, though he did it only upon Conſtraint, yet he calls himſelf fool for doing it (2 Cor. 12. 11.) I am become a fool in glorying, ye have compelled me. Doth not this intimate, that in Paul's opinion, all proud ſelf-gloriers and boaſters are fools, that is, ſuch as act below common ſenſe or reaſon. In the Hebrew language, the ſame word that ſignifies boaſting and pride, ſignifies folly and fooliſhneſs. The empty veſſel yields the greateſt ſound; and they that make ſo great a noiſe of themſelves, are uſually nothing elſe but a great noiſe themſelves, at leaſt they unavoidably raiſe a ſuſpition of themſelves, that they are but empty veſſels, or ſhallow rivers. This was Solomon's concluſion (Prov. 25. 27.) For men to ſearch their own glory is no glory; that is, a man obſcures himſelf by ſelf glorying. How fooliſh, how irrational a thing is it for any man to glory proudly, when as by doing ſo he obſcures that which is the chiefeſt glory of man as man, his reaſon; and ſeems to put himſelf to the queſtion, whether he be a reaſonable creature yea or no.

Secondly, Pride is more abominable, becauſe it is not only the folly of man, but a robbery of God; nothing robs God of his honour ſo much as pride. It is ſaid of Jeſus Chriſt (Phil. 2. 6.) He thought it no robbery to be equal with God; He did not wrong God in making himſelf his equal, himſelf being God. But if men will match themſelves with God, or are lifted up in their ſpirits, (as proud men are beyond the line of man) this is a robbery of God. Whatſoever we take to our ſelves more than is due, we take from God, yea we ſteal from God. They who forget God the author and fountain of all they have, and take glory to themſelves, commit the worſt kind of robbery, and are the moſt dangerous Thieves. (Iſa. 42. 8.) My glory will I not give to another; therefore if any take glory to themſelves (as (I ſay again) all proud men do) 'tis ſtealing, and 'tis not only (as I may ſay) picking of his pocket, but the breaking open of his Treaſury, of his Cabinet, to carry away the chief Jewel of his Crown, ſo is his glory (Rom. 11. 36.) All is from him, therefore all muſt be to him; all is from the father of light, therefore what light, what gifts, what ſtrength ſoever we have, it muſt return to him in praiſes, and in the glorifying of his name; we may not deck or adorn our own name with it, nor put our name upon it? How much ſoever we have, we have received, it is from the Lord; therefore 'tis extreamly ſinful and ſacrilegious to take or keep it to our ſelves. And as whatſoever good we have, we have it of God, ſo whatſoever good we have done, we have had light and ſtrength from God to do it; natural yea ſpiritual ſtrength, not only the firſt power of acting, but all ſubſequent actings of that power are from God; therefore to have ſecret liftings up of ſpirit, in our own actings, is to rob God (Pſal. 51. 15.) Open thou my lips, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe, ſaid David; As if he had ſaid, Lord if thou wilt open my lips, and help me to ſpeak as I ought, I will not ſhew forth my own praiſe, nor boaſt of what I have either ſpoken or done, but I will ſhew forth thy praiſe; becauſe the opening of the lips is from thee.

Thirdly, It is an abomination to be proud; for whatſoever any man hath done, or how good ſoever any man is, he is no better than he ſhould be, and hath done no more than was his duty to do; he hath done but his duty to God, and his duty to man, when he hath done his beſt, he hath done no more; every man is bound to do the good that he doth, how much ſoever it be that he doth; therefore it is both an ignoble and an abominable thing for any man to boaſt of what he hath done.

Fourthly, Is it abominable to boaſt of what we have done, ſeeing how much ſoever we have done, it will appear upon a right and due account, that we have done leſs than we ought, and are much ſhort of our duty, (Luke 17. 10.) When ye ſhall have done all thoſe things which are commanded you, ſay, we are unprofitable ſervants, and have done but that which was our duty to do. We can do nothing but what is our duty, but all we do is not the one half of our whole duty, and ſhall we glory as if we had obliged God by doing more than all!

Fifthly, It is an odious thing for any man to be proud of what he hath done, for God might have done it by another, if he pleaſed. No man is neceſſary to God, as if his work could not be done unleſs ſuch a one do it. He hath choice of inſtruments, and is able to fit thoſe for his buſineſs who are moſt unfit of themſelves. It is matter of thankfulneſs that God will call and uſe us to do him any ſervice, and enable us to do it; God could have put his talent into another mans hand; the riches, the power, the wiſdom, the learning, the parts which thou acteſt by, he could have put it into other hands; he can make the dumb to ſpeak, as well as the greateſt ſpeaker: He can make an Ideot, a Dunce, knowing and learned, as well as the moſt knowing among the learned; therefore the learned and the eloquent, have no reaſon to be proud, but much to be thankful: He can make the weakeſt to do as much as the ſtrongeſt; therefore the ſtrongeſt have no reaſon to be proud, but much to be thankful: He can raiſe Children to Abraham out of the ſtones of the ſtreet; therefore the Jews muſt not be proud, or think that God is beholding to them for being his people: He can ordain ſtrength and his own praiſe out of the mouths of babes and ſucklings (Pſal. 8. 2. Matth. 21. 16.) therefore the wiſe and prudent have no reaſon to be proud, but much to be thankful. O remember, It is of God's vouchſafement not of our deſert, that we are admitted to his ſervice.

Laſtly, Pride muſt needs be an odious thing, and that which God greatly abhorrs, becauſe it quite croſſeth the deſign of God in the Goſpel; which is to keep the creature humble and low, that he himſelf alone may be exalted; He will not bear it that any fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence; He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord (1 Cor. 1. 29, 31.) God will have his end upon all fleſh, and therefore he will dreadfully glorifie himſelf upon thoſe, who proudly glory in themſelves.

Further, The word by which man is expreſſed, from whom God hides pride, ſignifying (as was ſhewed) a ſtrong mighty man, the moſt accompliſhed and beſt furniſhed man;

> Obſerve, Thirdly, Great men, wiſe men, rich men, are very ſubject to and often carried away by pride.

God therefore hides pride from them, becauſe they lie ſo open to the aſſaults of pride; our riſing is oftentimes an occaſion of our falling. And that which God gives man for his good, proves (by reaſon of this corruption moſtly) his ſnare. One of the Ancients ſpeaking of Pride, ſaith 'tis the greateſt ſin, for four reaſons.

Firſt, In the antiquity of it, becauſe it was the firſt ſin, the Devil's ſin, before man ſinned; that ſin which he firſt dropt into man to make him fall, was the ſin by which himſelf fell; he would be higher, and more than he was, and he provoked man to be ſo too. 'Tis diſputed what was the original of original ſin, and the doubt lyeth between two, whether unbelief or pride had the precedency in man's fall, (a queſtion much like that, whether faith or repentance hath the precedency in his riſing) I ſhall only ſtate it thus; that which appeared firſt was unbelief; the woman put a peradventure upon the threatning of God in caſe of eating the forbidden fruit. But certainly pride was Contemporary with unbelief, man would needs lift up himſelf beyond the ſtate he had, and ſo fell from and loſt that eſtate.

Secondly, Saith he, Pride is productive of many other ſins, 'tis a fountain ſin, a root ſin, it nouriſheth, nurſeth, and bringeth up many other ſins; no man knoweth what ſin may be next, when pride is firſt.

Thirdly, The greatneſs of the ſin of pride may be argued from the over-ſpreading of it; pride hath infected many mortally; and who can ſay his heart is free from this plague, though poſſibly it be not the plague (or ſpecial maſter-ſin) of his heart? Pride is an Epidemical diſeaſe, all labour under this ſickneſs, and this ſickneſs hath got the maſtery over many.

His fourth reaſon is that of the Text and point; Pride is a great wickedneſs, becauſe uſually it infects great men. They that are great in power, great in gifts, great in learning, great in any thing, are ſure to be aſſaulted if not blemiſhed and blaſted with this ſin, inſomuch that it had been better for many to have been fools, than learned, low than high, mean than great, poor than rich in this world. There is a temptation in power, in greatneſs, in riches, in knowledg, in gifts, in the beſt things, to make the mind ſwell, and the man that is ſtored with them proud. Pride is (as I may ſay) of a very high extraction, it was conceived in and born by the now Apoſtate Angels, whoſe place, firſt eſtate (or principality, as we put in the Margin of the Epiſtle of Jude verſ. 6.) was aloft in heaven. Angels were the neareſt ſervants and attendants upon God himſelf, who calleth heaven the habitation of his holineſs, and of his glory; And ſurely the habitation which the Apoſtle Jude in the ſame verſe ſaith the Angels left, (and he calls it their own, that is, that which was allotted and allowed them by God as their portion, this habitation, I ſay,) muſt needs be a very high and excellent one, as themſelves by nature were in the higheſt claſſis or form of creatures. Now as pride began from and had its birth in theſe high and noble ſpirits (which gave one occaſion (though it be as helliſh a luſt as any in hell) to call it Heavenly by Nation) ſo the higher men are (who at higheſt are but duſt) the more doth pride haunt them, and inſinuate it ſelf to get a dwelling or ſeat in them, as the moſt proper and congenial ſubjects which it can find here on earth it ſelf, with thoſe of whom it firſt took poſſeſſion and whom it made its firſt habitation, being for ever caſt down from heaven. Pride having once dwelt in thoſe who were ſo high, loves ſtill to dwell or take up its lodging (at leaſt) in thoſe, who upon any reference whether to natural, civil, or ſpiritual things, are called and reputed Higheſt.

Quia natione cœleſtis ſublimium animos inhabitat. Hugo.

> Obſerve, Fourthly, God by various means, even by all ſorts of means, gives check to the pride of man, he ſpeaketh once, yea twice to man in a dream, in a viſion of the night, that he may hide pride from man.

Pride is a ſin which God proſecutes both night and day; if ſpeaking by day doth not mortifie it, ſpeaking in the night by dreams ſhall. Nebuchadnezzar was full of pride, and God humbled him by a dream, and brought down the haughtineſs of his heart by a viſion of the night. This great Monarch of the world was ſo full of pride that he boaſted it out (Dan. 4. 30.) Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the houſe of the kingdom, and by the might of my power, and for the honour of my Majeſty? Now while he ſpake thus walking in the Palace of the kingdom of Babylon, there fell a voice from heaven, ſaying, O King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is ſpoken, The kingdom is departed from thee, &c. And they ſhall drive thee from among men, And thy dwelling (who haſt thought thy ſelf more than man) ſhall be with the beaſts of the field. The effect of this voice Nebuchadnezzar had in a dream, as appears by Daniel's interpretation of it in the former part of the Chapter. God ſhewed him in that dream what his condition ſhould be, and he executed it upon him to the full, to pull down his pride; That, he at laſt might know that the moſt High ruleth the Kingdoms of men, and giveth them to whomſoever he will. Whereas then he thought that he alone ruled the world, and could give kingdoms to whom he would. How wonderfully did God oppoſe the pride of Paul's ſpirit? he could not favour pride, no not in that eminent Apoſtle. Leſt through the abundance of revelations he ſhould be exalted above meaſure, there was given him a thorn in the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan to buffet him, (2 Cor. 12. 7.) that is, God uſed extraordinary means to humble him. As here God is ſaid to humble by viſions, ſo there Paul being endangered to pride by receiving viſions, God found a ſtrange way to humble him, even by the buffetings of the meſſenger of Satan, who is the Prince of pride, and as (God ſpeaketh of the Leviathan at the 42. Chapter of this book, verſ. 34.) a King over all the children of pride. God doth ſo much reſiſt pride, that he cannot but reſiſt the proud (James 4. 6.) and ſcorn the ſcorners, (Prov. 3. 34.) yea he hath told us of a day (Iſa. 2. 11.) wherein the lofty looks of man ſhall be humbled, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be bowed down: and the Lord alone ſhall be exalted in that day.

There are four ſpecial pride-ſubduing Conſiderations.

Firſt, They who are proud of what they have, are like to have no more. When the Apoſtle had ſaid (James 4. 6.) He reſiſteth the proud (he preſently adds) but giveth more grace to the humble. As if he had ſaid, Though the Lord hath given proud men much (for 'tis ſome gift of God, and uſually a great one of which men grow proud) yet he will now ſtop his hand and give them no more. The Lord gives to them who are humble and praiſe him, not to thoſe who are proud and praiſe themſelves.

Secondly, Not only doth the Lord ſtop his hand from giving more to thoſe who are proud, but often makes an act of revocation and takes away that which he hath already given. As he who idly puts his talent into a napkin, ſo he who vainly and vain-gloriouſly ſhews it, is in danger of having it taken away from him. It is as ſinful to ſhew our talent proudly, as to hide it negligently. Nebuchadnezzar boaſted proudly of his Kingdom, and preſently it was ſaid to him, The Kingdom is departed from thee. Hezekiah boaſted of his treaſure (Iſa. 39. 6.) and by and by the Lord told him, his treaſure ſhould be taken away, (though not immediately from him, yet from his poſterity) and carried to Babylon. 'Tis ſo in ſpirituals, when we proudly ſhew our treaſure, the treaſure of our knowledg, or other gifts and attainments, the Lord many times, in judgment, ſends them into captivity, takes them from us, and ſtrips us naked of that clothing and adorning whereof we are proud.

Thirdly, If God doth not take all away, yet what remains is withered and blaſted, it dries up and comes to little; if it be not quite removed, yet it appears no more in its former beauty and luſter. When God with rebukes correcteth man for (this) iniquity, he maketh his beauty (the beauty of his parts and gifts, yea of his graces) to conſume away (as David expreſſeth it, Pſal. 39. 11.) like a moth. O what a drineſs, and ſo a decayedneſs falls upon that Soul from whom the ſoaking dews and drops, the ſweet influences of Heaven are reſtrained! And ſurely if they are reſtrained from any, they are from proud men; no marvail then, if others ſee and they feel their withering, and even ſenſible declinings every day.

Fourthly, Suppoſe the gifts and parts of a proud man continue florid and appear ſtill acting in their former ſtrength, vigour, and beauty, yet God ſends a ſecret curſe upon them, and though he doth not wither them, yet he doth not delight in them, nor give them any acceptation. The beſt things how long ſoever continued to proud men, are no longer bleſſings to them; yea it had been good for them, that either they had never had them, or that they had been ſoon taken away. That as one ſaid falſely of the life of man in general, but truly of wicked men; It had been beſt for them not to have been born, and their next beſt would be to die quickly. So I may ſay in this caſe of proud men; it had been beſt for them they never had received any eminent gifts from God, and their next beſt would be to have them quickly taken away; for as wicked men in general (if they die unconverted) the longer they live, the worſer they live, and every day by adding new heaps of ſin, heap up further wrath againſt the day of wrath; ſo proud men in ſpecial, the longer they have and hold their gifts, their riches, their honours, their powers, do but abuſe them the more, to the increaſe of their ſin here, and (without repentance) ſhame hereafter.

Optimum eſt non naſci, proximum cito mori.

And therefore to ſhut up this obſervation, and the expoſition of this verſe, I ſhall only give ſome few directions or counſels for the cure of this Soul-ſickneſs pride, or for the pricking of a pride-ſwoln heart, that ſo the wind, that noxious wind of oſtentation, by which proud men are vainly puft up in their fleſhly minds, may be let out and voided.

Firſt, Let the proud man conſider what he is; ſome have asked blaſphemouſly, What is the Almighty? As we ſaw at the 21. Chapter of this Book: But it may well enough be asked, What is man that the Almighty ſhould be mindful of him? (Pſal. 144. 3, 4.) and may we not much more queſtion again, What is man that he ſo ſhould be mindful of himſelf? David, a great King ſaid to the Lord (2 Sam. 7. 18.) Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my Houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? Thus every man ſhould ſay to himſelf, or put the queſtion to his own Soul; Who am I? Or what am I, that I ſhould have a proud thought? All men indeed differ in ſome things, and ſome differ in very many things. Men of high degree, and men of low degree differ, men of knowledge and ignorance differ, learned and unlearned men differ. And it is not only, as I may ſay, a piece of Heraldry, but a piece of Divinity to keep up the differences of men. Yet what is any man, whether high or low, knowing or ignorant, learned or unlearned, that he ſhould be proud? They all agree in this, they are all duſt and aſhes, they are all but as a ſhadow, or a vapour, they are all as graſs, or as a flower of the field, and at their beſt eſtate (in the very height of their excellency) they are altogether vanity. How much ſoever men differ in other things, yet in this they all agree, or are all alike in this, they are all vanity. Then what is man that he ſhould be proud? Shall duſt and aſhes, ſhall a paſſing ſhadow, or a diſappearing vapour, ſhall withering graſs, or fading flowers, ſhall vanity it ſelf be proud? The beſt of men at their beſt, are the worſt of all theſe, why then ſhould any man be proud? Yea I may put the queſtion further, How can any man be proud, who knoweth what man is, and acknowledgeth himſelf to be but a man. I will add yet further in this queſtioning way, how can any man be proud who knoweth himſelf to be (which is a more humbling conſideration, then any of or then all the former) a ſinful man! We ought always to be humbled for ſin, and ſhall we who are at all times ſinning, be proud at any time?

Secondly, To cure pride of ſpirit, conſider what every man is (as to this World) he cannot be long what he is. He that is high in the World, cannot be long in his Worldly heights. He that is rich in the World, cannot long enjoy his Worldly riches; yea knowledg vaniſheth; all ſuch kind of knowledg, learning and skill as men now have, is a meer vaniſhing thing; man, in his higheſt perfections, is very mutable, and the higher he is, the more mutable he is; what hath he then to be proud of? We have ſome changes every day, and when a few days are paſt, we ſhall come to our great change; our change by death is but a few days off, for the utmoſt of our days are but a few. As man is not to be accounted of by others, ſo not by himſelf, becauſe his breath is in his noſtrils, and he may quickly periſh (Iſa. 2. 22.) Shall periſhing things be proud things? Shall they be lifted up with what they have, who (as to this World) have ſo little being, that they can ſcarcely be ſaid to be. By this argument all men are called off from truſting thoſe that are higheſt in this World (Pſal. 146. 3.) Their breath goeth forth. And we have the ſame argument, not to be high in our own thoughts, becauſe our breath goeth forth, and there is an end of us.

Thirdly, Conſider all thoſe things which are as fewel and occaſions of pride in man, even for thoſe man muſt ſhortly give an account. And ſurely he who remembers that whatſoever he hath, be it riches, ſtrength, honour, parts, knowledge, or learning, he muſt come to a reckoning for it, that man will not over-reckon himſelf ſo much for it, as to be proud of it. The Apoſtle concludes, So then every man muſt give an account of himſelf to God, (Rom. 14. 12.) That is, of all his receits, and of all his expences, what hath been beſtowed upon him, and how he hath improved what hath been beſtowed. He muſt give an account of himſelf in his natural capacity as a man; and he muſt give an account of himſelf in his civil capacity, as a rich or great man; and he muſt give an account of himſelf in his ſpiritual capacity, as he hath enjoyed means to make him gracious, or to grow in grace. He muſt give an account of himſelf about all the good things he hath received, what good he hath done with them, either to himſelf or others. He that is ſerious upon ſuch a meditation as this, ſhall find two effects of it; firſt, it will keep him very buſie, and free him from idleneſs; ſecondly, it will keep him very humble and free him from pride. Who can glory vainly in his Stewardſhip (for all we have is put into our hands as Stewards, who, I ſay, can glory vainly in his Sttwardſhip) that always hears this voice ſounding in his ears, Come give an account of thy ſtewardſhip, for thou mayeſt be no longer Steward. O how ill an account will they make when they are asked, what they have done with their riches? Who muſt anſwer, We have been proud of them? who being asked, what have you done with your honour, muſt anſwer, We have been proud of it? Who being asked, what have you done with your knowledge, muſt anſwer, we have been proud of it? Theſe will be ſad anſwers in the day of account, yet proud men (whatſoever they have done with their receits) muſt make this anſwer, what other anſwer ſoever they make.

Fourthly, Conſider that the more any one hath received (and it is the degree upon which pride riſeth the more, I ſay the more eny one hath received) in any kind whatſoever, the ſtricter to will his account be; for the account will be propornable to what the receipt is. (Luke 12. 48.) To whom ſoever much is given, of him ſhall be much required, and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more; where much is ſown, there God looks to reap much. He looketh not only for improving, but for ſutable, for proportionable improvement. If he that had received five talents (Matth. 25.) had brought only two talents more, and ſo made his five ſeven, this had not been proportionable; or if he that had received two, had made them three, this had not been proportionable; but he that received five, brought ten; and he that received two, brought four; this account was proportionable to the receipt; and therefore to theſe their Lord ſaid, Well done good and faithful ſervants. God looks for doubling, (as I may ſay) that we ſhould make his five ten, his two four. Therefore why ſhould any man be proud of what he hath received, ſeeing the more he hath received, the more great and ſtricter will his account be.

Fifthly, That pride may be cured and hid from your eyes, I adviſe, that in the midſt of your fulneſs, you would think of your emptineſs, and in the midſt of your perfections, of your deficiencies; think how much, and in how many things you are wanting, when any thought of pride ariſeth concerning what you enjoy, or wherein you abound. He that thinks how much he is wanting, will not be proud how much ſoever he aboundeth; and indeed our wantings being a great deal more then our aboundings, and our imperfections then our perfections, ſhould be to us greater matter of humbling, then our abounding or perfections can be an occaſion of pride. To clear this further, conſider your deficiencies two ways; firſt, in your ſelves; conſider how low you are in knowledge, how low in grace, how low in duty; remember that there is a great deal of darkneſs in the beſt of your light, a great deal of water in the beſt of your wine, and a great deal of droſs in the pureſt of your Silver; remember theſe weakneſſes in your ſelves, and then ſay as bleſſed Paul (Phil. 5. 22.) I count not that I have already attained; that is, that I have attained perfection, I am very much behind, very much below my duty, I am below what I might be and have attained to, both in the light of knowledge, and in the ſtrength of grace. I am below what I might be attained to, both as to zeal for, and as to faith in God. O how many are our deficiencies when we have profited moſt! Secondly, conſider your deficiencies in reference to others; the Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 10. 12.) They who compare themſelves with themſelves are not wiſe. The reaſon why many think themſelves over-wiſe, is, becauſe they do dot (as they ought) compare themſelves with others, or if they compare themſelves with others, they compare themſelves only with thoſe that are below, not with thoſe who are above themſelves. They who compare themſelves with themſelves, or with thoſe only who are below themſelves, are not wiſe, though they think themſelves very wiſe. If we would compare our ſelves with other men, who are above us, it would mightily keep down the pride of our Spirits; for who is there but might ſee more in ſome, yea in many others then in himſelf? Now, as it is an excellent means to keep the Soul from murmuring and diſcontent, to conſider that many others are below us; ſo it is an excellent means to keep us from pride, to conſider that many others are above us; ſo much above us, that our knowledg is but ignorance to their knowledg, our ſtrength weakneſs, our faith unbelief, our patience unquietneſs of Spirit, our very fruitfulneſs barrenneſs compared with theirs; or to ſpeak alluſively, that our fat Kine are but lean to the fat ones of others, and our full ears but withered looked upon with their full ears. And as it is a good means to keep the Soul humble or to cure it of pride, to compare our ſelves with men who are much above us, ſo eſpecially, if we would but remember how much God is above us, in compariſon of whom all our fulneſs is indeed emptineſs, our ſtrength weakneſs, our riches poverty, and our light darkneſs. And therefore when Job (Chap. 42.) began to compare himſelf with God, and to ſet God before him, then he was in the duſt preſently; though he ſpake over-valuingly of himſelf ſometime, yet when once he came to ſet himſelf before God, then ſaith he, I have ſpoken once, but I will ſpeak no more; I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes. And when the Prophet Iſaiah ſaw the Lord in his glory, and compared himſelf with him, he cryed out, I am undone, I am a man of polluted lips; all his graces, and all his gifts vaniſhed into nothing, when he conſidered the Lord before whom he ſtood. Thus we may keep down pride by conſidering our deficiencies, and comparing our ſelves with others who are above us, eſpecially by comparing our ſelves with God, to whom we are not ſo much as a drop of the bucket to the whole Ocean, nor the duſt of the ballance to the body of the whole Earth.

Sixthly, For the hiding and keeping down of pride, often reflect upon your own ſinfulneſs; our defects in good may keep our hearts low, but our abundance of ſinful evils may keep them much lower. While we conſider ſin in a two-fold notion, how ſhould it humble us? Firſt, as dwelling or abiding in us; Secondly, as acted and brought forth by us in either of theſe ways; look on ſin, and the heart muſt needs come down; thus poyſon may expel poyſon, the remembrance of ſin abiding in us and acted by us, may be a ſtop to the further acting, as of all other ſins, ſo eſpecially of this ſin, pride.

Seventhly, Let us be much in the meditation of Chriſt humbling and abaſing himſelf for us. What can kill pride, if the humblings of Chriſt do not? O how may we ſchool and catechiſe our proud Souls with the remembrances of Chriſt in his abaſements! What! An humble Chriſt, and a proud Chriſtian! An humble Maſter, and a proud Diſciple! Did Chriſt empty himſelf and make himſelf of no reputation, and ſhall we who are but emptineſs be lifted up with a reputation of our ſelves, or with the reputation which others have of us; did he abaſe himſelf to the form of a Servant, and ſhall we lift up our ſelves, as if we reigned as Kings! He humbled himſelf and became obedient to death, even the death of the Croſs; and what have we to glory in but the Croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (Gal. 6. 14.) if we have any thing to be proud of, 'tis the Croſs of Chriſt, God forbid (ſaith Paul) that I ſhould glory (or rejoice and triumph) ſave in the Croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whereby I am crucified to the World, and the World to me. Think often and much of the humblings of Chriſt, and then you will think of your ſelves as meer nothings. This is the moſt effectual means, through the Spirit, to bring down the ſwellings of our hearts, and to hide pride from man. Thus much of the ſecond deſign of Chriſt in ſpeaking to man in dreams and viſions of the night; the third followeth.

Verſ. 18. He keepeth back his Soul from the pit, and his life from periſhing by the Sword.

This verſe holds out another gracious intendment of God, in revealing him ſelf to man by dreams and viſions of the night. He doth it thereby to give man warning and wiſdom to prevent and eſcape that deſtruction which is ready to fall upon him.

He keepeth back his Soul from the pit.

Some refer this He to man himſelf, that is, when God hideth pride from man, then man keepeth his Soul from the pit, that is, thereby man is both admoniſhed and inſtructed how to keep his Soul from the pit. They who avoid the mountains and precipices of pride, are moſt aſſured of eſcaping a down-fall into perdition. Solomon tells us (Prov. 16. 18.) Pride goeth before deſtruction, and a high mind before a fall; ſuch a fall as Elihu here ſpeaks of, falling into the pit; therefore turning from pride is the eſcaping of the pit.

But rather (as moſt Interpreters) the relative (He) refers to God himſelf, who both begins and perfects this great work of grace; as he ſpeaketh with a purpoſe to withdraw man from his purpoſe, &c. ſo he having effectually withdrawn him from it, and hid pride from him, he thereby humbleth him in the duſt of repentance, and ſo keepeth back his Soul from the pit.

The word rendred, keepeth back, notes a threefold keeping back; firſt, by force, as a man holds another from falling into a pit, or running into danger; he holds him whether he will or no. Secondly, there is a holding or keeping back by perſwaſion or intreaties, by ſeaſonable advice and counſel; ſo Abigail kept David from ſhedding blood (1 Sam. 25.) Thirdly, there is a holding or keeping back by authority, when a command or an injunction forbids a man from going on and ſo ſtops his proceeding. Thus we ſee there is a keeping back, either by outward force, or by counſel, or by command. And there is a keeping back according to any of theſe three notions, two ways. Firſt, ſuch a keeping back, as hinders the very attempt, ſuch a keeping back, as ſtops the firſt motions, or ſtep into an undertaking. Secondly, there is a keeping back when a man is deeply engaged in an undertaking, when he is gone on and is near the journies end of his own purpoſe. Thus David was kept back from deſtroying Nabal when he was far advanced in that enterpriſe; and Abimelek was kept back from taking Sarah Abrahams wife when the matter had made a very great progreſs in his Spirit. Both theſe ways we may underſtand it here, though chiefly, I conceive, in the latter. Sometimes God keepeth man, either by his power, or by perſwaſions and commands ſent to him, from ſetting ſo much as one foot forward in any ſinful way leading to the pit; yet often he ſuffers him to go on a great way, and when he is advanced far towards, yea is near, very near to the pits brink, even ready to drop into it, then, then the Lord graciouſly keeps his Soul from falling into it. This word is uſed in the negative twice to ſet forth the high commendation of Abraham (Gen. 22.12.16.) When God had commanded Abraham to offer his Son, and he was ſo ready to do it, that preſently God tells him, Now I know thou feareſt God, ſeeing thou haſt not with-held (or kept back) thy Son, thine only Son from me. Arabam might have had many reaſonings within himſelf to keep back and with-hold his Son from being a Sacrifice, but, ſaith the Lord, thou haſt not with-held or kept him back; There the word is uſed in the negative, as alſo upon the ſame occaſion at verſe 16. of the ſame Chapter. And ſo by Job (Chap. 7. 11.) Therefore I will not refrain (or keep back) my mouth. It is as hard a matter to keep back, or hold the mouth in, as it is to keep back a head-ſtrong Horſe with a Bridle. Therefore the Holy Ghoſt uſeth that Metaphor (Pſal. 39. 1.) But ſaith Job, I will not refrain my mouth, I will not keep it back, let it take its courſe, I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my Spirit. The word imports powerful acting, take it either in the negative or affirmative. When the tongue is kept back, 'tis done by a mighty power of grace, and O how great as well as gracious is that power, which the Lord putteth forth to keep back a poor Soul that is going, going apace too, from falling into the pit. He keepeth back

His Soul from the pit.] But doth the Soul fall into the pit? I anſwer, firſt, the Soul is often in Scripture (by a Synecdoche) put for the whole man; He keepeth back his Soul, that is he keepeth him from the pit; ſecondly, poſſibly 'tis ſaid, he keepeth his Soul from the pit, to teach us that man by running on in ſin, ruines his beſt part, it is not only his Body, and his skin that he deſtroyeth by ſin, but his very Soul. 'Tis a mercy that God telleth us aforehand the worſt of that danger, and the greatneſs of the hazard, or how great a matter we venture upon evil ways and works. He keepeth back his Soul

Fovea, corruptio, mors. Eruens animam à corruptione. Vulg.

Ἐφείσατο δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ θανάτου. Sept.
Probibebit animam ejus à fovea. Targ.

From the pit.] What pit? The word is rendred variouſly. Firſt thus, he keeps back his Soul from corruption. The word is uſed for corrupting by ſin (Gen. 6.12.) And God looked upon the Earth, and behold it was corrupt: For all fleſh had corrupted his way upon the Earth; that is, all men were grown wicked and ſtark naught. In the very next verſe (verſ. 13.) The ſame word is uſed to denote corrupting by puniſhment due to ſin; Behold I will deſtroy (or corrupt) them with the Earth; that is, I will deſtroy the face of the Earth, or deface the beauty of the Earth, and I will alſo deſtroy all men from off the face of the Earth. Secondly, the Septuagint render, He ſpares his Soul from death. Thirdly, the Chaldee Paraphraſe (as we) He prohibites his Soul from the pit; theſe three, corruption, death, and the pit are of near alliance; and the ſame word in the Hebrew tongue ſignifieth corruption, the pit, and death, the pit (or grave) is the place of corruption and the ſeat or Houſe of death. We find the pit and deſtruction put together (Pſal. 55. 23.) they ſhall go to the pit of deſtruction; So then the ſame word may well ſerve to ſignifie a pit, corruption and death; becauſe in the pit dead Bodies or Carkaſſes putrifie and corrupt. Yet David propheſying of Chriſt ſpeaks his aſſurance of eſcaping corruption, though not the pit or grave. (Pſ. 16.10.) Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption, or the pit. It is this word; that is, thou wilt not ſuffer him to corrupt in the pit of the grave; though Chriſt being dead was buried and laid in pſt, yet he did not ſee corruption in the pit. That is, corruption had no power, no maſtery over him; for he looſed the bonds of death (it being impoſſible that he ſhould be held by them) the third day, yea with the firſt of that day, or as ſoon as it might be truly ſaid that it was the third day; Chriſt was buried in the latter part of the ſixth day of the week, and aroſe early the firſt day of the week, even when it did but begin to dawn towards the firſt day of the week. (Math. 28. 1.) And therefore ſeeing as Naturaliſts (according to Scripture evidence, Joh. 11.39.) teſtifie corruption doth not naturally take hold of the Body till the fourth day after death. The dead Body of Chriſt was altogether free from corruption, or Chriſt (as was fore-ſhewed by David in the Pſalm) ſaw no corruption.

Videre foveam eſt amplius quā ſepeliri, nimirum ut is demum perfecte dicatur videre foveam, non qui ad tempus eſt in fovea, ſed qui ejus vim corruptricem experitur, ſive videt corruptionem in ea; videre enim eſt ſentire ſive pati aliquid. Coc.

Further, this word pit, is taken not only for death, the grave, and corruption; but for thoſe contrivances and plots which are made and laid for any mans death or deſtruction. Thus David ſaid of his malicious and ſubtle enemies (Pſal. 7. 5.) Into the pit which they have digged, themſelves are fallen; that is, they are taken in their own plots; thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt are an alluſion to Hunters and Fowlers who make pits to inſnare Birds or Beaſts; we muſt not imagine that there were pits literally made for David, but the pit was a plot or contrivance to do him miſchief, and he bleſſed God that as himſelf had eſcaped that miſchief, ſo that the miſchief-plotters and contrivers were were taken with it themſelves. We have David ſpeaking again under the ſame metaphor (Pſal. 9. 15.) The Heathen are ſunk down in the pit that they made. And (Pſal. 35. 7.) Without cauſe they have hid for me their net in a pit, which without cauſe they have digged for my Soul; that is, they have laid a plot to undo and deſtroy me. And if we take pit in this ſence, it may hold well enough with the ſcope of the Text; for what is the pit, into which pride and evil purpoſes thruſt ſinful man, but that miſchief and miſery which Satan is continually plotting againſt him? And from this miſchievous plot it is that God delivereth man, while 'tis ſaid by Elihu, he keepeth back

Fovea denotat omnia vitæ diſcrimina Pin.

His Soul from the pit.] Some expound the word Soul in this former part of the verſe, in oppoſition to life in the latter part of it, and his life from periſhing by the Sword. Soul and life are ſometimes taken promiſcuouſly, or indifferently for the ſame thing; yet there is a very great difference between Soul and life; the life is nothing elſe but the union between Soul and Body; but the Soul is a ſpiritual ſubſtance diſtinct from the Body while remaining in it, and ſubſiſting it ſelf alone when ſeparate from it, That bond or knot which ties Soul and Body together, is, properly, that which Elihu ſpeaks of in the next words.

And his life.] As God keeps back his Soul from everlaſting deſtruction, ſo his life from temporal deſtruction. Though the Soul be moſt precious, yet life is very precious; skin for skin, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life (Chap. 2. 5.) 'Tis therefore no ſmall mercy for God to keep a mans life

From periſhing by the Sword.] The Sword is put ſometimes for War, that being the principal inſtrument of War, ſome inſiſt much upon that ſence here, as if the words contained a promiſe of being kept from periſhing by the Sword of an open enemy. But the Sword is here rather put for any kind or for all kinds of hurtful evils; what ever doth afflict, vex, or deſtroy may be called the Sword. The Text ſtrictly in the letter is thus rendred, and his life from paſſing by or through the Sword, we ſay, from periſhing by the Sword; which paſſing by the Sword is not to eſcape the Sword, but to fall by the Sword, thus 'tis ſaid of that idolatrous King Ahaz (2 Kings 16. 3.) He cauſed his Sons to paſs through the fire, the meaning is not that he delivered them out of the fire, but conſumed them in the fire; for he made them paſs through the fire to Molech, which was a ſacrificing of them to that abominable Idol. It is alſo ſaid (2 Sam. 12.31.) when David took Rabba and deſtroyed the Ammonites, he made them paſs through the Brick-kiln, not to ſave them, but to conſume them. Some conceive that this Brick-kiln through which David made thoſe captive Ammonites to paſs was the fire or furnace of Molech, that infamous Idol of the Ammonites (with whoſe bloody and moſt cruel devotions the apoſtatizing Jews or people of God, were in after times enſnared) and if ſo, then they might ſee God turning their ſin into their puniſhment; and declaring his fiery wrath againſt them in that, by which they had declared their fooliſh and abominable zeal. But that which I quote their puniſhment for, is only the form of its expreſſion; he made them paſs through the Brick-kiln; that is, periſh in it. Thus here, and his Soul from paſſing by the Sword, is rightly tranſlated from periſhing by the Sword. The word rendred Sword ſignifies alſo any miſſive weapon, or weapon caſt with the hand, eſpecially a dart; ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, and his life from going on the dart. The general ſence of this verſe is plainly this;

Nomen gladii hoc in loco generaliter denotare puto, quicquid pungit, percutit, torquet, excruciat vel affligit. Bod.

Tranſire in gladium eſt idem quod incidere in manus & tela hoſtium, & cadere in bello. Gladius שׁלח vocatur quaſi miſſile telum. Druſ.

The Lord with-draweth man from his purpoſe, and hides pride from man, that ſo he may in mercy preſerve him from periſhing both in Body and Soul, or that he may keep him not only from the firſt, but from the ſecond death, which is the ſeparation of the whole man from the bleſſed preſence of God for ever. 'Tis a great favour to be kept from the pit where the Body corrupts, or from the Sword that wounds the fleſh, but to be kept from that everlaſting woe which ſhall overwhelm the wicked in that bottomleſs pit or lake of fire and brimſtone, this is the higheſt favour of God to loſt man. This is the pit, this the periſhing from which (ſaith Elihu) the Lord keepeth back the Soul and life of man.

Firſt, From the emphaſis of the word, he keepeth back, importing, that God, as it were by ſtrong hand or abſolute autorithy and command, keepeth the Soul of man from the pit,

> Note, Man is very forward to run upon his own ruine, even to run upon eternal ruine, if the Lord did not hold, ſtay, and ſtop him.

Man would tumble into the pit, at the very next ſtep, if God did not keep him. The way of man is naturally down to the pit, and all that he doth of his own ſelf is for his own undoing: And as he is kept back from the pit, ſo (as the Apoſtle Peter hath it, 1 Epiſt. 1. 5.) he is kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation.

Secondly, Conſidering the ſeaſon ſignified in the former verſe, that when man is going upon an evil work, or walking in the pride of his heart, God is keeping him from the pit.

> Note, While man hath ſinful purpoſes and pride in his heart, all that while he is going on to deſtruction, both temporal and eternal.

Every ſtep in ſin is a ſtep to miſery, and the further any man proceedeth on in ſin, the further he wanders from God; and the further he wanders from God, the nearer he comes to miſery. As the further we go from the Sun, the nearer we are to the cold, and the further we go from the fountain, the nearer we are to drought; ſo they that haſt to ſin, haſt to ſorrow, yea to Hell. Solomon ſaith of ſuch, they love death. There is no man loves death under the notion of death, there is no beauty, no amiableneſs; in death but all they may be ſaid to love death, who love ſin, and live in it. Every motion towards ſin, is a haſting into the arms and imbraces of death, ſinners wooe and invite death and the grave, yea Hell and deſtruction.

> Thirdly, Note, The warning and admonitions which God gives to ſinful man, whether waking or ſleeping are to keep him from periſhing, to keep him from temporal, to keep him from eternal periſhing.

This is the great end of preaching the Goſpel, the end alſo of preſſing the terrors of the Law; both have this aim to keep man from periſhing. When man is preſt to holineſs, and when he is repreſt from the ways of ſin, 'tis that he may not periſh for ever. God hath ſet up many ordinances, he hath imployed many inſtruments to adminiſter them; many thouſands go up and down preaching to the World, and crying out to the Sons of men, repent and believe, believe and repent; and why all this cry, but to keep Souls from the pit, and their life from periſhing by the Sword? The Apoſtle Jude exhorts to ſave ſome with fear, and of others to have compaſſion, that is, terrifie ſome that you may ſave them, make them afraid that they may not be damned; ſave them with fear, plucking them as it were out of the fire. Sinners are running into the fire, and do not perceive it; they are tumbling down to Hell and conſider it not; they muſt be pulled out of the fire, elſe they will burn in it for ever. The great buſineſs of the Goſpel is to pull Souls like firebrands out of the burning.

> Fourthly, Note, They who turn from their evil purpoſes and the pride of their hearts, eſcape wrath, the pit, and the Sword.

The wages of ſin is death, and well are they that eſcape, that miſs ſuch wages. If a ſinner turn from his purpoſe, from his ſinful way, if his pride be ſubdued and he emptied of himſelf, then his Soul is kept from deſtruction, and his life from periſhing by the Sword.

VERS. 19, 20, 21, 22.

He is chaſtened alſo with pain upon his Bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain.
So that his life abhorreth bread, and his Soul dainty meat.
His fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen, and his bones that were not ſeen ſtick out.
His Soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the deſtroyer.

THE context of theſe four verſes, containeth a deſcription of the ſecond means, which the wiſdom of God is pleaſed often to uſe for the humiliation of man, and for the diſcovery or revelation of his mind unto him. He ſpeaketh in a dream, in a viſion of the night, as was ſhewed before, he ſpeaketh alſo by pains and ſickneſſes, as is now to be conſidered.

Verſe 19. He is chaſtned alſo with pain.

That particle which we render alſo, gives the Text an emphaſis (He is chaſtned alſo) for it imports, that here is a further addition or ſupplement of means, whereby the Lord doth awaken ſinners to attend and obey his voice. The ſubject of theſe four verſes, is a ſick man, or, the ſickneſs of man. A ſorrowful Subject. And the ſickneſs of man is ſet forth in theſe four verſes, by four ſad ſymptoms or effects.

The firſt is pain, grievous pain, verſ. 19. He is chaſtened alſo with pain upon his Bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain.

The ſecond ſymptom of this ſickneſs, is loſs of appetite, and his nauſeating all manner of food (verſ. 20.) So that his life abhorreth bread, and his Soul dainty meat.

The third ſymptom of his ſickneſs is a general languiſhment or conſumption all his Body over (verſ. 21.) His fleſh is conſumed away that it cannot be ſeen, and his bones that were not ſeen ſtick out.

The fourth and laſt ſymptom of this grievous ſickneſs is fainting, ſwooning, or a readineſs to expire and give up the ghoſt (verſ. 22.) His Soul draweth near to the grave, and his life to the deſtroyer; that is, he is ſick, and even ſick to death. All theſe are ſpecial ſymptoms of a ſick man, or of the ſickneſs of man. I begin with the firſt.

He is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed.

The word which we render to chaſten, hath a twofold ſignification in Scripture.

Firſt, to reprove or convince both by authority and reaſon (Lev. 19. 17.) Thou ſhalt not hate thy Brother in thy heart, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke him; or, reproving thou ſhalt reprove him; that is, Thou ſhalt ſurely reprove him. And in that famous Prophecy concerning Chriſt (Iſa. 11. 4.) He ſhall reprove with equity; we put in the Margin, He ſhall argue with equity, or convince by ſuch reaſons and arguments as ſhall carry the greateſt equity in them. Thus when Chriſt had finiſhed his Sermon on the Mount, it is ſaid (Matth. 7. 28, 29.) The people (his Auditors) were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes. This Sermon carrying ſo great a reproof of the Scribes and Phariſees, both as to their life and doctrine throughout, may well be expounded as a fulfilling of that ancient prophecy; it being confeſſed in another place of the Goſpel, even by the Officers that were ſent to attach him (John 7. 46.) Never man ſpake like this man. The words of Chriſt had ſo much evidence, ſo much equity in them, that they who came to take and catch him, were taken and caught, if not to converſion, yet to ſuch a conviction, by what he ſpake, that they could not (they highly diſpleaſed their Maſters in ſaying ſo) but ſay, Never man ſpake like this man; as if they they had ſaid, Surely, the man that ſpeaks thus is more then a man.

Secondly, The word often ſignifies to correct, which is alſo to inſtruct; correction is for inſtruction. Chaſtning is the moſt real reproving. And ſo we render it, He is chaſtned. Man is inſtructed not only by ſpeech and counſel, but by ſtripes and corrections. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 6. 1.) O Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure. The firſt word which we render rebuke, is that in the Text; as if he had ſaid, Lord do not rebuke me by angry afflictions, let me not find thee greatly diſpleaſed, and my ſelf ſorely chaſtned at once. He deprecates the ſame again, and how grievous the effects of ſuch diſpenſations are, he ſheweth (Pſal. 38. 1.) Rebuke me not in thy wrath. (Pſal. 39. 11.) When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity; (he means it not only of word-rebukes, but of hand-rebukes alſo, when thou with ſuch doubled rebukes doſt chaſten man for iniquity) what then? The effects of it follow, even the ſtaining of the glory of all fleſh; Thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth. And ſo ſome interpret that (Pſal. 105. 15.) He reproved Kings for their ſakes? (ſpeaking of his own people) The Lord did not only ſpeak to thoſe Kings, but made them feel his hand, for his peoples ſake. Abimelech felt his hand for Abrahams ſake. And ſo did Pharaoh that hard-hearted King in a whole decade of plagues for Iſraels ſake, whom he had oppreſſed and would not let go. We render the word in this ſecond ſenſe, for a rebuke by blows or by correction, which yet hath a language in it, and ſpeaks with a loud voyce to man, He is chaſtned

With pain upon his bed.] Pain is both the concomitant, and effect of ſickneſs. The word noteth, firſt, the pain of the Body, cauſed either by the violence of inward diſtempers, or from the outward ſtroak of a wound (Gen. 34.) when the Sons of Jacob had prevailed with the Shechemites to receive Circumciſion, It came to paſs on the third day, when they were ſore, or pained with the wound of it, Simeon and Levi came upon them (Gen. 34. 25.) Secondly, the word ſignifieth as bodily pain cauſed any way, ſo pain of the mind, which is grief or ſorrow (Pſal. 69. 29.) I am poor and ſorrowful. Sorrow is always the effect of pain, either outward or inward, either of the fleſh or ſpirit; yet the wounds of the Spirit cauſe the greateſt pain; for of that Solomon ſaith (Prov. 18. 14.) Who can bear it? The ſame Solomon (Prov. 14. 13.) ſpeaking of a wicked man in his higheſt jollity, ſaith, In laughter the heart is ſorrowful. His Conſcience aketh (if he have an awakened Conſcience) even while he laugheth; and ſurely while the heart is ſorrowful and pained, laughter yieldeth little pleaſure. We may take pain in this Text in both ſenſes, but eſpecially in the former. The ſick man is often pained in mind, but always in his Body. He is chaſtned with pain

Upon his bed] There he uſed to have reſt, but being ſick, his bed becomes reſtleſs to him. To be upon the bed, is a periphraſis of ſickneſs; that of Chriſt (Luke 17. 34.) There ſhall be two in one bed, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left, as it may be meant of any two bed-fellows (eſpecially of Husband and Wife) in their health, ſo ſome take it principally of two in a ſick bed; grace takes hold of one and not of another upon a ſick bed. I inſiſt not upon that ſenſe, though it be a probable and a profitable one. But ſurely to ſay, A man is chaſtened with pain upon his bed, implyeth, the man to be in extraordinary pain; as to ſay, ſuch a man keeps his bed, implyeth, he hath more then an ordinary ſickneſs, or that he is very ſick. We have three expreſſions in our language gradually ſetting forth the ſickneſs of a perſon. Firſt, we ſay, he keeps his Houſe; he that is not doth not go abroad, ſickneſs houſes him. Secondly, we ſay, he keeps his Chamber; that's a further degree, when ſickneſs hath brought a man up ſtairs, and ſhut him in his Chamber, he is ſick indeed. Thirdly, we ſay, ſuch a man keeps his Bed; the meaning of which every one underſtands to be, that he is dangerouſly or extreamly ſick. Thus when Elihu ſaith, He is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed; we may conceive him ſo ill, that either he muſt not, or is not able to ſit up. And Elihu in ſpeaking thus, ſeems to have relation to what Job had ſaid (Chap. 7. 13.) When I ſaid my Bed ſhall comfort me, and my Couch ſhall eaſe my complaint; then thou ſcareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me through viſions. As if he had ſaid, O Job, thou indeed haſt had recourſe heretofore, to thy Bed for refreſhing and comfort, in ſilent meditations and ſoliloquies with God, but he terrified thee with dreams, and ſpake to thee by ſcaring viſions, to turn thee from thy purpoſe. And not only ſo, but finding thee deaf to thoſe admonitions, or not regarding them, yea ſtill continuing thy unquiet murmurings, he hath now even made thee Bed-rid, or unable to riſe from thy Bed. Though Elihu ſpake here in the third perſon, yet in all his ſpeech he intended and pointed at, yea ſet forth and pointed out Job's condition. He is chaſtened with pains upon his Bed,

And the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain.

A man may have pain, yea many pains, yet no pain in his bones. Bones are to the Body as Beams and Raſters, as Poſts and Pillars are to a Houſe. And when pain comes to the bones, when it ſhakes thoſe Poſts and Pillars, it muſt needs be a very ſtrong pain. Satan ſaid to God concerning Job, while he ſought new tryals for him, in the ſecond Chapter of this Book (verſe 5.) Touch his bone and his fleſh, and he will curſe thee to thy face. And that he might be fully tryed, the Lord ſuffer'd Satan to afflict him to the bone, nor did Satan leave a bone unafflicted; what Elihu ſpake here of man in general, was true of him, The multitude of his bones were chaſtened with ſtrong pain. To have any one bone in pain is an affliction, much more to have many bones pained and aking at once. But when the multitude of a mans bones, that is, all his bones are pained together, that's grievous. And ſuch a man is the while as it were upon a Rack. That by the multitude of bones here ſpoken of, we are to underſtand, not only many, or a great many of his bones, but all his bones, may appear from (Job 4. 14.) where Eliphaz deſcribing thoſe terrible viſions with which God ſometime viſited him, ſaith, A Spirit paſſed before my face, the hair of my fleſh ſtood up, &c. which made all my bones to ſhake. We put in the Margin, The multitude of my bones. The multitude of his bones are all his bones, he hath not ſo much as one bone free. The whole ſyſteme of his bones is as it were confounded and disjoinced. The multitude of his bone is chaſtened Multitudo oſſium dicitur pro omnibus oſſious quam multa unt. Coc.

With ſtrong pain.] The word Pain, is not expreſs'd in the latter part of the verſe; the Hebrew is, The multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain. Mr. Broughton renders thus, And all his bones with a ſore one. The word which we tranſlate ſtrong, ſignifieth two things; firſt, as we render, ſtrength or might (Pſal. 74. 15.) Thou driedſt up mighty Rivers; God dried up the River Jordan for his people to paſs through, yea and the red Sea. Secondly, the word ſignifieth perpetual, laſting or continual. So ſome render that place in the Pſalms, not ſtrong or mighty Rivers, but he dried up everlaſting or perpetual Rivers, ſuch as had always run with a full ſtream, and were not like thoſe deceitful Brooks (ſpoken of in this Book, Chapter 6. verſe 15. to which Job compared his Brethren) which in Winter over-flow the Banks, but in Summer, what time they wax warm, they vaniſh when it is hot, and are conſumed out of their place. Now, in this place, I conceive, we may take the word in either ſenſe, either for ſtrong and great, or chronical and laſting pain. The man is ſo ſick that he hath no good hours, no comfortable intermiſſions, his pain continueth. And becauſe the word pain is not in the Text, therefore it hath cauſed ſeveral rendrings of theſe words, yet all meeting in the ſame ſenſe.

Firſt, Some join the word ſtrong to bone, or make it an epithete of the mans bones. Though the multitude of his bones be ſtrong, that is, though he were once a ſtrong man, ſound and perfect all over, or as we ſay, ſound wind and limb, not crazy, not having the leaſt flaw in him, yet he is chaſtened all over with pain.

In multitudine oſſium ejus eſt fortis. i. e. acris acerbus dolor.

Secondly, Others thus, in the multitude of his bones, or, in all his bones there is a ſtrong one, that is, a ſtrong pain or grief ſeizeth and poſſeſſeth all his bones.

Thirdly, Thus, The contention of his bones is ſtrong; the word which ſignifieth a multitude, being alike in the letters with another which ſignifieth contention or ſtrife, hath given occaſion for this reading; that of David is near the ſame, There is no reſt in my bones (Pſal. 38. 3.) as if Elihu had ſaid, the pain and anguiſh by which God doth contend with all his bones is ſtrong, or God hath a ſtrong controverſie with his bones upon his ſick Bed.

Legendo vocem וריב & lis oſſium ejus vehemens eſt. i. e. dolor oſſium ejus per quem cum ipſo velut litigat. Piſc. Sunt ex Hebræis qui רוב multitudo, quia per ו ſcribatur ריב etſi legatur per י exponunt pro contentione, quaſi Deus cum oſſibus ejus contendat. Merc.

Laſtly, The vulgar tranſlates, He maketh all his bones to wither, decay, and rot. When there is a conſumption or a withering among the bones, how intolerable is the pain! Broken bones cauſe the acuteſt pains, but decaying bones the moſt conſtant pain. Withering bones are oppoſed to fatned bones in that promiſe made to him that faſts ſpiritually, not carnally only in abſtaining from fleſh (Iſa. 58. 11.) The Lord will make fat thy bones; as if he had ſaid, Do not fear that thou ſhalt pine by ſpiritual faſting, I will make fat thy bones. Which is true even in regard of that which is natural, the Lord reneweth bodily ſtrength to thoſe who humble themſelves Soul and Body. The Body ſhall not ſuffer in this ſervice of the Lord, if the Soul be truly afflicted in it. Yet when he ſaith, he will make fat thy bones, it reſpects eſpecially their ſpiritual ſtrength, that thrives beſt in a day of holy abſtinence and faſting. Here, when 'tis ſaid, their bones ſhall wither through pain, it notes the declining of the whole Body, becauſe as the bones are ſtrong in themſelves, ſo they are the ſtrength and ſupport of the whole outward man. When God ſmites the bones, then he ſhakes the Pillars and Rafters of our Earthly Houſe, and threatens the downfall of it. He is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain.

Taking theſe words in connection with the former, where Elihu ſpake of thoſe dreams and viſions by which God ſpeaks to man, and ſuppoſing (as there he doth) that becauſe the man is not well awakened by thoſe dreams and viſions from his ſecurity, therefore the Lord ſendeth pain and ſickneſs upon him, as a ſecond means to humble him, and make him underſtand himſelf.

· Obſerve, They that will not be inſtructed by dreams, that is, by gentler means, ſhall be inſtructed by pains.

They who will not take inſtruction, even in their ſleep, ſhall be taught by that, which will keep them awake. Several Scriptures tell us of the Lords proceeding with man from words to blows. And if the Lord proceeds from dreams (which are warnings in ſleep) to blows, if when he hath ſpoken to us in a dream, we hearken not, he will chaſten us with pain, even the multitude of our bones with ſtrong pain. Then much more will he proceed from words to blows with them that are warned being awake, if they hear not and take warning. That's an awakening word to thoſe who ſleep waking (Pſal. 7. 12, 13.) If he turn not he will whet his Sword : He hath bent his bow and made it ready. If men will not return upon word admonition and reproof, the Lord hath his arrows and his Sword to reprove them with. Turn ye at my reproof, ſaith the Lord (Prov. 1. 23.) I give you warning to turn, but if you do not, then (as preſently it followeth) I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh. As you have ſeemed to mock at my counſels, ſo I will mock at your calamities, that is, I will ſhew you no pity, as you have ſhewed me no reſpect. Thus the Lord deals with proud rebellious man, who caſts off his yoak, yea ſometimes he deals very ſeverely with his own people (for they may put him to it) if words will not ſerve their turn (words in ſleep, and words when awake) they may expect blows next; and be made to feel the hand of God, becauſe they have not underſtood or not obeyed his will.

Secondly, From the manner of expreſſion, He is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed. The Spirit of God uſeth a word referring to inſtruction both by ſmiting and ſpeaking, to ſhew that there is a voice in the rod.

Hence Note, The chaſtiſements of God upon us are our documents.

When God ſends ſickneſs and grievous pains, he reproves ſinners from Heaven and chides them for the errours of their lives. The chaſtenings of the Lord are ſpeakings. He ſpeaketh by his rods beyond all the eloquence of words (Mic. 6. 9.) Hear ye the rod. The voice of God is in his rod; that ſpeaks ſo loud from Heaven in many ſtroaks, that the prophaneſt ſinners on Earth are ſometimes forced to hear and acknowledg it. As thoſe Magicians were forced by the plain evidence of the fact to ſay (Ez. 8. 19.) This is the finger of God; ſo they muſt ſay, This is the voice of God. He ſpeaks to us, and ſpeaks to purpoſe in theſe afflictions: The voice of God in affliction, exceeds all the rhetorick and perſwaſions of mortal men. The croſs is a School, in which they who are dull at hearing what God ſpeaks to them in his word, are wonderfully quickened up by his rod. The words of the wiſe (ſaith Solomon) are goads. And ſurely theſe goads of affliction are pricking piercing words, for the promoting and putting on of a lazy Soul in Gods work. Job had deſired God to to ſpeak with him, Elihu anſwers, Why doſt thou deſire more anſwers or directions from God? Hath not God ſpoken to thee in theſe ſores and ſickneſſes, in theſe chaſtiſements, with pain upon thy Bed? Is God wanting to thy inſtruction? Hath he not clearly told thee his mind and thy duty? Hath he not written, yea ingraven his will upon thy diſeaſed fleſh? What are the pains, the corruption, the conſumption, the ſtrange deformity, and ſad transfiguration of thy Body, but as ſo many voices of God, ſpeaking and ſpeaking aloud to thee, repent and humble thy ſelf? Therefore attend, hearken to and meditate upon the anſwers which he hath impreſſed or printed legibly upon thy head, face, and wrinkled forehead. Thou haſt his anſwer his own way, therefore be ſatisfied, and do not ſtand deſiring that God would anſwer thee after thy way, nor complaining becauſe he doth not. And we may reply not only to obſtinate ſinners, but to many of the people of God, when they enquire what the mind of God is, or what he intends towards them. His providences give you many items and memorandums; which if you can ſpell out and read, you may know his meaning. This leſſon, the ſignification of the word offereth us as the connection of the words offered in the former.

Thirdly, Learn Hence, Man is a poor crazy Creature ſubject to all diſeaſes and infirmities.

Yea, he is only ſubject to them, but he is the ſubject of them. His Body is as it were a Veſſel of natural corruption, as his Soul is a Veſſel of moral corruption. Man is called not only Adam, noting the matter of which he was made, Earth, Red Earth; but he is called Enoſh, that is, ſorrowful, ſighing, groaning man, he is a pined and a pining man: He is alſo called Abel, vanity, a poor vain man; which two latter Titles have befallen man ſince man fell from God.

Fourthly, (Which may check the groſs Atheiſme of many)

Obſerve, Pain and ſickneſs come not by chance, nor are we to ſtay in nature for the cauſe of their coming.

They come not at all by chance, nor do they come altogether from natural cauſes. Nature hath ſomewhat to do in their coming, but ſomewhat elſe much more, even ſo much more, that in reſpect of that, natural conſiderations may be quite ſhut out, and the whole cauſe aſcribed to that. But what is that? Surely, nothing elſe but, and nothing leſs then the will of God. He is pleaſed to give commiſſion to pains and ſickneſſes, and then they come. Elihu would teach Job (what he owned before) that God was the ſender and orderer of all his afflictions, as of the loſſes he had in his eſtate and Children, ſo of the pains and ſickneſſes which he felt in his Body. Moſes tells the Children of Iſrael, not only that Sword and Captivity, but the Peſtilence, Conſumptions, Feavours, and burning Agues are ſent by God himſelf, (Deut. 28. 21, 22.) What are diſeaſes but the Lords Meſſengers? When he pleaſeth he can trouble the temper and cauſe the humours of the body to corrupt. He can make them contend with one another to the death, let Phyſitians do what they can to quiet and pacifie them. Yea though ſome skilful Phyſitians have kept their own bodies in ſo due a temper, and to ſo exact a diet, that they could not ſee which way a diſeaſe could take hold of them, or have any advantage againſt them, yet ſickneſs hath come upon them like an armed man, and carryed them away to the grave.

Further, When Elihu ſaith of the ſick man, the multitude of his bones are chaſtened with ſtrong pain.

Note, No man is ſo ſtrong, but the Lord is able to bring him down by pain and ſickneſs.

He that is ſtrong as an Oak, and hath (as it were) a Body of Braſs and Sinews of Iron; yet the Lord can make him as weak as water. The Lord hath ſtrong pains for ſtrong men, and can quickly turn our ſtrength into weakneſs. Thus Hezekiah lamented in his ſickneſs (Iſa. 38. 13.) I reckoned till morning that as a Lion, ſo will he break all my bones. God can arm diſeaſes with the ſtrength of a Lion, who not only teareth the fleſh, but breaketh the bones with his teeth. David ſaith (Pſal. 39. 11.) When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth, ſurely every man is vanity. The word there rendred beauty ſignifieth deſire, thou makeſt his deſire, or that which is moſt deſireable in him to fade away; we will tranſlate beauty, becauſe beauty draweth the deſires of man after it, and is ſo much deſired, yea luſted after by man. Now, as when the Lord doth but touch the Body, he can make the beauty, ſo alſo the ſtrength of it to conſume away as a moth.

Sixthly, Whereas it is ſaid, He is chaſtened with pain [upon his Bed,]

> We learn, The Lord can make thoſe things eaſeleſs and reſtleſs to us, which uſe to give us moſt eaſe and reſt.

He that being up is weary, weary with walking, riding or labouring, hopeth to find eaſe in his Bed, yet then doth pain deny him reſt there, and filleth him (as Job complained, Chap. 7. 4.) with toſſings to and fro unto the dawning of the day. The Lord can make the Stocks or a Rack eaſie to us, and our Beds as uneaſie to us as the Stocks or a Rack uſually are.

> Laſtly, Obſerve, The purpoſe of God in chaſtening man with ſickneſs, is to teach and inſtruct him, not vex and deſtroy him.

The Lord hath many deſigns upon man when he afflicts him, about all which he inſtructs him by affliction. He deſigns

Firſt, To humble and break the ſtoutneſs of mans Spirit; hence ſickneſſes and afflictions are called humiliations; and the ſame word ſignifies both to be afflicted and humbled.

Secondly, To make men taſte how bitter a thing ſin is; This is thy wickedneſs (ſaith the Lord of his ſore Judgments brought upon his people Iſrael, Jer. 4. 18.) Becauſe it is bitter. Ye would not taſte the evil or bitterneſs of ſin by inſtruction, therefore I will teach you by affliction.

Thirdly, To put ſorrowful ſinful man upon the ſearch of his own heart, and the finding out of the errour of his ways. While men are ſtrong and healthful, they ſeldom find leiſure for that work. And therefore they are confined by ſickneſs to their Houſes, to their Chambers, yea to their Beds, that they may attend it, and read over the whole Book of their lives (Lam. 3. 39, 40.) Wherefore doth the living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſin; let us ſearch and try our ways, and turn to the Lord. That's man's work upon his Bed, and 'tis God's aim in binding him to his Bed, that he may have liberty for that work.

Fourthly, Afflictions are deſign'd by God to bring man out of love with ſin, yea to ſtir up a holy hatred and revenge in him againſt it; as upon many other accounts, ſo upon this, becauſe it rewardeth him ſo ill, and he finds ſuch unſavory fruits of it. A little digging will diſcover ſin to be the root of all thoſe evil and bitter fruits, which we at any time are fed with in this World. Sin is the gall in our cup, and the gravel in our bread, and we are made to taſte bitterneſs and find trouble, that we may both know and acknowledg it to be ſo.

Fifthly, The purpoſe of God in afflicting us, is to ſet us a praying to and ſeeking after him. We ſeldom know our need of him, till we feel it, (Hoſ. 5. 15.) In their affliction they will ſeek me early; affliction puts man upon ſupplication, yet every man who is afflicted, doth not preſently ſeek God (many in their affliction mind not God, they ſeek to men, not to God, a croſs without a Chriſt, never made any ſeek God) but affliction through the workings of the Spirit of Chriſt, is a means to bring the Soul to God; and we ſee the effect of it at the beginning of the next Chapter in the ſame Prophet (Hoſ. 6. 1.) Come let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us, &c.

Sixthly, God is pleaſed to exerciſe us with croſſes, for the exerciſe of our graces, or to ſet grace awork; grace hath moſt buſineſs to do when we are taken off from all worldly buſineſs, and are laid upon our Bed, our ſick-Bed. Some work is not done ſo well any where elſe, as there. And many graces work beſt when 'tis worſt with us; they would even ſtand ſtill, and have nothing to do, if God did not bring us into ſtraights, or keep us for a ſeaſon in them. In a ſick-Bed the Lord ſhews us, and we may find work enough for all our graces; eſpecially for faith and patience, and ſubmiſſion of Spirit to his work and will. We may do better work (and do it better) in ſickneſs then in health.

Seventhly, God brings many upon their ſick-Beds, to teach them the worth of health, and make them thankful for it. They who are ſeldom ſick, are as ſeldom thankful for their health, and ſcarce reckon that for a mercy, the want whereof, they have never felt. 'Tis rare that we prize what we have, till we have it not.

Eighthly, God exerciſeth many with ſickneſs, with a purpoſe to put men upon a holy purpoſe of improving their health better, and of doing more for God while 'tis well with them.

Laſtly, not a few are afflicted, that God may have an opportunity to do his work, and declare his power. God himſelf would be hindred of much glorious work, in reſtoring and recovering them to health, did he not chaſten them upon ſick Beds. The queſtion was put about the blind man (John 9. 3, 4.) Who did ſin, this man or his Parents, that he was born blind? Jeſus anſwered neither hath this man ſinned nor his Parents, but that the works of God ſhould be made manifeſt in him. If there had not been a blind man in the World, how could the power of God have been made manifeſt in giving ſight to the blind? If ſome were not extreamly torturingly ſick, how would the power of God be ſeen in healing the ſick, and rebuking their pain? For all theſe purpoſes, Man is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain. We never profit by chaſtenings, till we anſwer the purpoſes of God in ſending them, and unleſs we know what and which they are, we can never anſwer them. If we anſwer theſe nine toucht upon, we ſhall either anſwer all, or, to be ſure, we ſhall baulk or refuſe none. Elihu having thus ſhewed us the ſick man in pain, proceeds to ſhew us what further effect his pain and ſickneſs wrought upon him.

Verſe 20. So that his life abhorreth bread, and his Soul dainty meat.

This verſe ſheweth the ſecond effect of ſickneſs. The former was pain, this is loſs of appetite, or nauſeouſneſs.

His life.] That is, his living Body; we may call the ſick mans Body a living Body, though it be hard to ſay whether we ſhould number him among the living or the dead. We read life put for the Body which liveth, or whereby it liveth. (Pſal. 88. 3.) My Soul (ſaith Heman) is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh unto the grave; that is, I am ready to die, and my Body to be buried. He doth not ſay, he hath no great ſtomack to, but his life

Abhorreth bread.] The word here uſed is of a Syriack derivation; nor is it found any where in Scripture but here. The noun ſignifies any thing that is filthy, excrementicious or unclean; whence the verb is rendred to abhor, loath, or nauſeate; becauſe we abhor thoſe things which are filthy or unclean. His life abhorreth

Bread.] That is common food. Sometimes bread is put for all kind of diet; as David ſaid to Mephiboſheth (2 Sam. 9. 10.) Thou ſhalt eat bread at my Table. But becauſe of that oppoſition in the Text to dainties, by bread, we may here underſtand only ordinary food; His life abhorreth bread,

And his Soul dainty meat.] The Hebrew is, Meat of deſire. Not only ſuch meat, as men uſually deſire for the wholeſomneſs of it, but ſuch as curious palates deſire for the pleaſantneſs of it; ſuch meat is here meant; yea thirdly, ſuch meat as the man had a deſire to before his ſickneſs for the ſutableneſs of it to his own taſte and appetite, he then abhorreth.

Vox זהם Syra eſt, notat nauſeare facere nauſeam.

זוהמא ſordes, ſcoriam, excrementum, quicquid ſordidum & immundum eſt vel in humano corpore vel ex eo excretum. Druſ. Merc.

His Soul abhorreth dainty meat.] The turning of the ſtomack, and loſs of appetite, are uſual ſymptoms of ſickneſs; almoſt all ſickneſſes weaken the appetite, and ſome take it quite away, ſo that the patient not only hath no deſire to, but loaths dainty meat, or meat of deſire. This phraſe or form of ſpeaking is uſed (Dan. 10. 3.) I (ſaith he) aet no pleaſant bread, or no bread of deſires (as we put in the Margin) neither came fleſh nor wine in my mouth. 'Tis uſed again (2 Chro. 32. 27.) Hezekiah made himſelf treaſuries for Silver and Gold, &c. and all manner of pleaſant jewels; we put in the Margin, for all jewels of deſire. So (Amos 5. 11.) Pleaſant vineyards, or vineyards of deſire. It was the manner of the Hebrews to expreſs pleaſant by deſirable, becauſe pleaſant things are much deſired. His Soul abhorreth meat of deſire, or dainty meat.

Hence Note, Firſt, 'Tis a mercy to taſte our meat, or to take the comfort of what we eat.

Many have meat, but cannot taſte it. That which giveth the beſt taſte to our meat, is a taſte of the goodneſs of God in it (1 Pet. 2. 1.) If ye have taſted that the Lord is gracious. It is ſweet to taſte meat and the goodneſs of the Lord together.

Secondly, Note, God can quickly make thoſe things that are moſt deſirable to us, dainty meat, meat of deſire, loathſome to us.

Some abhor meat, becauſe they have eaten of it long. The Jews did eat Manna and Quails till they loathed them (Num. 11. 20.) Others loath meat, becauſe they have eaten over-much. A third ſort, loath ſome meat by a natural antipathy againſt it. Fourthly, Others loath wholeſome meat out of a curioſity, becauſe it is not dainty enough. Laſtly, Sickneſs cauſeth a loathing of all meat, even of the moſt dainty and deſirable meat. And the Lord at any time can make that which was our deſire, our loathing. We have a like deſcription of a ſick man (Pſal. 107.18.) His Soul abhorreth all manner of meat, and draweth near unto the gates of death. !

Thirdly, Note, The beſt of Creature-comforts are but vain comforts.

What can dainty meat do a man good, when he is ſick and ready to die? Then Gold and Silver, Lands and Houſes, which are the dainty meat of a covetous man, are loathſome to him. When a man is ſick to death, his very Riches are ſapleſs and taſteleſs to him; Wiſe and Children, friends and acquaintance can yield little comfort in that dark hour, yea they often prove miſerable comforters: When we have moſt need of comfort, theſe things adminiſter leaſt or no comfort at all to us. Is it not our wiſdom then to get a ſtock of ſuch comforts, as will hold and abide freſh with us, when all worldly comforts either leave us, or become taſtleſs to us? Is it not good to get a ſtore of that food, which how ſick ſoever we are, our ſtomacks will never loath? Yea the ſicker we are, our Souls will the more like, hunger after, and feed the more heartily upon. The fleſh of Chriſt is meat indeed (John 6. 55.) Feed upon him by faith, in health and in ſickneſs, ye will never loath him. His fleſh is the true meat of deſires, ſuch meat as will fill and fatten us, but never cloy us. A hungry craving appetite after Chriſt, and ſweet ſatisfaction in him are inſeparable, and ſtill the ſtronger is our appetite, the greater is our ſatisfaction. And (which is yet a greater happineſs) our Souls will have the ſtrongeſt appetite, the moſt ſharp ſet ſtomack after Chriſt, when, through bodily ſickneſs, our ſtomacks cannot take down, but loath the very ſcent and ſight of the moſt pleaſant periſhing meat, and delicious Earthly dainties. Look, that ye provide ſomewhat to eat, that will go down upon a ſick-Bed; your ſick-Bed meat is Chriſt; all other dainty food may be an abhorring to you.

Further, Not only are we to conſider the ſickneſs of the Body, as the cauſe of this taſtleſneſs and liſtleſneſs after bread. But we are to conſider the ſick man abhorring dainty meat, under the hidings of Gods face, or in fears about his ſpiritual ſtate; as appears by that which followeth, If there be a meſſenger with him, an interpreter, one of a thouſand to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs, or to ſet him right in his ſpiritual ſtate, &c. The ſick man for want of that as well as for want of health, can taſte no ſweetneſs in the rareſt dainties.

Hence Note, A ſenſe of divine diſpleaſure, or the hiding of divine ſavour from the Soul, renders all outward comforts comfortleſs to us.

If a man have never ſo much health, yet the appearances of divine diſpleaſure will make him ſick of his moſt pleaſant things. Carnal men can eat and drink, and live upon pleaſures, yea upon the pleaſures of ſin, and go on merrily with them a while, becauſe they know not the meaning of the diſpleaſure of God, nor do they know what the favour of God meaneth; they underſtand not what they want, yea they flatter themſelves that they have enough, and are well enough, though they have nothing, and are nothing, that is of any worth. But if God once awaken them out of this dream, and ſhew them their curſed condition, all will be gall and wormwood to their taſte, or as gravel between their teeth. As the ſenſe of divine favour makes bitter things ſweet, and ſorrowful things comfortable to us, the ſour herbs of affliction dainties to us; ſo not only common but dainty meat, all the cates and viands of this World will be not only taſtleſs but bitter to us when God frowns upon us. An earneſt in the love and favour of God is the good of all good things.

For the cloſe of all, take theſe two Counſels, upon the occaſion of theſe words.

Firſt, Receive your bread and dainty meat with prayer and thankſgiving; you may quickly elſe come to abhor your bread, yea and your dainties. The word and prayer both ſanctifie and ſweeten all Creature-enjoyments.

Secondly, Take heed of abuſing your meat; ye may quickly be brought to a loathing of it. When they who have given themſelves up to luxury and intemperance lie upon their ſick-Beds and find their ſtomack turned from all their dainties, it will be moſt grievous to them to conſider how they have abuſed their dainties to feed their luſts. As ſome who abuſe the Creatures are puniſhed with the want of them, ſo others with an abhorrence and loathing of them.

So much for this ſecond ſymptom of ſickneſs, His life abhorreth bread, and his Soul dainty meat. The third followeth, and appeareth in the general decay and languiſhment of the ſick mans Body.

Verſe 21. His fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen and his bones that were not ſeen, ſtick out.

In this verſe and the next, Elihu ſtill inſiſts upon his deſcription of the ſick mans condition, and in them he gives us two other ſad effects or ſymptoms of his ſickneſs.

Firſt, The general waſte and conſumption of the Body (verſ. 21.)

Secondly, The utmoſt peril of life (verſ. 22.)

Elihu deſcribes the firſt effect of ſickneſs (the firſt here but the third in order) by two things.

Firſt, By the diſappearing of that which uſed to be ſeen, and appear very fair and beautiful; the viſible part grows (as it were) inviſible, his fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen.

Secondly, By the appearing of that which uſed not to be ſeen; his inviſible parts (not ſo in their own nature, but as to their place, I ſay, his inviſible parts) grow viſible, His bones which were not ſeen, ſtick out. Thus with much elegancy he ſets forth the ſorrowful and deplorable eſtate of the ſick man.

His fleſh is conſumed away.] As if he had ſaid, Before his ſickneſs he was full of fleſh, fat and fair, but falling into ſickneſs, he falls away, and is worn, (as we ſay) to skin and bones; his fleſh is conſumed. Fleſh, in Scripture, is taken two ways.

Firſt, Improperly, and Tropically.

Secondly, Literally or Properly.

In a Tropical and Improper ſenſe, fleſh ſignifieth our ſinful corruption (Gal. 5. 17.) The fleſh evermore luſteth againſt the Spirit, that is, the unregenerate part in man againſt the regenerate. Theſe two are always contending and combating with one another in all thoſe whom Chriſt hath conquered to himſelf. Happy are they that find their fleſh, in this ſenſe, conſuming away; and 'tis that which every man is ſtudying (who knows what godlineſs means) the conſumption of this fleſh, even the mortification of his luſts, of pride and earthlineſs, of wrath, envy, and unbelief.

Secondly, Fleſh by a figure is put for the whole natural Body, conſiſting of many parts diſſimilar to fleſh. Thus the Pſalmiſt complained in prayer, that, the Lord had given the fleſh of his Saints, to the Beaſts of the Earth (Pſal. 79. 2.) that is, he had expoſed their Bodies, through the rage and cruelty of their enemies, to the teeth and bowels of ſavage and ravenous Beaſts.

Thirdly, Fleſh is alſo put for the whole man conſiſting both of Soul and Body. (Gen. 6. 12, 13.) The Lord ſaw that all fleſh had corrupted their ways. That is, all men (who are made up of a Body and Soul) had corrupted their ways by letting looſe and acting their ſinful corruptions.

Fourthly, Fleſh is ſometimes put for that which is beſt in man, his greateſt natural perfections, whatſoever in him is leſs then grace, whatſoever is higheſt in him, below the Spirit is called fleſh in Scripture. When Peter (Matth. 16. 17.) had made that bleſſed confeſſion which is the Rock upon which the Church is built (thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God) preſently Chriſt tells him fleſh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, that is, the higheſt, and the moſt perfect piece of nature hath not taught thee this leſſon; the Evangeliſt ſaith of all true believers (who have received this power (or priviledge) to become the ſons of God) they are born not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh (John 1. 13.) that is, the beſt of the Creature, contributes nothing to the bringing forth of new Creatures, the ſons of God.

Fifthly, Fleſh by a figure is put for all that in Religion, or in the worſhip of God, which is outward, or open to the eye; whatſoever comes under any humane obſervation, is but the fleſh of Religion, or the fleſh of worſhip. In this ſence the Apoſtle puts the queſtion (Rom. 4. 1.) What ſhall we ſay then, that Abraham our father, as pertaining to the fleſh, hath found? What he means by the fleſh, he tells in the next words, he was not juſtified by works, that is, not by any thing that did appear, not by any thing done to him or done by him. He was not juſtified by Circumciſion, or by the uſe of any external rite, he was not juſtified by his own righteouſneſs, or obedience to the Law. The ſame Apoſtle alſo calls the very worſhip of the Goſpel, as to the outward part of it, fleſh (Phil. 3. 3.) For we are the Circumciſion, which worſhip God in the Spirit, and rejoyce in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh. That is, in any outward work, or priviledg which we have in our Goſpel ſtate. All this fleſh likewiſe ought to be conſumed in our apprehenſions, that is, we muſt make nothing of it, nor reckon it any thing in our account for juſtification in the ſight of God or acceptance with him.

Secondly, Fleſh properly taken is that integral and ſimilar part of the Body, which is oppoſed to blood and bones, to veins and ſinews. When Elihu ſaith his fleſh is conſumed, we are to underſtand it either in this proper ſence, or in the ſecond figurative ſence before named, as fleſh is put for the whole Body; his fleſh is conſumed, that is, his fleſh in oppoſition to his bones ſpoken of before, or his fleſh, that is his outward man,

Senuit, conſenuit, conſumpſit.

Is conſumed.] The Original word ſignifies to wax old; for as when a man recovers from ſickneſs, his fleſh is ſaid to return like the fleſh of a Child. So when he is under the extremity of any ſickneſs, his fleſh, as it were, waxeth old, or withereth like the fleſh of an old man. Thus 'tis tranſlated (Lamen. 3. 4.) My fleſh and my skin hath he made old; that is, though I am not old in years, or how young ſoever I am, yet God, by many ſufferings, hath made me look like an old man; I am decayed and weak. David ſpeaking of wicked worldly men, tells us, (Pſal. 49. 14.) Their beauty ſhall conſume in the grave; As death and the grave make a total and final conſumption of the beauty of bad men, that is, of all the ſplendour and bravery wherein they lived, while they lived in the Body; ſo pains and ſickneſſes do exceedingly conſume the Body, and eat out the fleſh. As a tyrannical oppreſſor eats out the people under his government, in which ſence this word is applyed (Dan. 7. 25.) Or as a garment is worn out by time and uſing. The fleſh is often in Scripture compared to a garment, and dying to unclothing; becauſe when we die we put off the fleſh. The garment of the fleſh, that beautiful garment waxeth old and wears out apace on a ſick Bed. Sickneſs not only ſtaineth and abateth the beauty of it, but waſteth it deeply, ſo that, as it followeth,

It cannot be ſeen.] Or as Mr, Broughton renders, his fleſh waſteth away from ſight, or he hath no fleſh left to be ſeen.

Again, When it is ſaid, his fleſh is conſumed away that it cannot be ſeen, ſome expound it thus; His fleſh is ſo conſumed away, that the ſeer withdraweth from it; or no man cares to ſee it, that is, the ſick man is ſo diſcoloured and waſted, that viſiters and ſpectators ſtart and are almoſt frighted to look upon him. The fleſh of man in a healthful and flouriſhing condition, is a lovely ſpectacle, and draws beholders, but the fleſh of a very ſick man is a gaſtly ſpectacle and a regret to the beholder. We love not to ſee that which we do not like. Beauty attracts, deformity withdraws the eye. It is ſaid of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, that he was ſo deformed by his ſufferings (Iſa. 52. 14.) that many were aſtoniſh'd at him (his viſage was ſo marred more then any man, and his form more then the Sons of men) and (Iſa. 53. 3.) We hid as it were our faces from him, he was deſpiſed and we eſteemed him not; that is, he was ſo diſ-figured by ſorrow, that no man cared to look upon him. Thus 'tis often with the ſick. And this is a profitable and a probable ſenſe of the Text in hand; His fleſh is conſumed away, and then he who before delighted to ſee it, is troubled at the ſight of it, or is rather affrighted then pleaſed in ſeeing it.

There is yet a fourth reading, which further aggravates the ſick mans Conſumption; His fleſh is conſumed in ſight; that is, ſay ſome, his fleſh doth conſume ſo faſt, that a man may almoſt ſee him conſume; as we ſay of ſome plants, they grow ſo faſt, that we may, almoſt, ſee them grow; ſo we may ſay of thoſe that decline and fade much, we may ſee them conſume, their fleſh conſumeth even to the eye or to view. He that looks ſtedfaſtly upon them, may ſee them fade and wither like a flower, yea they ſeem to fade by his looking or fixing his eye on them.

Quid ſi carnem conſumi à viſu, per elegantem hyperbolen eſſet, tam manifeſtè indies marceſcere, ut quaſi ab ipſo reſpicientis oculo cõſumi videatur. Bold.

Hence Note, Firſt, The fleſh of man is a very fading and declining thing.

It quickly conſumes and drips away in a diſeaſe; A violent feaver or any other acute diſeaſe, dries up the ſpirits, and drinks up the moyſture, and how ſoon doth ſuch a man decay! and as the extremity of a diſeaſe, ſo extreme want of food or famine conſumes the fleſh. Hunger having nothing to eat, feeds upon the fleſh of the hungry, till all be eaten up. We read (Lamen. 4. 8.) how rudely famin dealt with the fleſh of thoſe delicate Nazarites, who were purer then ſnow, whiter then milk, they were more ruddy in Body then Rubies, their poliſhing was of Saphire; yet the next words tell us, Their viſage is blacker then a coal, they are not known in the ſtreets, their skin cleaveth to their bones: It is withered, it is become like a ſtick. And though a man eſcape ſickneſs, and famin doth not eat up his fleſh, yet time (that great eater) will, old age will waſte what famin and ſickneſs have not toucht. As the Prophet threatned, what the Caterpillar hath left the Canker-worm ſhall devour; ſo what ſickneſs leaves, time will certainly conſume. Thus Bodily fleſh is every way liable to a Conſumption; and therefore the Prophet being commanded to cry, and putting the queſtion, what ſhall I cry? had this anſwer, All fleſh is graſs. (There indeed fleſh is taken in the moſt comprehenſive notion, as to all externals; not only the fleſh of the Body, but all the riches, honours, and dignities of this World, come under the name of fleſh there) All fleſh is graſs (Iſa. 40. 6.) But why doth he call it graſs? 'Tis ſo under a two-fold conſideration. Firſt, for the greeneſs and fairneſs of it. God hath put beauty upon this fading fleſh, both for the comfort, and for the tryal of man; that fleſh is fair as a flower, is matter of delight; and to abſtract our thoughts or wean our hearts from that which is fair and delightful, is matter of tryal. How hardly are we taken off from affecting fleſh, our own or others, while this graſs continues beautiful and green! Secondly, fleſh is graſs, becauſe ſoon gone (as it follows in the Prophet) The graſs withereth and the flower fadeth; becauſe the Spirit of the Lord (or his breath like a blaſting Eaſt-wind) bloweth upon it; which yet ſome expound more ſpiritually, of the Spirit of God diſcovering the vanity and mutability of all Earthly things to the Soul, for that preſently cauſeth the gayeſt and beſt of them to wither or be as a withered flower before our eyes. In which ſenſe David ſaid (Pſal. 119. 96.) I have ſeen an end of all perfection.

Take fleſh in the largeſt ſenſe, and 'tis a conſuming thing; The faſhion (or ſcheme) of the world paſſeth away, and ſo doth the faſhion of all thoſe perfections, or moſt perfect enjoyments, which are but of a Worldly birth and extraction. Fleſh under every form is a fading thing, eſpecially the fleſh of the beſt-form'd face and Body of man. Whence take theſe ſix inferences. If the fleſh the faireſt outſide of man be a fading thing, then

Firſt, Be not deſirous, much leſs ambitious, to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh; for it may prove but a vain ſhew, and at laſt not ſo much as a ſhew. Fleſh may ſo conſume away, that it cannot be ſeen. When the Apoſtle tells us of ſome, Who deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh (Gal. 6. 12.) he ſpecially means it of thoſe that brave it and boaſt themſelves in the outward part of Religion, and would appear much in the form; 'Tis a moſt vain thing to deſire, to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh of ſpiritual things, as hypocrites and formaliſts do; And 'tis a very vain thing to deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh of corporal things, as proud and vain-glorious men love to do. Many deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh of their Bodies, they love to have fair faces, and fair skins, to be fairly dreſt and deckt, is a great part of their care. But take heed of deſiring to make a fair ſhew in this or in any thing that is called fleſh. For when you have done all, fleſh will be a nothing; and after you have beſtowed much coſt upon the fleſh of this Body, that it may be ſeen, a ſickneſs may come and conſume it, that it cannot be ſeen.

Secondly, Take heed of priding your ſelves in the fleſh, when your fleſh (poſſibly unſought by you) makes a fair ſhew; though you have beauty, and the goodlieſt ſtructure of Body that every was ſeen, though you have riches and honour, the higheſt built eſtate that ever was enjoyed, what have you to be proud of? Will it not conſume and moulder away? May it not melt like a ſnow-ball, or like wax before the fire? Be not proud of any thing called fleſh, how goodly a ſight ſoever it is to the World, for in a little, in a very little time, there may be nothing of fleſh left in ſight. His fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen.

Thirdly, Be not over-careful to provide for your fleſh, the outward man, this Body, or any thing that concerns it. As the Apoſtle utterly forbids us to make proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof (Rom. 13. 14.) that is, thoſe luſts that are exerciſed in the fleſh; ſo, be not much careful, not at all unduly careful to make proviſion for your fleſh, to ſatisfie the neceſſities of it; for 'tis but a periſhing thing. Be not careful what you ſhall eat and drink, and wherewith you ſhall be clothed, as Chriſt himſelf adviſeth (Matth. 6.) The fleſh that you prepare for your fleſh, is not more periſhing then the fleſh for which it is prepared. Meats for the belly and the belly for meats, but God ſhall deſtroy both it and them (1 Cor. 6. 13.) It will not be long before there ſhall not be an end both of the meat that is eaten, and of eating meat.

Fourthly, If the fleſh may ſoon be ſo conſumed by the hand of God that it cannot be ſeen, then be not unwilling to waſte and conſume your fleſh which is ſeen in working for God, or in doing good work, which is the work of God: Your fleſh may conſume upon worſe terms quickly, then working for God, why then ſhould you be unwilling to conſume it in Gods work? Are not ſome ſo tender of their carkaſs, and their skin, that they are afraid (though that fear be their ſhame and ſin) of taking too much pains in the work of God, leſt they ſhould dammage their Bodies, endanger their health, and conſume their fleſh? This fleſh will waſte with idleneſs, is it not better to waſte it by induſtry in uſeful ſervices? The Apoſtle was willing to ſpend and be ſpent in the ſervice of the Corinthians; that is, he was willing to ſpend not only his purſe and his pains, but to be ſpent as to his bodily ſtrength, health and life. He cared not for his own fleſh, ſo he might be ſerviceable to their Spirits, and promote their ſpiritual good, (2 Cor. 12. 15.)

Fifthly, Be not unwilling to waſte and conſume your fleſh in duty with God; as the fleſh conſumes in work for God, ſo in duty with God, in prayer and faſting and ſelf-humbling, theſe are duties with God. Some are afraid of taking too much pains in theſe Soul-works with God, leſt they hurt their Bodies, their fleſh. We can never lay out our ſtrength, or bring our fleſh to a better market, we can never put it off at a higher rate (if it muſt be put off) then in ways of communion with God. Yet let us remember we have a promiſe, that our Bodies ſhall thrive as well as our Souls, even in thoſe duties of communion with God, which are moſt expenſive and ſevere to our fleſh, prayer with faſting. (Iſa. 58. 11.) And the Lord ſhall guide thee continually, and ſatisfie thy Soul in drought, and make fat thy bones. Which though it may have a more ſpiritual meaning, yet there is a truth in it as to the point in hand. Holy faſting, which is a Soul-fatning duty (as all agree) is under a gracious promiſe, that it ſhall alſo be a Body-fatning, yea a Bone-fatning duty. Now, though we have a good aſſurance, that while we are trading with God for the gain and increaſe of our Souls, our Bodies ſhall not waſte nor be loſers, yet we ſhould be ready to waſte and wear off the fleſh from our Bodies for the gain and increaſe of our Souls.

Sixthly, Why ſhould we be unwilling to offer our fleſh to be conſumed by the fury of men, or by the rage of flames in the cauſe of God, ſeeing it may ere long conſume by ſickneſs and not be ſeen? Why ſhould we be afraid to let our fleſh conſume or rot in priſons, or by tortures for Chriſt, ſeeing a diſeaſe will do it, and hath often done it? Thouſands of the bleſſed Martyrs, and ſuffering Saints, have rejoyced they had fleſh to conſume when God called them to it. So ſome interpret that Scripture before mentioned (2 Cor. 12. 14.) where the Apoſtle profeſſed, I am willing to be ſpent for you (how ſpent? As an offering or ſacrifice by fire) in the ſervice of your faith, and in bearing my witneſs to thoſe truths of that Goſpel which I have preached to you. And indeed, he in that ſenſe, ſpent his fleſh at the laſt, he ſuffered death, and let his fleſh fall, in holding up and holding out the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. It is better that our fleſh ſhould be thus conſumed (if God calls us to it) then that we leave it to be conſumed by age or ſickneſs, by worms or rottenneſs. How freely ſhould we offer up this fleſh to ſo noble a conſumption, ſeeing we cannot keep it long from ſo mean a conſumption, do what we can?

Secondly, Note, Sickneſs is a conſumer; ſickneſs is a conſumer of all that will conſume.

It conſumes the Body, and it conſumes the purſe, yea it conſumes all our Worldly comforts and concernments, it conſumes every thing but grace. We ſay, A time of ſickneſs is a ſpending time; the uſual reference of that expreſſion, is to ſpirituals. In health we gather grace and lay up truths, which we ſpend in ſickneſs. But though ſickneſs be a ſpending time, yet, it is not (I am ſure it ought not to be) a waſting time to grace and ſpirituals. A ſpending time it is, that is, a time wherein a godly man may lay out a great deal of his ſpiritual ſtock and heavenly treaſure, a great deal of faith and patience, a great deal of ſweet contentation and ſelf-ſubmiſſion to God. But ſickneſs is not a waſting time to any of theſe graces or heavenly treaſures; yea where grace is real and active, it is not only not waſted or conſumed, but increaſed and improved, occaſionally, by ſickneſs; God having promiſed, that all things ſhall work together for good to them that love him (Rom. 8. 28.) will not ſuffer the beſt things of thoſe that love him (their graces) to take hurt by the worſt of Bodily ſickneſs. Sickneſs doth only dammage the Body, and deface the beauty of the fleſh; and it quickly doth, as Elihu affirms of his ſick man in the Text, His fleſh is conſumed away, that it cannot be ſeen, yea, as it followeth,

And his bones that were not ſeen, ſtick out.

Fleſh and bones are the two eminent materials of this fair and moſt regular building, the Body of man. The bones of a healthy and ſtrong man, are not ſeen becauſe they are covered with fleſh; they are only felt or perceived through their clothing, skin, and fleſh. God hath put theſe very comely and beautiful garments as a covering upon our bones: But ſickneſs pulls away theſe coverings, it pulls away the cloths from our bones, and makes them appear, as it were, naked. When the fat is dript away, and the fleſh is ſpent, the bones ſeem to ſtart out. We commonly ſay of a man that hath been conſumed by a lingring ſickneſs, He is a very Skeleton, he looks like an Anatomy. Which is nothing elſe but a pack of bones. The fleſh is gone. Thus David mourned (Pſal. 31. 10.) My life is ſpent with grief, my years with ſighing, my ſtrength faileth because of mine iniquity: And my bones are conſumed. The ſin-ſickneſs of a ſenſible Soul conſumes the bones, more then any Bodily ſickneſs. This was not only the conſuming but the breaking of David's bones (Pſal. 51. 8.) And as his ſorrow for his own tranſgreſſions, ſo his ſorrow for the afflictions of Sion, had the like effect in him (Pſal. 102. 3, 4, 5.) My days are conſumed like ſmoak or into ſmoak (they vaniſh like ſmoak) and my bones are burnt as a hearth. My heart is ſmitten, and withereth like graſs; ſo that I forget to eat my bread; by reaſon of the voyce of my groaning, my bones cleave to my skin.

Some read this Text, His bones are diminiſhed, leſſened, waſted, or broken in pieces, as if the conſumption reached not only his fleſh but his bones too. That's a fierce diſeaſe which at one invaded and waſted the bones. The word which we render to ſtick out, ſignifieth in the Syriack Idiom, the abating, leſſening or breaking of any thing into leſſer parts or pieces. And ſo thoſe words (are not ſeen) in the Text (which according to our tranſlation refer to the time of health, when a man is ſo fat and full fleſhed, that his bones cannot be ſeen, ſcarcely felt, thoſe words I ſay) are referred according to this tranſlation to the time of ſickneſs, which is ſuppoſed ſo to diminiſh and waſte the bones, that by an ordinary ſtrain of Rhetorick they are ſaid, not to be ſeen. His bones are diminiſhed, they are not ſeen. We alſo render this word in that firſt prophetical word concerning our reſtoring by Chriſt (Gen. 3. 15.) by bruiſing. It (that is the womans ſeed) ſhall bruiſe thy head (that is the Devils) and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel. When bones are bruiſed, and as it were ſhuffled together, they cannot be ſeen in their proper places, or as once they were fixt by nature. This various reading doth not vary the general ſence of the Text, but only heighten and increaſe it. We render fully and ſignificantly, his bones that were not ſeen, ſtick out.

Et comminuentur oſſa ejus, non videntur; interpretantes vocem ספו in ſignificatione Syriaca. Piſc. Significationem Syriacam malo quam omnes penè Hebræi ſequuntur. Merc.

Hence Note, There is no man ſo ſtrong, there is nothiug in man ſo ſtrong that can ſtand out againſt the ſtrength of ſickneſs.

Our bones are not made of Braſs, ſickneſs will diminiſh them, and pain maſter them.

Secondly, Whereas 'tis ſaid, His fleſh (that was ſeen) is not ſeen, and his bones that were not ſeen ſtick out, or are ſeen.

Obſerve, Sickneſs makes a wonderful change in man.

It puts that out of ſight which was ſeen, and it brings that in ſight which was not ſeen; this holds true, not only as to that which is natural in man, his fleſh and bones, of which this Text treats in the letter; but 'tis true alſo as to that which is moral and ſpiritual in man, his vertues and his vices, his graces, and his luſts or corruptions. How often is the fleſh (in a moral ſence) that is, the outward profeſſion of a Hypocrite conſumed in ſickneſs, and no more ſeen; will the Hypocrite always call upon God? (Job 27. 10.) He will not. He that doth all to be ſeen (that's the character of a Hypocrite, Matth. 6. 5.) will in a little time do ſuch a little or rather ſuch a nothing in Religion, that it cannot be ſeen at all. His profeſſion is ſick, when he is ſick; and then alſo that which was not ſeen ſticks out; the Hypocrite covereth many of his corruptions, his impatiency, murmuring, and unbelief, in a day of proſperity with the skin at leaſt or fair ſhew of faith, but in a day of trouble thoſe dead bones appear, and ſtick out. A day of ſorrow, ſickneſs, and trouble is a great diſcoverer; it occaſions the appearance and ſticking out of many baſe luſts that were not ſeen before. 'Tis ſo alſo in the better way with godly men, their corruptions, that appeared upon them before, are abated, waſted, and conſumed by affliction, and many of their graces which lay hid and unſeen, ſtick out and appear glorioſly in a day of trouble, or upon a ſick bed. Their patience and ſubmiſſion of Spirit under the hand of God, their long-ſufferance and ſweet ſelf-reſignation to the will of God, which lay hid, ſhew themſelves. Sickneſs and affliction make wonderful changes and diſcoveries both as to the outward and inward man; 'tis ſeldom ſeen or known either how good or how bad any man is, till he is in pain or reduced to ſome extremity; till his very bones are vexed, or till, as Elihu further deſcribes the ſick man in the next verſe.

Verſe 22. His Soul draweth nigh to the grave, and his life to the deſtroyer.

When the diſeaſe is at the height (as Phyſitians ſpeak) then the ſick mans Soul draweth nigh unto and is ready to go down into the grave. But doth the Soul go to the grave? I anſwer, the Soul, here, as frequently in Scripture, is put for the perſon; as if he had ſaid, the man draweth nigh to his grave; the Soul being the nobleſt and moſt princely part of man, is honoured with the denomination of the whole man; or, becauſe all the World is nothing to us (as Chriſt told his Diſciples (Matth. 16. 26.) if we loſe our Souls, therefore man is ſpoken of as if he were nothing but a Soul (Gen. 14. 21.) The King of Sodom ſaid unto Abraham, give me the Souls, and take the goods to thy ſelf, we tranſlate, give me the perſons, and put in the Margin, give me the Souls; thus 'tis ſaid (Gen. 46. 27.) All the Souls of the Houſe of Jacob that came into Egypt were threeſcore and ten. The Apoſtles rule of obedience to Magiſtrates runs in this ſtrain, Let every Soul (that is, let every man) be ſubject to the higher Powers (Rom. 13.) And I conceive the Apoſtle expreſſeth it ſo, becauſe there ought not be an inward ſubjection to that, as to any other Ordinance of God; the Soul muſt be ſubject as well as the Body to the powers of this World, that is, there muſt be (though no ſubjection of Conſcience, yet) a conſcientious ſubjection unto Magiſtrates. Thus here, his Soul that is, himſelf, the man draweth near

Unto the grave.] To corruption, ſay ſome, to the pit, ſay others. Both are joined or meet in the grave, for that is the pit of corruption. The Greeks call the grave, Fleſh-eater, to draw nigh to the grave, imports ſuch a prevalency of diſeaſes as bring a man to the graves mouth, to the very point of death; and then (as we ſay) he is drawing on. Whither is a ſick man drawing on? Surely to his grave; David (Pſ. 107. 18.) having deſcribed the condition of ſick men, adds, they draw nigh unto the gates of death; here (which is the ſame) Elihu ſaith, his Soul draweth nigh to the grave.

לשחת Corruptionis ſepulchrum à græcis vocatur Sarcophagus.

Hence Note, Diſeaſes and death are near one another.

A ſick bed and a grave are not far diſtant; David ſpeaking of himſelf and others in extream danger of death by the cruel plots and cunning ſnares of the enemy, hath a like expreſſion (Pſal. 141. 7.) Our bones are ſcattered at the graues mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the Earth; as if he had ſaid, we are ſo near death, that 'tis a miracle if we eſcape it. Though we are yet alive, yet we have the ſentence of death in our ſelves, and are within ſight of our graves. What David ſpake there of himſelf in conſort with others, Heman ſpake perſonally of himſelf (Pſ. 88. 3.) My life draweth nigh unto the grave; we are always in our health drawing towards the grave, but in ſickneſs we are drawing near unto it. There is but a little diſtance between any man and the grave, there is ſcarcely any diſtance at all between a man that is very ſick and the grave. Now if the ſick man be drawing near unto the grave, then

Firſt, Let them that are ſick remember the grave; 'tis our duty to be always remembring and meditating upon the grave in our health, much more ſhould that be our remembrance and meditation, when we are ſick, moſt of all when we are ſick unto death, or ready to die and drop into the grave.

Secondly, if the ſick are drawing near unto the grave, then let ſick men draw near unto God; if ever you will draw near unto God, the living God, be ſure to do it upon the borders of death; 'tis good yea beſt to draw nigh unto God when we are well, and all is well with us, even at beſt in the World (Pſal. 73. 25.) But when we are in danger or drawing nigh unto death, O how earneſtly ſhould we draw nigh unto God, in the actings of faith, and love, To whom ſhould we go (as Peter ſaid to Chriſt, Joh. 6. 68.) in the appearances and approaches of temporal death, but unto him who hath the words of eternal life. It is high time for us to draw nigh unto God, when any of the comforts of this life are withdrawing from us, is it not more then high time therefore, to draw nigh to him, when life it ſelf is withdrawing from us, and we drawing nigh to the grave! How miſerable is their condition who have death near them, and God far from them! Though we walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, yet (as David profeſſed he would not, Pſal. 23. 4.) we need not fear any evil, while God is with us; but how will the very ſhadows of death put us in fear, if God be not with us? And what confidence can we have of his being with us, if we are not acquainted with him, if we uſe not to draw near to him?

Thirdly, If they that are ſick draw near unto the grave, then it is good for ſuch as come to viſit their ſick friends, wiſely to mind them of the grave; when will a diſcourſe with our friends of death and the grave be ſeaſonable, if not when we ſee them dying and going to the grave? Yet ſome, when they viſit ſick friends, will not ſpeak a word of either; they fear it may haſten death to hear of it, and that ſpeaking of the grave may put them into it, then which I know no fear more fooliſh, or more to be feared. Yea ſome will forbid viſiters to mention death, when their Relations lie ſick. O do not ſpeak of death to my Husband, ſaith the Wife, &c. But remember it, if the ſick are drawing near to the grave, they that viſit them ſhould remember them of the grave, both in prayer and in conference; to ſpeak of death cannot hurt the Body, but the not ſpeaking of it may hurt the Soul, and hinder it from getting out of the ſnares both of ſpiritual and eternal death. Yet godly prudence and great caution is to be uſed about it; none ſhould do it bluntly, nor ſuddenly, but having by diſcreet inſinuations, firſt hinted to the ſick man his danger of death, we ſhould then by faithful counſels prepare him for it, and by comfortable Scripture cordials ſtrengthen and arm his Spirits againſt it. Such ſavory and well mannaged diſcourſes of death may (through the bleſſing of God) be a ſavour of eternal life to the ſick man, and will not in the leaſt prejudice his recovery from ſickneſs, When his Soul draweth near to the grave, לממתים Mortificantibus. Mont.

And his life to the deſtroyers.] The Hebrew is, to thoſe that kill, or to life-deſtroyers. There is a difference among Interpreters, who are here intended by theſe deſtroyers, to whom the ſick mans life draweth near, or who are theſe life-deſtroyers.

Firſt, Some thus, his life to the deſtroyers, that is, to his enemies that are ready to deſtroy him. But that's improper to the Text, which ſpeaking of ſickneſs cannot intend any deſtroying enemy but the laſt enemy which is to be deſtroyed, death, or the antecedents and uſual attendants of it, ſickneſſes.

Ad Angelos morti præfectos non incommodè refertur ſequentis verſiculi ratione habita, ubi Angeli vitam annunciantis unius de mille mentionem facit, ut ממתים intelligas mortis nuncios. Merc.

Secondly, By the deſtroyers others underſtand, Angels, who are commiſſion'd and ſent of God to cut the thread of life, and to take mortals out of this World by mortal diſeaſes; and ſo the deſtroying Angel in this verſe ſtands in oppoſition to that comforting Angel ſpoken of in the next verſe; if there be a meſſenger or an Angel, &c. That Angels have ſuch a Miniſtry, is clear, (2 Sam. 24. 16.) Where (David having choſen to fall into the hands of God) an Angel is preſently diſpatcht to do execution upon his people. And when the Angel ſtretched out his hand upon Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, the Lord repented him of the evil, and ſaid to the Angel that deſtroyed the people, it is enough, ſtay now thine hand, &c. That deſtroyer (ſo he is called, Exod. 12. 23.) who ſlew all the firſt born of the Egyptians (God's laſt and greateſt plague upon them, his tenth plague) is by moſt interpreted to be an Angel, yea by ſome a good Angel, becauſe appointed and directed by God to ſpare his people the Jews, and to pour out his vengeance upon the Egyptians, his and their enemies. For moſt uſually the wicked are plagued by good Angels, and the good, as Job in this Book was, are afflicted by evil Angels. Howbeit that Text ſay ſome (Pſal. 78. 49.) leadeth us rather to believe that it was an evil Angel; He caſt upon them (meaning the Egyptians) the fierceneſs of his anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble, by ſending evil Angels among them. Yet poſſibly thoſe Angels which deſtroyed the Egyptians, are called evil Angels, not becauſe they were ſo in their nature; but becauſe they were Miniſters of evil to that hard-hearted people. Which way ſoever we take it, there is a truth in it applicable to the Scripture here in hand. And ſo ſome expound that of Solomon (Prov. 17. 11.) An evil man ſeeketh only rebellion, therefore a cruel Meſſenger ſhall be ſent againſt him. The Text may be rendred a cruel Angel, that is, an Angel with a Meſſage of wrath and deſtruction ſhall be ſent unto him. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 10. 10.) ſpeaking of thoſe dreadful Judgments, which God ſent upon his people the Jews in the Wilderneſs (ſuch as we are like to find in theſe Goſpel times, if we provoke him) for all thoſe things are ſaid to have hapened unto them for Types or examples (verſ. 11.) And there he gives us warning, neither murmur ye, as ſome of them alſo murmured, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer. That is, by the Peſtilence or Plague (as 'tis expreſſed, Numb. 14. 12, 37.) which the Apoſtle Paul calleth a deſtroyer, becauſe, doubtleſs it was executed by ſome inviſible deſtroyer, or Angel. The Devil, whom John in the Revelation (Chap. 9. 11.) calleth, the Angel of the bottomleſs pit, is there alſo ſet forth by this Title, whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon. The Devil is the Apollyon, the Abaddon, both which ſignifie a deſtroyer; yea the Devil (Heb. 2. 14.) is ſaid to have the power of death, as if he were ſet over that ſad work, and Lorded it over dying men; yet (let us know to our comfort) the Devil hath not the power of death as a Lord, or Judg, but only as an Executioner; thus the ſick mans life may be ſaid to draw nigh to the deſtroyer, that is to the deſtroying Angel, or to the meſſenger of death.

Præſtat generale eſt & ad omnia mortis ſigna & mortifera, quicquid illud ſit referre. Merc.

Thirdly, We may take the deſtroyers, not for perſons ſent to deſtroy, but for diſeaſes, and ſickneſſes; theſe are deſtroyers. And thus it may be ſaid of a ſick man, his life draweth nigh to the deſtroyers, that is, he is in the hand or under the power of ſuch diſeaſes, as probably will deſtroy him. That ſeems to be Mr. Broughtons underſtanding of the words, who renders, his Soul draweth nigh to the grave, and his life to killing maladies. Whatſoever is a death-bringer, whatever is deadly or mortal to man, may be comprehended under this expreſſion, The deſtroyers. And ſo, theſe words, His life draweth nigh to the deſtroyer, may ſignifie only thus much, he is deadly, or (as we commonly expreſs it) mortally ſick. There's no hope of him, he is paſt recovery, the Phyſitians have given him over. Heman (Pſ. 88. 3, 4, 5.) ſpeaks to this ſence and near in this language of himſelf. My Soul is full of troubles: My life draweth nigh unto the grave. I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no ſtrength. Free among the dead, like the ſlain that lie in the grave whom thou remembreſt no more. Heman was alive, yet with reſpect either to the anguiſh of his Soul, or the pains of his Body, he looked upon himſelf as one free among the dead, that is, as a dead man, his life drew near to the deſtroyers. And hence מות מתים Hæc vox ex eo nata videtur, quod ſimus morti ſubjecti; Ita & à Græcis & à Latinis mortalis uſurpatus. Martyn.

Fourthly, Others read the words not in an active ſence, (as we) Deſtroyers, but in a paſſive, His life draweth nigh to thoſe who are deſtroyed or dead. Dying men are ſo neer to, that they may be reckoned as dead men. That word of encouragement in the Prophet (Iſa. 41. 14.) Which we render, Fear not thou worm Jacob, and ye men (or as we put in the Margin Few men) of Iſrael, is rendred by ſome others, Fear not thou worm Jacob, and ye that are dead of Iſrael, that is, who are (in your own fearful apprehenſions or in the opinion of your proud and prepotent enemies) as dead men, or nigh unto death; or as we may expound it by that of Paul concerning himſelf and his Fellow-Apoſtles, with reſpect to the continual hazzard of their lives (1 Cor. 4. 9.) men, as it were, appointed unto death; yea, as the learned in the Hebrew language tell us, the word tranſlated in the Prophet men, with the change but of one point, and that only in the poſition of it, ſignifieth properly, dead men. We find the word applyed ſpecially to wicked worldly men (Pſ. 17. 14.) who are there called the hand of God (to afflict or take away the lives of Godly men) and are ſaid to have their portion in this life; the word I ſay, is applyed to them, as implying, that how much ſoever they rejoyce, either in the preſent enjoyments of this natural life, or in the hopes of a long natural life in this World, yet they always are within one point (or prick with a pen which is the ſhorteſt imaginable ſpace) of death. In which ſence alſo St. Paul ſpeaking of the different ſtate of the Body now in this life and after the Reſurrection from the dead, ſaith (1 Cor. 15. 54.) When this mortal ſhall have put on immortality; that is, when we, who now live in dying Bodies, or in Bodies bearing the marks or tokens of death, and looking like dead men, ſhall have put on the beautiful and glorious robes of immortality, Then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory. Whereas now death which is ready enough to get the victory over healthy and ſtrong men, is ſo ready to get the victory over the weak and ſick men, that their life may very well be ſaid (according to this fourth and laſt interpretation) To draw nigh to the deſtroyed, or thoſe that are already dead. Thus if inſtead of Death-bringers, or Deſtroyers we read deſtroyed, or thoſe that have been brought to death, the meaning of Elihu in this paſſage is plain and eaſie; importing the ſick man ſo ſick, that there is ſcarce a ſtep or but a point between him and thoſe who are actually dead.

But whether we take the word in this paſſive ſenſe, and tranſlate The Deſtroyed, or in the active, as we, and tranſlate Deſtroyers, thereby underſtanding either Angels in ſpecial, or Diſeaſes in general ſent by God to deſtroy or take away the life of the ſick man; which way ſoever of theſe, I ſay, we expound the word, it yields a clear ſenſe as to the ſcope of the Text, and as to the truth of it (upon the matter) the very ſame. His life draweth nigh to the Deſtroyers.

Hence Note, Firſt, Diſeaſes are Deſtroyers.

Either they themſelves deſtroy when they come, or the Deſtroyer comes with them. (Pſal. 90. 3.) Thou turneſt man to deſtruction, and ſayeſt, return ye children of men. 'Tis a Pſalm penned by Moſes lamenting the frailty of mankind. He lived to ſee all Iſrael, whom under his hand and conduct God brought out of Egypt, die, except that renowned two, Caleb and Joſhua; and therefore he having ſeen the great deſtruction of that people for their murmurings and unbelief, for their ten-fold provocations in the Wilderneſs, might ſay from his own experience more then moſt men to that point of mans mortality. And as God turned that people to deſtruction, and ſaid according to that irrevocable ſentence (Gen. 3. 19.) Return ye children of men to, your original and firſt material, duſt: So he ſaith the ſame to men every day, who as they are duſt, ſo we ſee them returning to their duſt. Every Diſeaſe, if ſo commiſſion'd by God, is death, and every pain (if he ſay it) the period of our lives.

Again, Elihu is here ſpeaking of a man whom the Lord is but trying, teaching, and inſtructing upon his ſick bed; yet he ſaith, His ſoul is drawing near to the grave, and his life to the deſtroyers.

Hence Obſerve, Thoſe afflictions which are but for inſtruction, may look like thoſe which are for deſtruction.

When the Lord hath a purpoſe only to try a man, he often acts towards him as if he would kill him. If any ſhall ſay, this is hard, I anſwer, A rough horſe muſt have a rough rider: Rough wood will not cleave without a beetle and wedges. We put God to uſe extremities, that he may bring us to a moderation. Our ſpirits are often ſo rough and head-ſtrong, that they muſt be kept in with bit and bridle; they are ſo tough and knotty that there's no working, no cleaving of them till the Lord ſets his wedges to us, and layes on with his beetle of heavieſt and hardeſt afflictions: In a word, we even compel him to bring us to deaths-door, that he may teach us to live.

Now ſeeing pains and ſickneſſes (of which Elihu ſpeaks as the way and means by which God ſpeaks to ſinful man) are accompanied with ſuch dreadful ſymptoms and effects, loathing and loſs of appetite, conſumption of the fleſh, and the breaking of the very bones the ſoul drawing near to the grave, and life to the deſtroyers; ſeeing, I ſay, there are ſuch ſad effects of ſickneſs, remember, Firſt, Health is worth the praying to God for.

Secondly, Health is worth the praiſing of God for; and that conſidered, either, firſt, as continued, or, ſecondly, as reſtored. 'Tis a mercy not to be pained, not to be ſick; 'tis a more ſenſible, though not a greater mercy to be freed from pain, and recovered out of ſickneſs. While we are kept free from pains and ſickneſſes, how thankful ſhould we be! And when we are freed from and brought out of the bonds of bodily pain and ſickneſſes, how ſoul-ſick, yea, how dead are we, if we are not thankful!

Thirdly, Seeing pains and ſickneſſes are ſuch ſad afflictions, be wiſe and careful for the preſervation of your health; do not throw away your health upon a luſt; do not expoſe your ſelves to laſting pains and pining ſickneſſes, for the ſatisfying of a wanton ſenſual appetite. The health and ſtrength of this frail body, are of more value then ten thouſand of thoſe vaniſhing delights. Yet how many are there, who run themſelves to the graves mouth, and into the thickeſt throngs of thoſe Deſtroyers, for the taking up of ſuch pitiful and periſhing delights? Who to pleaſe their fleſh for a few moments in ſurfeiting, drunkenneſs, and wantonneſs, bring many dayes, yea, months and years of pain and torment upon their fleſh? Yea, and not only ſhorten (I mean as to what they might probably have had by the courſe of nature) the number of their dayes, but ſuddenly end and extinguiſh them. It hath been ſaid of old, Gluttony kills more men then the ſword; that is, it caſts them into killing Diſeaſes. 'Tis a maxime in war, Starve your enemy if you can rather then fight him; cut his throat without a knife; deſtroy him without drawing a ſword; that is, with hunger. Some are indeed deſtroyed with hunger; and hunger, if not relieved, will deſtroy any man! Yet ſurfeiting deſtroyeth more then hunger, and 'tis a more quick and ſpeedy deſtroyer. We have known many who have cut their own throats, by cutting too much and too faſt for their bellies: Pampering the body deſtroyeth more bodies then ſtarving. Many while they draw nigh to their tables, their ſouls (as Elihu here ſaith) are drawing neer to the grave, and their life to the deſtroyers. Therefore, remember and conſider, O ye that are men given to appetite (as Solomon calleth ſuch, Prov. 23. 2.) or rather as the Hebrew elegancy there hath it, Ye that are Maſters of appetite, ſtudying your bellies, till indeed ye are maſtered by appetite, to you, I ſay, remember and conſider, Health is more then meat, and life then dainty fare. All the content that intemperance can give you, cannot recompence you for the pains that ſickneſs will give you; you may have pleaſure for an hour or two, and ſickneſs for a moneth or two, for a year or two. And if all the pleaſure we take in ſatisfying that, which though it may be glutted, yet will not be ſatisfied, a luſt, cannot recompence the pains that are found in a ſick bed for a few dayes, months, or years, how will it recompence any for thoſe everlaſting pains that are found in Hell, where the damned ſhall be alwayes converſing with death and deſtruction, and yet never die nor be deſtroyed.

Fourthly, Foraſmuch as ſickneſs is often accompanied with ſuch grievous dolours and racking tortures, let the ſick pray much that they may be armed with patience; who knows what tryals and extremities ſickneſs may bring him to? Though the beginnings and firſt appearances of it are but ſmall, like the Cloud which firſt appeared to the Servant of Eliah, only of a hands breadth, yea, though it begin but with the little finger of the hand, yet as that little Cloud did the whole face of the Heaven, ſo this little diſtemper may over-ſpread the whole body, and put you to the exerciſe of all your patience; it may hang and increaſe upon you, till it hath broken your bones, and conſumed your fleſh, and brought you to the graves mouth; therefore pray for patience.

Laſtly, Let not the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, nor the healthy man in his health; ſickneſs may come ſhortly, and then how ſtrong ſoever any man is, down he muſt, and lie by it There's no wreſtling away ſickneſs any way (if God ſend it and bid it come) but by wreſtling with God (as Jacob did, Gen. 32.) in prayer. If you think to wreſtle away bodily ſickneſs by bodily ſtrength and ſtriving with it, you will be thrown and get the fall. Who can ſtand before a Feaver, or a Conſumption, when they arreſt us in the Name of the Great King, and carry us Priſoners to our beds? Therefore let no man glory in his ſtrength, if any man do; it ſhews at preſent his moral weakneſs; and his natural weakneſs may quickly teach him another leſſon, and ſpoil his glorying.

VERS. 23, 24, 25, 26.

If there be a Meſſenger with him, an Interpreter, one among a thouſand, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs:

Then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith; Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ranſom.

His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs: He ſhall return to the dayes of his youth.
He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render to man his righteouſneſs.

THeſe words hold forth the third way by which God ſpeaks or reveals himſelf to man, and recovers him out of his ſin. As if Elihu had ſaid, When God hath brought a man to his ſick bed, and he yet continueth in his blindneſs, not perceiving either his own error, or the purpoſe and intention of God to him; if then beſides all this God ſo order the matter, that in his merciful providence he provideth for his further inſtruction, and ſends a ſpecial Meſſenger (as he doth me to thee) an Interpreter (which is a ſingular favour of God) to explain and expound the meaning of his dealings with him, and what his own condition is, to bring him to a true ſight and ſenſe of his ſin, and to ſet him upright in the ſight of God, by the actings of faith and repentance; this ſoon altereth the caſe, and hereupon God is preſently appeaſed towards him. Then he is gracious, and then many bleſſed fruits and effects of his grace do follow, and are heaped on him. Here, therefore, we have a very illuſtrious Inſtance of Gods loving kindneſs to poor ſinful man, recovering and fetching him back (when he is as it were half dead) from the gates of death, reſtoring him both as to ſoul and body, putting him into a perfect (ſo far as on this ſide Heaven it may be called perfect) ſtate, and giving him indeed what he can reaſonably deſire of him. In the Context of theſe four verſes, conſider, Firſt, The inſtrument or means by which God brings this about, and that is, by ſending a Meſſenger, or a choice Interpreter to the ſick mans bed, to counſel and adviſe him. Ver. 23. If there be a Meſſenger with him, &c.

Secondly, We have here the motive, or firſt moving cauſe of this mercy; that is, the grace or free favour of God, Then he will be gracious unto him; and ſaith, Deliver him from going down to the pit; that is, being gracious he will give forth this word for his deliverance. Then he is gracious to him, &c, (ver. 24.)

Thirdly, We have here the meritorious cauſe of this merciful deliverance; and that is a ranſom; I have found a ranſom, at the latter end of the twenty-fourth verſe.

Fourthly, We have the ſpecial benefits of this deliverance, which are twofold.

Firſt, Reſpecting his body; He is delivered from the pit of death (ver. 24.) And not only ſo, but he hath a life as new as when he began to live; His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs; the dayes of youth ſhall return to him again (ver. 25.)

Secondly, We have the benefit reſpecting his ſoul (ver. 26.) He ſhall pray, and God ſhall be favourable to him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render to man his righteouſneſs.

Thus you have the parts and purpoſe of theſe words; I ſhall now proceed to the particulars.

If there be a Meſſenger with him.

Theſe words are Hypothetical, or by way of ſuppoſition; If there be; noting, that it is not alwayes ſo, every one hath not this mercy, to have a Meſſenger ſent him; it's a ſpecial priviledge granted by God to ſome; If there be

A Meſſenger.] What or who is this Meſſenger? The word in the Hebrew hath a threefold ſignification; all which are inſiſted upon by Interpreters upon this place.

Hypothetica locutio ſignificat libertatem Dei in conferendo hoc beneficio. Indicatio contingit quibus Deus vult. Coc.

Firſt, It ſignifieth an Angel; Now Angels properly taken are ſpiritual or incorporeal ſubſtances, whoſe both office and high dignity it is to attend about the Throne of God, and to be ſent forth upon his ſpecial ſervice (Pſal. 103.20.) Bleſs the Lord ye his Angels that excel in ſtrength, that do his Commandments, and hearken to the voice of his Word. God hath thouſand thouſands of theſe Servants miniſtring to him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtanding before him (Dan. 7. 10.)

Some ſtay upon this expoſition, affirming that here we are to underſtand an Angel by nature; and hereupon ground the miniſtring of Angels to thoſe who are either ſick in body, or troubled in mind. Yea, the Popiſh Writers would hence prove the interceſſion of Angels for man, and mans invocation of Angels; but though the expoſition be granted, yet it yields no ground for this Inference. For what though God ſhould ſend an Angel to inſtruct and comfort a ſick man, will it therefore follow that the ſick man ſhould pray to him, and ſo give him the honour which is due to God?

Secondly, The word is applied in particular to Jeſus Chriſt the uncreated Angel, or the creating Angel, the Lord of Angels, who by way of eminency is called, The Angel of his preſence, (Iſa. 63. 9.) and the (Angel or) Meſſenger of the Covenant, (Mal. 3. 1.) He alſo was that Angel of whom the Lord ſpake to the Children of Iſrael (Exod. 23. 20.) ſaying, Behold I ſend an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions (if you perſiſt in them) for my Name is in him; that is, he is of the ſame nature with my ſelf, and with that nature he hath my name, Jehovah. Thus ſome carry it here, as if Elihu ſpecially intended the miniſtration of Jeſus Chriſt, the Angel of the Covenant, to the ſick ſinner, for his reſtoring both as to the health of ſoul and body. 'Tis true, Jeſus Chriſt is the great Angel, or Meſſenger, and he primarily and chiefly doth all the buſineſs for poor ſinners; he is the Meſſenger ſent from God, and he is the Interpreter of the mind of God, he came from the boſom of the Father, and reveals the Myſteries of Heaven to us by his holy Spirit. He indeed is the one of a thouſand, the chiefeſt of ten thouſand, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs. Yet, I conceive, that in this place, not the Lord of Angels alone, but ſome Angel of the Lord is alſo intended. And therefore,

Vides quam clarè hoc loco Elihu de Chriſto concionetur; per quem omnis conſcientia, quantumcunque per legem occiſa vivificatur, per quē omnis crux vitæ & liberationis initium eſt. Erent.

Thirdly, The word Angel is appliable to every Meſſenger: The Scripture gives it firſt to thoſe that are ſent by men about any errand or buſineſs (1 Sam. 23. 27.) But there came a Meſſenger unto Saul, ſaying, Haſt thee and come; for the Philiſtims have invaded the Land. We read of an evil Meſſenger, (Prov. 13. 17.) who is either ſuch a one as brings an evil meſſage, or is himſelf evil (Iſa. 14. 32.) What ſhall one then anſwer to the Meſſengers of the Nation, the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people ſhall truſt in it. And as it notes a Meſſenger firſt by man, ſo a Meſſenger ſent by God. The ancient Prophets were in this ſenſe the Angels of God, his Meſſengers, and ſo are the Miniſters of the Goſpel at this day. The Epiſtles to the ſeven Churches are all directed to the Angels of the Churches; that is, to the ſeveral Paſtors or Miniſters of the Churches reſpectively. And thus we may conclude, that by the Meſſenger in this Text we are to underſtand any faithful Miniſter of Chriſt, ſent to convince, convert, or comfort a ſick troubled ſoul. And, as was intimated before, we may very well gather up both theſe latter interpretations into one, that which applieth it to Chriſt, and that which applieth it to the Miniſters of Chriſt. For ſo we have here both the Author and the Inſtrument of this comfort to the ſick man. Jeſus Chriſt is the chief Meſſenger and Comforter of poor ſinners; and the Miniſters of the Goſpel are Inſtruments in his hand, ſent out by him for the perfecting of that work. The word is applied to both, (Mal. 3. 1.) Behold, I will ſend my Meſſenger (or, my Angel) and he ſhall prepare the way before me. John the Baptiſt was Chriſts Meſſenger, as Chriſt himſelf (an infallible Interpreter) aſſureth us (Mat. 11. 10.) And preſently it follows, The Lord whom ye ſeek ſhall ſuddenly come to his Temple, even the Meſſenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he ſhall come, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. In the firſt part of the verſe John is called the Lords Meſſenger, and in the latter part Chriſt is called the Lords Meſſenger. Both were Meſſengers, yet with a mighty difference: and therefore John, the Meſſenger of Chriſt, ſaith of Chriſt the Meſſenger (Matth. 3. 11.) He that cometh after me is mightier then I, whoſe ſhooes I am not worthy to bear. And again (John 1. 26.) He it is that coming after me is preferred before me, whoſe ſhooes latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe. If there be a Meſſenger.

Nuncius eſt Propheta aliquis ſeu doctor à Deo miſſus. Piſc.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Miniſters of Chriſt are the Meſſengers of Chriſt.

Chriſt is the Fathers Meſſenger, and they are Meſſengers ſent out by Chriſt. As my Father hath ſent me, ſo ſend

I you,ſaid Chriſt to his Apoſtles (John 20. 21.) And though that Title of Apoſtle, which ſignifieth One ſent, or a Meſſenger, be moſt properly attributed to thoſe, who were immediately called and inſpired by Chriſt, yet in an allayed ſenſe it may be applied, commodiouſly enough, to any true Miniſter of the Goſpel, for he alſo is ſent; he hath both his miſſion and commiſſion mediately from Chriſt. Yea, the word Apoſtle is applyed in common to all or any that are ſent upon buſineſs (John 13. 16.) He that is ſent (let him be who he will or upon what occaſion ſoever he is ſent) is not greater then he that ſends him.

Apoſtolus hic non ſpecialis muneris, ſed generale nomen eſt, miſſum cum mandatis ſignificans. Grot.

So then, the Miniſters of the Goſpel are called the Meſſengers of Chriſt: Firſt, Becauſe they are ſent by Chriſt, and have a Commiſſion from him. Secondly, They are his Meſſengers becauſe they are inſtructed by Chriſt, and carry forth his mind; they may not ſpeak their own words, nor their own ſenſe,but the word which they bring, is or ought to be what they have received, or what Chriſt hath put into their mouths, that's their duty. And the Meſſengers of Chriſt are to ſpeak his mind, Firſt,Plainly(1*Cor*.2.4.)In the demonſtration of theSpirit.

Secondly, Boldly, not flattering the perſons,nor fearing the faces of men. Thirdly, They ſhould ſpeak authoritatively, though they beſeech, and beg, and pray, yet they are to do all as having a warrant for what they do, and as being cloathed with power from on high.If any man ſpeak(ſaith the Apoſtle,1 Pet.4.11.) let him ſpeak as the Oracles of God. As he is to ſpeak the Oracles of God, ſo as the Oracles of God. Some ſpeak, who do not ſpeak the Oracles of God, but their own opinions. Others ſpeak the Oracles of God materially; that is,they deliver divine truths, yet they do not ſpeak them as the Oracles of God, with that authority which becomes the Goſpel; we ſay of ſome, They marr their tale in the telling: Though they report, or tell the mind of him that ſent them,yet they ſpoil it in reporting it: The Miniſters of the Goſpel ſpoil their Meſſage,unleſs they report it plainly, boldly, and with authority.

Thirdly, If Miniſters be the Meſſengers of Chriſt, ſurely then, they are to be heard, and their Meſſage is to be received; if God ſends a Meſſenger to us, ſhall we not open the door to him? If a friend ſend a Meſſenger to us, he takes it very ill (and well he may) if we do not. 'Tis below civility, 'tis an high affront to a man not to receive his Meſſage, what is it then to the moſt high God! How dreadful is that woe which Chriſt pronounceth againſt ſuch as refuſe either his Meſſengers,or their Meſſage (Matth. 10.14,15.) Whoſoever ſhall not receive you,nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that houſe or City, ſhake off the duſt of your feet: Implying,that God would ſo ſhake them off,or eſteem them no more then the vileſt duſt. Yea (as another Goſpel hath it, Mark 6. 11.) implying, that as they had not received the teſtimony which his Meſſengers bare of him, ſo their duſt ſhould be kept as a teſtimony againſt them. And leſt the miſchief threatned them in this enigmatical or covert ſpeech ſhould not be underſtood, Chriſt himſelf expounds it in the next words, Verily, I ſay unto you, it ſhall be more tolerable for the Land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of Judgment, then for that City.

Further, 'Tis not enough barely to receive Chriſts Meſſengers, they muſt be received as the Meſſengers of Chriſt. Such a reception the Apoſtle found among the Galatians (Chap. 4. 14.) And my temptation (or daily affliction) which was in my fleſh, ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected, but received me as an Angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus. And what is ſaid of the Meſſenger, is to be underſtood alſo of his Meſſage, both are to be received as from Chriſt. How is that, you will ſay? Take it in theſe four words, Firſt, When 'tis received gladly (Acts 2.4.) It ſhould be the joy of our hearts (the Pſalmiſt calls it the joyful ſound, Pſal. 89.15.) to hear a word from Chriſt. Secondly, When it is received reverently, and reſpectfully, as giving honour to the Meſſage and the Meſſenger for Chriſts ſake. Thirdly, When 'tis received obedientially, as ſubmitting to the Word; elſe your reſpectful and joyful receiving the meſſage of Chriſt is but a Complement or piece of Courtſhip. Fourthly, When their whole meſſage is thus received, as Cornelius ſaid to Peter (Acts 10. 33.) We are all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. We muſt receive not only thoſe things that ſute us well, but thoſe things that are moſt croſs to our corrupt natures and interests whether of worldly profit or pleaſure; this is to receive the Meſſengers and Meſſages of Jeſus Chriſt, as his If there be a Meſſenger,

An Interpreter] That's a ſecond ſtile, or title given to the man ſent to the ſick ſinner: The Hebrew word here rendred an Interpreter, cometh from a root ſignifying ſweetneſs, or to ſweeten. Some conceive the Latine word (Mel) for Honey hath its original from it,becauſe the Meſſage, or Interpretation that comes from God ſhould be ſweet,as Honey to us: David profeſſeth,The Word of God is ſweeter then Honey, and the Honey-comb (Pſal. 19. 10.) As if he had ſaid, 'Tis ſweeter to the ſoul then that which is ſweeteſt to ſenſe. Now,the Meſſenger ſent from God,is called an Interpreter,becauſe he is ſent to interpret and declare the mind of God to his people. Mr. Broughton renders, A Teacher. The word Interpreter may be taken three wayes.

Firſt, For any one that interpreteth Tongues or Languages. Thus 'tis ſaid(Gen.42.23.) Joſeph ſpake to his Brethren by an Interpreter; they ('tis like) did not underſtand the Egyptian language, and he either for ſtate, or to conceal himſelf the better, would not ſeem to underſtand theirs.

Secondly, There is an Interpreter of Myſteries as well as of Languages. Many things ſpoken in our own Language may need an Interpreter more then the words of a ſtrange Language. We read (Prov. 1. 6.) of a Parable, and the interpretation of it. Parables are wiſe, but hard and dark ſayings,they need an Interpreter. The Goſpel is a myſtery, and he that can expound and declare the myſteries of the Goſpel is an Interpreter indeed.

Thirdly, The word Interpreter is taken in a larger ſenſe, for any perſon that interpoſeth between two, or that indeavours the ſetling of any matter in difference,either between God and man, or between man and man; (Iſai. 43. 27.) Thy Teachers (we put in the Margin Interpreters) have tranſgreſſed againſt me. As if he had ſaid, they who as Mediators ſhould have prayed for thee to me, and have declared my will to thee, are themſelves depraved.

מליץ Certè eſt advocatus quem Chaldæi vocant פרקליטא paracletum, ſignificat eadem vox oratorem, Rhetorem. Druſ.

Further, We may diſtinguiſh of a threefold Interpreter. Firſt, A grammatical Interpreter, whoſe buſineſs is to give the ſenſe of words. Secondly, A logical Interpreter, who gathers up the meaning, ſcope and mind of any ſentence, or the purpoſe of man in what he ſpeaketh. Thirdly, There is the divine or ſpiritual Interpreter, who labours to bring the truths of God and the heart of man together. The Apoſtle having treated about propheſying,concludes(1 Cor. 14. 25.) And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt, and ſo falling down on his face he will worſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth; as if the man that believed not,or one unlearned (for of ſuch he ſpeaks, ver. 24.) had ſaid, ſurely theſe men underſtand what is in my heart, for they have brought the truth of God, and my heart together, ſo that I muſt confeſs God is in them; that is, there is a divine wiſdom or interpretation in them. When Elihu ſaith, If there be an Interpreter, we are to underſtand him in this laſt ſenſe; not of one that can interpret words,like a Grammarian, or give the ſcope and ſenſe of words like a Logician,but of one that hath a divine skill to bring the truths of God home to the heart of man; that is, to convince and inform an ignorant conſcience, and to comfort, relieve, and ſupport a troubled conſcience. If there be an Interpreter.

Hence Note, The Miniſters of Chriſt are the Interpreters of the mind and good will of God toward poor ſinners.

They interpret the mind of God as to peace and reconciliation,as to grace and ſalvation, as well as to duty and holineſs of converſation. 'Tis the niceſt and hardeſt thing in the world to interpret the mind of God aright to a ſinner, to bring his heart to a cloſing with the great truths and promiſes of the Goſpel; he that can do this skilfully is worthy the name of an Interpreter. The Apoſtle ſaith of him who is but a Babe in Chriſt and uſeth milk (that is, lives upon the lower and more eaſie principles of faith) he is unskilful in the word of righteouſneſs (Heb. 5. 13.) that is, he knows not how to make out and mannage for his own comfort the Doctrine of free Grace through the alone righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore, as firſt, God himſelf is the Author and Fountain of this Grace: As ſecondly, Jeſus Chriſt is the Purchaſer or Procurer of the fruits of this Grace to ſinners: As thirdly, The effectual Worker of our hearts to receive this Grace, as alſo the Witneſs-bearer and Sealer of it to our ſouls is the holy Spirit: As fourthly, The Word of the Goſpel is the Charter and Covenant of this Grace: So fifthly, The Miniſters of Chriſt are the Interpreters of this Grace; and they are, or ought to be skilful in this Word of Righteouſneſs. Their skill and duty is firſt to explain what the Covenant is, and rightly to lay down how the ſinners reconciliation to God is wrought. Secondly, To make a ſutable and ſeaſonable application of it, or to bring it home to the ſouls and conſciences of poor ſinners, as they find their ſtate to be. And as the Miniſters of Chriſt are Gods Interpreters to his people; ſo they are the peoples Interpreters unto God. They are the former two wayes: Firſt, By opening the mind of God to his people: Secondly, By urging and preſſing them to receive it both for their direction and conſolation. They are the latter four wayes: Firſt, By laying open and ſpreading the peoples wants and weakneſſes before God. Secondly, By confeſſing their ſins and tranſgreſſions to God. Thirdly, By intreating the Lord for them, or by praying for mercy, pardon, and forgiveneſs in their behalf, for ſins committed. Fourthly, By giving thanks in their name for mercies received. Thus they are firſt, Gods mouth to the people in preaching and declaring the Goſpel: Secondly, The peoples mouth to God in prayer and thankſgiving. And in both perform the work and office of an Interpreter.

And if the Miniſters of the Goſpel are Interpreters; then,

Firſt, Every Miniſter muſt be acquainted with the mind of God. He muſt have skill in the myſtery of the Goſpel. How ſhall he be able to interpret the mind of God to ſinners, who is not acquainted with the mind of God? We have the mind of Chriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle of himſelf and his fellow-labourers in the Goſpel, 1 Cor. 2. 16.) and when he ſaith, we have the mind of Chriſt, his meaning is not only this, that they had the mind of Chriſt written in a book, but they had a clear underſtanding of it, and ſo were fitted to interpret it to others.

Secondly, As he muſt have the knowledge of the Myſtery, ſo he muſt have the tongue of the Learned (Iſa. 50. 4.) That he may be able to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary; that is, to the wounded, and troubled in conſcience; this is the Interpreter intended by Elihu. He is one that hath learned, and is taught of God. Humane learning, the knowledge of Arts and Sciences, is good, and hath its uſe; but divine learning, or learning in divine things, that is to be divinely learned ('tis poſſible for one to have learning in divine things, and not to be divinely learned) is abſolutely neceſſary to make him an interpreter. It is not enough to know divine things, but he muſt know them divinely, or by the unction and teachings of the Spirit. The Apoſtle John (Rev. 10. 8.) is commanded to eat the book; this eating of the book, ſignifieth the ſpiritual knowledge of divine truths; in this ſenſe, we know no more then we eat, then we (as it were) turn into our own ſubſtance, that which is eaten becomes one with us; the myſtery of the Goſpel muſt be eaten by the Interpreter of Goſpel myſteries. A man cannot interpret the mind of God till he knows it; and he cannot know the mind of God, unleſs God himſelf reveals it; ſo the Apoſtle argueth (1 Cor. 2. from 12. to 16.) As no man knoweth the mind of a man, but the ſpirit of a man that is in him; ſo the things of the Spirit of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God, and he to whom the Spirit of God doth reveal them. And therefore though a man may have an ability to interpret the Word of God, as 'tis an excellent Book, a Book full of admirable knowledge, he may (I ſay) have an ability to interpret it ſoundly by humane learning, yet no man can do it ſavingly and convertingly, but by the help of the Spirit. (Pſal. 25. 14.) The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his Covenant; he will ſhew it effectually, he will make them know it. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 119. 18.) Lord open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wonderous things out of thy Law. Natural parts and humane Learning, Arts and Languages may give us an underſtanding of the tenour and literal meaning of the Law of God; but none of theſe can open our eyes to behold the wonders of the Law, much leſs the wonders and myſteries of the Goſpel. The opening of our eyes to behold theſe ſpiritual wonders is the Lords work, and it ſhould be marvellous in our eyes. For this opening of the eye (and nothing without this) will make any man the moſt ignorant man among a thouſand, An Interpreter One among a thouſand.] Theſe words contain either a third higher Title, or the higheſt commendation of the former two. A Meſſenger, an Interpreter, even ſuch a one as is one among a thouſand; one is no number, and a thouſand is put for the greateſt number; then one among a thouſand, or one of a thouſand, implyeth that the one here ſpoken of is a very rare one; only he that is ſeldom ſeen, or found, is one among a thouſand; Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 7. 24.) One man among a thouſand have I found, but a woman among all thoſe have I not found. There were very few wiſe or good men among many when he found but one among a thouſand. He might find men in great number, but the number of thoſe that deſerved to be called men was very ſmall, ſo ſmall, that he ſaith he found but one among a thouſand. So that here when Elihu calls the Interpreter One among a thouſand, he teacheth us, that ſuch a Meſſenger, ſuch an Interpreter is rarely to be had, or being had is a very rare and excellent one. 'Tis a proverbial ſpeech, with an Hyperbole, to ſay of any man, he is one among a thouſand; for though we are not to take it arithmetically or ſtrictly, yet one being no number, muſt needs ſignifie very few, or the ſmalleſt number; and a thouſand being the greateſt whole number muſt needs ſignifie many, very many, or a great number. And therefore to ſay of this Interpreter, He is one among a thouſand, muſt needs import, that even among a thouſand men we can hardly find one who hath a faculty or a competency for this office, or is fit to be honoured and adorned with this Title, An Interpreter.

Hi nuncii rari ſunt ita ut ex mille hominibus, vix unus reperiatur, qui munere illo rectè fungi poſſit. Piſc.

Hence Note, True and faithful Interpreters of the mind of God are very rare.

He is a rare and choice man that is pickt out of a thouſand men. The faithful Meſſengers and Interpreters of the mind of Chriſt, are rare under a twofold notion. Firſt, As being precious and of great worth and uſe. Such are the light of the world, and the ſalt of the earth: The minds of all men would be dark, and their manners corrupt, if God did not ſend out theſe Interpreters to inlighten and to ſeaſon them. Secondly, They are rare as not being every where to be had or met with; what is hardly had is highly prized. It is ſaid (1 Sam. 3. 1.) The Word of God was precious in thoſe dayes. Why ſo? The Reaſon is added, There was no open viſion; there were not ſuch frequent maninifeſtations of the mind of God as had been formerly; there were few Prophets, few Interpreters to be found in thoſe dayes. The true and faithful Meſſengers or Interpreters of the mind of God are rare at all times, in what numbers ſoever they appear, though they come like an Army by thouſands, though (as is ſaid, Pſal. 68. 11.) God giving the word great be the company (we put in the Margin Army) of thoſe that publiſh it, or (as the old tranſlation hath it) Great be the Company of the Preachers. They are rare alſo, becauſe not to be had at ſometimes and in many places. Look over the times or ages of the world, and you will find ſome of them were dark times, dayes of ignorance, there were few Interpreters; look at any time, or at this time over many parts and places of the world, and you ſhall find ſuch Interpreters are not to be found in the greateſt part, in the moſt places of it. Not one to be had in ſome whole Countries and huge tracts of the Earth. Go to all the Heathen and Mahometan Nations, and you ſhall not find one of theſe Meſſengers or Interpreters; go to Greece, which anciently engroſſed all knowledge, and was famous for all ſorts of learning, yet an Interpreter is ſcarcely to be found there in theſe dayes: Go to the Popiſh Nations, though they bear the Name of Chriſt, and abound with learned men, men learned in the knowledge not only of common Arts and Sciences, but in Divinity and the Scriptures; yet in the ſenſe here ſpoken of they have not many Interpreters, the moſt being ſuch as pervert and wreſt the Scriptures, and lead the people into error, rather the Meſſengers of Antichriſt, then of Chriſt; Satans Emiſſaries, then Gods Interpreters. So then, if we conſider, that ſeveral parts and Countries of the World are quite without, they have none, and others are filled with falſe Teachers and Interpreters of the Word of God, which are worſe then none, we muſt conclude an Interpreter is one of a thouſand.

Again, If we turn our eyes to thoſe parts of the world, where there are many ſound, orthodox, faithful Meſſengers and Interpreters of the Word of God (with which bleſſing this Nation, above many, if I ſay not above all) hath been crowned for a hundred years together; England as Jeruſalem of old (Iſa. 21. 1.) may well be called a valley of viſion, a ſeminary of Seers, becauſe of that abundance and variety of viſions and divine revelations which God hath ſtored us with in theſe latter ages: yet (I ſay) even here, as in all other the beſt reformed Proteſtant Churches and Chriſtian Nations, an Interpreter may be called one of a thouſand; and that in a twofold reference.

Firſt, If we conſider, the whole body of any reformed Nation, Miniſters are but few compared to all the people, they are hardly ſo much as one of a thouſand, throughout that whole Nation; there are but few who give themſelves up to the work of the Miniſtry. Few that dedicate themſelves to Chriſts ſervice in publiſhing the Goſpel, for the ſaving of ſouls; there is (I ſay) but one of a thouſand that is dedicated to that work.

For Firſt, Moſt are unwilling to meddle with that calling, becauſe of the laboriousneſs of it; Interpreters are they who labour in the Word and Doctrine, and not only ſo, but they muſt give a ſtrict account to Chriſt of their labours. Some good men have declined the miniſtry, being terrified both with the weight of the work, and the ſtrictneſs of the account, and doubtleſs (were we duly ſenſible) it might make the ableſt Miniſters tremble every hour of the day, to think what a burden of care and account lyeth upon them, who are ſet to watch over ſouls.

Secondly, Others will not enter into this calling, becauſe as the labour is great, and the account ſtrict, ſo the reward, as from man, is ſmall, it doth not lead to riches and greatneſs in the World, comparatively with other callings; though there be a comfortable competence allowed to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, yet there is not much of the world to be expected by them; yea, they are charged not to look for much, or not to do their work for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind (1 Pet. 5. 2.)

Thirdly, As the reward is ſmall, ſo the oppoſition is great; Miniſters are often perſecuted and reproacht, and the more faithful and diligent they are, the more they are oppoſed and reproached. To preach the Goſpel fully as it ſhould be preacht, is to provoke thouſands, and bring the World about our ears. No marvel then if the Meſſengers and Interpreters of it be not many, if they be but as one among a thouſand. Thus you ſee what hinders the generality of men from medling with that work. 'Tis but one among a thouſand that will engage in a work upon theſe hard terms, or that pre-apprehending them, hath faith and ſelf-denial enough to ſwallow and overcome them.

Again, Conſider thoſe that outwardly bear the name and title of the Miniſters of Chriſt, and you will find that among them, they who are true and faithful to their truſt, are upon the matter but one among a thouſand. As there are but few Miniſters among many men; ſo there are but few Miniſters among many that are true and right Interpreters. Do but take out or ſever theſe five ſorts from among them who pretend to be Miniſters, and then it will ſoon appear, that the Interpreters in truth are but few among many of thoſe that are ſo in title.

Firſt, Take away all thoſe, who thruſt themſelves boldly, or are admitted careleſly, or by miſtake, into the Miniſtry, who yet are ignorant, blind, ungifted, and ſo unable for the work.

Secondly, Take away thoſe, who though they have gifts and abilities, yet are lazy and ſlothful, ſuch as will not take pains nor work in the work.

Thirdly, Take away thoſe, who have gifts, and are induſtrious, yet are unſound (at leaſt in many points) and erroneous in their judgments, and ſo miſ-lead and miſ-guide thoſe, whoſe guides and leaders they are.

Fourthly, Take away thoſe, who though they are not unſound and erroneous, yet are prophane and ſcandalous, pulling down that truth with one hand which they have ſet up with another, or building again thoſe ſins by their practice, which they have deſtroyed by preaching, and ſo make themſelves (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in a like caſe, Gal. 2. 18.) tranſgreſſours; for as God juſtly calls ſuch tranſgreſſours, becauſe they have ſinned againſt his Word, ſo they make themſelves tranſgreſſours, becauſe they ſin againſt their own; even againſt the Doctrine by which they have condemned thoſe ſins, which themſelves live in.

Fifthly, Take away thoſe, who though they are neither of theſe, neither ignorant, nor idle, nor unſound, nor ſcandalous, yet are but meer formal Preachers, ſuch as only ſpeak words, deliver the out ſide and skin of the Goſpel, but have no acquaintance with the marrow and power of it. Take away theſe five ſorts from among Miniſters, and ſurely this expreſſion of Elihu will be but too much verified, The Interpreter is but one among a thouſand. Abſtract all that are ignorant, idle, unſound, ſcandalous, formal diſpenſers of the Word, from thoſe who are commonly called Miniſters, and then, they who remain will be very few, ſo few, that every one of them may be reckoned, one among a thouſand. And we ſhall be forced to ſay, that Elihu hath not ſaid without cauſe, whether we reſpect their excellency or their ſcarcity, that any faithful Meſſenger or Interpreter is one among a thouſand.

This is not ſpoken by Elihu here, not ought it to be taken up by any of the moſt faithful Miniſters of Chriſt, to draw honour and reſpect upon themſelves, or that their perſons may be had in admiration who are faithful; this were a pitiful deſign of holding out ſuch a truth; but it ſerves for this end, that the people of God may ſee they have a bleſſing where any are faithful; and may learn how they ought to prize thoſe faithful Meſſengers, whom the Lord ſends among them, yea, how readily they ſhould receive the Grace of God which is tendred in their miniſtry. Theſe are not only each of them, one Meſſenger, or Interpreter, but each one of them is one of a thouſand. A ſoul convincing, converting, quickning, comforting Miniſter of the Goſpel is worth thouſands, and one among a thouſand. The Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 52. 7.) How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings, &c. By their feet he meaneth their coming, feet being the inſtruments of their coming to bring this glad tidings; yet when he ſaith, Their feet are beautiful, it may have a greater emphaſis, for (the feet being the loweſt part of the ſtructure of mans body) it may intend thus much, that even that which is loweſt and meaneſt in a Meſſenger of the Goſpel, his feet wearied and wet, yea foul and dirty with travel, have a beauty upon them, how much more his face and countenance? For if the very feet of ſuch News-bringers, of ſuch Meſſengers, and Interpreters, ſhould be acceptable and lovely (ſo beauty is) to all men, how much more ſhould their perſons, and moſt of all their meſſage and tidings be? And doubtleſs, if men did but underſtand it, they would acknowledge; that God hath committed ſuch a treaſury to them, as is better, and more beautiful, then all the gold and precious things of this world, and would cry out, O what a mercy is it to have ſuch a News-bringer? And what greedy News-mongers would they be? The one among a thouſand would be more deſirable then many thouſands of Gold and Silver.

Elihu having deſcribed the perſon, whom the Lord often makes inſtrumental for the reſtoring and comforting of the ſick ſinner, calling him, A Meſſenger, an Interpreter, one of a thouſand (which latter may be applicable to both the former) proceeds to ſhew the buſineſs of this Meſſenger, or Interpreter, who is one of a thouſand, more expreſly, or to ſet out what his work is, ſurely excellent and glorious work, even this,

To ſhew unto man his uprightneſs.

We are not to underſtand this ſhewing for a bare report of the thing; in which ſenſe the Prophet complain'd, Lord, who hath believed our report! (Iſai. 53. 1.) That is, we have ſhewed good things to the world, but who hath believed us? The ſhewing ſpoken of by Elihu, is not a bare declaration of the matter to the ear, but an effectual and powerful impreſſion of it upon the heart. Such a ſhewing as is ſpoken of at the ſixteenth verſe of this Chapter, Then he openeth the ears of men: The Lord ſpeaks ſo by his Meſſengers and Interpreters, that he not only makes the ear hear, but the heart too. The heart hears when we have a ſenſe, and are under the power of what is heard. As before we had a ſpiritual Interpreter, ſo here we have a ſpiritual ſhewing of his Interpretation. Here's a heavenly Meſſenger, and a heavenly meſſage to the earthly man; To tell the earthly his rightfulneſs, ſaith Mr. Broughton.

Now, becauſe of the Pronoun [His] his uprightneſs; It may be demanded whoſe uprightneſs he means? Or, what this uprightneſs is which the Interpreter ſheweth?

Firſt, Some expound it of Gods uprightneſs, and then the ſenſe runs thus; God ſendeth an Interpreter to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs, that is, his own right and juſt dealing with man; As if Elihu had ſaid, Gods Meſſenger ſhall convince this troubled man that God doth not wrong him, how much ſoever he doth afflict him, or that God is upright and faithful in his dealing with him. This David acknowledged (Pſal. 119. 75.) In faithfulneſs thou haſt afflicted me; that's a good ſenſe of the words, and very ſutable to the purpoſe of Elihu, who was about to convince Job that his complainings were very ſinful and uncomely, ſeeing God neither had nor would, nor, indeed, could do him any wrong. God is faithful, juſt, and right, yea, God is good and merciful to man, when he corrects him ſore. Mr Broughton gives this interpretation of his own tranſlation; To tell the earthly his rightfulneſs, that is, God his mercy. The uprightneſs of God is that by which he doth righteous things. This uprightneſs of God conſiſts not only in his holineſs, in his love of that which is good, and in his hatred of evil, but alſo in his preſervation of man according to his word of promiſe. 'Tis the righteouſneſs of God, that through the death and interceſſion of his Son, he ſhould ſave and heal the believing and repenting ſick ſinner.

Æquitatem illius. i. e. Dei, qua omnia & nominatim ipſos laborantes regit & gubernat. Jun.

Secondly, And more clearly (as I conceive) to the preſent ſcope of this place; the Antecedent to His, is the ſick man; and then, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs, is to ſhew him his own uprightneſs.

But you will ſay; Is the Meſſenger or Interpreter, only to tell man how good he is, and what good he hath done? And ſo to flatter him into a good opinion of himſelf, or of his own good deeds?

I anſwer; This ſhewing unto man his uprightneſs, may be taken,

Firſt, As implying the mans ignorance of that uprightneſs which he hath; or that he hath an uprightneſs, but doth not know not know nor underſtand that he hath it. 'Tis ſo ſometimes with the ſound godly man, as well as with the ſick, when (though in bodily health, yet) he is diſcompoſed and troubled in mind; for then though he hath an uprightneſs of heart, an integrity towards God, or (as Job ſpeaks of himſelf) the root of the matter in him; that is, though he be truely converted and really godly, yet he ſeeth it not, ſuch temptations of Satan and troubles of mind aſſault him, ſuch Clouds of doubt, and darkneſs are upon him, that he is not able to make out his own ſtate. In this caſe the faithful Meſſenger or Interpreter coming to him, and inquiring how it is with him, picks out this from him, that there is an uprightneſs, and an integrity of heart in him towards God, and that his ſtate is good, though he cannot diſcern it. For as the life and ſtate of grace, is alwayes a ſecret to thoſe who have it not; ſo 'tis often a ſecret to thoſe that have it. Some men, never, few men alwayes underſtand their own condition, and 'tis very hard to make them underſtand it. For as it is with many hypocrites, and with all preſumptuous ones, you cannot beat them out of a good opinion of themſelves; though they are ſtark naught, rotten at heart, and have nothing to ſalve themſelves up with, but a little boldneſs and confidence, yet they will not be perſwaded off from their falſe foundations, and deceitful bottoms; they will be good in their own eyes, upright in their own opinion, and do not doubt but all's well with them, and will be well with them alwayes. Now, I ſay, as it is with ſome hypocrites, and all preſumptuous ones, they think themſelves to have an uprightneſs which they have not; ſo many are upright and ſincere who ſee it not, and tis a very hard work, the hardeſt work that the Miniſters of the Goſpel have to make them underſtand and ſee their own uprightneſs.

Secondly, The word uprightneſs, and the ſhewing unto man his uprightneſs here ſpoken of, takes in the whole duty, yea and the whole priviledge and intereſt of a Godly man, or that which will be his uprightneſs and ſet him right both before God and his own conſcience, To ſhew unto man this his uprightneſs, is to ſhew him when he is right, and how he may be ſetled in a right ſtate; in ſuch a ſtate as will be to him like Mount Sion which cannot be removed. Thus the uprightneſs of man comprehends the whole buſineſs both of faith and repentance, or all that which a ſinner is called both to do, and believe, for the repairing and mending of his loſt and ruin'd ſtate, for the putting and ſetling him in ſuch a ſtate as the Lord may own him as his, and be gracious to him. This, whatſoever it is, is mans uprightneſs or righteouſneſs, and the ſhewing unto man, this his uprightneſs is the bringing him word in the name of Chriſt, that God juſtifieth him from the guilt of all his ſins, and accepteth him into his favour.

Quid ipſum facere pro officio oporteat. Bez. Quid hominem agere æquum ſit, ſc. ut agnitis peccatis Dei gratiam propter merita ſalvatoris imploret. Scult.

Hence Obſerve, The great duty of the Miniſters of the Goſpel, is to clear up to man, whether he be upright, or how he may ſtand upright with God.

This Obſervation takes in both parts of the Expoſition. To ſhew unto man how it is with him, what his preſent ſtate, and condition is, and to ſhew unto man what he ought to be, or how he may be in a ſafe condition, this is the work of that Meſſenger and interpreter who is one among a thouſand, this is a bleſſed work, and thus it muſt be done.

Firſt, Man is to be ſhewed the uprightneſs of his ſtate, or that which muſt be and be had to make up the uprightneſs of his ſtate, which is

Firſt, His firſt repentance, or converſion to God. Fallen man can never come into a right ſtate, till he return to God from whom he fell. A mans ſinful ſtate is a crooked, perverſe, and wretched ſtate; repentance or returning to God, is the bringing of a man right again, it brings him to his uprightneſs, even to that ſtate, wherein he was firſt made; Lo this have I found (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 7. 29.) that God hath made man upright; but they have ſought out many inventions. Solomon doth not diſcover the ſeveral branches and ſtreams of mans ſinfulneſs, but the root and ſpring of it he doth, the corruption of his nature by the fall. For as he found that God made man upright, ſo mutable, ſubject to temptation, and as eaſily yielding to the temptation, as admitting himſelf to be tempted: And ſo, not reſting in that way and means of happineſs (as the Devil his tempter did not) which the wiſdom and goodneſs of God had chalked out and allotted to him, but conceiting to himſelf a higher perfection, he then began and ſtill continueth to ſeek out variety of means (called by Solomon, many inventions) as then to get more then he had, ſo now to regain ſome ſhadow at leaſt of what he had. Theſe inventions, are all thoſe carnal ſhifts, whereby man hopes either to palliate his ſin, or to pacifie his conſcience. But all prove vain inventions; there being no poſſibility now, for man to get out of ſin, or to go back to God, and ſo to his firſt eſtate, but by repentance; That's Gods invention, and he hath concluded, that nothing without that ſhall bring man (the caſe of Infants is another thing) to that ſtate of uprightneſs, in which he was firſt made. And therefore the Apoſtle giving an account of his miniſtery, how he acted as a Meſſenger, or an Interpreter (He indeed was one among a thouſand) ſaith (Acts 20. 20, 21.) I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, &c. Teſtifying both to the Jews, and alſo to the Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is

The ſecond thing wherein this uprightneſs of mans ſtate doth conſiſt. Theſe two, repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, were the ſum of all thoſe Sermons in which Paul gave counſel both to Jews and Gentiles what to do that they might be ſaved. And this is the work of all Goſpel-Miniſters, in ſhewing unto man his uprghtneſs. He that is converted, and believeth; he that turneth from ſin, and taketh hold of Jeſus Chriſt by faith for righteouſneſs, is in a better ſtate of uprightneſs, then when he was firſt made upright. The Prophet (Hab. 2. 4.) ſpeaking of faith, and that which is oppoſite to it ſelf-confidence, uſeth this word, Behold his ſoul which is lifted up (namely in thoughts of any ſelf or creature-ſufficiency) is not upright in him. A proud ſoul is not an upright ſoul. What is pride? Surely this, for a man to think himſelf in a good condition, or that he is well enough, that he wants nothing, as it is ſaid of the Church of Laodicea (Rev. 3. 17.) when yet he is empty and guilty; poor and peny-leſs in ſpirituals, wanting every thing; eſpecially a ſight and ſenſe of his poverty and wants; yet this is every mans thought of himſelf, till he is ſhewed what is indeed his uprightneſs. The natural mans ſpirit is lifted up, not to God nor in God by faith and repentance, but in himſelf. The Soul thus lifted up is not upright (ſaith the Prophet, and what ſaith he next?) But the juſt ſhall live by his faith. As if he had ſaid; The man that lives by faith, or the man that believes, and ſo lives upon Chriſt, is upright and hath an uprightneſs which will hold him right, which the uprightneſs of creation did not. Then the whole matter of mans uprightneſs was in himſelf, and he was to ſtand upon his own bottom, having no promiſe of ſupport. But now the main matter of mans uprightneſs is out of himſelf, and beſides, himſelf hath a promiſe to be ſupported in his uprightneſs. Man by the grace of repentance, turning from ſin, and by the grace of faith cloſing with the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is ſet right in the Court of Heaven, and ſhall be preſerved (in his uprightneſs) by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation.

Again, When man is ſhewed his uprightneſs as to his ſtate, which is his life of juſtification; then he muſt alſo be ſhewed his uprightneſs as to his way or courſe of life in ſanctification, or holineſs of converſation. The Interpreter muſt not only bring man to Chriſt, but muſt tell him how he ought to walk in Chriſt. Man being ſet right, ought to go right, or (as 'tis ſaid, Pſal. 50.23.) To order his converſation aright. Mans uprightneſs in walking and working is an inſeparable fruit of his uprightneſs in Being.

Thirdly, The buſineſs of the Interpreter, is not only to bring the troubled Soul to a true ſenſe of ſin, to a clear ſight of Chriſt, and a ſutable converſation, but to furniſh him with Weapons to reſiſt Satans temptations, to ſhew him how to mannage the ſword of the Spirit, and the ſhield of faith, that he may be able to quench all the fiery Darts of the Devil; as alſo to anſwer, reſolve, and remove the doubts and ſcruples, that may ariſe in or are upon his own conſcience, and ſo to ſettle him in a ſweet and comfortable dependance upon Chriſt by faith as his uprightneſs and righteouſneſs, againſt all the fears which at any time aſſault his peace.

But ſome may ſay, Should not ſinners be ſhewed their un-uprightneſs or unrighteouſneſs, rather then their uprightneſs?

I anſwer; Firſt, 'Tis a piece of our ſhewing man his uprightneſs, to ſhew him that he hath no uprightneſs. The Spirit convinceth, firſt, of ſin, and then of righteouſneſs (John 16. 8.) Secondly, I anſwer, a mans uprightneſs (according to the meaning of this Scripture) cannot be ſhewed him, but he muſt alſo be ſhewed his unrighteouſneſs. Thirdly, I anſwer, The ſick man here ſpoken of, may be ſuppoſed a man troubled in mind about his ſins; and in that caſe the interpreters duty is to eaſe his mind by ſhewing him his uprightneſs in the way opened, rather then to burden his mind further by ſhewing him his ſin or unrighteouſneſs, And therefore laſtly,

To cloſe this point with a word of caution; When Elihu ſpeaks of an uprightneſs to be ſhewed the troubled Soul; 'Tis not that the Meſſenger who comes to relieve and comfort him, ſhould uſe flattering words, and blow him up with a conceit of his own good works, and ſo tell him a ſtory of his vertues or vertuous deeds. No, the uprightneſs chiefly intended here is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in and by which we are reconciled to and made one with God. Nor can we ever attain to this till we are made ſenſible of our own nothingneſs, till we are unhinged of ſelf, and quite taken off from any bottoming upon our own righteouſneſs. Some, when they have trouble of conſcience upon them, what do they? They fly to their own righteouſneſs; and when they are ſick, and ready to die, how do they prepare to ſtand right before God? They confeſs they have ſinned, and done amiſs, but they hope they have repented, and made amends for that; yea they can remember they have done ſuch, and ſuch, poſſibly, many good things, they have been juſt to all men, and charitable to the poor, they have heard the Word, and been at many a good Sermon, they have prayed and faſted, &c. Thus they patch up the buſineſs, as if this were their only uprightneſs, whereas, indeed, their only uprightneſs is the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. We never ſee where our uprightneſs is, till we ſee there is nothing that makes us ſtand upright in the Court of Heaven, but only Chriſt our righteouſneſs, This is the great duty of the Meſſengers, and Interpreters of Chriſt, to declare to man this righteouſneſs for his uprightneſs. And that hence it is (as Elihu proceeds in the next verſe to aſſure the ſick man) that God is and will be gracious to him.

Verſe 24. Then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith, deliver him from going down into the pit, I have found a ranſome.

Theſe words hold out the general iſſue and fruit of the labours and good counſel of that Meſſenger or Interpreter dealing with the ſick man, and ſhewing him his uprightneſs.

There are three diſtinct Interpretations which run quite through this verſe, and they ariſe from a different apprehenſion about the antecedent to this Pronoun [He] then he is gracious unto him. He; who is that? All the Popiſh Interpreters refer it to the Guardian-Angel ſent to attend on this ſick man; Then he (the Angel) will be gracious, and he will ſay, deliver him. But as I then laid by that opinion that the Meſſenger was an Angel properly taken, ſo I ſhall not ſtay upon that which is a conſequent of it, here.

Secondly, Several of our Proteſtant Interpreters refer this he, to the Meſſenger or Interpreter, to the Prophet or any ſpiritually wiſe and holy man, ſent of God to aſſiſt and help the ſick man in his diſtreſs. Some are ſo poſitive in this opinion, that they deny the Text any other reference; This is to be underſtood of the Meſſenger (ſaith one) and not of God. And I grant 'tis ſutable to the buſineſs of the Meſſenger who comes to comfort and inſtruct the ſick man, that he ſhould pitty and compaſſionate him in that diſconſolate condition, and likewiſe pray for him, according to the tenour of theſe words in the Text, or to the ſame effect; O Lord God, be gracious to him, and deliver him, let him not go down to the pit, for the ranſome ſake which I have found. As if Elihu had ſaid; When that faithful Meſſenger ſhall have declared the benefits and grace of God to the afflicted man, then pittying his afflicted Soul, he ſhall pray for him; O God deliver him from death and condemnation, from the pit, and from deſtruction, for I have found and ſhewed him a ranſome, by which his Soul may be delivered, and his ſins pardoned.

Hoc de nuncio dicitur non de Deo; aptè enim tribuitur nuncio & interpreti voluntatis Dei ut miſereatur hominis in ſummo vitæ diſcrimine conſtituti. Merl.

In the nineteenth Chapter of this Book at the twenty-ſeventh verſe, Job uſeth this word in his application to his friends, for their pitty to him, and more favourable dealing with him; Have pitty upon me, have pitty upon me, O my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me. As if he had ſaid, The hand of God preſſeth me ſore, O let not your hand be heavy upon me too. This Expoſition carrieth a great truth in it, and is not at all inconſiſtent with the letter of the Text; yet I ſhall not inſiſt upon it, but adhere rather to a third, which makes the Antecedent to this [He] to be God himſelf.

Et de gratia eum alloquutus dixerit redime eum nec diſcēdat in foveam expiationē (quā) inveni. Jun. Summa orationis quæ apud Deum pro afflictis, habenda eſt. Jun.

Then he is gracious.] That is, when the Meſſenger hath dealt with the ſick man, when he hath opened his condition to him, and ſhewed him his uprightneſs, or how he may ſtand upright before God, or what his righteouſneſs is before God, and hath brought his heart to an unfeigned ſorrow for his ſin, and to the actings of faith upon the promiſe; then God is gracious, and then he gives out the word for his reſtoring, and orders it to be preſently diſpatcht away to him; ſaying, deliver him, unlooſe him, unbind him, let him not go down into the pit, I have found a ranſome. Taking this for the general ſenſe of the Text, I ſhall proceed to open the particulars.

Then he will be gracious, or then, he will have mercy upon him, as Mr Broughton tranſlates. Then and not before; till then the Lord lets his bones ake, and his heart tremble, till then he ſuffers him to be brought ſo low that he is reckoned among the dead, but then, though not before, he ſheweth himſelf gracious unto him. When a poor man is reduced to the utmoſt extremity, then is Gods opportunity, then is the ſeaſon of mercy; and the Lord therefore lets us be at the loweſt, that we may be the more ſenſible of his goodneſs in raiſing and lifting us up: The Lord ſuffers many (as Paul ſpake of himſelf, 2 Cor. 1. 9.) to have the ſentence of Death in themſelves, that they may learn not to truſt in themſelves, but in him who raiſeth the dead. We ſeldome give God either the glory of his power by truſting him, or of his goodneſs by thanking him for our deliverances, till we are brought to the laſt caſt (as we ſay) or to ſuch an exigent as leaves no viſible means in probability, no nor of poſſibility to eſcape. And when 'tis thus with us, then he is gracious.

Secondly, Then he is gracious, that is, when the man is doubly humbled, when the mans heart is graciouſly broken, when the man is grown into an abhorrence of himſelf and of his ſin, or loaths himſelf for his ſin, as much as he loathed his meat, as 'tis ſaid in the former verſe; when his heart is thus taken quite off from all that is below in the world, and gathered up believingly to Jeſus Chriſt in the word of promiſe; Then he is gracious.

חנן Miſertus, gratificatus, gratia proſecutus fuit: ex gratis donavit, beneficit.

The Original word hath many comfortable ſignifications in it, yet all reſolvable into this one, he is gracious. It ſignifies to pitty, to have compaſſion, tenderly to regard, to beſtow grace, to do good, there is enough in the bowels of this word to bear up the ſpirit of the ſickeſt body, or of the moſt troubled Soul. It is ſaid (Gen. 6. 8.) Noah found grace (or favour) in the eyes of the Lord. Noah was the only man that held out the grace of God in that age, him only did God find perfect or upright in his Generation (Gen. 6. 9.) and Noah only was the man, that found grace or favour in the eyes of the Lord in that generation (Gen. 6. 8.) God was gracious to him and his, when the whole world periſhed by water. That proper name John is derived from this word; when God gave Zachary and Elizabeth a Son in their old age, he alſo directed how he would have him called, ye ſhall call his name John, which name, (as we may well conceive) was aſſigned him either becauſe God did very graciouſly and favourably beſtow that gift upon his Parents in their old age, and ſo ſhewed them much favour (a Child at any time is a great favour from God, eſpecially in old age) or, ſecondly, becauſe John was to open the Kingdom of Grace, to preach the Goſpel, and to prepare the way for Chriſt, by whom grace and truth came. The Baptiſt was as it were the loop and button between the legal and the Goſpel diſpenſation; therefore his name might well be called John. And there is frequent uſe in Scripture of the Adverb which comes from this Verb, to ſignifie injuries received without deſert or undeſervedly. (Pſal. 7. 4.) Yea, I have delivered him that without cauſe was mine enemy, or that was mine enemy gratis. And again (Pſal. 35. 7.) For without cauſe have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cauſe have they digged for my Soul. Thus as the word ſignifies the doing of good (gratis) or when there is no deſert; ſo any injury done gratis, or when no provocation hath been given the party ſo to do. Now, as all the miſchief which the wicked plot againſt or do to the people of God is undeſerved, and floweth meerly from their malice, ſo all the good which God doth for his people is undeſerved, and floweth purely from the Fountain of his free grace, or from his compaſſions, which fail not. And ſurely the Lord deſerveth higheſt praiſes from man for any good he doth him, ſeeing what he doth is gratis, or undeſerved.

Δωρεὰν τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι. Gratis i. e. ejus gratia. Bez.

Further, This Hebrew word Chinnam anſwers the Greek word (δωρεὰν) rendred freely (Rom. 3. 24.) We are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt. How can unjuſt men deſerve juſtification; Therefore Mr. Beza tranſlates, We are juſtified gratis, that is, by his grace.

Again, When it is ſaid, then he (or, the Lord) is gracious, it may be taken two wayes. Firſt, as, to be gracious implyeth the intrinſecal graciouſneſs of his nature, or that mercifulneſs and kindneſs which dwells in the heart of God, and which indeed is God (for the graciouſneſs of God is the gracious God) thus God is alwayes and altogether gracious, he is infinitely and unceſſantly gracious. Secondly, When it is ſaid, he is gracious, it may note only the graciouſneſs of his acts, and diſpenſations; thus, as I may ſay, the Lord is gracious (ad hinc & nunc) as he ſees cauſe, at this time he is gracious and not at that time; that is, he puts forth acts of grace now, and not then. The Lord puts forth acts of grace, both according to the pleaſure of his one will, without reſpect to any thing in man, as alſo without reſpecting what man is or doth, according to his pleaſure. And thus we are chiefly to underſtand it here; then he is gracious. God is gracious in his nature alwayes, and alwayes alike gracious; but he is not alwayes alike gracious in his diſpenſations, or in giving forth acts of grace; he is gracious to man according to his ſecret will as he pleaſeth, but he is gracious according to his revealed will as man pleaſeth him.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The firſt cauſe and ſpring of all our mercies is the graciouſneſs of God. Or, All our mercies flow out from the grace of God.

That's the fountain, yea that's the Ocean which feeds and fills all the Channels of mercy, which ſtream to us, as our happineſs in this world, and for our everlaſting happineſs in the world which is to come. All is of grace fundamentally, or becauſe the Lord is and will be for ever gracious. Thus the Lord ſpake to Moſes (Exod. 33. 19.) I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious. My mercy ſhall flow out, when, and to whom, and where I pleaſe. And the proclamation which he made of himſelf in all his royal Titles runs in the ſame ſtrain (Exod. 34. 6.) The Lord, the Lord God, merciful, and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity. If we conſider God, firſt in doing us good; Secondly, In forgiving us the evil which we do; Thirdly, in delivering us from the evils which we now ſuffer; Fourthly, In delivering us from the fear of future ſufferings; all is from grace and from free grace. He doth us good though we are undeſerving any good, that's grace, yea, he doth us good though we are ill deſerving, and that's more grace. He doth all for us through grace, Firſt, In ſpirituals, and Secondly, In temporals; not only do the good things of eternal life, but the good things of this preſent life flow from grace unto his own people. Not only the health of their Souls, but the health of their bodies, not only deliverance from Hell, but deliverance from ſickneſs alſo, flow from his free grace in Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore of all their mercies and ſalvations (both as to the foundation and top-ſtone of them) the people of God muſt cry (as the Prophet Zachary (Chap. 4. 7.) foretels the people of God ſhould ſay of that longed for deliverance, when that great Mountain ſhould become a plain before Zerubbabel) grace, grace, unto them: That is, grace hath begun them, and grace alone will maintain, continue, and perfect what it hath begun. As there is nothing in us (except our miſery) which moves the Lord to begin, ſo there is nothing in us (but our inability) which moves the Lord to perfect what he hath begun. He ſeeth we cannot, and therefore he will perfect what he hath begun, and all this he doth that he may exalt his own name, and perfect the praiſe of his free grace towards us.

More diſtinctly, that all comes from grace, or from the graciouſneſs of God, may note theſe five things to us. Firſt, Not only that God doth all for his people freely, or without deſert. But Secondly, That he doth all things willingly, or without conſtraint for his people. Thirdly, That he doth all things forwardly for his people. He doth very much unaskt and unſought, and he is not much askt or hardly drawn to do any thing for his people. Though he hath ſaid of ſome things, I will be ſought unto, or inquired after that I may do them for you (Ezek. 36. 37.) yet his mercies are never forced nor wreſted from him by intreaties, but flow from a principle of love, naturally, as water out of a fountain. Fourthly, He doth all rejoycingly, even with his whole heart, and with his whole Soul. Mercy pleaſeth him, and he is pleaſed with occaſions of ſhewing mercy, 'tis no burden to him to do us good; mercy proceeds from his nature, and therefore he delighteth in mercy (Mic. 7. 18.) yea, to be merciful is his nature, and therefore he cannot but delight in it. Fifthly, graciouſneſs being the very nature of God, implyeth that he will do us good liberally, and conſtantly, or that (as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks) he giveth liberally; and upbraideth not; he doth not upbraid us with our poverty, who receive, nor doth he upbraid us with the riches of the gifts which himſelf beſtoweth; and becauſe they flow from his nature, therefore he doth not in the leaſt empty himſelf, how much ſoever he fills the creature with his gifts or goodneſs, Some men (upon the matter) even exhauſt and undo themſelves by liberality unto others; and they who give moſt, or have moſt to give, cannot alwayes give. It is ſaid in this Book, (Chap. 37. 11.) By watering, he wearieth the thick Cloud; that is, God commandeth the Cloud to give rain ſo long, that it hath not a drop more to give, but is quite ſpent. Springs or Fountains are never wearied or ſpent with watering, becauſe their waters come as freely and as faſt as they go; God is an everlaſting Spring of grace, and goodneſs, he is not wearied, nor emptyed by what he giveth out to, or doth for the creature, becauſe all floweth from his natural graciouſneſs as from a Fountain.

Then he is gracious.] I would urge the ſecond reference of that word (then) a little further; It was ſhewed before, that it might refer, Firſt, To the extremity of the ſick man, Secondly, To the ſick mans humiliation, or the right diſpoſure of his ſpirit to receive renewed acts of grace, and favour from the Lord.

Si ægrotus ille monitis illius nuncii paruerit ac proinde reſipuerit, tum &c. Piſc.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, God uſually diſpenſeth or giveth out acts of grace when we repent and turn from ſin, when we believe and lay hold upon the promiſe; Then he is gracious.

It is ſaid (Iſa. 30. 18.) Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious. The Lord hath alwayes a gracious diſpoſition, a gracious nature; he alwayes hath a ſtore and a ſtock, a rich ſtock and ſtore of mercy by him; but he doth not alwayes give it forth; no, he waits to be gracious, that is, he waits till we are in a fit frame, till we are in a due temper to receive his grace. And becauſe as to the diſpenſings of grace, God waits to be gracious; therefore many retard and hinder their own good; they are not yet in a frame to receive; their Veſſel is not yet ſeaſoned to hold mercy. The Lord waited to be gracious to David after his grievous fall, and therefore he did not give Nathan a Commiſſion to ſay, Thy ſin is done away, till *David*s heart was broken, and had ſaid (2 Sam. 12. 13.) I have ſinned againſt the Lord; But when once that word fell from him, then Nathan declared how gracious the Lord was to him. As ſoon as David ſaid, I have ſinned (that's an act of repentance) preſently Nathan ſaid, the Lord hath done away thy ſin, that's an act of grace. When did Ephraim hear a word of comfort from God? The Prophet tells us (Jer. 31. 18, 19, 20.) I have heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf (that is, mourning over and bewailing his ſin) ſaying, thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed, as a Bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoak. We have him there alſo praying, Turn me, O Lord, and I ſhall be turned, &c. Upon this, how graciouſly, how meltingly did the Lord ſpeak? Is Ephraim my dear Son? Is he a pleaſant Child? Since I ſpake againſt him, I do earneſtly remember him ſtill (or, in remembring I remember him) my bowels are troubled for him, I will ſurely have mercy on him. Now I will manifeſt my grace, and acquaint him with my goodneſs. The Lord was very gracious to Saul afterwards Paul, he ſent Ananias to him with a meſſage of mercy, as to reſtore the ſight of his bodily eyes, ſo to aſſure him that he ſhould be an inſtrument in the hand of Chriſt to open the eyes of many, and a choſen Veſſel to bear his name before the Gentiles and Kings and the Children of Iſrael (Acts 9. 15.) But when was this meſſage delivered him? The Text tells us (ver. 11.) For behold he prayeth; the man is in the duſt, he is brought upon his knees, his ſpirit is broken; that word he prayeth, comprehends the whole work of a gracious Soul, as to his humiliation and returning to the Lord. In the Parable of the prodigal Son, his Father is repreſented abundantly gracious to him; but he did not ſignifie it, he did not ſend the ring, nor the rich Robe to him, when he was abroad in a ſtrange Country among Harlots, drinking and waſting his eſtate, time and ſtrength vainly; we read of no acts of grace to him then, but when, being pinched with Famine and hunger, he came to himſelf, and began to bethink himſelf of coming back to his Fathers houſe, and that he had brought himſelf by his own folly to beggery, and want, and husks; when he was upon theſe terms, or reſolves to go home to his Father, and caſt himſelf at his feet as unworthy the name or priviledge of a Son, then his Father ran to meet him, fell on his neck and kiſſed him, then he put on the ring, and cloathed him with the Robe, then he killed the fatted Calf, and made a feaſt for him. All which ſcene of mercy doth but hold out this one word in the Text; Then he is gracious.

There are two ſorts of gracious acts of God. Firſt, Some are acts of abſolute grace, or of preventing grace; Theſe are put forth upon and exerciſed towards the creature, before there is any the leſt preparation in the heart, to draw them out or invite the beſtowing of them. Thus, the grace of God in election is abſolutely free, there was no proviſion of any qualification in man moving God to elect him. And ſo that wonderful act of grace (in which election firſt deſcends and diſcovers it ſelf) effectual vocation, is abſolutely free. God calls a ſinner when he is in the heat and hurry of his evil wayes, purſuing his luſts in the height of his pride, and in the hardneſs of his impenitent heart. Now, if when God firſt calleth a ſinner there is nothing in him but ſin; what can move God to call him but free grace? A third abſolute act of grace is juſtification; God doth not juſtifie a ſinner for any thing that he finds or ſees in us; As to us 'tis altogether free. He juſtifieth the ungodly (Rom. 4. 5.) when that wretched Infant was in its blood (which expreſſeth a miſerable unclean polluted condition) then was a time of love (Ezek. 16. 8.) then was God gracious. What lovelineſs was there in that Infant (repreſenting the beſt of men in that fallen natural eſtate) to draw out the love of God? Nothing at all, yea ſhe was altogether unlovely, yet then (ſaith God) thy time was the time of love, or then was the time of putting forth love in her converſion and vocation; Then, I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, live. And becauſe the thing might ſeem not only ſtrange, but even impoſſible, that the heart of God ſhould be towards ſuch a wretched one for good, the word is doubled, yea I ſaid unto thee, when thou waſt in thy blood, live. Theſe acts of abſolute free grace are the glory of the Covenant of grace; for if the Covenant ſhould hold out acts of grace only upon our pre-diſpoſitions, when ſhould we receive any act of grace? The promiſe is not of this tenour, I will pardon them when their hearts are ſoft and tender; but, I will take away the heart of ſtone, and give them a heart of fleſh.

Yet Secondly (as to the point in hand) there are conditional acts of grace, I may call them ſecond acts of grace, or renewed acts of grace. For when after converſion we fall into ſin, and by that evil heart of unbelief (remaining in a great meaſure unmortified) we depart from the living God (Heb. 3. 12.) God doth not give out freſh acts of grace, but upon repentance, and the renewings of our communion with him. Having once received grace, we being again helped and aſſiſted by grace, act graciouſly, before God declares himſelf gracious to us. When a man is caſt upon a ſick bed for ſin (that's the caſe of many) the Lord will ſee repentance before he will raiſe him up again. (James 5. 15.) The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and if he hath committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him; that is, if he being caſt upon a ſick bed to correct or chaſten him for the ſin that he hath committed, ſhall humble himſelf, and ſeek the Lord by prayer, praying and calling for prayer; Then the ſin committed ſhall be forgiven him, and the Lord will raiſe him up again. 'Tis not the prayer of another that can obtain deliverance for the ſick, much leſs the forgiveneſs of his ſins, if himſelf be prayer-leſs and repentance-leſs. But while others pray for the ſick mans bodily health, they praying alſo for his ſouls health, the Lord gives him repentance for his ſin, and then a comfortable ſight of pardon. So then before the Lord puts out theſe ſecond acts of grace, he looks for and finds ſomething in the creature yet ſtill, that alſo is an effect of his grace both to them and in them, They, who have already received grace, muſt ſtir up their grace, and renew acts of grace (through grace) towards him, before he diſpenſes acts of grace towards them. And as conſolation in this life, ſo that higheſt and laſt act of grace, ſalvation, in the life to come, is not beſtow'd upon any, till they are fitted. God calls and converts the worſt of men, thoſe that are in their filth, and mud, and mire, but he will not ſave a filthy perſon, he will have him firſt purged and prepared. Know ye not that the unrighteous ſhall not enter into the kingdome of God (1 Cor. 6. 9.) and that without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord (Heb. 12. 14.) There is no eternal ſalvation without preparation; nor is there any promiſe of temporal ſalvation without it. When a man is ſick to death (as in the Text) ſalvation comes not, the Lord is not gracious till the ſick mans ſpirit is humbled and ſet right; till the Meſſenger hath ſhewed him, how he may ſtand upright before the Lord, and he hath imbraced his meſſage; then, and not till then he is gracious. And as in theſe words we have the occaſion of this grace; ſo in the following words we have the publication of this grace; Then he is gracious.

And ſaith, Deliver him from going down into the pit.

And ſaith] That is, the Lord gives out an order preſently, he gives out a warrant for the releaſe of the ſick man. When earthly Princes have once granted pardon to an offender, they ſay, deliver him; they ſign a warrant for his deliverance out of Priſon, or they ſign a pardon, and ſay, deliver him from death, when he is at the place of execution. Thus concerning this ſick man, God ſaith, deliver him from going down to the pit.

פרע ide quod פדה redemit, liberavit, verbum פרע non alias reperitur, & pro ratione loci intelligitur & exponitur pro פדה. Merc.

The word rendred deliver, ſignifies alſo to redeem, 'tis uſed in this form no where elſe in all the Scripture. To free, deliver or redeem a man, intimates his perſon in hold, then will he ſay, deliver him. From what? There are as many ſorts of deliverances, as there are of troubles, each particular ſtrait, and trouble, hath a proportionable deliverance. There is deliverance, Firſt, From captivity or bondage. Secondly, From want or poverty. Thirdly, From imminent ſudden danger or peril by Land or Sea. Fourthly, From ſickneſſes and diſeaſes. Fifthly, From death; and that twofold; Firſt, From temporal, Secondly, From eternal death. Here when he ſaith, deliver him, we may determine this deliverance by the latter words of the Text, to be a deliverance from deadly ſickneſs; deliver him from going down to the pit; that is, deliver him from death; to go down to the pit, is often in Scripture put to ſignifie dying.

Further, The pit implies corruption, becauſe in the pit or grave, the body corrupts. It is ſaid indeed (Numb. 16. 30.) of that rebellious triumvirate, Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, they went down alive into the pit, but they went down to death, and ordinarily the dead only go down to the pit. The ſame phraſe is uſed (Pſal. 28. 1. Pſal. 88. 4. Ezek. 31. 14. Ezek. 32. 18, 24, 29, 30.) That Text is very remarkable (Prov. 28. 17.) He that offereth violence to the blood of another, he ſhall flee to the pit, let no man ſtay him; That is, the Murderer, who in wrath and hatred, or upon private revenge deſtroyeth the life of any man, ſhall haſten to deſtruction, either as chaſed and hurried by his own fears like Cain and Judas, or as proſecuted by the juſtice of the Magiſtrate. And as he thus haſteth to the pit, ſo let no man ſtay him, that is, Firſt, let no man conceal him; Secondly, Let no man move for his impunity, or ſolicite his pardon; or if any do, then Thirdly, Let not the Magiſtrate grant his pardon; for the old univerſal Law tells him his duty (Gen. 9. 6.) He that ſheddeth mans blood, by man (that is, by the Magiſtrate commanding, and by his Officers executing) ſhall his blood be ſhed. And as another Law hath it (Deut. 19. 13.) Thine eye ſhall not ſpare him, &c. The Magiſtrate who is in Gods ſtead, may not ſay of him, as here God doth of the ſick man, Deliver him from going down to the pit. His blood is ill ſpared who would not ſpare the blood of another.

But it may be queſtioned, for as much as the Text ſaith only in general, deliver him, Into whoſe hands this warrant for his deliverance is delivered? Or who is directed to deliver him? Maſter Broughton repreſents God ſpeaking this to the ſick mans diſeaſe, for thus he renders the Text; Then he will have mercy upon him, and ſays, Spare him (O killing malady) from deſcending into the pit. God will ſpeak thus to the diſeaſe (and there is a great elegancy in it) ſpare him, O killing malady. Diſeaſes come and go at Gods command; they hurt and they ſpare at his direction; as the Lords breath or word bloweth away the Winds (Matth. 8. 27.) The men marveled, ſaying, who is this that even the Wind and the Seas obey him? So the Lords breath bloweth away ſickneſs; if he do but ſpeak to a diſeaſe, to a Feaver, to an Ague, to a Dropſie, to a Conſumption, O killing malady, ſpare him, thou haſt done enough (any diſeaſe might prevail to death, did not God ſay, ſpare him) hold thy hand, not a blow more, not a fit more, O killing malady. Death it ſelf, much more ſickneſs, heareth the voice of God. And it may be ſaid to hear him, becauſe it doth that, which they who have the power of hearing ought to do; that is, it obeyeth or yieldeth to the voice and command of God, and will no longer afflict the ſick man. Diſeaſes may be ſaid to deliver a man from death, and the pit, when they depart from him. Yet,

Secondly, I conceive this warrant for the deliverance of the ſick man, is given out to the Meſſenger or Interpreter, to the one among a thouſand, that viſiteth him in his ſickneſs. He having been with him, and dealt with his conſcience, he having brought him into a good frame, the Lord is gracious, and in anſwer to his prayer, ſets it upon his heart that he ſhall recover, and warrants him to tell him ſo, which is, declaratively, to deliver him from going down to the pit. This act of mans delivering the ſick, is like that act of man pardoning the ſinner (John 20. 23.) that is, 'tis miniſterial or declarative, not original nor Authoritative. The Interpreter doth not deliver him, but tells him God will. We have the Pſalmiſt ſpeaking thus after his ſupplication and prayer made to the Lord for a ſick ſtate or Nation or for a ſick Church (that's his ſcope, Pſal. 85.) Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoyce in thee (ver. 6.) Surely thou wilt, and he expreſſeth his confidence, that God would (ver. 8.) I will hear what God the Lord will ſpeak, for he will ſpeak peace unto his people, and to his Saints. When he had prayed he would hearken for news, or for a Meſſage from Heaven, whether or no, the Lord would order him to ſpeak peace to thoſe for whom he had been praying, and ſay, deliver them from going down to the pit. Thus did the Prophet Habakkuk, I will ſtand upon my watch, and ſet me upon my Tower, and ſee what he will ſay unto me, and what I ſhall anſwer when I am reproved (Chap. 2. 1.) In the next verſe, The Lord anſwered and ſaid, write the Viſion and make it plain upon Tables, that he may run that readeth it. And what was the anſwer? Surely deliverance; for having ſaid, in the end it ſhall ſpeak and not lie (ver. 3.) he concludes (ver. 4.) The juſt ſhall live by his faith. Believing deliverance, he ſhall at laſt be delivered from the pit of captivity and live.

Sequeſtrem illum Jubebit ei renunciare impetratam eſſe ſibi liberationem. Bez.

Here in the Text we muſt ſuppoſe this Meſſenger had prayed, and having prayed, he did not neglect his prayer, but was hearkning what the Lord would ſay. Elihu was confident the Lord would give a gracious anſwer, though not by an immediate voice or revelation to his ear, yet by an aſſurance of the mercy given into his ſpirit. When that good King Hezekiah, was not only ſick unto death, but had received an expreſs meſſage from the Lord, Set thy houſe in order, for thou ſhalt dye and not live (2 Kings 20. 1.) 'Tis ſaid at the ſecond verſe, He turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, ſaying, &c. And at the fourth verſe, The word of the Lord came to Iſaiah the Prophet, ſaying, turn again, and tell Hezekiah the Captain of my people; Thus ſaith the Lord, the God of David thy Father, I have heard thy prayer, I have ſeen thy tears, behold, I will heal thee, &c. Here God gave a word formally, and put it into the Prophets mouth, Go deliver him from going down to the pit. And though the Lord doth not thus now in ſuch an explicite and open way, nor may we expect it, yet there is a virtual ſaying of this word from the Lord, and that ſometimes mightily impreſt upon the hearts of thoſe who have prayed and ſought unto him, for the ſick man, whereby (not by an ungrounded vain confidence, but by a ſcriptural holy confidence, comparing the promiſe with the mans condition) they are enabled to tell him, The Lord hath delivered thee from going down to the pit. And he ſhall as certainly be delivered, as if the Lord had ſent an expreſs from Heaven to tell him ſo. Then he is gracious to him, and ſaith, deliver him from going down to the pit.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Death is a going to the pit, a going to deſtruction,

Thus it is ordinarily with all who die, to the pit they go. Many dye and go down to the bottomleſs pit; all who die may be ſaid to go to the pit. To go to the bottomleſs pit, is the circumlocution of eternal death, as to go to the pit is the circumlocution of temporal death.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as the man being ſick the Lord gives out this word, Deliver him from going down to the pit;

Note, Sickneſs hath in it a tendency unto death.

The ſick ſtand as it were upon the borders of the grave. Some not only put death far from them in health, but in their ſickneſs, until they are even dead, they ſcarce think themſelves dying. It is good for us in our health and beſt ſtrength to be looking into the pit, and conſidering upon what grounds of comfort we can deſcend into the grave. How much more ſhould we be thinking of and looking into the pit, when we are in a languiſhing and dying condition?

Thirdly, Obſerve, The word and work of deliverance is from God alone; Then he will be gracious and ſay, deliver him from going down to the pit.

God can, and God only can deliver from death; no creature in Heaven or Earth can ſpeak this but by commiſſion from God, none can open this ſecret till God interpret it. Deliverance is the Lords ſalvation, and the word of ſalvation from ſickneſs, as well as of ſalvation from Hell, comes out from the Lord.

But is it not ſaid (Pro. 11.4.) Righteouſneſs delivereth from death?

I anſwer, when it is ſaid, Righteouſneſs delivereth from death, The meaning is, God delivereth the righteous from death. He delivereth them from the ſting and terror, from all that which is properly called the evil of corporal death; and he delivereth them wholly from the leaſt touch or ſhadow of eternal death. And this righteouſneſs which delivers from death is not our own, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt made ours by the appointment of God, and received as ours by faith. 'Tis neither any righteouſneſs wrought in us, nor any righteouſneſs wrought by us, but that righteouſneſs which is wrought for us, which delivereth from death: and that delivereth us from death, becauſe God ſaith of ſuch a righteous perſon, deliver him, as often from temporal death, or going down to the pit of the grave, ſo alwayes from eternal death, or going down to the pit of Hell.

Fourthly, In that this word deliver him, is given to the Meſſenger, Obſerve, God conveighs deliverance and mercy to us by men like our ſelves.

He will have the creature beholden to the creature for his mercy, though mercy come freely and only from himſelf. God delivereth the ſick and the ſinner in ſuch a method that we may own, though not ſtay in his Meſſengers, as the inſtruments of his favour. God who can do all things by himſelf, will not do many things but by means. He ſaith to the Meſſenger, Deliver him from going down to the pit.

You will ſay, how can a Miniſter or a Meſſenger deliver the ſick from going down to the pit?

I anſwer (as was touched before) he delivers him by declaring to him the mind of God, by acquainting the ſick with the promiſes of deliverance, and by preſſing him to believe and reſt upon them; by aſſuring him that as God is able to perform the promiſe, ſo he is faithful and willing to perform it; yea that he hath given ſome tokens for good that he will deliver him from going down to the pit. Thus the work of Gods free grace, mercy, and power, is oftentimes attributed to Inſtruments and ſecond cauſes, becauſe they have their place and uſe in the bringing about the purpoſes of God for the good of his people. Hence ſome men are called Saviours; And Saviours ſhall come up on mount Zion (Obad. verſ. 21.) No man can ſave either from temporal or eternal deſtruction; He that is our God is the God of ſalvation, and unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death (Pſal. 68.20.) yet ſaith the Prophet, there ſhall come Saviours; that is, God will raiſe up worthy men, principal men (as another Prophet calls them, Mic. 5.5.) who ſhall deſtroy Zions Enemies. Thus Paul admoniſheth Timothy, Take heed to thy ſelf, and to thy doctrine, continue in them, for in ſo doing thou ſhalt ſave thy ſelf and them that hear thee (1 Tim. 4.16.) The Apoſtle James (Chap. 5.20.) ſpeaks the ſame thing; He which converteth a ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins. And the ſame Apoſtle ſaith (as to the caſe in the Text) at the fifteenth verſe of the ſame Chapter; The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick. Though none can ſave, yet many are means of our ſalvation. And the Lord is pleaſed to honour thoſe who are the means of any ſalvation, ſo far, as to ſay, They ſave. It is indeed the duty of all to aſcribe the all of every work and piece of ſalvation and deliverance to God only. When the people ſtood wondering at Peter and John after they had healed the lame man, Peter anſwered (Acts 3.12.) Ye men of Iſrael, why marvel ye at this? Or why look ye ſo earneſtly on us, as if we by our own power or holineſs had made this man to walk. The God of Abraham, &c. Hath glorified his Son Jeſus; As if they had ſaid, Therefore do ye alſo glorifie him, not us for delivering this lame man. Though God is pleaſed to put much honour upon man, by ſpeaking of what himſelf doth, as if man had done it; yet he will not give the glory of what he doth to any man, nor may any take it. God ſaith to the Meſſenger, deliver him from going down to the pit; but woe to that Meſſenger who ſaith (when he is delivered) I have delivered him from going down to the pit.

Thus we ſee the Spring of the ſick mans recovery, it is from the graciouſneſs of God, and we ſee the means of it; God gives a warrant to his Meſſenger, ſaying, Deliver him from going down to the pit; but what is the procuring or meritorious cauſe of this deliverance? As the Text hath ſhewed us the firſt moving cauſe, The grace of God, ſo it ſhews us the meritorious cauſe, by which his deliverance is procured; things are ſo ordered in the Covenant of grace, that though the Lord acts with infinite freeneſs, yet he hath appointed and ordered a way in which alone he will do, what he freely doth. This is expreſſed in the laſt clauſe of the verſe,

For I have found a Ranſom.

But where did God find it? Certainly in his own boſom, in his own heart; Jeſus Chriſt came out of the boſom of the Father, there he was, God found him in and with himſelf; God did not find the Ranſom by chance, nor did he find it by advice and conſultation with others, but he found it in himſelf, in his own infinite wiſdom and goodneſs; that is, he contrived it, he invented it there. This rare, this moſt excellent thing, a Ranſom, is the Lords own invention. I have found it, I know how to do this man good, I know how to ſave him, and do my own honour and Juſtice no hurt, no wrong: My honour is ſaved, my Juſtice is ſatisfied in doing it. I have found a ranſom.

The Word here rendred a ranſom ſignifies in the Verb, to cover or to hide that which before lay open, that it appear no more. Grace brings another face upon things, a new face, I may ſay upon our ſouls. The covering of ſin elegantly denotes the pardon of ſin. And what reaſon have we to be thankful and rejoyce, when ſin (our ſoul-durt and deformity) is covered! We have very foul faces (I mean outward converſations) and more foul Souls, or inward inclinations, till the Lord is graciouſly pleaſed to put a covering upon them. If we cover our own ſins we ſhall have no mercy, but if the Lord once cover our ſins, he cannot deny us mercy, that being it ſelf our greateſt mercy, and the fruit of his great mercy. The Mercy-ſeat, ſo famous in the Moſaical Pædagogy, is expreſt by this word, which properly ſignifieth a Covering. The Mercy-ſeat was it ſelf a Covering of pure Gold, laid over the Ark, in which Ark the Law was put (Exod. 25.17.21.) Thou ſhalt put the Mercy-ſeat above upon the Ark, and in the Ark thou ſhalt put the Teſtimony that I ſhall give thee. And as the dimenſions of the Ark were two Cubits and a half in length, and a Cubit and a half in breadth, ſo the ſame were the dimenſions of the Mercy-ſeat; (Verſ. 10.17.) which figured that as the Mercy-ſeat fully covered the Ark wherein the Law was, ſo Chriſt ſhould fully cover all our ſins, which are tranſgreſſions of the Law. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt is as long and as broad as the Law, and ſo, our ſins being covered with that ſhall never appear againſt us. Therefore alſo from above this Mercy-ſeat between the two Cherubims (the Lord ſaid, verſ. 22.) I will meet thee, and I will commune with thee. There was a gracious manifeſtation of the preſence of God above the Mercy-ſeat, becauſe that typified Jeſus Chriſt the true Propitiatory or ranſom, covering and hiding out of the ſight of God for ever all our defections, iniquities and tranſgreſſions. And hence the ſame word which ſignifies expiation or redemption, ſignifieth alſo the procuring cauſe of our Redemption, here called (as alſo in the New Teſtament) A Ranſom.

Verbum כפר denotet expiationem, aut redemptionem, tum etiam pretium quod pro redemptione offertur. Significat etiā cooperire, linire, aut operire bitumine, quaſi priſtinam faciē rei alicujus aut immunditiē abſcondere; quod eleganter refertur ad abſterſionem peccati. Pined.

I have found a Ranſom.] A ranſom is properly a price demanded for releaſe out of bondage. And when the Captive is releaſed, the price is paid; To be redeemed and to be ranſomed is the ſame thing. (Iſa. 35.9, 10.) The redeemed ſhall paſs there, and the ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return and come to Sion, and everlaſting joy upon their heads, they ſhall obtain joy and gladneſs, and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away. Thus here, Deliver him (ſaith the Lord) from going down to the pit ; I am ſatisfied, I have found a price, a ranſom. Both Law and Goſpel meet in this ; here is the Law, by which the man being humbled confeſſeth his own ſin, and the wrath of God due to it. Here is alſo the Goſpel, by which he hath been taught to believe, that his ſins are pardoned, and the wrath of God turned away from him for the ranſom which Chriſt hath paid.

So then, 'tis not as Popiſh Expoſiters tell us, I have found a ranſom; that is, I have found the mans good works, I have found his repentance, I have found his tears, his prayers, his alms, I now ſee that in him for which I may be propitious to him, and deliver him from the ſickneſs under which he is detained; thus they generally make ſomewhat in man, or done by man, his ranſom, at leaſt to have a ſhare in it. The heart (as was ſhewed before) is prepared for deliverance, by the workings of faith and repentance. But the ranſom upon which deliverance is given, is nothing at all wrought in us or by us. Wo to us notwithſtanding our prayers and repentance, our reformations and humiliations. To put theſe in place of a ranſom, or to hope for deliverance from the pit upon their account, is to pervert the whole Goſpel.

Apparet in homine aliquid æquitatis, ex quo ei miſerere poſſum, quā quærebam. Aquin.

Others give a better ſenſe, yet not clear enough, thus, He hath humbled himſelf; and I am as well ſatisfied as if I had received a ranſom, but I lay that by alſo. For when God ſaith, I have found a ranſom, we are to underſtand it of a real ranſom, of full pay or ſatisfaction, not of a ranſom by favour and acceptation. This ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God is only and wholly made by Jeſus Chriſt, without any the leaſt contribution from man. The perfect ranſom which the Lord finds is the blood of his own Son, which is called the blood of the Covenant, becauſe thereby the Covenant is confirmed, and all Covenant mercies aſſured to us. Upon this price or ranſom God reſtores the ſick ſinner and pardons him, he heals both his body and his ſoul. And that Job had knowledge of this ranſom as the only means of deliverance, appears (Chap. 17. 3. 19. 25.) Deliver him, for I have found a ranſom.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The redemption or deliverance of man by a ranſom is the invention of God, and the invention of God only.

If all men on earth, yea, if all the Angels in Heaven had ſat from the foundation of the world to this day, in counſel, beating their brains, and debating this Queſtion, How man, ſinful man, might be delivered out of the hand of the Law, or from that condemnatory ſentence under which the Law had caſt and detained him, with ſatisfaction, or without dammage to the Juſtice and righteouſneſs of God, they could never have found it out, nor any thing like it. This is Gods own invention; or, if God had ſaid to fallen man, I ſee thou art in a loſt pitiful condition, but ſit down and conſider how I may do thee good, and not wrong my ſelf, how I may relieve thee, and not diſhonour my ſelf, ~~I will~~ freely do it. If God (I ſay) had given man a blank to write down what he would have done to bring this about, he could never have found it out ; but muſt have periſhed for ever in his ſin. The thought of a Ranſom in this way had never entred into the heart either of men or Angels, if God himſelf had not revealed it. Therefore the Apoſtle Peter having ſpoken of the great diligence of the old Prophets ſearching into and inquiring about that great myſtery, the way and means of mans ſalvation, concludes (1 Epiſt. 1. 12.) Which things the Angels deſire to look into. The word there uſed notes a curious prying into that which hath ſome veyled or ſecret rarity in it. We may conceive the Apoſtle in that word alluding to the Cherubims, which by Gods command, to Moſes, were made with their eyes looking down to the Mercy-ſeat or propitiatory in the Holy of holies (Exod. 25. 20.) figuring the Ranſom in the Text; yea and expreſſed by the ſame Hebrew word. The living Angels do that which thoſe repreſentative Angels ſeemed to do, they look earneſtly at the myſtery of our redemption made, or ranſom given by Jeſus Chriſt. There is ſuch an exquiſiteneſs in this invention, the deliverance of man by Chriſt, that the Angels deſire to look into it, even as men deſire to ſee rare inventions. And this exceedingly commends the wiſdom of God in our redemption, that it was a ſecret to the very glorious Angels. They did not know it, but as it was made known to them ; nor did God (as it ſeems) make it known to them firſtly or immediately, but it was revealed to them, occaſionally by the revelation of it firſt to the Church ; as the Apoſtle doth more then intimate, (Eph. 3. 10.) To the intent, that now unto principalities and powers in heavenly places (that is the holy Angels) might be known by the Church the manifold wiſdom of God. As if, had it not been for the light given to and ſpread abroad in the Church, the Angels had been in the dark to this day about that matter. And doubtleſs if the Angels did not gather up their knowledge of that myſtery by the miniſtery of the Apoſtles preaching it to the world, in a way of information, yet by their contemplation of what was done in the Church, and of the goodneſs of God to the Church, they ſaw as in a glaſs that manifold wiſdom of God which before they ſaw not, or were ignorant of. Now if the holy Angels knew not this myſtery, but as it was revealed, much leſs could man. We (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 2. 6, 7, 8, 9.) ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect : Yet not the wiſdom of this woald, nor of the Princes of this world, that come to nought. But we ſpeak the Wiſdom of God in a myſtery, &c. Which none of the Princes of this World know (who uſe to be the moſt knowing men in the World) for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. As if he had ſaid, Surely the Princes of the World would have adored, not reproached and crucified Chriſt, had they underſtood who he was, or the work which he came about. And therefore the Apoſtle calls it not only a myſtery, but a great myſtery, and that there is not the leaſt queſtion, but 'tis a great Myſtery. (1 Tim. 3. 16.) Without controverſie great is the Myſtery of goodlineſs, God manifeſt in the fleſh; this great Myſtery, which from the beginning of the World hath been kid in God (Eph. 3. 9.) that is in the counſel and Decree of God, hath been alſo ſome way or other revealed by God almoſt as ſoon as the world began; It was revealed to Adam by the promiſe of the Womans ſeed ; and to Abraham by promiſe, that in his Seed all the Nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed ; It was revealed to the Church of the Jews in Ceremonies and Propheſies, and it hath been revealed to the Church both of Jews and Gentiles by the Spirit in the preaching of the Word, ever ſince Chriſt paid this Ranſom to this day ; and it had been hidden to this day, if the Lord had not revealed it ; 'tis therefore the Lords invention.

Παρακύψαι.

Eccleſia ex Judæis pariter ac gentibus collecta, quaſi ſpeculum eſt in quo contemplantur Angeli mirificam Dei ſapientiam, quam anteà neſciebant. Calvin.

Let me add this by way of inference. We honour men that bring forth any rare invention. And if it be an invention which alſo produceth profit and advantage to mankind, how are the Authors of it admired, and their names recorded? All the inventions of the moſt refined wits in the world, are dull pieces to this invention, the redemption of man by Chriſt. And as there is the ſtamp of an infinite unchangeable wiſdom upon it ; ſo the profit which comes in by it to mankind is infinite and ineſtimable. How then ſhould we honour God, both for bringing this wonderful invention to light, and giving us the benefit of it freely ! It had been great mercy, if God had delivered us upon our finding out and propoſal of a way to him ; but he hath not only delivered us, but found out a way himſelf, and plotted how we might be delivered. What a glorious mercy is this ! When Darius ſaw how Daniel was inſnared by his act or decree, he was extreamly troubled, and (ſaith the Text, Dan. 6. 14.) he was ſore diſpleaſed with himſelf, and ſet his heart on Daniel to deliver him, and he laboured (beating his brains and ſtudying) till the going down of the Sun to deliver him, yet could not, but caſt he was to the hungry Lions, only he told him (verſ. 16.) Thy God whom thou ſerveſt continually, he will deliver thee. Darius could not find a ranſom, any means of deliverance for his Servant and great Favourite Daniel. But when we had brought our ſelves into a ſnare, and muſt have been caſt to the Lyons for ever, to be torn by them, the Lord brought forth this rare invention, a Ranſom, whereby we poor ſinners are delivered out of the mouth of the roaring Lion, who goeth about continually to devoure us.

Secondly, Inaſmuch as deliverance is got by ranſom,

Obſerve, Our deliverance is coſtly.

Souls are precious, they are dear ware; Blood, and that the Blood of Chriſt is their ranſom; (Matth. 20.28. Rom. 3.2,5. Eph. 1.7. Col. 1.14. Heb. 9.12. Rev. 5.9.) in compariſon of which all the treaſures of this world are traſh, our Gold and Silver corruptible, and our very righteouſneſs a corrupt thing. Deliverances are obtained three ways.

Firſt, By power or plain force; thus Abraham delivered his Nephew Lot when he was carryed Captive (Gen. 14. 14.) He armed his trained ſervants, born in his houſe three hundred and eighteen, and reſcued him. I may ſay, the Lord Jeſus hath delivered us thus, even by force and power, he hath beaten all our enemies, and having broken and ſpoyled principalities and powers, he made a ſhew of them openly, triumphing over them in it (his Croſs ſpoken of in the former verſe) or in himſelf; that is, in his own perſonal power, not by any aid or forreign aſſiſtance received from men or Angels.

Secondly, Deliverance is obtained by price or payment. When our friends or country-men are taken Captives by Turks or others, we cannot ſend an Army to reſcue them, but uſually we do it by ranſom; we buy them again out of the enemies hand, or out of bondage. Jeſus Chriſt hath delivered us, not only by power, but by price, it was not (as hath been already ſhewed) by Gold or Silver, but by his own moſt precious blood, (1 Pet. 1. 18.) Jeſus Chriſt hath delivered us out of the ſoul-deſtroying hand of Satan by force, but he delivers us out of the ſin-revenging hand of his Father by price. Chriſt owed the Devil nothing (nor do we) but blows, but having undertaken our cauſe, he owed his Father as much as our debt and deliverance from it amounted to, a vaſt Sum, yet he had enough to anſwer it to the utmoſt farthing, and did, and ſo delivered us.

There is a third way of deliverance, and that is by ſupplication and interceſſion, which may be conſidered two ways, Firſt, by our own prayers and ſupplications; Secondly, by the prayers and ſupplications of others; which prayers of others are properly called interceſſions. The interceſſion of a man with man may deliver him from the wrath of a man. And the interceſſion of a man with God, hath wrought the temporal deliverance of ſome both perſons, and Nations; and therefore when the Lord was reſolved not to ſpare his people, he forbad the interceſſion of the Prophet (Jer. 14.11.) Pray not for this people for their good: And he profeſſed (Jer. 15. 1.) Though Moſes and Samuel (thoſe two mighty Advocates) ſtood before me (praying he means for them) yet my mind could not be towards this people, caſt them out of my ſight; In that God would not deliver his people upon their interceſſion, is an argument that he often doth. But 'tis the interceſſion of Chriſt alone which carryeth it with God (and that always carryeth it, for the Father always heareth him, that is, granteth his requeſts) for the deliverance of his people both from temporal, ſpiritual and eternal evils. This interceſſion of Chriſt is the fruit of his blood ſhed, or of the ranſom paid down for us. For as his blood purchaſeth our deliverance, ſo by his interceſſion it is given in or applyed to us. We have the impetration of our pardon by Chriſts ſufferings, and the application of it, by Chriſt interceding for us. So then, we are delivered both by power, and price, and prayer, in ſeveral and diſtinct reſpects; But the preſent Text ſpeaks of deliverance only by a price, I have found a ranſom, I am well paid, ſaith God, for mans deliverance. This ranſom every poor ſoul may plead before the Lord, for his deliverance both from ſickneſs, death and Hell. He that hath nothing to offer to the Lord (as indeed the beſt have nothing of their own worth the offering, and if they offer any thing of their own, of how much worth ſoever it may ſeem to be, it will not paſs nor be accepted, he (I ſay) that hath nothing of his own to offer) yet may tell him he ſhall be well paid; he may tell God he ſhall have more by ſaving him, then by damning him. If he damn him he ſhall have but his own blood (the blood of a creature) for ſatisfaction; but if he ſave him, he ſhall have the blood of his Son, the blood of God, as a ranſom for his ſalvation.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Though the Goſpel was not clearly and fully revealed in thoſe elder times, yet it was then ſavingly revealed.

How doth the grace of God ſhine forth in mans deliverance by a ranſom, in this Scripture; Here is nothing ſaid of deliverance from ſickneſs by medicines, but by a ranſom; and if they knew that deliverance from a diſeaſe muſt come in by a ranſom, how much more, that deliverance from damnation muſt come in that way? The old Patriarchs had the knowledg of Chriſt to come, and not only was there a knowledg of him to come in that nation and Church of the Jews, but the light ſcattered abroad, the Land of Uz had it, Job had it, as hath appeared from ſeveral paſſages of this Book, Elihu had it as appeareth by this.

Fourthly, Obſerve, Not only our eternal deliverances, but even our temporal deliverances and mercies, are purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt.

A believer doth not eat a bit of bread, but he hath it by vertue of the purchaſe of Chriſt; Chriſt hath bought all good for us, and Chriſt hath bought us out of all evil. Chriſt hath not only purchaſt deliverance from Hell, and ſalvation in Heaven for us, but he hath purchaſt deliverance from a ſick bed, and freedom from bondage to men for us. (Zech. 9.11.) As for thee alſo (ſaith the Lord) by the blood of thy Covenant (that is, the Covenant which I have made with thee) I have ſent forth thy Priſoners out of the pit wherein was no water; That is, from the Babyloniſh Captivity. The Jews were delivered from corporal ſlavery, as well as ſpiritual, by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo are the Covenant people of God to this day. The blood of the Covenant ſerves to all purpoſes, for the good things of this life, as well as of that which is to come. Nothing elſe can do us good to purpoſe, or deliver us from evil but the blood of Chriſt. (Pſal. 49.7,8.) They that truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ranſom for him. In ſome caſes, as Solomon ſaith, (Prov. 13.8.) The ranſom of a mans life are his riches. As a mans riches do often endanger his life (all the fault of ſome men for which they have ſuffered as deep as death, hath been only this, they were rich) ſo a man by his riches may redeem his forfeited or endangered life, he may buy off the wrath of man, and ſo ranſom his life by his riches. But all the riches in the world cannot buy his life out of the hand of ſickneſs; though a man would lay out all his ſubſtance, and ſpend all that he hath upon Phyſitians (as the poor woman in the Goſpel did) yet that could not do it. We need the blood of Jeſus Chriſt to help us out of a ſick bed, and from temporal ſufferings as well as from Hell and everlaſting ſufferings. And the more ſpiritual any are, the more they have recourſe to the blood of Chriſt for all they would have, whether it be freedom from this or that evil, or enjoyment of this or that good.

Therefore, Firſt, When we hear of a ranſom let us remember that we are all naturally captives. Here is a ranſom for our Souls and a ranſom for our bodies, we are ranſomed from Hell, and ranſomed from death, ſurely then, we are (through ſin) made Captives to all theſe.

Secondly, In that the ranſom is expreſt by a word, that notes hiding or covering, it ſhould mind us, that, Jeſus Chriſt by his blood (which is our ranſom) hath covered all our bloody ſins; and ſurely the blood of our ſins will appear not only to our ſhame, but to our confuſion, unleſs the blood of Chriſt cover them.

Thirdly, We may hence infer, The Lord ſhall be no loſer by ſaving the worſt of ſinners. His Son hath taken care for that, he hath undertaken to ſee his Honour ſaved, and his Juſtice ſatiſfied.

Fourthly, In all your outward afflictions and ſickneſſes; apply to the blood of Chriſt for healing, for help and deliverance.

Fifthly, Being delivered from going down to the pit, from death by ſickneſs, bleſs Chriſt for his blood. We are reſcued from the arreſt of death, from Deaths Sergeant, ſickneſs, by the blood of Chriſt. And remember that as Chriſt ranſoms us from going down to the grave when we are ſick, ſo Chriſt will ranſom us from the power of the grave when we are dead. (Hoſea 13.14.) I will ranſom them from the power of the grave. Which though it were primarily meant of the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon, where they ſeemed to be not only dead but buryed; yet the Apoſtle applyeth it clearly to the ranſoming of the body dead indeed and laid in the grave, by the power of Chriſt at the general reſurrection (1 Cor. 15. 54.) For then ſhall be brought to paſs that ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up of victory. O death where is thy ſting? O grave where is thy Victory? Yea Chriſt hath ranſomed all thoſe from going down to the pit of Hell, who take hold of his ranſom by believing. See that you have an intereſt in this ranſom, elſe you will never have deliverance from going down to that pit. We read not all the Scripture over of any ranſom to deliver thoſe, who are once gone down to that bottomleſs pit. They that are in the grave ſhall be ranſomed and recovered by the power of Chriſt, but they that go into Hell ſhall never be ranſomed from thence. Take hold of this ranſom that ye may have full deliverance, both from ſickneſs leading to death here, and from Hell which is the ſecond death hereafter.

VERS. 25, 26.

His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a childs; he ſhall return to the days of his youth.

He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render unto man his righteouſneſs.

In theſe two verſes Elihu proceeds, to ſhew the perfecting of the ſick mans recovery, the foundation of which was laid in the Lords graciouſneſs to him, ſpoken of in the former verſe; and the Declaration of it in that word or warrant, which went out from God to the meſſenger about his deliverance from going down to the pit.

This mercy or recovery in the full extent of it, hath a two-fold reſpect; Firſt, to his body; Secondly, to his Soul.

The mercy as it reſpects his body, is laid down in the 25. Verſe; His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a childs; he ſhall return as in the days of his youth.

The mercy which reſpects his Soul, or the ſtate of his inward man, is laid down in the 26. Verſe; He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render unto him his righteouſneſs.

In this recovery of his Soul-ſtate, we may further conſider. Firſt, the cauſes of it.

Firſt, The Inſtrumental cauſe, Prayer; He ſhall pray unto God.

Secondly, The principal or efficient cauſe of it, together with the firſt moving cauſe, The kindneſs of God; He will be favourable unto him.

Secondly, The conſequence of this his renewed Soul-ſtate; He ſhall ſee his face with joy.

Thirdly, The matter wherein this joyful ſtate doth conſiſt, in the cloſe of the 26. Verſe; For he will render to man his righteouſneſs.

So much for the ſcope and parts of theſe two verſes; which ſhew the bleſſed iſſue, which God gives this diſtreſſed and ſick man from his afflictions and ſorrows.

Verſ. 25. His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs.

By fleſh he means the natural fleſh of the body; this fleſh ſhall be freſh, yea freſher, and not only freſher then it was before he fell ſick in his man-hood, but then it was in his child hood, freſher then a Childs. The word which we render comparatively, freſher, ſignifies to wax ſoft or tender. 'Tis no where read in the whole Bible but here. Grammarians ſay, it is compounded of an Hebrew word, which ſignifies to be green or flouriſhing (Chap. 8. 16.) and of a Syriack word which ſignifies to increaſe and grow as a plant; we render it as noting the man mending apace (as ſome ſick men upon recovery do) in his ſtrength and health. He ſhall be freſh-coloured, who before was pale and wan, he ſhall be fullfleſhed, who before was fallen and lean; ſo that, when he ſaith, His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs, 'Tis an Elegant hyperbolical expreſſion, to ſhew his perfect recovery from that mortal ſickneſs to health. As if he had ſaid; God will reſtore him ſo, that there ſhall be no ſcar, nor print, no dregs, nor appearance of his former diſeaſe ſeen upon him. We know how tender and ſoft, how delicate and fair, the fleſh of a little Child is, how ſweet his countenance is, how full of good blood his veins are, how healthy and ſtrong (as to his time) his whole body is. Thus it ſhall be with this ſick man; His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs; he ſhall be as if he were new-born, or entred a ſecond time upon the ſtage of this world. Our ſpiritual eſtate of renovation by Chriſt is ſet forth as a youthful, or child-like ſtate, as to the purity and perfection of it (Eph. 5. 27.) Chriſt ſhall preſent us to himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing. The Church hath her ſin-ſpots and wrinkles now in her militancy; but when Chriſt ſhall preſent the Church at laſt triumphantly to himſelf, then as himſelf was ever without ſpot or wrinkle, ſo ſhall the Church be. Her fleſh ſhall indeed be freſher then a Childs, being perfectly recovered out of her ſpiritual ſickneſs. And thus, in proportion, Elihu aſſures the penitent ſick man, that, when his peace is renewed with God, and his ſpirit ſet right for God, his very fleſh ſhall be without ſpot or wrinkle, freſher then a Childs. The latter part of the verſe bears the ſame ſence;

רטפש Mollitur, recreatus fuit, alibi quam hic non legitur. Ex צשוב quod virentem ſignificat ac vegetum(ut cap. 8. 16.) & פש quod ſyriacè ſignificat creſcere, q. d. revireſcet plantarum more & germinum. Merc.

Notat perfectiſſimum ſanitatis modum, qui nullum tranſacti morbi veſtigium relinquit. Mert.

He ſhall return as in the days of his youth.

That is, he ſhall not barely recover his health, and get upon his legs again (as we ſay) he ſhall not meerly eſcape death and the grave, but he ſhall have an addition of bodily ability, he ſhall, as it were, be young again. As ſickneſs makes a young man look old, ſo recovery from ſickneſs makes the old man look young. That's to return to the days of his youth.

Hence Note; Firſt, Bodily beauty, health and ſtrength are the gift of God.

He gives them, and takes them away at pleaſure, or having taken them away, he can give them back when he pleaſeth. He kills and he makes alive, he bringeth down to the Grave, and bringeth up, as Hannah ſaid in her Song (1 Sam. 2. 6.) How low ſoever a man is brought by ſickneſs, either proper or metaphorical, the Lord is able to raiſe him up again. We read (Verſ. 21) in how pitiful a plight, the ſick man was, how rather like a carkaſs then a living man he lookt, His fleſh was conſumed, that it could not be ſeen, and his bones which were not ſeen, ſtood out; as much as to ſay, He was nothing but ſkin and bones; yet, when in that caſe all hopes were gone, and all natural helps failed, it was no hard matter with God to cure him. When the skill of the Phyſician, and the vertue of medicines fail, the power of God faileth not. As it is in reference to thoſe outward dangers and deſperate exigents, which we meet with in this world by enemies and perſecutors, when we look upon our ſelves as dead men, when all hope of deliverance ſeems paſt and gone, then the Lord always can and often doth deliver. The Apoſtle gives us his experience of it (2 Cor. 1. 9, 10.) We had the ſentence of death in our ſelves; he ſpake not thus in regard of ſickneſs, but of trouble and perſecution; As if he had ſaid, The malice and wrath of our enemies was ſuch, that we thought we ſhould never eſcape, We had the ſentence of death in our ſelves, but providence ſuffered it to be ſo, that we ſhould not truſt in our ſelves, but in God who raiſeth the dead. As it is (I ſay) in ſuch dangers, ſo in dangerous deadly ſickneſſes; when a poor creature hath the ſentence of death in himſelf, when he makes no other reckoning but to die, as good King Hezekiah ſaid of himſelf in his ſickneſs (Iſa. 38. 13.) I reckoned till morning, that, as a Lyon, ſo will he break all my bones, from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me; yet then as in his caſe, ſo in many caſes the Lord ſtretcheth forth a healing hand and takes the ſick man up again, to continue in the land of the living.

Secondly, From the way of expreſſing this, in alluſion to a Child or a youth.

Note, God he can quickly make the greateſt changes in nature, either for the better or for the worſe. He can turn youth into old age, and old age into youth.

That is, he can make a young or a healthy man weak as an old man, and an old or ſickly man ſtrong as a young man; and as it is with natural, ſo with political bodys, as with perſons, ſo with nations. A nation that is flouriſhing in its youth, heat, ſtrength and glory, rich and full of peace and plenty, God can bring an oldneſs upon it, and cauſe it to decline every day. The Prophet ſpake of the ſtate of Iſrael in this notion (Hoſ. 7. 9.) Gray hairs are here and there upon them, and they perceive it not; they thought themſelves to be in a very youthful flouriſhing condition (as a ſtate) but the Lord brought gray hairs, that is, they were decaying, withering, weakning, and became a decrepid nation; And when a nation is gray-haired, old and withered, he can make it youthful, he can recover the honour and power of it, and cauſe the dread of it to fall upon the neighbouring nations round about. He turns a land into a wilderneſs, which before was as the garden of God; And he can change that land into a garden of God which now is a deſolate wilderneſs. The unchangeable Lord is viſible and glorious in all theſe changes. The health and ſtrength both of the body politick and natural are at his diſpoſe. He can bring a decay upon what is built, and repair what is decayed, whether in nations or perſons. When the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle is ready to drop down into the grave, and crumble into duſt, God by a word ſpeaking, repaireth it to as much beauty and ſtrength, as when, the firſt ſtone being laid, the top-ſtone was ſet up. When Naaman had once ſubmitted to and obeyed the Prophets counſel, which at firſt he deſpiſed, and waſhed in Jordan, His fleſh (ſaith the Text, 2 Kings 5. 14.) came again like unto the fleſh of a little child. The holy Pſalmiſt charged his own Soul to praiſe the Lord, and all that was within him to bleſs his holy name (Pſal. 103. 1, 5.) Who had ſatisfied his mouth with good things, ſo that his youth was renewed as the Eagle. This renovation of his youth may be underſtood three ways; Firſt, as to his natural ſtate, or bodyly ſtrength. Secondly, as to his civil ſtate or worldly ſucceſſes, as to his honour and kingly renown. Thirdly, as to his ſpiritual ſtate, or the hightning of his gifts, graces, and comforts. 'Tis probable, David had found a declenſion in all theſe, and at laſt through the goodneſs of God and his bleſſing upon him, the renewing of them all from that oldneſs to a youthfulneſs again, like that of Eagles. We find the ſame alluſion in the Prophet (Iſa. 40. 31.) They that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up as with Eagles wings. Some Naturaliſts ſay, the Eagle reneweth her ſtrength by ſucking blood when her ſtomach is ſo weak that ſhe cannot feed upon the fleſh of her prey. Saints indeed renew their ſtrength as the Eagle, while by faith they ſuck the blood of Jeſus Chriſt; and they get cure of their own weakneſſes, while they believingly lay hold upon his ſtrength.

Thirdly, We heard in the former Verſe of a divine Warrant iſſued out for this mans recovery; Then he is gracious to him, and ſaith, deliver him. Here we have the Warrant executed; His fleſh ſhall be freſher then a Childs.

> Hence Obſerve, The commands and warrants of God are effectual, they ſhall be obeyed and made good to Man.

If God ſay, deliver him from a ſick bed, he ſhall be delivered; I will work (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 43. 13, 14.) And who ſhall let it? For your ſake I have ſent to Babylon, and have brought down all their Nobles, or bars, as the margin reads it; I will have it done, I will break all thoſe Nobles who are as bars in the way of my peoples deliverance. So when the Lord ſends his warrant for the delivering of a ſick man, he will break all thoſe bars and bands by which diſeaſes and ſickneſſes hold him as a priſoner in his bed. Nothing can ſtand againſt the word of God: as by a word ſpeaking he gave the creature a being, when it had none (The Lord only ſpake the word, Let there be light, let there be a firmament, &c. And it was ſo) Thus alſo the word or warrant of God reneweth a wel-being to thoſe, with whom it is worſt, or a comfortable life to thoſe, who are compaſſed about with the ſorrows of death. The word of God prevails over all, or is effectual to every purpoſe (Pſal. 33. 9.) He ſpake and it was done, he commanded and it ſtood faſt.

Further, In this reſtoring of the ſick, we have a ſhadow of the reſurrection. The raiſing of a dying man from his bed, is like the raiſing of the dead from the grave. The ſpring of the year is a ſhadow of the reſurrection, becauſe then the earth returns to her youth, and is freſh as a Child. In winter all things are dead and deſolate, their gloſs and beauty is gone; but then cometh the ſpring and all revives again, the face of the earth looks freſh, corn and graſs, trees and plants flouriſh and put forth their buds and bloſſoms. Now, what the ſpring of the year is to the body of the earth, the ſame is the return of health to the body of man; In both we have an exemplar of the reſurrection, as alſo in the regeneration or new birth of the Soul, by the power of the holy Ghoſt. For till then we are, like old ſickly men, in the old man, yea we are dead. But no ſooner doth the Spirit bring us forth by a ſecond creation into the life of the new man, but we become in ſpirit freſh like Children, our youth returns to us again; that is, we return to that ſtate wherein we were firſt created and ſet up by God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; yea into a better and ſurer ſtate then that. Man through grace is not only as he was in the firſt day of his creation, but better; He returns to the day of his youth, and receives ſuch a youth as ſhall never decay into old age; yea the older he is in nature, the younger, that is, the ſtronger and more beautiful he ſhall be in grace. He ſhall (according to that promiſe, Pſal. 92. 14.) Still bring forth fruit in old age, he ſhall be fat and flouriſhing. This renewed youthfulneſs and flouriſhing condition of the reſtored ſick man in ſpirituals, is ſpecially and fully ſet forth in the next verſe.

For Elihu having ſhewed the recovery of the ſick mans body, he proceeds to the recovery of his Soul, which eminently returns to the days of its youth, both in the puttings forth of or exerciſing the grace of God received, and in receiving more grace, favour, and comfort from God, as will appear in opening the words.

Verſ. 26. He ſhall pray to God, and he will be favourable to him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy, for he will render to man his righteouſneſs.

Elihu gave us, before, one means of the ſick ſinful mans recovery from his bodyly and Soul ſickneſs, that was the counſel and inſtruction given in by the meſſenger, the interpreter, one of a thouſand. And here he ſets down another means by which he is reſtored to both, eſpecially to the ſweetneſs of both.

He ſhall pray unto God.] The word here uſed to pray, ſignifieth not barely to pray, or put up requeſts to God; 'Tis a word with an emphaſis, implying the Multiplying of prayer, and that not the multiplying of prayer ſo much by number, as by weight; the pouring forth or multiplying of ſtrong prayers, or, as it is ſaid of Chriſt, In the days of his fleſh (Heb. 5. 7.) the offering up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears. There may be a multiplying of weak inſignificant words in the ears of God by prayer; But the faithful people of God, through the Spirit, pour out many ſtrong words in prayer (as Chriſt did in the days of his fleſh) to him who is able to ſave them from death or danger, and give them life. When Elihu ſaith, He ſhall pray, he intends ſuch prayers, even the urgency, importunity, or vehemency of the Soul in prayer. When Iſaac ſaw his wife Rebecca was long barren (he was forty years old before he married, and many years being elapſed in marriage, there was no appearance of Children) Then (ſaith the Text, Gen. 25. 21.) Iſaac intreated the Lord for his wife, becauſe ſhe was barren, and the Lord was intreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. It cannot be imagined that Iſaac being ſo holy and gracious a man, had not prayed for that mercy before; Doubtleſs he prayed that God would fulfil the promiſe to his Father Abraham in giving him a Child: but when he ſaw the promiſe ſo long delayed, or ſtick ſo long in the birth, then he intreated the Lord ('tis this word) he poured out many and ſtrong prayers. The word is uſed again concerning Manoah, after his wife had received a promiſe from the Lord of bearing a Son, afterwards called Sampſon (Judg. 13. 8.) Then Manoah intreated the Lord, and ſaid, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didſt ſend, come again unto us, &c. Fearing they might not fully follow the inſtructions given his wife for the education of their ſon, he earneſtly begged of the Lord further direction in that matter. That prophecy either of the Gentiles to be converted, or of the return of the diſperſed Jews, expreſſeth them by this word (Zeph. 3. 10.) From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, my ſuppliants ſhall come, even the daughter of my diſperſed ſhall bring mine offerings. As if the Prophet had ſaid; They ſhall ſpend themſelves in ſupplications at their return, they ſhall come with ſtrong petitions, with mighty prayers, as making prayer their buſineſs. They ſhall not come with frozen affections and cold requeſts, but with hearts flaming up in the ardency of their deſires, and urgency of their ſupplications to the Lord. That's the force of the word; He ſhall pray; As if Elihu had ſaid, He ſhall not come with dead-hearted prayers and petitions, (as many do in their ſickneſſes and ſorrows) nor with a formal Lord have mercy upon me, and help me; but he ſhall make a buſineſs of it, he ſhall pray to purpoſe, he ſhall pray with his whole ſtrength. In which ſence the Lord bid Ananias go to Saul, afterwards Paul (Acts 9.11.) For behold he prayeth; intimating that he had never prayed all his days before; nor indeed had he (though being brought up a ſtrict Phariſee, he was much in the form of prayer) ever prayed in power before.

He ſhall pray.] Some underſtand this, He, relating to the meſſenger praying for the ſick man, He ſhall pray, and God will be favourable to him. That's a truth, 'tis the work and duty of the meſſenger to pray for, as well as adviſe the ſick man. But I conceive rather the perſon here intended praying, is the ſick man for himſelf, who after he hath been counſelled, directed, and adviſed by the meſſenger what to do, applyeth himſelf to the doing of it.

Further, Some, who agree that the ſick man is the perſon praying, yet underſtand it of prayer after his recovery; who finding himſelf healed and ſtrengthened, prayeth unto God for grace, or for a right uſe of his health and ſtrength. But I rather underſtand it of his prayer unto God in the time of his affliction; who when his ſins and tranſgreſſions have been laid before him by the meſſenger, and his Soul-ſoars ſearched to the bottom, and faithfully dealt with, and ſo brought to a ſight of himſelf, and of his ſin, with the ſad effects of it viſible upon his pained and conſumptive body, is then ſtirred to ſeek the Lord, and intreat his favour; He ſhall pray unto God;

Hence Note, Sickneſs is a prayer ſeaſon.

Prayer is a duty never out of ſeaſon, yet at ſome times more in ſeaſon, and moſt in ſeaſon in times of affliction; Is any man afflicted, let him pray, (James 5.13.) And among all afflictions the affliction of ſickneſs ſeems to be a ſpecial ſeaſon calling for this duty. Therefore in the 14. verſe of the ſame Chapter, aſſoon as he had ſaid, is any man afflicted, let him pray, it followeth, is any ſick among you, let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over him; 'Tis high time for us when ſick to look about us, to call in prayer-aid, or help from others in prayer; yet 'tis not enough for the afflicted, or the ſick to get others to pray for them, they muſt pray for themſelves: ſome put off the duty of prayer to others, and think it ſufficeth if they ſend Bills to Miniſters or move friends to pray for them. I know ſickneſs indiſpoſeth to prayer, bodily pain and weakneſs hinder continuance and abiding in the duty; but that doth not excuſe the ſick from praying for themſelves. To deſire others to pray for us in bodily ſickneſs, and neglect it our ſelves is an ill ſymptome of a ſick Soul; yea to deſire others in that caſe to pray for us, when we have no heart to pray for our ſelves, is too clear a prognoſtick that their prayers will not profit us, nor be prevailing for us. Pharaoh, when under thoſe dreadful plagues, could ſend for Moſes and Aaron more then once, and ſaid unto them, intreat the Lord for me, (Exod. 9.27,28. Chap. 10.16,17.) But we read not that he intreated the Lord for himſelf. Simon Magus when ſtruck with the terrible threatnings of Peter, ſaid, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me. (Acts 8.24.) But we read not that he prayed for himſelf. The prayers of others are rarely beneficial to any, unleſs they either pray or have a deſire to pray for themſelves. Elihu repreſents the ſick man praying for himſelf, he ſhall pray

Unto God.] There's the object of prayer.

Hence Note, Prayer in ſickneſs, and in all other caſes muſt be directed unto God, and to him only.

Divine addreſſes are fit for none but God; For Firſt, none are worthy of this honour but God; Prayer is ſo great a part of that honour and worſhip which is due to God, that it is often put for his whole worſhip. Mine houſe (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 56.7.) ſhall be called an houſe of prayer for all Nations. Secondly, none can hear, that is, anſwer prayer but God; there is no help to be had but in him. As it is his glory to be prayed to, and ſuch a glory as he will not part with to any other, ſo it is in vain to pray to any other. In vain is Salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of Mountains (that is, from the greateſt worldly Powers) truly in the Lord our God is the Salvation of Iſrael, (Jerem. 3.23.) God only was David's Hills (Pſal. 121.1,2.) I lift my eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help; what theſe hills were, himſelf explains in the next verſe; My help cometh from the Lord who made Heaven and Earth. Baals Prieſts called upon Baal, they cryed Baal hear us, but ſaith the Text, there was neither voice, nor any that anſwered (1 Kings 18.26.) It is not only ſinful, but ſenſeleſs to pray to any other then God alone. That popiſh Doctrin of invocation to Saints and Angels, is not only a will-worſhip, but folly and dotage.

Fourthly, He ſhall pray, &c.

Hence Obſerve, If we would have any mercy from God, we muſt ask it.

God is ready to give, but he looks to be intreated, and he will be intreated: What God hath promiſed to do for us, his doing of it muſt be obtained by prayer. Working prayer, worketh the promiſes to their iſſue, yea prayer worketh the prophecies, whether of ſalvation upon Sion, or ruin upon Babylon to their iſſue. Promiſes and propheſies are the expreſs will of God, and ſhall certainly be fulfilled in their ſeaſon; yet if we deſire their fulfilling, we muſt pray that he would fulfil them; and 'tis a token for good that God is about to fulfil them, when the hearts of his people are drawn out much in prayer for their fulfilling. There are ſome mercies, in the promiſes, rightly called preventing mercies, they come upon us before we ask; ſuch is the mercy of our vocation, converſion or turning to God; we are naturally ſo far from praying while we are in the ſtate of nature, that we are continually blaſpheming or diſhonouring the name of God; but, as for perſons converted, (who are eminently called heirs of the promiſe, that is, of the good in the promiſe) if they will have any good out of a promiſe, they muſt ask it. When the Prophet had declared many propheſies of good and great and glorious things which God would do for his people, he concludes with this direction from the Lord. (Ezek. 36.37.) I will yet for this be enquired of by the houſe of Iſrael to do it for them. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will not do theſe things unasked, as you look I ſhould do theſe things for you, ſo I look you ſhould pray unto me that they may be done. A promiſe was made to Abraham (Gen. 22.17.) that his ſeed ſhould be multiplyed as the Stars of Heaven; now might not Iſaac his Son have ſaid, God hath promiſed me children, what need I pray for them? But Iſaac knew better, he knew that the promiſe was to be brought to the birth by prayer, therefore he intreated the Lord that he might have Children.

Fifthly, from theſe words He ſhall pray compared with the next, and he (that is God) will be favourable to him;

Obſerve, The Lord is ready to hear when we pray, ready to give when we ask.

As prayer is honourable and delightful to God, ſo fruitful to man. Ask and it ſhall be given you, ſeek and you ſhall find (Matth. 7.7.) He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him. Prayer ſhall not be loſt, nor vaniſh into air. There was never any faithful prayer loſt; though the prayers of many have not been anſwered in kind, that is, they have not had the very thing they asked for; yet they have had an anſwer to their prayers; and though prayer be not always anſwered in our time, yet there is a time wherein all faithful prayers ſhall be anſwered; one age reaps the fruit of thoſe prayers which another age hath ſown. The ſeed time is one age, the harveſt in another. Latter Generations get good by the prayers of the former. Though we who pray ſee not the fruit of it, yet many ſhall find the fruit of it; and how often doth the fruit of prayer appear preſently, how often doth the anſwer come in upon the very putting up of the requeſt? (Iſa. 65.24.) Before they call, I will anſwer, and while as they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear. While the word is their mouth, the mercy ſhall be put into their hand. While the Church (Acts 12. 5. 16.)

5. 16.) was praying, Peter came in among them. As if God had ſaid, there's your prayer. What the Prophet Eliſha ſaid (2 Kings 6. 33.) of the meſſenger ſent to apprehend him; Is not the ſound of his Maſters feet behind him? The ſame may we ſay ſomtimes of this meſſenger, holy and fervent prayer, is not the ſound of the mercy prayed for at the very heels of it? Thus cloſe doth Elihu put the ſick mans prayer and the anſwer of God, he ſhall pray unto God,

And he will be favourable unto him.

That is, he ſhall have a gracious and a ſpeedy anſwer; he will be favourable unto him, or, he will accept him, as Mr. Broughton renders; 'Tis a very comfortable word, it notes not only to wiſh well to, or to be at peace, but to be well pleaſed with another, yea to be delighted, and take pleaſure in him. 'Tis not barely, to be appeaſed and reconciled, to lay down wrath and diſpleaſure conceived againſt a man, but it notes much ſweetneſs of ſpirit towards him, and full content or complacency in him (Pſal. 149.4.) The Lord taketh pleaſure in his people, (they are as the joy of his heart) he will beautifie the meek with ſalvation; he will not only ſave them, but adorn them with ſalvation; they ſhall not only be delivered (after they have layen among the pots, (Pſal. 68. 13.) from the blackneſs and filth of their adverſity, but they ſhall have a beauty put upon them, or (as it followeth in that Pſalm laſt cited) They ſhall be as the wings of a Dove covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow Gold. God will be favourable to them, that is, he will give them favours to wear for him he will put marks of honour upon them, they ſhall not only be benifited, but beautified and crowned with Salvation.

God expreſſed that higheſt favour and moſt indeared affection which he bare to his own Son, as ſerving him, by no better nor more emphatical word then this (Iſa. 42.1.) Behold my ſervant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my Soul delighteth. What is or can be more delightful to God then his Son? And what can be more comfortable to man, then to hear and know, that God delighteth in him, and bears favour to him (through his Son) with the ſame affection as he doth to his only begotten Son? He will be favourable unto him.

Whence Note, Firſt, God is well pleaſed with, he is favourable to, and delighted in an humble ſinner.

When a ſinner is brought upon his knees and becomes a ſuppliant, when as he is laid low by affliction, ſo he lyeth low in prayer and ſupplication, then the Lord will be favourable to him, and ſhew his delight in him. The Lord delighteth not in the ſtrength of the Horſe, he taketh not pleaſure in the legs of a man (Pſal. 147.10,11.) No man is favoured by God, becauſe of his outward favour, becauſe he hath a beautiful face, or ſtrong clean limbs, yea not only hath the Lord no pleaſure in any mans legs, but not in any mans brains, how reaching ſoever, nor in any mans wit how quick ſoever, nor in any mans judgment how deep ſoever, nor in any mans tongue how eloquent or well ſpoken ſoever, but the Lord taketh pleaſure in them that fear him, in thoſe that hope in his mercy; in thoſe that walk humbly with him, and call upon him. Let me (ſaith Chriſt to his Spouſe, Cant. 2.14.) hear thy voyce for it is ſweet; he means it not of an artificial ſinging voyce, but of a ſpiritual praying voyce. That's the muſick which the Church makes for Chriſt. Nothing is ſo tunable nor takes the ear and heart of Chriſt, like the voyce of prayer and praiſe from a gracious heart. All the beauties and rarities both of perſons and things are dull and flat, yea weariſom and loathſom to God in compariſon of a gracious, honeſt, humble Soul. Princes have their favourites (they are according to the language of this Text) favourable to ſome above many, either becauſe they are beautiful and goodly perſons, or becauſe they are men of excellent ſpeech, prudence and comporment. All godly men are Gods Favourites, he is favourable to them not only above many men in the world, but above all men of this world, who have their portion in this life; And he therefore favours them; becauſe they are the purchaſe of his Son, and the workmanſhip of his Spirit, convincing them of, and humbling them for their ſins, as alſo creating them after God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. Such ſhall be his Favourites.

Secondly, Conſider the coherence or dependance of theſe words, He ſhall call unto God, and he will be favourable unto him. Whereas, before, all his complainings and outcryes ſtood him in no ſtead, now being humbled effectually, and taking hold of the righteouſneſs ſhewed and offered him by the Meſſenger of God, he no ſooner makes ſuit to God but is heard.

Hence Note, God firſt ſhews regard to the perſon, then to the offering, to prayers and ſervices.

This truth may be underſtood two ways, Firſt, in reference to the ſtate of grace. When Abel and Cain brought their ſacrifices or offerings, God had reſpect to Abel and his offering, but to Cain and his offering had no reſpect, (Gen. 4. 4, 5.) Abel was in a ſtate of grace, Cain was not, ſo the Apoſtle ſtates their caſe, (Heb. 11.4.) By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice then Cain, by which he obtained witneſs that he (his perſon) was righteous, God teſtifying of his gifts; and what did he teſtifie? Surely that his gifts were brought in faith, and were preſented from a principle of grace, which Cain had not; and therefore God did not approvingly teſtifie of his gifts. Till we cloſe with God by faith, God doth not cloſe with our ſervices by acceptance. Secondly, as this is true in reference to the ſtate of grace, ſo in reference to ſomewhat in the preſent actings or diſpoſitions of thoſe who are gracious. 'Tis poſſible for a godly man to act ſo ſinfully, and to be ſo ill diſpoſed to the frame of his heart, that God may ſeem to deny acceptation to his prayers, and ſervices. David ſaid (Pſal. 66.18.) If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. And God told the Jews, his Covenant people, (Iſa. 1. 15.) When ye make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood. Thus while they who have a ſtate intereſt in Chriſt, walk unworthy of it, they are under the frowns of God, and his diſ-acceptation of all their duties, till they renew their repentance and humble themſelves. And I conceive this was the caſe of the ſick man in the Text (in whom doubtleſs, he aimed at Job) whom Elihu granted to be a godly man, yet under great diſtempers of ſpirit, which muſt be healed and removed before he could ſo call upon or pray unto God, as he would be favourable to him, or give him teſtimony of his favour. Thus we ſee, in both theſe references, how the perſon of a man muſt be reſpected and in favour before his prayers can. For as we can have no benefit by the interceſſion of Chriſt, till we accept his perſon, ſo God will not give us any benefit by our ſupplications, till himſelf accepteth our perſons, which he doth only in Chriſt. Many would be ſaved by Chriſt, they would be pardoned and get to Heaven, they would enjoy the benefits and priviledges which he hath purchaſed for his people, but they neglect Chriſt himſelf; nor do they think of cloſing with his perſon. Now, I ſay, as unleſs we have reſpect to the perſon of Chriſt, and deſire union with him, we have nothing to do with his benefits; ſo unleſs God hath reſpect to our perſons, we get no benefit, no anſwer of our prayers.

Thirdly, Note, To have the favour of God, or to be accepted with him, is the top and ſum of all deſireable favours.

'Tis the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and laſt of all other favours, to find God favourable to us; if God be favourable to us, it matters not much who frowns upon us, or what foul weather we meet with in this world. And, as to be in his favour ſhould be the chief of all our deſires, ſo to be aſſured of his favour ſhould be the chief of all our ſtudies and cares (2 Cor. 5.7.) Herein (ſaith the Apoſtle) we labour, that whether preſent or abſent we may be accepted of him. The word notes to labour ambitiouſly; as if he had ſaid, we labour as much for the favour of God, as ever any of the ſons of ambition laboured for the favour of Princes, or regard with the Kings of this world. No man ever plotted or flatter'd and crouched ſo much to the Kings of the earth for favour, as we do to God for favour; herein we labour, We make it our buſineſs to be accepted with him; if God once accept a man, you may turn him looſe, he will ſhift for one. How compleatly happy the condition of ſuch a favourite is, will appear yet further in opening the next clauſe of this Verſe.

And he ſhall ſee his face with joy.

When once God is favourable to a poor ſinner, then he ſhall be uſed or dealt with like a favourite. Great favourites ſtand in the preſence of Princes, and frequently ſee their faces. Whomſoever any man favours he freely admits to his preſence, and takes delight in his company. Thus Elihu ſpeaks of Gods favourite, He ſhall ſee his face with joy.

There is a twofold interpretation of theſe words tending both to the ſame ſpiritual ſenſe.

Videbit Deus faciem ejus cum lætitia, i. e. hilariter cum intuebitur, vultu læto & facili eum reſpiciet, cum ante vultum ſ ıtus avertebat. Merc.

Firſt, Some by the Antecedent He, underſtand God himſelf, and by his face the face of the humbled ſick man; and ſo the ſenſe of this aſſertion, he ſhall ſee his face with joy, is plainly this: God will look cheerfully and ſmilingly upon the face of this poor ſuppliant; God will look upon him, as we do upon friends whom we favour & have much reſpect for. Friends may ſee content and joy ſhining in or ſtampt upon our faces, when we look them in the face. The content which we take in ſeeing the face of another is viſible in the ſmiles and joys of our own faces. As when we look ſowrely, angrily, ſorrowfully, ſullenly upon a man, when darkneſs is ſeen in our faces, and clouds gather in our brows, ready to diſſolve into a ſtorm, this ſpeaks we bear him no good will or rather that we bear him much diſpleaſure. So when we look pleaſantly upon a man, doth it not ſay, that we are highly pleaſed with him? To be ſure, when God is at peace with a repenting ſinner, he no longer frowns upon him, nor turns his face from him as an enemy, but entertains and welcomes him as a friend; which is directly oppoſite to Job's apprehenſion of God at the 10. Verſe of this Chapter, Behold he findeth occaſions againſt me, he counteth me for his enemy. This is a ſweet ſoul-reviving and raviſhing truth. God beholds the face of his people with joy, he beholds them ſmilingly, cheerfully, delightfully. David calls it The light of Gods countenance (Pſal. 4.6.)

Et videbit (homo) faciem Dei cum jubilo. Merc.

Secondly, (and I rather conceive that to be the meaning of the place) moſt relate the He, to the ſick man; who having been upon his knees humbling himſelf before God, and finding God favourable to him, he then ſeeth his face, that is, the face of God, with joy. God fills his ſoul with a great deal of peace, comfort, and ſweetneſs in his approaches to him. Before, poſſibly, if he did but think upon God, he was troubled as Aſaph found (Pſal. 77. 3.) I remembred God, and was troubled. To a man in great trouble, eſpecially in trouble of mind, the very thoughts of God (who is our only help in trouble) may be troubleſom; but when he is ſet right and reſtored to the favour of God, or God being again favourable unto him, he beholds his face with abundance of joy. Here are yet two things to be opened, or two Queries may be made and anſwered for the clearing of theſe words.

Firſt, What is meant by the face of God; Secondly, what is meant by ſeeing his face.

To the former query, I anſwer; Firſt, the face of God is the eſſential being or perfect Majeſty of God, of which himſelf ſaith to Moſes (Exod. 33. 23.) My face ſhall not be ſeen. Secondly, the good will and favour of God is his face (Pſal. 80. 3.) Cauſe thy face to ſhine, (that is, be good to us) and we ſhall be ſaved. Thirdly, the face of God in Scripture is put for any manifeſtations of God to man God manifeſteth himſelf in wrath to ſome men, (Pſal. 34. 16.) The face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil; That is, he is angry and greatly diſpleaſed with them. He manifeſteth himſelf in love to others, and all ſuch are ſaid either (as in the Text) to ſee his face, or (as other Texts expreſs it) to have his face ſhining upon them. God is a ſpirit, he hath no face properly; but as the face of a man is that, by which he is known (if a man hide his face we know not who he is, though we ſee all the other parts of his body, he is a concealed man) ſo that whatſoever it is, by which God is clearly known, that in Scripture language is called his face. And hence Thirdly, the worſhip and holy ordinances of God, are called the face of God (Gen. 4. 14.) becauſe they are great manifeſtations of God, or becauſe God is manifeſted in his Ordinances, in his word and worſhip, who and what he is. After a ſick man, through the help of God, is recovered; he goes into the congregation to give thanks; and then he may be ſaid to ſee the face of God, becauſe there he exhibits the ſigns of his preſence, and doth as it were ſhew his face. There as in a glaſs we behold the face of God, that is, the diſcoveries of his holineſs, of his love and goodneſs; The face of God is ſeen in his works, as the Apoſtle teacheth us, (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and godhead: much more in his word and Ordinances, and above all in Jeſus Chriſt is God ſeen and manifeſted. Jeſus Chriſt is the face of God, the brightneſs of his glory, the expreſs image of his perſon, (Heb. 1. 3.) The light of the knowledg of the glory of God ſhineth to us in the face of Chriſt. Thus the face of God is beheld in the face of Chriſt. There we may ſee how holy, how juſt, how good, and merciful God is; all this glory of God appeareth to us in the face of Chriſt, who is the higheſt manifeſtation of God. Here in the Text by the face of God, we are to underſtand any demonſtration of Gods favourable preſence; in which ſence of the word, Aaron was to bleſs the Children of Iſrael (Numb. 6. 25.) The Lord make his face to ſhine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. That is, the Lord manifeſt himſelf to thee in ways of grace and peace, in favour and in mercy. David prayed in the ſame ſtile (Pſal. 67. 1.) God be merciful to us, and bleſs us, and cauſe his face to ſhine upon us; that is, give us tokens and pledges of his favour.

Facies Dei iram, quandoq; favorem notat. Druſ.

Secondly, How ſee we the face of God? Doth not God tell Moſes, No man can ſee my face and live. How then can the face of God be ſeen?

I anſwer; The face of God (which was touched before) as taken for the eſſence of God, or for his eſſential glory, cannot be ſeen; That's too tranſcendent a glory for man to behold. What we ſee of God is but ſome ray or beaming out of light and glory from himſelf, we cannot ſee himſelf. The eſſential or perſonal glory of God, is that face which cannot be ſeen, but the declarative glory of God is a face of God which may be clearly ſeen by faith in the light of his word and works. And to ſee the face of God, is nothing elſe but for a man to know in himſelf (as the Apoſtles word is in ſomewhat a parallel caſe, Heb. 10. 34.) that God is gracious to him, that is, to have an aſſurance of his favour, or a reflect act of faith about it. The holy Spirit ſheweth us what God is, and what the things of God are (1 Cor. 2. 12.) We have received not the ſpirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things that are freely given to us of God; that is, that we may be enlightned with the knowledg of the grace, goodneſs, and favour of God to us diſcovered in the Goſpel. The Spirit ſheweth us this bleſſed face of God, and we ſee it by the actings of our faith; all our viſions of God in this life are viſions of faith; upon whoſe wings all our intellectual powers ſoar aloft and are carried up to God. Faith is not only a work of the will in conſent and application, but a work of the underſtanding by aſſent and knowledg. Thus we ſee God (as a Spirit is only to be ſeen) with a ſpiritual eye. The viſion of God is intellectual, the viſion of faith. Thus the reconciled ſinner finding God favourable to him; he ſeeth his face

Videre faciem Dei, nihil aliud eſt quam ſentire apud animum ſuum Deum propitium. Coc.

In Jubilo. i. e. in quodam inexplicabili gaudio. Aquin.

With joy.] The word ſignifies joyful acclamations, or ſhouting for joy, ſuch as men uſe after great favours done them and benefits or rather bounties beſtowed upon them. There is a ſeeing of the face of God with terror; ſo the wicked ſhall ſee God, that is, they ſhall have manifeſtations of Gods diſpleaſure; they ſhall be made to ſee him with ſhame and ſorrow: They ſhall ſay (when they ſee him) to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. They who never ſaw the face of God with joy, ſhall ſee it with horror and amazement. Saints ſee it with joy, they have unexpreſſible comfort and contentment in beholding God; they ſhall rejoyce with ſhouting, as in the year of Jubile, when they ſounded out their joyes with Trumpets, or made a joyful noiſe. 'Tis no ordinary but a triumphant joy, with which the godly ſee the face of God. Extraordinary ſights affect with extraordinary joy. Now the face of God being the higheſt and moſt glorious ſight in the World, it muſt needs affect the beholder with a glorious, with a Jubilean joy. He ſhall ſee his face with Joy.

Firſt, It being ſaid, He ſhall ſee his face with Joy, upon his prayer, and the humbling of himſelf before God, Obſerve, God hides or vails his face, till we humble our ſouls and ſeek his face.

God will not be ſeen at all times, no not by his own people; There are ſeveral caſes in which he turneth away his face in anger, or draws a curtain (as it were) yea a cloud between himſelf and the Soul. And this he doth, Firſt, and moſt uſually to try his people, how they can bear his withdrawings, and to ſee whether or to what they will betake themſelves, when he takes himſelf ſo much from them, that they cannot ſee him. Secondly, He doth it often to chaſten and correct man for ſin. To be under the hidings of Gods face, is the ſaddeſt effect of ſin to a ſenſible or an awakened Soul. David made a grievous complaint becauſe of this, whatever the cauſe or occaſion of it was. (*Pſal.*13.1.) The abſence of God from him (though poſſibly but for a ſhort time) was ſo tedious to him, that he cryed out, How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, for ever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? Even Jeſus Chriſt while he ſtood in the place of ſinners, bare the hiding of his Fathers face, as the ſum of all thoſe puniſhments which were due to and deſerved by our ſin. This preſſed him more then all bodily ſufferings, and made him cry out, while he hung upon the Croſs, My God, my God (not why haſt thou left me to be crucified, but) why haſt thou forſaken me? (Matth.27.46.) Thirdly, God hideth his face from ſome, becauſe the manifeſtations of it have not been received thankfully, nor improved rightly. We ought to give thanks for the light of the Sun ſhining in the air, and alſo do our work in it; Is it any wonder if God cloud and eclipſe the light of his countenance towards thoſe, who neither prize it, nor improve it? If you would always ſee the face of God, then be ye always ſeen at the work and in the ways of God.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is the ſole priviledge of Gods Favourites, or of thoſe to whom he is favourable, to ſee his face.

As no man can ſee that face of God, his eſſential preſence, ſo none but Godly men ſhall ſee this face of God, his comfortable or bleſſed-making preſence. Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord (Heb. 12.14.) There is a two-fold viſion or ſight of God, and that negative aſſertion may be underſtood of either or of both. There's firſt, a viſion of God on earth; thus we ſee his face, as was ſhewed before, in the actings of faith; For though the Apoſtle oppoſeth theſe two, faith and ſight; We walk by faith, and not by ſight (2 Cor. 5.7.) yet faith hath its ſight; we walk not by ſight as the worldly men walk, who do as they ſee, and make their eyes both the guide of their conſciences, and the in-bringers of their comforts; we walk not by outward ſight, nor do we make concluſions how to guide our converſations, by what we ſee. We walk by faith, and that's the ſight which we have of God while we are here on earth, which cannot poſſibly be without holineſs; faith being ſo great a part of our holineſs, and (by drawing vertue from Chriſt daily) the maintainer of it all. Secondly, there is a ſight of the face of God in glory. And if none can enter into glory but holy men, then no man without holineſs can ſee the face of God there. Thus Chriſt ſaith of the Angels, They always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven (Matth. 18. 10.) Now we ſee the face of God darkly as in a glaſs (1 Cor. 13. 12.) That is, in his word and works, in his ordinances and appointments; in theſe we have glimpſes of the face of God, but we ſhall ſee him face to face; That is, as fully and comprehenſively as creatures can; we can never comprehend God, but we ſhall have comprehenſions of God ſo far, as finite can take in the fruitions of Infinite. We ſhall ſee his face with Joy.

Thirdly, Note, It is the greateſt joy and happineſs of man imaginable to ſee the face of God.

Any manifeſtation of God is a joyful favour, and a full manifeſtation of him fills the heart with joy; Lord lift up the light of thy countenance upon us (ſaith David, Pſal. 4. 6, 7.) thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart more then in the time their corn and wine increaſed; As if he had ſaid, I rejoyce in thy favour more then worldlings do in their beſt enjoyments. Shew us the Father and it ſufficeth us, ſaid Philip (John 14 8.) let us have but that favour, and we deſire no more; we have enough, we can have no more, if we may but ſee the Father. True joy ſtands not in any ſights, nor in the ſight of any thing here below, but in the ſight of God above while we are below, and in a hope that we ſhall at laſt get above too, and there have an everlaſting ſight of him; in whoſe preſence is fullneſs of joy, and at whoſe right hand are pleaſures for evermore. We read in the Levitical Law, of the ſhew-bread, which was to be ſet in the holy place, upon a Table (Exod. 25. 30.) The Hebrew is, the bread of faces. There are two reaſons of this denomination; Firſt, Becauſe that bread did ſhew the gracious proviſion that God made for them all the way they journeyed from Egypt to Canaan, or that he ſpread a Table for them in the wilderneſs where they had no harveſt; To which the Prophet may allude (*Jer.*2.2.) I remember (ſaith the Lord) the kindneſs of thy youth, the love of thy eſpouſals, when thou wenteſt after me in a land that was not ſown; That is, when thou didſt truſt me for thy daily bread. Secondly, It was called the ſhew-bread, to teſtifie the ſpecial preſence of God with them, and that his eye was always upon them, ready to do them good upon all occaſions. This was the high priviledg of the Jews then, they had the bread of faces; and this is the joy of the people of God now, that what ever good they have, it is the face of God to them; their bread is the bread of faces, and their wine is the wine of faces, &c. That is, they are a ſignification of the favour and love of God to them, or they look upon the love and favour of God manifeſted in thoſe things, much more then upon the things themſelves. Now if it be ſo great a mercy to have ſome manifeſtation of the face or favour of God, or that we are always in the ſight and view of God; What will it be to us when we ſhall always abide in the preſence of God, and ſee his face with joy?

Laſtly, Note, A juſtified perſon hath confidence to look up to and think of God; He doth it with joy; and that's the fruit of a well-grounded confidence.

Where the Spirit of the Lord is (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 3. 17.) There is liberty, a liberty of addreſs and approach to God, a liberty alſo of ſpeech and prayer to God. True godlineſs hath much well-regulated boldneſs with God; and as a Godly man ought with reverence, ſo he can with a well-grounded confidence look God in the face.

For he will render unto man his righteouſneſs.

This latter part of the verſe giveth an account of the ground of that joy which the ſick man found in ſeeing the face of God. He ſhall ſee his face with joy (ſaith Elihu) for he (That is, God) ſhall render unto man his righteouſneſs.

He ſhall render;] The Hebrew is, he will make to return; The word ſignifieth, Firſt, to return to a place from whence we have departed (Gen. 18. 10.) Secondly, to return or turn from that diſpleaſure which was once conceived. When the Lord is, as it were, in a hot purſuit of ſinners, he returns or turns from his anger. The Prophet ſpeaks in the negative (Iſa. 5. 25.) For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill, or he is not returned from his anger. Thirdly, The word is uſed to note mans return unto God by repentance (*Deut.*30.28.) We by ſin turn away from God, and by repentance we return to him. Fourthly, It ſignifieth to return by way of requital (Pſal. 116. 12.) What ſhall I render unto the Lord (It is this word) or, What ſhall I return to the Lord for all his benefits? David was in an holy muſe or maze, what teſtimony of thankfulneſs he ſhould bring to the Lord. What ſhall I render? And in that ſenſe it is attributed both to God and man; ſometimes in relation to evil done, and then it notes to render puniſhment or revenge (Pſal. 28. 4.) Render to them their deſert, ſo the word is uſed by Joſephs brethren (Gen. 50. 15.) He will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him; they were jealous of their brothers love when their father was dead. And as it notes a return of evil done in way of revenge, ſo alſo a return of good done in way of reward, thus here,

He will render unto man.] It is an indefinite aſſertion not to this or that man, but to man. With God there is no reſpect of perſons, but he that worketh righteouſneſs (let him be who he will) is accepted of him. To man, that is, to every man God will render,

His righteouſneſs.] Righteouſneſs is of two ſorts; Firſt, There is the righteonſneſs of our ſanctification, which conſiſts; Firſt, in our turning from or leaving to do evil; Secondly, in our doing good: this is a righteouſneſs wrought by us and dwelling or inherent in us. The Hebrews by this word often expreſs that which we call alms or charity; and the reaſon is two-fold, why alms or acts of charity are expreſſed by that word which ſignifieth righteouſneſs; Firſt, becauſe our charity or our alms muſt be given of thoſe things that are rightly gotten. We muſt not do unjuſtly that we may be charitable, nor wrong ſome to relieve others. Secondly, becauſe charity and alms is a due or right to the poor that are in want; we call it charity, but it is a work of duty (Prov. 3.27.) therefore 'tis well expreſſed by righteouſneſs. He ſhall render unto man his righteouſneſs or beneficence. We may take it in this large ſenſe; for this alſo is a part of our ſanctification. And when it is ſaid, he will render unto man his righteouſneſs, we are not to underſtand it of righteouſneſs in kind, but of the reward or fruit of his righteouſneſs. For here Elihu ſpeaks of a perſon already righteous, or at leaſt of him who had repented of and turned from his unrighteouſneſs. So that, to return or render unto man his righteouſneſs, is to return the mercy promiſed to thoſe that are righteous. For as iniquity or unrighteouſneſs is often put for the puniſhment of unrighteouſneſs; ſo equity or righteouſneſs is often put for the reward of righteouſneſs, or for that which God according to his righteous promiſe returns unto a righteous perſon. Thus we may underſtand Elihu here. As if he had ſaid, God dealt with this man before, as with a ſinner, or he afflicted him for his ſin; But now he will deal kindly with him as with a righteous perſon, and removing his affliction, and taking his hand off from him, he will render his righteouſneſs to him, he will not reckon with him for any former unrighteouſneſs.

Reddet juſtitiam. i.e. præmium juſtitiæ. Druſ.

From this notion of the word, Obſerve, God uſually deals with men as they are, and according to what they do.

If a godly man ſin he ſhall ſmart for it; and if a ſinner return and repent, God will ſhew him kindneſs. Though the mercy and kindneſs which God ſhews to a returning ſinner, be not for his returnings or repentings, yet 'tis according to them. The favour which God ſheweth any man is for Chriſts ſake, or for what Chriſt hath done and ſuffered, but it is according to what himſelf hath done or ſuffered. David experienced this himſelf (Pſal. 18.20.) The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs, &c. That is, as I have been a righteous and juſt perſon, ſo the Lord hath dealt with me. And he gives the rule with reſpect to all others (Ver. 25.) With the upright thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf upright, with the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure, &c. That is, Thou wilt be ſuch to men in thy diſpenſations, as they are in their converſations and diſpoſitions, in the frame and bent of their hearts and lives. And it followeth (*Ver.*27.) Thou wilt ſave the afflicted (or humble) people; but wilt bring down high looks; That is, thoſe that are proud and high-minded. The Prophet holds out the ſame truth in way of direction (*Iſa.*3.10.) Say ye to the righteous, it ſhall be well with him, for they ſhall eat of the fruit of their doings; That is, they ſhall have good for the good they have done, or according to the good which they have done. (Rom. 2. 10.) Glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile.

If any object; But may it not be ill with men that do good and are good? Doth the Lord always render to man according to his righteouſneſs.

I anſwer; It is well at preſent with moſt that do well; look over all the ſons of men, and generally ye ſhall find that uſually the better they are, the better they live.

Secondly, I anſwer; It ſhall be well with all that do well, in the iſſue and for ever. This truth will abide to eternity; God will render unto man according to his righteouſneſs.

Secondly, We may take the word righteouſneſs, for the righteouſneſs of juſtification; Mr. Broughton inclines to that ſence, He will reſtore unto man his juſtice. And preſently adds by way of gloſs; Juſtice is Chriſt; It is Chriſts Juſtice or righteouſneſs that is reſtored to man. Chriſt is indeed The Lord our righteouſneſs (Jer. 23. 6.) And thus ſeveral others of the learned expound theſe words. He will render unto man his righteouſneſs; That is, he will beſtow upon him or reſtore to him righteouſneſs in Chriſt; he will account him righteous, though he hath no righteouſneſs of his own which will hold in Gods account. Elihu, I grant, calleth it Mans righteouſneſs, his righteouſneſs; yet we may well underſtand him calling it ſo, not becauſe it is wrought by, but becauſe it is imputed to or beſtowed upon man as his righteouſneſs. That is ours which is freely given us, ſo is righteouſneſs in juſtification by faith in Chriſt. We have no righteouſneſs wrought in us or by us, for that purpoſe; but we have a righteouſneſs wrought for us, and freely beſtowed upon us for that purpoſe, which is therefore truely called mans righteouſneſs.

Juſtitiam, quam ei confert in Chriſto, reputans eum pro juſto. Jun.

But ſome may Queſtion, how can it be ſaid, that God doth render or return to man this righteouſneſs, That is, the righteouſneſs of juſtification? Can this righteouſneſs be loſt? Can a perſon juſtified fall out of a juſtified ſtate?

I anſwer; The righteouſneſs of juſtification (which is true alſo of the righteouſneſs of ſanctification) as to the ſubſtance and being of it cannot be loſt; But it may be loſt as to the comfortable enjoyments and fruits of it, or as to our apprehenſion of it; And the Lord is ſaid to return to man the righteouſneſs of his juſtification, not as if the grace it ſelf were loſt or taken away from him, but becauſe the ſight and ſenſe of it, the ſweetneſs and joy of it, the workings and effects of it having been loſt, are now reſtored to him again. When the Lord by his Spirit gives the ſoul a clear and freſh evidence of it, or reneweth the teſtimony of his Spirit with our ſpirits, that our ſins are forgiven, and that we are juſtified, beloved, and accepted in Chriſt, then the Lord is ſaid to render unto man his righteouſneſs; otherwiſe, neither the faith, by which this righteouſneſs is applyed, nor the righteouſneſs it ſelf which is applyed to us by faith, is at any time loſt or removed. Only in this ſenſe, as in many other Scriptures, ſo in this, the Lord is ſaid to render unto man his righteouſneſs, both of ſanctification and juſtification. For, when a believer through ſin hath blotted his own evidences, and God hath left him under the darkneſs of his own ſpirit, for his negligent, unwatchful and unworthy walking, or when the Lord hideth his face, to try him what he will do, whether he will truſt in his name while he walketh in darkneſs and ſeeth no light, when, I ſay, after withdrawings for either of theſe reaſons or for any other the Lord gives him in a renewed evidence of his love, then he is ſaid to render unto man his righteouſneſs. It is in this caſe as with a man that labours under ſome ſtrong and dangerous diſeaſe, which taketh away his ſenſes, and leaves him half dead; we ſay, the man is gone, yet he recovers, his ſpeech returns, and his ſpirits revive, and then we ſay, his life is rendred to him, or he is brought back from the grave, we have fetched him again; not that his life was quite taken away (for he was not a carkaſs in that condition, a body without a Soul) but his life was, for that time, withdrawn, there was no appearance of it, no ſenſible breathing, no motion, no vital viſible operation. Thus we may conceive what is meant by the rendring unto man his righteouſneſs.

Nom enim ablata juſtitia redditur ſed ablatæ juſtitiæ ſenſus. Coc.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, A juſtified perſon is a righteous perſon.

He hath a clothing of righteouſneſs; that which we call his righteouſneſs, is not properly but imputedly his. It is not a cloathing of his own making, but made for him and beſtowed freely upon him. (Rom. 10. 3.) They being ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves to the righteouſneſs of God. It is Gods righteouſneſs not our own, and yet it is our own as well as the righteouſneſs of God, it being imputed and reckoned unto us for our righteouſneſs; it is the believers righteouſneſs as given to him, it is Chriſts righteouſneſs as wrought by him.

Secondly, Obſerve, A juſtified perſon under great afflictions and temptations often loſeth the comfortable ſight and ſenſe of his own righteouſneſs.

And ſo may look upon himſelf as an unrighteous perſon, as having no righteouſneſs, or as being unreconciled and unjuſtified. For, as many bold ſinners and hypocrites preſume they have a righteouſneſs when they have none, and boaſt themſelves to be in the number of the juſtified when they are not. So many an afflicted and tempted Soul, who is indeed juſtified in the ſight of God, may be unjuſtified in his own. Great afflictions have an appearance of divine diſpleaſure, which ſtands moſt oppoſite to juſtification. As affliction is a kind of darkneſs, ſo it often leaves the Soul in much darkneſs. And he that is in the dark is full of fear, he is apt to Queſtion his ſtate, whether he hath any thing of God in him or no. For though it be not good for a Chriſtian always to begin to live, he ſhould come to a point, and labour for a certainty; yet ſome are brought to ſuch a paſs that their former evidences and experiences are even dead and lie proſtrate, and they conſtrained to begin a new reckoning about their ſpiritual eſtate, or, as it were, to begin again to live.

Thirdly, Note, Mans righteouſneſs or juſtification, is as loſt to him when he wants the evidence, that is, the comfort, ſweetneſs, and peace of it.

When his ſoul-ſtate is ſo ravel'd and intangled, that he can make nothing of it, then his righteouſneſs is as loſt. Thoſe things which appear not, are to us as if they were not. Not to know what we have, is a degree of not having. When grace doth not act or is not uſed, we are ſaid in Scripture to lack grace, or to have none. (2 Pet. 1. 9.) But he that lacketh theſe things is blind, and cannot ſee afar off. The whole context carrieth it of believers, who are in a ſtate of grace, who yet not uſing grace are ſaid to lack it, and are called blind, as not able to ſee afar off, how it was with them when the work of converſion firſt began, and ſo have upon the matter forgotten that they were ever purged from their old ſins. That is, they act as a man that hath never had any acquaintance with God, or knew ſo much as the meaning of repentance from dead works. He, in the Goſpel, who had but one talent and did not uſe it, is ſaid to have none, From him that hath not ſhall be taken away even that he hath (Matth. 25. 29.) 'Tis a ſtrange expreſſion to ſay, that ſhall be taken away from a man which he hath not; yet the idle ſervant is ſaid not to have that one talent which he had, becauſe he did not uſe it, but laid it by as a dead ſtock. Now, as in reference unto the grace of ſanctification in us, when we do not act, we are ſaid to lack it, or not to have it, ſo in reference to the peace of juſtification, when we have not the comfort of it, we are ſaid to be without it. And therefore when peace is reſtored to the Soul, righteouſneſs or juſtification is reſtored alſo.

Further, from the connexion of theſe words, He ſhall ſee his face with joy; for he will render unto man his righteouſneſs.

Note, Fourthly, When the ſight of our righteouſneſs or juſtified ſtate in Chriſt returns to us, our comforts return.

We may be juſtified or in a juſtified ſtate, and not rejoyce. But if we know we are in a ſtate of juſtification, we cannot but rejoyce. It will make a man rejoyce to purpoſe, when he ſeeth the righteouſneſs of juſtification is clearly his (Iſa. 45. 25.) Surely ſhall one ſay in the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſtrength: One ſhall ſay this: He ſhall not only have righteouſneſs in the Lord, but he ſhall ſay he hath; that is, he ſhall be able to make it out; he ſhall have the light of it upon his ſpirit, and then as it followeth in the Prophet; In him ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified and ſhall glory. When they are able to ſay this, then they ſhall not only rejoyce but glory. Glorying is the height of joy, or joy is in its full ſtrength. The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 14. 17.) The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, (What is it then?) but righteouſneſs (and what elſe?) peace and joy in the holy Ghoſt. Righteouſneſs brings in peace, that's the firſt fruit; The war is ended, the controverſie determined between God and the Soul, and when once peace is entred, joy will follow. It is uſual to make triumphs, when, a formerly broken, peace is made between two nations. When Abimelech ſent commiſſioners to make a covenant of peace with Iſaac, the holy Story ſaith (Gen. 26. 30.) He made them a feaſt, and they did eat and drink. Surely when God ſends his holy Spirit to ſpeak peace to a troubled Soul (againſt whom his terrors have been ſet in array (as Job said in his own caſe, Chap. 6. 4.) and the arrows of the Almighty within him have drunk up his ſpirit) he (I ſay) having his peace thus reſtored to him, cannot but have the joy of the Lord reſtored to him, as David prayed his might (Pſal. 51. 12.) Reſtore unto me the joy of thy Salvation; That is, ſhew me that I am juſtified, that my ſin is pardoned; this will bring back into my boſom the joy of thy ſalvation, and my drooping ſoul ſhall be not only refreſhed but feaſted as with marrow and fatneſs. Joy is a certain conſequent upon the ſight of our juſtification; Yea joy is not only a conſequent, but a fruit and effect of it; joy floweth out of the nature of it; nor is it ever interrupted or ſuſpended, but upon the hiding of righteouſneſs out of our ſight. And therefore joy returns unfailably when the Lord is pleaſed thus to render unto man his righteouſneſs.

VERS. 27, 28, 29, 30.

He looketh upon men, and if any ſay, I have ſinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profiteth me not;

He will deliver his Soul from going into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light.

Lo, all theſe things worketh GOD oftentimes with Man.

To bring back his Soul from the pit, and to be enlightned with the light of the living.

WE had the bleſſed iſſue of the Lords dealing with the ſick ſinner in the former verſe. Now, in the two firſt verſes of this context, we have the ſame caſe and iſſue put in general with reference to any man. And in the two latter, Elihu recapitulates or ſums up the whole matter, and then applyeth it to Job perſonally and particularly in the three laſt verſes of the Chapter.

He looketh upon men, &c.

The word notes a ſtrict beholding and fixing both of the outward and inward eye, that of the mind, with that of the body. 'Tis here, after the manner of men, attributed to God; He marks and animadverts upon men, how it is with them, or how they ſtand diſpoſed and affected.

ישר à radice שור inſpexit, intentis & fixis oculis intuitus eſt.

Yet there is a difference among interpreters, who is the antecedent to the word He. He looketh upon men. The doubt or Queſtion is to whom this relative pronoun He hath reſpect; whether to God or to the ſick man lately ſpoken of.

Some underſtand it chiefly of the ſick man recovered. He looketh upon men; That is, the ſick man looketh upon thoſe about him; and ſaith, I have ſinned and perverted that which is right. As if being raiſed from his ſick bed, he ſhould raiſe himſelf up, to give glory to God by confeſſing and acknowledging before men, that he had ſinned in perverting the rule of righteouſneſs given him to walk by, and had found by dear-bought experience, that it profited him not. The Italian tranſlater ſaith, He afterwards ſhall turn himſelf towards man, and ſay, &c. That is, he ſhall preach Gods grace to ſinful man, and propoſe himſelf an example of it, magnifying the grace of God to him, and acknowledging his own vileneſs. They who inſiſt upon this expoſition render the 28. verſe as the continued ſpeech of the ſick man, making it out to this effect, I have ſinned and perverted that which was right, yet he hath delivered, or will deliver my Soul from going into the pit, and my life ſhall ſee the light.

Qui hoc modo afflictus fuit, reſipiſcens intuetur homines & dicet. Druſ.

Fructum alium miſericordiæ domini in afflictum ſubjungit, quod ille liberatus, & culpam ſuam coram cæteris hominibus agnoſcet & Dei miſericordiam in ſe confitebitur ut alios ædificet, &c. Merc.

It muſt be granted, that to look upon or behold man, is in Scripture, a deſcriptive periphraſis or circumlocution, expreſſing a man recovered from ſome dangerous & deadly ſickneſs. And therefore when Hezekiah thought his ſickneſs was to death, and his caſe deſperate; He thus bemoned himſelf (Iſa. 38. 11.) I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living; I ſhall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world. But, ſaith Elihu, the ſick man being perfectly recovered, talks with and looks upon men; And the firſt diſcourſe he iſſueth, is a confeſſion of repentance for his iniquity; I have ſinned, I have perverted that which was right, and it profiteth not: And his next is a confeſſion of praiſe for his recovery; He hath delivered, or I am aſſured he will deliver my Soul from going down to the pit, and my life ſhall ſee the light. This is a profitable expoſition; and much inſiſted upon by ſome very learned Interpreters and therefore I ſhall make a little improvement of it by this brief obſervation.

It is our duty being recovered from ſickneſs, to confeſs and make known the goodneſs of God and our ſinfulneſs to to thoſe that are about us.

There is a three-fold confeſſion; firſt, of faith, that we believe what God hath revealed and promiſed to do for us. Secondly, of praiſe, that we thankfully acknowledg what God hath done for us according to his promiſe. Thirdly, of repentance that we are heartily ſorrowful for and bewail, what we have done againſt the command of God. We ſhould be aſhamed to ſin before men, but let us not be aſhamed to confeſs our ſinfulneſs, and (in ſome caſes) our ſpecial ſins before men. Though we neither impoſe nor extort particular confeſſions from men (as the Papiſts do) yet it is good for men who have been under the afflicting hand of God, and have had great experience of his mercy in raiſing them up, to declare what God hath done both for Soul and Body, that others may be bettered by their experiences.

But I ſhall not ſtay upon this, becauſe our tranſlation (which is clear and ſafe) runs another way, making the antecedent to this he, to be God; he, that is, God looketh upon men, and ſaith, If any ſay, that I have ſinned, and have perverted that which is right, and it profited me not, Then (as it followeth) He will deliver him from going down to the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light. The ſenſe of the context in general, is plain; God looketh upon men, and if he ſeeth them penitent, he will have mercy upon them, and deliver them, or give them that which is better then bodily deliverance. More diſtinctly;

He looketh upon men.] It is the work of God at all times to look upon men; and he looketh ſo upon all men, as if he had but one man to look upon. His look upon men is not a bare look, but a conſidering, and an obſerving look. He ſo looks upon men, that he looks through them He looks upon them, and takes notice what they are, how it is with them, what they are doing, and at what they are driving. He looks upon them to conſider both the frame of their hearts, and the courſe of their lives: yea his looking is an expecting: He ſo looketh upon man, as looking for ſomewhat from man, or as deſiring to ſee ſomewhat in him. Though God hath no need of us, nor of any thing we can do, yet he looketh, waiteth, or hath an expectation, of ſomewhat to be done by us. He looketh upon ſick men, to ſee how they take it; with what patience they bear affliction, what the workings of their hearts are, what their repentings, what the actings of their faith; ſuch things as theſe the Lord looketh for from moſt men, moſtly from men under the rod, under ſad and ſorrowful diſpenſations. And the words following ſhew what it is expreſly which the Lord looketh for. Yet before I open them, note in general,

God loves to ſee occaſion of doing good to man.

What we love to do, we love the opportunities of doing it. The Lord is good and he loveth to do good, and therefore he is expreſſed as one troubled when he wants, and as one pleaſed when he hath the occaſions of doing it. We may take up that ſence eminently from that moſt pathetical wiſh (Pſal. 81. 13, 14, 15, 16.) O that my people had hearkned unto me, and Iſrael had walked in my ways, I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries. The haters of the Lord, ſhould have ſubmitted themſelves, but their time ſhould have endured for ever: I ſhould have fed them alſo with the fineſt of the wheat, &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, how glad ſhould I have been if my people had been but fitly qualified to give me occaſion of removing all evil from them, and of doing them all manner of good. The holy Prophet ſpeaks the heart of God in the ſame readineſs (Iſa. 30. 18.) Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you, therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you. As if he had ſaid, The Lord expects your reformation, that he may not proceed in rigour againſt you, or as ſome conceive rather, he only delayeth his putting an end to your troubles, till ye are humbled, expecting a ſeaſonable time to ſhew you that mercy in beſtowing of which he will exalt and advance his own name and honour, when once he ſeeeth you fitted and duly prepared to receive it. The Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 14. 2.) looked down from Heaven upon all the Children of men, to ſee if there were any did underſtand and ſeek God. There he is repreſented looking down from Heaven to ſee if any did underſtand, as here, he looketh upon men to ſee if any do repent, ſaying, I have ſinned, &c. The Lord often, ye always looketh down upon Nations, Cities and People, to ſee if any have a right underſtanding of him, or a will with upright affections to him. The Lord at this day is looking upon the ſick, and looking upon the ſound, to ſee if there are any, who are going on faithfully in a right way, or repenting that they have gone wrong. He looketh upon men; and if any ſay,

I have ſinned.] In this latter part of the verſe, we have the matter expreſſed which the Lord looketh upon men for, 'tis repentance and godly ſorrow for ſin; If any ſay, I have ſinned; that is, if any repent. When the Lord ſaith, If any ſay, I have ſinned, he doth not mean it of a bare ſaying ſo, but, if any ſay ſo, laying his ſin to heart; if any ſay ſo from a true ſence of the evil of ſin; if any ſay ſo burden'd with ſin, and taſting the bitterneſs of it; if any ſhall ſay, I have ſinned, and ſay it thus, then &c. The word which we tranſlate Sinned, notes a miſtake of our aim or way; as if it had been ſaid; If any man ſay, I have gone beſides the line, and done beſides the rule. Sin is in all men a miſſing of the mark, and a ſtepping out of the right path; it is alſo in very many, as 'tis expreſſed in the next clauſe, a perverting of that which is right. If any ſay, I have ſinned,

And perverted that which is right.] The word implyeth more then osdinary ſinning, more then ſins of infirmity, which ariſe from ignorance and miſtake, even thoſe which are committed with a reſolvedneſs of Spirit, and purpoſe of heart; or they imply not thoſe ſins which a man falls into unadviſedly and unawares, but thoſe which he commits upon deliberation, and in the eye of the Law, that ſhewing him plainly what is right, and that he ought not to pervert it. So then in ſtrictneſs of ſenſe, to pervert that which is right, is to be willingly, yea wilfully unrighteous. The Church making a gradual confeſſion of her ſin by three ſteps, puts this word in the midſt (Pſal. 106. 6.) We have ſinned with our fathers, we have committed iniquity ('tis this word) or done that which is crooked and perverſe) we have done wickedly. Cain, the firſt man born, ſinned thus (Gen. 4. 13.) My puniſhment is greater then I can bear (ſo we render) or (as we put in the Margin) Mine iniquity is greater then can be forgiven. Cain's ſin was a perverſneſs, he knew he perverted that which was right in ſlaying his Brother. So that, here we have the confeſſion of ſin, with the aggravation of it, a notorious ſin. The penitent perſon doth not only ſay, I have ſinned, but I have ſinned greatly, or I have perverted that which was right. To ſin, and to pervert that which is right, are materially the ſame; only the latter intimates the manner how a ſin is committed, namely, when we would not be ruled by the Law, but accommodate the Law (as it were a leaden or Lesbian rule) to ſerve our luſts, ſo perverting that which was right, that we might countenance and embolden our ſelves in doing wrong. If any ask

What is right? Surely, right is firſt, the Law, ſecondly, that which is done according to Law. The ſtatutes of God are right, rejoycing the heart (Pſal. 19. 8.) The word of God is right, and the rule of right, yea it is a ruling right. To pervert that which is right, or to pervert the Law of righteouſneſs, is to act againſt the light and convictions of Conſcience which will be our Judg. One of the Latine Interpreters uſeth a harſh and coarſe word to preſs this by; yet full and proper to the ſcope; I have tortified (or writhed and bended) that which was right. Another renders it, I have prevaricated from that which was right. Our word gives the ſence fully enough, I have ſinned, and perverted that which was right.

Peccavi & rectum tortificavi. Cajet. Prævaricatus ſum à probitate. Tygur.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sin muſt be confeſſed. The Lord looks for it. He looketh upon men to ſee whether any will ſay, I have ſinned.

He will have their ſin out of their own mouths. When Nathan brought the parable home to David and ſaid, Thou art the man, he preſently fell into confeſſion, I have ſinned (2 Sam. 12. 13.)

But ſome may ſay, Is this confeſſion of ſin ſufficient to ſay, I have ſinned.

I anſwer; Firſt, a general confeſſion of ſin, or that we have ſinned is not ſufficient, unleſs we are alſo willing and ready to confeſs before the Lord all our particular ſins. Some are ready enough to ſay, they have ſinned, who yet will ſcarce be brought to acknowledg any particular ſin; yea many ſay, they are great ſinners, who know not how or in what they have ſinned, nor what it is to ſin. Therefore barely to ſay, I have ſinned, is not a Goſpel-confeſſion of ſin. I anſwer, Secondly, Though a general confeſſion is only expreſſed in this and many other Scriptures, yet a ſpecial confeſſion is intended. The prodigal Son (Luke 15. 19.) Said, I will return to my Father, and I will ſay to my Father, I have ſinned againſt Heaven, and againſt thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Son. He did not enumerate the particular evil acts he had committed and was guilty of, yet doubtleſs he had them as a burden upon his heart, and was willing to unburden himſelf of them, one by one in a hearty and heart-afflicting confeſſion. The publican (Luke 18. 13.) ſtood afar off, and durſt not lift up his eyes to Heaven, but only ſaid, God be merciful to me a ſinner. He ſtruck at all his ſins, though he did not by name touch any one of them. He that ſaith (knowing what he ſaith) I have ſinned, will not hide any one of his ſins; And he that indeed and truth confeſſeth any one, will cover none of his ſins. Thoſe ſins may be pardoned which are not expreſly confeſſed, but if we conceal or hide any ſin, and will not bring it forth in confeſſion we cannot, in faith, expect the pardon of it.

Peccatores ſe eſſe pleriq; confitentur etiam qui ſe nil peccaſſe non credunt. Greg. l. 24. Moral. c. 12.

Again, Conſider the time or ſeaſon when the Lord looked for this confeſſion; It was a time of trouble and affliction, of pain and ſorrow, the man was ſick, or but in a way of recovery out of his ſickneſs.

Hence Note, Times of affliction are ſpecial times of confeſſion and repentance.

Confeſſion of ſin muſt not be omitted (eſpecially not neglected) in our moſt comfortable days, much leſs in a day of trouble. A ſad and troubled ſtate calls us aloud to a gracious ſadneſs of heart, to the ſearch of our hearts and lives, which are preparatory to repentance and godly ſorrow. Uſually in proſperity men will not be at leiſure to ſearch their hearts, and take notice of their ſins. Therefore the Lord draweth them to confeſſion by drawing them from the world, by laying them upon their ſick beds, or by bringing them into ſtraits. And as when affliction is upon perſons or families, then is a ſpecial time to confeſs perſonal and family ſins; ſo to confeſs national ſins, is moſt ſeaſonable when affliction hath ſeized upon kingdoms and nations. The want and neglect of that publick confeſſion and ſorrow in ſuch a day is mightily aggravated, and moſt ſeverely threatned (Iſa. 22. 12,13,14.) God looketh and loveth to hear every man, ſaying, and a whole nation, as one man, ſaying in a day of ſorrow and trouble, I have ſinned, and perverted that which was right.

From the latter words, I have perverted that which was right, or, the Law.

Note, Firſt, The law of God is the rule of righteouſneſs; a right rule.

All rightneſs and righteouſneſs is comprehended in it, and meaſured by it.

Secondly, Learn, Sin is a perverting of that which is right.

Every (the leaſt) ſin is ſo in ſome degree, though here, poſſibly, ſins are intended of any, even of the higheſt degree. The Apoſtle defining ſin, calleth it (1 John 3.4.) A tranſgreſſion of the Law; and if ſo, it muſt needs be a perverting of that which is right: For what is or can be right, if the rule of righteouſneſs be not. What the Apoſtle ſpake to Elymas (Acts 13. 10.) Wilt thou not ceaſe to prevert the right ways of the Lord, ſhews the nature and effect of every ſin, and the more ſinful any ſin is, by ſo much the more doth it pervert that which is right. Some ſinners are ſaid to make void the law of God, to pervert it, as if they would quite ſubvert and diſanul it. David remembers God of ſuch, and deſires him to look to them betimes (Pſal. 119. 126.) It is time for thee to work, for they have made void thy Law; That is, they have done their beſt, or worſt rather, their utmoſt to make it void, and of no force; 'Tis not in the power of all the powers of the world, to vacate, reſcind or null one tittle of the law of God; Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away before that, yet many attempt it, yea ſome do that which will be found and interpreted a making void of the law of God, who think themſelves great zealots for, or very zealous of the law. That will be the caſe of many, eſpecially, of all will-worſhippers.

Again, Conſider though the perſon here ſpoken of had not only ſinned, but perverted that which was right, that is, ſinned perverſly, yet upon confeſſion the Lord deals graciouſly with him.

Hence Note, The free grace of God extends to the pardon of the greateſt ſins, even ſins of perverſneſs.

Where ſin aboundeth, Grace aboundeth much more (Rom. 5. 20.) whether the abounding of ſin be taken in the number of it, or in the weight of it, that is, in the greatneſs and aggravations of it, grace hath its ſutable ſuper abounding (Num. 23.21.) When Balaam would ſhew that the people of Iſrael were a people impenetrable by his curſes, he ſaith, The Lord hath ſeen no iniquity in Jacob, nor perverſneſs in Iſrael. The word there uſed is of a different root from this in the Text, but the ſence is the ſame, implying, if the Lord had ſeen perverſneſs in Iſrael, it would have laid them open to a curſe; yet ſins made up of perverſneſs are within the compaſs of a pardon. There is no ſin excepted from pardon, but that which at once refuſeth and deſpiſeth it, the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt (Matth. 12. 31.) This ſhould not incourage any to ſin perverſly, only it is a comfort to thoſe who have. They who have ſinned perverſly, or who have perverſneſs mingled with their ſin, ſhould not caſt off the hope of pardon, but woe to thoſe who ſin perverſly, (that is, againſt the light of their own conſciences) upon hopes of pardon. Such perſons have no true hope (they may have much preſumption) that they ſhall be pardoned. They who having ſinned perverſly, confeſs it, have good ground to pray for pardon, but they who go on ſinning perverſly, have no ground (while they do ſo) to hope for it. This Text ſpeaks of a perſon confeſſing and bewayling that he hath ſinned perverſly, not of a perſon purpoſing to ſin ſo, as appears further in the laſt clauſe of the Verſe; If any ſay, I have ſinned and perverted that which is right.

And it profiteth me not.] Here's another point of confeſſion, we muſt not only confeſs that we have ſinned, but the fruitleſneſs of ſin, or that ſin profiteth not. There are two rendrings, and ſo two ſeveral expoſitions of theſe words,

The word ſignifieth moſt properly that which is equal; And hence ſome give the ſence thus, (which carrieth in it an eminent work of repentance) I have ſinned, and perverted that which was right, and have not that which is equal; That is, Though I am greatly afflicted, and my ſorrows lie heavy upon me, yet they are not equal to my ſinning, or perverſe dealings with the Lord. I have not received as I was worthy, or according to my ill deſervings. The Septuagint ſpeak thus; God hath not made a ſtrict inquiſition for my ſin. My iniquity is not charged upon me to the utmoſt. I have ſinned grievouſly, but God hath dealt graciouſly with me, and hath not meaſured out to the full of mine iniquity. 'Tis an argument of true repentance to juſtifie God in afflicting us. This is a pious and a profitable rendring of the Text.

שׁוה Poteſt eſſe verbum, poteſt eſſe & nomen fæmininum. Unde ſenſus eſt, non accepi tantundem, non repoſita eſt mihi par pœna pro peccato meo. Coc. Non dignè in me inquiſivit pro his quæ peccavi. Sept.

Whence Obſerve, Firſt, The puniſhment of ſin in this life is not equal to ſin.

As all the ſufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared with the glory of the next life (Rom. 1. 18.) ſo neither are they comparable with the ſins of this life. When a man is under very ſore affliction, chaſtened with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain: So that his life abhorreth bread, and his ſoul dainty meat; yet he muſt confeſs, his ſufferings are leſs then his ſin. The Church of the Jews acknowledged this as to that great affliction, their captivity in Babylon (Ezra. 9. 13.) After all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that our God hath puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve, &c. It was no little puniſhment which that people endured, yet they confeſſed it was leſs then their iniquity. The leaſt ſin is ſo great, that no puniſhment which man is capable of in this life can equal it; nor can that in the life to come equal it as to preſent degree, but only by the everlaſtingneſs of its duration.

Secondly, Note, A Soul truly humbled is ready to confeſs to the glory of God, that his puniſhment and ſuffering is leſs then his ſin.

As a godly man doth not think any ſin little, ſo he doth not think any affliction great compared with his ſin. Cain ſaid, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear; but he did not ſay, it was greater then his ſin. How hot ſoever the furnace of divine wrath is heated, yet ſinners muſt acknowledg there is ſparing mercy in it; and that God might have made it ſeven times hotter, and therefore hath afflicted them leſs then their ſin. As a godly man is ready to acknowledg his mercy more then he hath deſerved (Gen. 32. 10.) I (ſaid Jacob) am not worthy of the leaſt of all the mercies, and all the truth which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant, as if he had ſaid; I am leſs in my good actings then any of thy actings towards me for good have been; ſo he is ready to ſay, his greateſt afflictions or evils which he ſuffereth are leſs then his ſins, or then the evils which he hath done.

Verbum שוה exponn, profuit non fuit mihi conducibile quod peccaram. Merc.

Secondly. The word ſignifieth to profit, ſo we tranſlate; And it profiteth me not. Other Scriptures comply with this ſence (Heſter 3.8.) Haman in his malicious and envious ſuggeſtions againſt the Jews, tells the King, It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them to continue. He uſeth the ſame word again (Heſt. 5. 13.) where after he had reported all the great things that he enjoyed, he concludes; What doth all this profit me? Or all this availeth me nothing, ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Jew ſitting at the Kings gate? Thus here, ſaith the ſick man, I have ſinned, and it profited me not, or I have got nothing by it: And when he ſaith, it profited me not; we are to expound it by a uſual figure in Scripture, whereby more is intended then is expreſſed, ſo that, it profiteth me not, is, it had been very detrimental, dangerous, and deadly to me. I feel and ſmart under the ſad iſſues of my ſin, my perverting that which was right hath done me (though I have had but my right) much wrong. I have ſinned, and it profited me not.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sin pretends profit and advantage to a ſinner.

There is no temptation comes without a bait. Though ſome ſin purely for ſins ſake; yet it is rare that ſin cometh without the offer of a bribe, and profit is one of the greateſt both baits and bribes that the Devil puts upon the hook of temptation, when he fiſheth for Souls. You ſhall get by it, ſaith that deceiver. But the repenting Soul, can truly ſay, it profited me not; I had thought to have gotten by my ſin, it promiſed me very fair, but I have got nothing but blows. The temptation with which the Devil aſſaulted our firſt parents was of this kind, He told the woman of profit, ſhe and her husband ſhould gain knowledg by it, (that's a noble gain) They ſhould be as Gods knowing good and evil, there's all profit imaginable in ſuch a knowledg. Chriſt himſelf who was God and perfectly knew good and evil, was alſo tempted with profit (Math. 4. 8, 9.) The Devil ſhewed him all the kingdoms of the World (and thoſe not with bare walls, but ready hung and furniſhed) and the glory of them, and ſaid unto him, all theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. If our head and the heir of all things was tempted with profit, how much more poor we! No marvail if Satan provide him Agents to ſay to us as they are repreſented (Pro. 1. 13.) Come, caſt in your lot among us, we will all have one purſe, or a joynt ſtock in this wicked trade; What they hoped to get by it, is told us in the next words; We ſhall find all precious ſubſtance, and fill our houſes with ſpoil. We ſhall get enough, and you ſhall ſhare with us if you will but come and go with us. We ſee what ſin promiſeth; But what doth the ſinner find? Himſelf anſwers, It profited me not.

Hence Learn, There is nothing gotten by ſin, no good is gotten by it.

The Apoſtle puts the Queſtion to ſinners (Rom. 6. 21.) What fruit had ye then, in thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? Caſt up your account, and tell us what you find at the foot of it. Poſſibly ſome may ſay, we have gotten hundreds and thouſands, we have gotten houſes and lands, our barns are full of corn, our fields of cattel, and our bags are full of treaſure. But is it profit to have houſe and land, gold and ſilver come in by ſin? Let that Scripture anſwer (Math. 16. 26.) What is a man profited if he ſhall gain the whole world and loſe his own Soul? But ſome may ſay, they that are in Chriſt cannot loſe their Souls by ſin. I anſwer; Firſt, though they that are in Chriſt cannot be ſuch ſinful Souls, as to ſin away their Souls, though they cannot ſin at ſuch a rate, nor in ſuch a height as to loſe their Souls who have indeed found Chriſt, or rather who are found of him, and planted in him; yet the dammage which every ſin unrepented of and unpardoned puts man to is the loſs of his Soul. Secondly, ſuppoſe a ſinner repenteth, what hath he got by ſin, but the ſorrows of repentance. And though no man ſhall have cauſe to repent of true repentance for ſin, yet no man ſhall have cauſe to boaſt of the penny-worth he hath had by ſin which hath occaſion'd the ſorrows of that repentance. One hours communion with God in ways of holineſs is better then all the profits and pleaſures which any man hath got while he was committing that ſin, or running any courſe of ſin, whereof he now repenteth. At the beſt ſin diſhonours God, troubles our conſciences, and breaks our peace; at the beſt nothing is got by ſin which is worth the having, at worſt the Soul is loſt by it, which of all things we have is moſt worth the having.

Thirdly, Note, Sin is exceeding dangerous and deſtructive to man.

Some would ſin for the pleaſures and carnal contentments which are found in ſin, though they knew they ſhould make no earnings, or get no profit by it, yea though they knew they ſhould be and die beggers by it. Once more, if this were all, that they ſhould loſe Heaven by it, or if the meaning of loſing their Souls were only this, that their Souls ſhould be no more, they would eaſily venture it. But there is an affirmative in the negative, and when, 'tis ſaid, ſin profiteth not, the meaning is, it brings trouble and renders us miſerable for ever; Fools (that is, all ſinful men, ſaith the Spirit of God, Pſal. 107. 17.) becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquities are afflicted; and all ſuch among theſe fools, as die in their ſin are damned; and who is able to ſum up the dammage of damnation?

Fourthly, Learn, Sinners ſhall be forced at laſt to confeſs that there is no profit in ſin.

True penitents confeſs it willingly now; and impenitents ſhall confeſs it at laſt, whether they will or no; they ſhall have ſuch a conviction of the evil of ſin by their ſufferings, as will make them ſay, what hath pride profited me? And what hath envy profited me? What hath malice and wrath profited me? And what hath the fraudulent deceiving of my neighbour profited me? This will be the cry of ſinners to all eternity. O what hath ſin profited us? That which is the willing confeſſion of a gracious repentant here, will be the forced confeſſion of damned impenitents for ever hereafter. This will be a bitter repentance. Hell is and will be full of the words of repentance, but no fruit of repentance ſhall be found there. The damned ſhall not find either amendment in themſelves, or mercy from God. This will be the confeſſion of all ſinners at laſt (as of thoſe that repent and are ſaved, ſo of thoſe who repent when damned) we have ſinned and perverted that which was right, and it hath not profited us. And when once man hath made this hearty confeſſion to God of his ſin and folly, then God maketh him a gracious promiſe of deliverance and mercy, as appears in the tenour of the next Verſe.

Verſ. 28. He will deliver his Soul from going into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light.

There is a two-fold reading of this 28. verſe, as was ſhewed in opening the former. For whereas that 27. verſe is underſtood by ſome as the humble confeſſion of the ſick man recovered, and ſo read in this form; He looketh upon men and ſaith, I have ſinned and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not; then this 28. verſe is rendred to make up that ſenſe, as a thankful acknowledgment of his recovery, He hath delivered my ſoul from going into the pit, and my life ſeeth the light. Thus, as we had his confeſſion of repentance in the verſe fore-going, I have ſinned, &c. ſo here we have his confeſſion of praiſe and thankfulneſs; He hath delivered my ſoul from going into the pit. Mr. Broughton tranſlates to this ſenſe; He ſaved my ſoul from going into the pit, that my life doth ſee the light. Thus the ſick man being reſtored breaks out into thankſgiving; The Lord in mercy hath freed me from death, hell, and the grave; I need not fear Satans accuſations; my body enjoys the light of the world, and my ſoul the light of Gods countenance ſhining upon me, which is better then life. But becauſe our own reading is clear in the original Text, and holds out the ſcope of the context fully enough, therefore I ſhall proſecute that only.

Juxta hanc lectionem erit etiam hic verſus ex confeſſione reſtituti ægri Dei in ſe ſummam beneficentiam agnoſcentis. Merc.

He will deliver his ſoul from going into the pit.] The words are an aſſertion of the favour and goodneſs of God to the penitent ſick man; He (that is, God) looketh upon men, and if he hear any ſaying, I have ſinned and perverted that which is right, and it profiteth me not, if he make ſuch an humble and gracious confeſſion, this will be the iſſue; the Lord will deliver his ſoul from going into the pit. At the 18. verſe, we had words of the ſame import; He keepeth back his ſoul from the pit, and his life, from periſhing by the ſword. And again, at the 24. verſe, Deliver him from going down to the pit. To be delivered from the pit (as was there ſhewed) is to be delivered from death. And the word ſoul (as was then likewiſe expounded) is put for the perſon; As if it were ſaid, He will deliver him, the penitent man from death; and that both from temporal death, the death of the body, and from eternal death, the deſtruction of body and ſoul; or he will deliver him firſt from the pit of the grave; and ſecondly, from the pit of hell. He will deliver his ſoul from the pit,

And his life ſhall ſee the light.] That is, he ſhall live to ſee the light; To ſee the light, is a circumlocution of life; As if it had been ſaid, He ſhall recover out of his deadly ſickneſs, and behold the light of the Sun, as living men do. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 56. 13.) That he might walk before God in the light of the living. And thus the wicked man is threatned with eternal death (Pſal. 49. 19.) He ſhall go to the generation of his fathers, they ſhall never ſee light: That is, they ſhall never enjoy life, but be ſhut up in a perpetual night of death, or in the night of perpetual death.

Videre lucem periphraſis eſt vitæ; ſicut è contrario tenebræ ſunt ſymbolum mortis. Pined.

Secondly, When 'tis ſaid, his life ſhall ſee the light, we may underſtand it, not only for a bare return to life, or that he ſhall live, but that he ſhall live comfortably and proſperouſly, he ſhall lead a happy life. To ſee the light, is to live and rejoyce; light is pleaſant, it is comfortable to behold the Sun, as Solomon ſpeaks. To ſee light, comprehends all the comforts of this life, and of that to come, which is called, the inheritance of the Saints in light, (Col. 1. 12.) For as darkneſs is put not only for death, but for all the troubles of this life, and the torments of the next; ſo light is put both for life, and for all the comforts of this and the next life. All the bleſſings of this temporal life, and the perfect bleſſedneſs of eternal life, are comprehended in light. So that when 'tis ſaid, his life ſhall ſee the light, the ſenſe riſeth thus high; He ſhall be happy for ever; ſo extenſive is the favour of God to repenting perſons, that time is too narrow for it; everlaſting light ſhall be their portion. From the former branch of the words thus opened, He will deliver him from the pit,

Obſerve, All our deliverances are of God.

As there is none can deliver like God, ſo none can deliver but God. If he gives out the word that ſuch a man ſhall go to the pit, it is not in the power and skill of all the Princes and Phyſicians in the world, to ſave or ſtay him from it. And how low and deſperate ſoever any mans condition is, if God ſay the word, he is delivered and reprieved from going down into the pit.

Secondly, From the connexion with the former verſe, the ſick man having made this confeſſion, I have ſinned and perverted that which is right, and it profiteth me not, the Lord preſently delivers him, &c.

Obſerve, God is ready to deliver humble praying and believing ſinners.

That command hath a promiſe joyned to it (Pſal. 50. 15.) Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver. The 107. Pſalm ſpeaks this quite through, where we find many ſorts of periſhing perſons, crying unto God, and God delivering them from periſhing when they cryed. As when ſin cryeth God will afflict, ſo when ſinners cry, God will relieve them in or bring them out of their affliction.

From the latter branch, His life ſhall ſee the light,

Note, Natural life, and light are a great bleſſing.

God promiſeth much when he promiſeth life and light; The light of this life is no ſmall mercy, how much greater is the light of ſpiritual life? But who can conceive how great a mercy the light of eternal life is! yet all this God ſpeaks to the humble and believing ſinner, when he ſaith, His life ſhall ſee the light.

Secondly, Comparing the two parts of this Text together, He will deliver him from going down to the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light, Obſerve, The mercy of God to humble ſinners, is a compleat mercy.

Here is not only deliverance from evil, but the beſtowing of good; it is much to be kept from going down into the pit, but it is more to ſee light, the light of comfort here, and the light of glory hereafter. The mercy of God to his people is great in temporals, greater in ſpirituals, greateſt in eternals. The benefit of redemption (to ſhew the fulneſs of it) is ſet forth two ways; Firſt, by our freedom from evil; Secondly, by our enjoyment of good John 3. 16.) God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. He ſhall not periſh (that is, he ſhall be delivered from going down to the pit) he ſhall have everlaſting life; that is (as the Text ſpeaks) his life ſhall ſee the light.

Elihu having at large drawn a deſcription or narration of the whole proceeding of God with ſinful man in all the parts and particulars of it, gives a brief of all that he ſaid, in the two next verſes.

Verſ. 29. Lo all theſe things worketh God oftentimes with man;

Verſ. 30. To bring back his ſoul from the pit, to be enlightned with the light of the living.

As the Apoſtle after he had diſcourſed at large, about the dignity of Chriſts Prieſt-hood, gathers up all together (Heb. 8. 1.) Now of the things which we have ſpoken, this is the ſum: we have ſuch an high Prieſt, who is ſet on the right hand of the throne of the Majeſty in the heavens: So Elihu having ſpoken much of the ſeveral ways, by which God revealeth himſelf to man, and works him to a ſight of his ſin, and penitential ſorrow for it, recollects and ſums up all in theſe words;

Lo all theſe things worketh God oftentimes with man, &c.

In theſe two verſes, we may take notice, chiefly of two things.

Firſt, The frequency of God's dealing thus with man (verſ. 29.) Lo all theſe things worketh God oftentimes.

Secondly, The deſign and purpoſe of God in doing ſo; That he may bring back his ſoul from the pit, and be enlightned with the light of the living.

Lo, all this worketh God oftentimes with man.] Here's the application of the former Doctrine; Elihu preſſeth his hearers with it, and bids them lay it to heart; As if he had ſaid, I have not been ſpeaking of things in the clouds, but of what is really and daily acted among the children of men. Lo (or behold) all theſe things. There are four ſpecial ſignifications in Scripture of this word, Lo, or behold, and they may all four meet in this place.

Firſt, It imports ſome new unheard of and wonderful thing (Iſa. 7. 14.) Lo, or behold, a virgin ſhall conceive, and bear a ſon: That a virgin ſhould bring forth a ſon, is a wonder of wonders, a wonder ſo much above the courſe and power of Nature, ſo much beyond the compaſs and comprehenſion of reaſon, that men and Angels have reaſon to be aſtoniſhed at it.

Secondly, 'Tis prefixed, to ſhew ſome extraordinary impulſe or readineſs of ſpirit for action. Thus Chriſt ſpeaketh in that other noble prophecy of him (Pſal. 40. 7.) Then ſaid I, Lo, I come, in the volume of the book it is written of me; I delight to do thy will O my God; yea thy Law is within my heart: Lo, I come, that is, I am ready to come, I am preſt upon the work, I am under the preſſure and command of my own ſpirit, as well as under thy appointment and decree to undertake and finiſh that work of mans redemption.

Thirdly, It frequently implieth matter worthy of weight and deepeſt conſideration. That's uſeful and remarkable which is thus prefaced. Thus Solomon ſpeaking of the field of the ſlothful man, ſaith (Prov. 24. 31.) Lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the ſtone wall thereof was broken down: As if he had ſaid, Mark, this is a thing to be attended, the ſluggards field is full of thorns; that is, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, ſlothful hearts are full of luſts and vanities. In this language the Church invites all to conſider the glorious excellencies of God (Iſa. 29. 9.) Lo, this is our God. And thus Chriſt ſpeaks of the woman whom he had healed on the Sabbath day (Luke 13. 16.) And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, theſe eighteen years, be looſed from her infirmity on the Sabbath day? As if he had ſaid, Pray conſider the caſe and ſpeak your minds.

Fourthly, 'Tis often uſed in a way of ſtrong aſſertion, and affirmation, intimating the certainty of what is ſpoken (Gen. 1. 29.) And God ſaid, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing ſeed. And again (Gen. 12. 11.) It came to paſs, when he was come near to enter into Egypt, that he ſaid unto Sarah his wife, Behold, now, I know that thou art a fair woman to look upon. (Read Pſal. 132. 6. Ezek. 30. 9. Luke 1. 32.)

In the preſent Text it may have all theſe intendments; for is it not a wonderful thing, that God ſhould be gracious to poor creatures? is it not ſtrange that he ſhould take ſo much pains with, and exerciſe ſo much patience towards them? Secondly, Lo, God worketh all theſe things; He is ready to do them, he waiteth to be gracious, or to magnifie his grace in doing them. Thirdly, Lo, God worketh all theſe things; is not this a matter of great conſideration, ought we not to ſit down and weigh it well? Fourthly, Lo, all theſe things worketh God; certainly God hath and will work all theſe things; this is a truth out of all queſtion, a truth of which there is no doubt to be made. As the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 3. 16.) Without controverſie, great is the myſtery of Godlineſs, God was manifeſt in the fleſh; So I may ſay without controverſie, great is this myſtery of God's manifeſting himſelf to frail fleſh, and doing all theſe things here ſpoken of, awakening the conſciences of men by dreams, and working upon them by grievous ſickneſſes, ſending an interpreter one of a thouſand to declare unto man his uprightneſs, and at laſt delivering his ſoul from going down into the pit. Lo, all theſe things worketh God.

There is ſomewhat peculiar in that expreſſion, he worketh. The native ſenſe of the word, implieth; Firſt, a willing work, not forced or conſtrained. Secondly, a full and compleat work, not an eſſay or offer, not a work begun only, but carried on to perfection. The wicked are called workers of iniquity, (Pſal. 5. 5.) becauſe they are free and ready to ſin, they have a ſtrong tyde and bent of ſpirit to do evil, and they do it not to halves, but throughly; they do not only begin or nibble at the bait a little (as a good man often doth) but greedily ſwallow it down hook and all; they are fully in it, and do it fully, they make a work of it, and ſo are workers of iniquity. The Lord doth good, as the wicked do evil; All theſe things worketh God, He worketh them willingly, he worketh them compleatly, (Iſa. 26. 12.) Lord thou wilt ordain peace for us, for thou alſo haſt wrought all our works in us; Thou art the Author and finiſher of them. We are invited (Pſal. 46. 8.) to come and behold the works of the Lord, what deſolations he hath made in the earth. The building works, and the deſolating works of God, whether reſpecting perſons or nations, are perfect works. Lo, all theſe things worketh God.

Hence note, Whatever good we ſee wrought among or for the children of men, God is the worker of it.

As he over-ruleth the evil which is done, and both ſendeth and ordereth the evil which is ſuffered; ſo he is the worker of all the good that is done. God worketh it all either immediately by himſelf, or mediately by ſecond cauſes; and what inſtrument ſoever is ſet a work, yet the work as to the matter and manner of it, as alſo to the reſult and iſſue of it, is the Lords. He was the worker of all that hath been ſpoken of in the former context; though we read of a meſſenger, of an interpreter, yet the work was Gods. 'Tis ſaid (Gen. 39. 22.) The keeper of the priſon committed to Joſephs hand, all the priſoners that were in the priſon, and whatſoever they did there, he was the doer of it. Not that he did every thing with his own hand in the priſon, but he gave the rule, and ordered all that was done. Much more may I ſay of the Lord, whatſoever is done in the world, eſpecially among his people, God is the doer of it. All goes through his hand. Lo, all theſe things worketh God.

Further, From the prefix, Lo,

Obſerve, The works and dealings of God with men are wonderful, thoſe eſpecially which he worketh for the humbling of a ſinner, and for the delivering of a ſoul from going down to the pit.

The breaking of the heart, the raiſing of it by faith, the renewing of its peace and comfort, are wonderful works of God. And the reaſon why we wonder no more at them, is, becauſe we conſider ſo little of them.

Hence again from the word, Lo,

Note, The works of God are to be deeply conſidered, to be ſtayed upon.

We muſt not paſs them by lightly, whether they be towards our ſelves or others, God hath made his wonderful works to be remembred (ſaith David, Pſal. 111. 4.) or to be conſidered, that's the deſign of God in his works, he hath made them for that end, that they ſhould be remembred, and attended to, or they are ſuch as cannot but be remembred; they leave their marks and memorials behind them. God ſets ſuch a ſtamp of his power, wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs upon his works, that they will not be forgotten. And as his outward providential works, are ſuch, ſo his ſpiritual works are much more ſuch. The godly-wiſe underſtand them ſo, they have a critical eye in diſcerning thoſe inviſible works of God with a poor ſoul, in reducing him from ſin, and bringing him to himſelf. David calleth all the godly to the conſideration of thoſe works in his own caſe (Pſal. 66. 16.) Come and hear all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my ſoul. What God doth for our bodies is very conſiderable, but what he hath done for our ſouls can never be enough conſidered nor admired. Lo, all theſe things worketh God διὰ τριῶν τούτων τρόπων. Schol.

Ἰδοὺ ταῦτα πάντα ἐργάζεται ὁ ἰσχυρὸς ὁδοὺς τρεῖς μετὰ ἀνδρός. Sept.

Oftentimes with man.] The original is, twice, thrice, ſo we put in the margin, and render it often-times, in the Text. Some expound it, of thoſe three diſtinct ways, in which God dealeth with man, before deſcribed. The Septuagint are expreſs for that; All theſe things worketh the ſtrong God three ways with man, Which the Scholiaſt exemplifies in the three ways here noted by Elihu. Firſt, awakning him by dreams and viſions; Secondly, troubling him by ſickneſſes and afflictions; Thirdly, teaching him by Prophets and Interpreters. Yet, I conceive, the Text doth not ſtrictly recapitulate thoſe three ſeveral ways before ſpoken of, in theſe words, twice, thrice, but only ſhews us that God uſeth all theſe ways or any other, as his wiſdom ſhall think fit, many times, or oftentimes for the producing of thoſe bleſſed effects. Lo, all theſe things worketh God oftentimes with man.

Twice, thrice, is a double certain number, put for any ſingle uncertain number; And it only teacheth or aſſureth us, that God debateth with the ſons of men in all or any of theſe ways oftentimes, or more than once. If they do not anſwer his call or purpoſe (which they ſeldom do) at the firſt; he calleth again and again, twice or thrice, or often-times, that is, as often as he ſeeth it good, needful or expedient to do it. And we may ſuppoſe that Elihu uſeth this number twice, or thrice, in alluſion to the cuſtoms of men; whether civil Magiſtrates or Churches, who when they deal with others about any fault committed or offence given, they do not take them at the very firſt default, but warn and admoniſh them twice or thrice, or ſend them (as the caſe may require) ſeveral Citations to appear, and either to acknowledg their guilt, or acquit themſelves of it.

Theſe things worketh God twice or thrice.] And remember, it is but twice or thrice; which ſpeech though it may be well rendred (as we ſay) oftentimes, yet it is not very often; once is no number, twice is the leaſt number, and thrice is but a ſmall number, two or three witneſſes are the leaſt number of witneſſes that can be admitted in any buſineſs. That, the Lord will do this, twice or thrice proves that he will do it ſeveral times, men ſhall have means, and frequent means, but twice or thrice, may not be very often, much leſs always, there is a ſtint, and a determinate number in the breaſt of God; and that we might not expect to have his patience lengthned out always to us, 'tis put into the ſmalleſt numbers, All theſe things worketh God twice or thrice, Tribus vicibus, i. e. multoties, ſed utitur numero ternario, ut congruat humanæ conſuetudini, per quam ſolent homines ter moneri vel citari. Aquin.

With man.] The word by which man is here expreſſed, is, no ordinary word; 'tis that word which ſignifieth the higheſt and greateſt of men, God deals thus not only with inferiour perſons, and mean men, but with great men, with men of note, with men of power and ſtrength; let men be as ſtrong, and ſtout, as they will, God can tame them, and bring them to his foot.

צבר Non quemlibet virum importat, ſed ut plurimum nobilem illuſtrem, vel aliqua ratione ſpectabilem. Bold.

Further, when he ſaith, Lo, all theſe things God worketh oftentimes with man. This appellative man, may be taken two ways.

Firſt, Perſonally or individually, that is, he worketh thus oftentimes with the ſame man, God is put to renew his actings more than once with one and the ſame man, becauſe he will not bow nor obey at firſt.

Secondly, We may take this word man ſpecially as implying ſeveral men, or men of all ſorts, as well as any one man of a ſort. That manner of ſpeaking is frequent in the old Teſtament (Job 1.4.) And his ſons went and feaſted in their houſes, man his day, or every one his day. So (Joh. 1. 7.) And they ſaid, every one to his fellow, or man to his fellow, ſo here God worketh theſe things oftentimes with man, that is, with ſeveral men, as ſeemeth good to him. The ſpeech is diſtributive. For though we are not to underſtand it ſo largely, as if God dealt thus with every particular man, yet he deals thus with many men, even with as many as himſelf pleaſeth, or hath purpoſed. Lo, All theſe things worketh God oftentimes with man.

q. d. unicunq; hominum ſolet Deus prædicta ſuæ voluntatis judicia manifeſtare, ut ſit oratio diſtributiva. Bold.

Hence note, Such is the goodneſs of God, that though man is not wrought upon preſently, or at the firſt, yet he will come a ſecond or a third time to carry his work through with him.

'Tis a mercy that God will ſpeak once, or uſe any means once with us, 'tis mercy that he will ſpeak any one word in any one way, to bring us off from ſin; 'tis mercy that he will ſend one viſion, or one affliction, to awaken us out of our ſecurity, or one meſſenger to inſtruct us once in our duty; but when the Lord is pleaſed to uſe ſeveral means, and thoſe ſeveral means, ſeveral times, how doth the abundant mercy and graciouſneſs of God appear in this! And as the mercy of God in general, ſo the patience of God in ſpecial appeareth abundantly in it. The Lord waits to be gracious, he waits the working of this or that means, of a ſecond and third means, and he waits the working of them all over again and again, or oftentimes; here is patience with long-ſufferance.

Secondly, Obſerve, God will perfect his work, and bring it to an iſſue with ſinful man.

God would not give over working to humble Job, till he had fully humbled him; And this made Job almoſt amazed at God's dealing with him (Chap. 7. 17, 18, 19.) What is man that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him? and that thou ſhouldſt ſet thy heart upon him? And that thou ſhouldſt viſit him every morning, and try him every moment. Job ſeemed much troubled at this inſtancy of God with him, and therefore expoſtulated in the next words, How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone till I ſwallow down my ſpittle? But, for all his crying, God would not depart from him, nor let him alone for a morning, no nor for a moment till he had finiſhed his work and accompliſhed his will both in him and upon him; till he had brought his heart into a due frame and temper under his mighty hand. If once or twice will not do it, he will do it thrice; The Lord is not weary either of working or waiting; God is a rock (ſaith Moſes Deut. 32. 4.) and his work is perfect; and of all his works, that of grace is moſt perfect. His viſible providential works are perfect or ſhall be before he hath done with them, or put his laſt hand to them, but his inviſible ſpiritual works are moſt perfect; as God worketh often to bring man out of the ſtate of ſin to grace; ſo he will not ceaſe working till grace be perfected, he will work till that work is wrought to the height, till the top-ſtone of it is ſet up, or as the Apoſtle phraſeth it (Eph. 4. 13.) Till we all come to a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt. Though a man hath been once truly humbled, yet God humbles him again, that he may be humbled gradually as well as truly to his own mind. They that are humbled by affliction, may need more afflictions to humble them. The ſame means by which faith and repentance are wrought at firſt, do alſo increaſe and ſtrengthen faith and repentance. Thoſe means by which a man is at firſt purged, are very proper for his further purging (John 15. 2.) Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. As no man can be a true branch (hypocrites and formaliſts are branches only in appearance and profeſſion, they were never truly purged, now, I ſay, as no man can be a true branch) till he is purged, ſo God purgeth thoſe who are the true fruit-bearing branches more and more, that they may bring forth more fruit. And the means by which he purgeth them, that is, mortifieth their corruptions, ſeldom reach this bleſſed effect at once or twice working, and therefore the Lord is even conſtrained to work theſe things twice, thrice, or oftentimes, elſe the work would not be brought to the intended iſſue.

Thirdly, In that it is ſaid, All theſe things worketh God oftentimes, not always.

Obſerve, Man ſhould make haſte to anſwer the call of God, and come up to what he requireth of him.

For though God work theſe things oftentimes, yet no man knows how often he will work, and we may all know, he will not work always. 'Tis a high and dangerous preſumption to defer at any time upon hopes that God will work at another time, becauſe in ſome caſes he works oftentimes. Remember (as was ſhewed before in opening the words) this thrice is the leaſt number of often, as twice is the leaſt number of any; two or three are the leaſt number that makes a Church-aſſembly (Matth. 18. 20.) The Prophet ſaith (Amos 2.4.) For three tranſgreſſions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof. Implying that if men multiply their tranſgreſſions, God will not always give them means of repentance, but pour out wrath upon them, ſo Elihu ſaith, God worketh twice and thrice; but if men will ſin three or four times, where is their warrant that God will pardon or paſs by their ſins? The Prophet did not bind up the mercy of God preciſely to two or three tranſgreſſions, but if men ſin without bounds, he ſhews they have no ground to expect God ſhould be merciful. One of the Jewiſh Rabbins (as ſome expound him) concludes peremptorily, If man ſin twice or thrice God will ſpare, but if four times God will puniſh. We do not circumſcribe the grace of God to a ſpecial number, and poſſibly that Rabbin did not intend it ſo, but only that all ſhould take heed they do not abuſe the grace of God. That God multiplyeth to pardon, or (as we render, Iſa. 55 7.) Pardoneth abundantly, is no ſecurity for any man to ſin abundantly, or to multiply tranſgreſſions. My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man (ſaith the Lord, Gen. 6. 3.) I have ſtriven long already, and I will yet ſtrive longer, even an hundred and twenty years, but I will not ſtrive always. God gave Jezebel a ſpace to repent (Rev. 2. 21.) but when ſhe repented not, he did not promiſe her a new ſpace to repent in, but threatned her with wrath to the utmoſt if ſhe repented not. There is a frequency in the work of God to reduce ſinners, but not a perpetuity. And as in this verſe Elihu reports this frequency of his work, ſo in the next he reports that to be the deſign of it.

Verſ. 30. To bring back his ſoul from the pit, to be enlightned with the light of the living.

This verſe (I ſay) ſheweth the purpoſe of God in working twice, thrice, or oftentimes with man. This purpoſe (as was touched before) is two-fold. Firſt, to free and deliver him from evil, the worſt of evils, a horrible pit. Secondly, to eſtate him in and give him poſſeſſion of not only that which is good, but beſt of all, the light of the living. Nor is this purpoſe of God a bare deſire (that's often fruitleſs and ſucceſsleſs) but a ſtrong or ſetled reſolution, to bring back the ſick mans ſoul from the pit. And Elihu (we may ſuppoſe) ſpake thus, as to preſs Job to haſten the work of his repentance; ſo to put him in hope (upon conſideration of this deſign of God in afflicting him) that he ſhould be delivered from his afflictions, and have not only his life continued, but the comforts of it reſtored to him. As if he had ſaid, Be not afraid, do not look upon thy condition as hopeleſs, or that the humiliation of thy ſelf will be fruitleſs, for I dare aſſure thee, God hath gracious purpoſes and intendments towards thee in working theſe things.

And here we have a two-fold gracious purpoſe of God expreſſed; Firſt, to deliver him from evil, to bring back his ſoul from the pit. Secondly, to do him good, or to beſtow poſitive bleſſings upon him (as was ſhewed at the 28. verſe) even to be enlightned with the light of the living; As if he had ſaid, God in all this aims only at mans good, that his ſin unrepented of be not his death and deſtruction, and that under a ſenſe of Divine favour towards him, he may lead a comfortable life here, and be happy for ever.

To bring back his ſoul from the pit.] It is ſaid at the 28. verſe, He will deliver his ſoul from going into the pit; in both places the pit is the ſame.

But ſeeing the Lord there promiſed to deliver his ſoul from going into the pit, how is he ſaid here, to bring back his ſoul from the pit? A man being delivered from going to the pit, cannot be ſaid to be brought back from the pit.

I anſwer in two things; the words rendred to bring back his ſoul from the pit, may be read thus; to turn away his ſoul from the pit; that is, to preſerve him from death. So the Hebrew word is uſed (Chap. 15. 13.) as alſo (Mal. 2. 6.) He walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn away many from iniquity. If we take that rendring of the word, then the expreſſions in both places bear the ſame ſenſe. But taking it according to our reading, in which to bring back his ſoul from the pit, ſounds, as if the man had been in the pit already; and it may well be ſaid ſo, becauſe a man in great affliction, whether of ſoul or body, is as it were, dead, or buried alive. For as when God converts a ſinner, he (upon the matter) brings him back from hell; ſo when he delivers him from any grievous ſickneſs, he doth (upon the matter) bring him back from the grave. Heman in ſpiritual afflictions and ſoul-deſertions, the terrours of the Lord being upon him, called himſelf free among the dead, like the ſlain that lye in the grave, whom God remembreth no more, and they are cut off from thy hand, (Pſal. 88. 5.) They that are near the pit of death, are not, much improperly, called dead, and they that being in ſuch a deſperate caſe are kept from going down to the pit, are not, much improperly ſaid to be brought back from the pit, or pulled out of it. In which ſenſe we may keep to our own reading; and ſo to bring back his ſoul from the pit, notes only the extream danger wherein he was, whether ſpiritual or temporal, and God's graciouſneſs in delivering him from it.

> Hence note, When God reſtores a man out of any deſperate condition, whether of ſoul or body, he gives him a new life; he brings him in one reſpect back from the grave, and in another from hell.

As a ſick man, he is brought from the grave, and as a ſinner he is brought from hell. Great deliverances are a kind of new creation; And freſh bleſſings are to us as freſh beings. Take theſe two inferences from it.

Firſt, How ſhould they, who have been under great outward afflictions, praiſe the Lord when they are delivered! They who having had the ſentence of death in themſelves, ſhould look upon themſelves when reſtored, as men raiſed from the dead. And how ſhould ſinners praiſe the Lord, when he hath reconciled them to himſelf, and pardoned their ſins. In doing this for them, he delivereth them from wrath, from hell, and from eternal death. Let ſuch praiſe the name of the Lord, and ſay, as in the Text, He hath delivered our ſouls from the pit.

Secondly, Let ſuch live unto God, having received a new life from God; They that have received a new temporal life from God, ought to dedicate it unto God; how much more they that have received new ſpiritual life? They that have received it indeed, cannot but dedicate it unto God. This negative mercy calls aloud for all that we are or have to be given up to God, but that poſitive mercy which followeth, calleth yet louder for it.

And to be enlightned with the light of the living.

Take it for temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal life, all theſe ends are accompliſhed in thoſe merciful works of God to poor ſinners; ſome reſtrain the Text to the light of this temporal life, others enlarge it to the light of ſpiritual and eternal life. We are enlightned with the light of the living, When the comforts of this life are reſtored, much more are they, who are reſtored to the comforts of their ſpiritual life, and ſo to the hope of eternal life.

Nomen חיים non ſumitur pro quibuſlibet hominibus hac vita fruentibus, ſed pro divitibus potentibus, vivere eſt vigere, valere. Sunt qui ad futuram vitam referunt, ſed id ſi tam quidem Allegoricè intelligi, poſtquam ad literam de hac vita intellexeris. Merc.

By the living, we are not to underſtand thoſe who are barely on this ſide the grave, and yet breath in the air; or who have only a weak ſhadowed ſpiritual life, which they ſcarce know of or perceive. The living here are they that live comfortably and proſperouſly both as to ſoul and body. Thus 'tis ſaid in that Prophecy of Chriſt (Pſal. 72. 13.) He ſhall live, and to him ſhall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer alſo ſhall be made for him continually, and daily ſhall he be praiſed. Chriſt lives to purpoſe, he lives as a Prince, in power and dignity, yea he is the Prince of life. It was more than a ſenſitive or rational life which David's faith was aſſured of, when he ſaid, (Pſal. 118. 17.) I ſhall not dye but live; his meaning was, I ſhall live honourably and triumphantly, declaring (with joy) the works of the Lord. Thus here, To be enlightned with the light of the living, is, to enjoy a comfortable life, or to live happily.

> Hence note, A troubled ſtate is a dark ſtate, ſickneſs and ſorrow, whether inward or outward, are darkneſs.

They are darkned with the darkneſs of the dead, whoſe life is wrapped up in anguiſh and ſorrow.

> Secondly, Note, The deſign and purpoſe of God in all his ordinances, and providences towards his people is for their good.

All that hath been ſaid before, emptieth it ſelf into theſe ſayings, To keep back his ſoul from the pit, and to be enlightned with the light of the living. The Lord hath no eye in theſe works to his own gain, but mans good. The Lord doth not willingly grieve, nor afflict the children of men (Lam. 3. 35.) He taketh no pleaſure in it abſtractly conſidered, nor doth he look for any profit by it: Much leſs doth he it (as it follows, verſ. 36.) meerly to cruſh under his feet all the priſoners of the earth. All that he expects by it as to himſelf is to be glorified by all (for himſelf is above all, and therefore deſigneth himſelf in all) yet the glory which God hath by man is only the manifeſtation of his glory, not any addition to it. The benefit which God aims at in afflicting man returns to man. He would have man bettered by affliction, and as ſoon as man is bettered by affliction, every thing ſhall go better with him, and he ſhall be delivered from affliction. (Rom. 8. 28.) All things work together for the good of them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe. And as all things work together for the good of them, who are the called according to his purpoſe, ſo it is the purpoſe of God that all things ſhould work together for their good, and that is not a ſucceſsleſs purpoſe. Indeed every rod upon the backs of the wicked hath a voice in it, to call them from the pit of death and deſtruction, and to be enlightned with the light of the living, but God makes this call effectual to all his elect, none of whom ſhall periſh with the world. So that a godly man ſhould be ſo far from judging himſelf dealt with as an enemy (as Job in his extremity did) when he is moſt ſorely afflicted, that indeed he may ſee the love and fatherly care of God in it. All the providential diſpenſations of God work to glorious ends. Sometimes for the outward good of his people in this life, always for good as to their ſpiritual and eternal life.

Therefore, lay aſide hard thoughts of God whatſoever hard things he is a doing, or you are ſuffering. The ways in which God leads us, may poſſibly be very dark, yet they run to this point, to keep us from the pit of darkneſs, and that we may be enlightned with the light of the living.

> Thirdly, Note, Man would undo himſelf both for here and for ever, if God did not work wonderfully for him, and powerfully keep him from deſtruction.

All theſe things God worketh twice and thrice, to keep out ſouls from the pit; man left to himſelf would run headlong upon miſchief in this world, and upon eternal miſery in the world to come. Nothing but the hand of God can hold man from ruining himſelf. The heart of man is ſo ſet upon ſin, that he will rather loſe his ſoul, than leave his luſt; and will rather die than that ſhall. 'Tis as eaſie to ſtay the motion of the Sun, or to turn back the courſe of nature, as to ſtay or turn back the natural motion or courſe of the heart in ſinning. An almighty power muſt do the latter as well as the former. So that if the Lord did not put forth more than mercy, even mercy clothed with power, no man could be ſaved; ſhould God wiſh us never ſo well, and tell us what good he hath laid up for us, if we will but believe and obey him; ſhould he tell us he hath riches of mercy, and that every one who will come ſhall have his ſhare, yet we ſhould never have any, if left to our own chuſing. 'Tis a work therefore both of mercy and power which keeps us from the pit. God had much ado to keep Lot from being conſumed in Sodom. He had warning to be gone, yet he was loth to go; The Text ſaith (Gen. 19. 16.) While Lot lingred the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters, the Lord being merciful to him, and they brought him forth, and ſet him without the City; elſe probably he had lingred, till he had periſhed. Surely if God did not thruſt ſinners out of the Sodom of this world (as we ſay) by head and ſhoulders, they would periſh in it and with it. How wonderful is the goodneſs of God, who doth all theſe things, not only to keep poor creatures from going down to the pit, both temporally, and eternally, but alſo that they may be enlightned with the light of the living?

VERS. 31, 32, 33.

Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me, hold thy peace, and I will ſpeak.

If thou haſt any thing to ſay, anſwer me: ſpeak, for I deſire to juſtifie thee.

If not, hearken unto me; hold thy peace, and I ſhall teach thee wiſdom.

These three verſes contain the Epilogue or concluſion of Elihu's firſt addreſs to Job. In which we may conſider theſe three things.

Firſt, He perſwadeth him to a due attention and ſilent conſideration, both of what he had ſaid, or ſhould ſay further. (verſ. 31.) Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me, &c.

Secondly, He gives him liberty, and fair leave to reply, if he ſhould pleaſe, to what he hath already ſpoken (v. 32.) If thou haſt any thing to ſay, anſwer me, ſpeak. To which conceſſion or invitation he adds a very friendly and an ingenuous reaſon in the cloſe of the verſe; For I deſire to juſtifie thee.

Thirdly, He profeſſeth his own readineſs to proceed and ſpeak further with him, or to carry on this diſcourſe, in caſe Job had nothing to reply. (verſ. 33.) If not, hearken unto me, hold thy peace, and I ſhall teach thee wiſdom.

Verſ. 31. Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me.

In this verſe Elihu calls for a twofold attention; Firſt, to thoſe things he had already ſpoken. Secondly, to thoſe things which he was yet to ſpeak. What he had already ſpoken, he deſireth him to conſider and make reply if he pleaſed, as is clear (verſ. 32.) and as to what he had yet further to ſay, he deſireth his attention and ſubmiſſion, as it followeth (verſ. 33.) If not, hearken unto me, hold thy peace.

Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me.] Here are two words of attention, mark, and hearken, and both very ſignificant ones. The word rendred mark, ſignifieth to attend, with utmoſt diligence; it is ſometimes rendred by hearkning (Iſa. 32. 3.) The eyes of them that ſee ſhall not be dim: and the ears of them that hear ſhall hearken; that is, they who heretofore, through the juſt judgment of God for their wilful ſhutting their eyes and ears, in ſeeing did ſee but not perceive, and in hearing did hear but not underſtand (Iſa. 6. 10. 29. 10. compared with Matth. 13. 14.) ſhall at laſt ſee clearly and attend diligently to the will of God delivered to them; yea it ſeems to note ſome ſpecial geſture, as the lifting up of the ear to hear. For as there is a lifting up of the voice in the zealous ſpeaker, ſo of the ear in the diligent hearer. To mark is to hear and obſerve, to hear and lay to heart the things which are ſpoken, Mark well, O Job,

And hearken.] That's a word of a large extent, to hearken is more than to hear; it takes in not only, firſt, the work of the ear, but ſecondly, the work of the mind; 'tis hearing firſt, with underſtanding; ſecondly, with believing; yea thirdly, it takes in the work of the whole man in obeying, or ſubmitting to what is ſpoken. Thus God ſaid to Adam (Gen. 3. 17.) Becauſe thou haſt hearkned unto the voice of thy wife, that is, becauſe thou haſt obeyed her voice, and done the thing ſhe perſwaded thee to; After hearkning comes doing. Laſtly, it includes alſo a work of the affections; hearkning is with delighting, that which we hearken to we are pleaſed with; 'tis (like good muſick) ſweet unto us; in this compaſs and extent we may expound theſe words, Mark well, O Job, and hearken unto me. And theſe words, eſpecially the former of the two, rendred mark, are often uſed in Scripture, when the people of God deſire and beg that he would take notice of and attend unto their prayer. Thus David more than once (Pſ. 5. 2.) Hearken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God, for unto thee will I pray (Pſal. 66. 19.) but verily God hath heard me, he hath attended to the voice of my prayer (Pſal. 130. 2.) Lord hear my voice, let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my ſupplication. Now, as when we deſire that God would hear our prayer, we deſire that he would be very attentive to our prayer, and not only ſo, but do what we pray for, and that our prayers may be welcom, acceptable, and delightful to him; ſo when we are ſaid to mark and hearken to what is ſpoken to us, all the powers of our inward man, the underſtanding, will and affections are at work in hearing.

> Hence note, He that will profit by hearing muſt be an attentive hearer.

He muſt mark and hearken, a fruitful hearer doth more then hear, he marks; not only is his ear at work, but his mind, his heart, his whole ſoul is, as it were, transformed into an ear, or is active at his ear. There are many, and it were well there were more hearers of the word, but there are few markers of the word, many come to Sermons, yet but few hearken unto Sermons; every hearer is not a marker, not a hearkner to what he heareth, and not being ſo, he can ſcarcely be called a hearer; for they only that are markers ſhall attain that mark of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Phil. 3. 14.) I preſs toward the mark for the price of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus. What is our mark in hearing? is it not ſalvation by Chriſt, and glory with him? Now unleſs we are markers, we never preſs towards, much leſs attain that mark, the price of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus. Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me,

Hold thy peace, and I will ſpeak.] 'Tis but one word in the Hebrew which we tranſlate, hold thy peace, and it ſignifieth properly to dig or plough the ground, and by a metaphor to think of, or to meditate, becauſe thoughts go deep in the ſoul, a man doth, as it were, plough up his own ſpirit, while he is meditating or thinking ſeriouſly (Prov. 3. 29.) Deviſe not evil, or (it is this word) plough not up evil; that's a bad ſoil indeed, to be ploughing up. They that plough evil, ſhall ſow the wind, and (except they repent) reap the whirlwind. The Prophet exhorting Ephraim to break up their fallow ground and ſow in righteouſneſs, that they might reap mercy (Hoſ. 10. 12.) reproves them (verſ. 13.) for a very unprofitable piece of husbandry, by this word, Ye have ploughed wickedneſs, ye have reaped iniquity, ye have eaten the fruit of lyes, that is, ye have plotted, deviſed, and contrived wicked things, and ye have fared accordingly. Now as the word ſignifieth to meditate, by a metaphor, from digging or ploughing; ſo by the figure antiphraſis or contrary ſpeaking, it ſignifies to forbear doing or ſpeaking, to ſit ſtill, or as we render it here, to hold our peace, and ſay nothing. (Iſa. 41. 1.) Keep ſilence before me, O Iſlands. (Pſal. 50. 3.) Our God ſhall come, and ſhall not keep ſilence; that is, he will ſpeak aloud. Elihu beſpeaks Job in the affirmative, hold thy peace, be ſilent.

Videtur Jobus ſe avertiſſe, vel diſplicentiæ ſignum dediſſe, illum igitur ad ſe audiendum invitat. Scult.

Some conceive Job began to interrupt Elihu; or gave ſome token of diſlike, while he was diſcourſing; as if he had received his ſpeech with diſguſt, and not only inwardly ſtomached at it. But did not forbear to diſcover it by ſome ſignificant geſture or frown, and that Elihu perceiving this, deſired him to hold his peace; As if he had ſaid, If you deſire to reap any benefit by what I ſpeak, be patient, and do not interrupt me. But I conceive there was no ſuch height nor heat of ſpirit in Job at that time; He began now to be ſedate and quiet enough, being ſomewhat convinced of his former error and intemperance of ſpeech.

But ſome may ſay; was it not an over-bold part in Elihu a young man to impoſe ſilence upon Job, or to bid him hold his peace?

I anſwer; Elihu doth not bid Job hold his peace, either, firſt, as if he had ſeen him unwilling to let him ſpeak, or would not hear him any more; Job was a very patient hearer; he heard his friends patiently, and he had heard Elihu too with ſilence and patience, yea though Elihu offered him leave, yea almoſt provoked him to ſpeak (verſ. 5.) yet he did not but gave him ſcope to ſpeak out. Nor did Elihu ſpeak this, ſecondly, as if he ſlighted Job, or thought him a man unable to anſwer him, or ſpeak to purpoſe, for preſently in the next verſe he deſireth him again to ſpeak. Nor thirdly, as if he had ſuch high thoughts of his own wiſdom, and loved ſo much to hear himſelf ſpeak (as ſome men do) that he cared not to hear others, but would engroſs all the diſcourſe. Nor was it, fourthly, becauſe he ſaw ſuch an affectation in Job to ſpeak, that he needed (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome, Tit. 1. 11.) to have his mouth ſtopt. It was not upon any of theſe or ſuch like reaſons, that Elihu deſired Job to hold his peace; but it was either firſt, that himſelf might ſpeak more clearly, and carry his matter through to his underſtanding; or ſecondly, that he might ſet the matter more home upon his conſcience, and move him to conſider yet more ſeriouſly what he had ſaid, of the various ways of God's dealing with man to humble his ſoul, and bring him nearer to himſelf; or laſtly, that Job might perceive and take notice, that he was the man aimed at in all the foregoing parable. As if he had ſaid, Sit down quietly, and conſider with thy ſelf, whither all this diſcourſe hath tended, or whether or no thou art not the man intended in it. As Chriſt when he had ſpoken that parable of the ſower concluded (Matth. 13. 9.) He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear; that is, let him take it home to himſelf; or as Chriſt concludeth his Epiſtles to the ſeven Churches in the ſecond and third Chapters of the Revelation, with, He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith to the Churches; ſo doth Elihu to Job in ſpecial, Mark well, O Job, and hearken unto me, hold thy peace.

This ſilence was made of old in great aſſemblies (Majeſtate manus) by putting the hand to the mouth, and then ſtretching it forth. Acts 12. 17. Acts 13. 16. Chap. 19. 23. Chap. 26. 1.

If any would know yet more diſtinctly what Elihu meant when he bid Job hold his peace? I anſwer, Firſt, Negatively, not a bare ſilence, or ſaying nothing, but affirmatively, when he ſaith, hold thy peace; it might note theſe two things.

Firſt, That he would have him much in the work of conſideration, or to forbear ſpeaking, that he might be more in meditating, and weighing, and laying things to heart; he would have him bring what he had ſpoken to the ballance of the Sanctuary, and then to his own heart. A man is never more buſie than when he thus holds his peace.

Secondly, When he ſaith, hold thy peace, it might note that he deſired his ſubmiſſion to the counſel given, or to be given him; He would have him bridle his tongue, in token that his ſpirit was bridled. He would have Job's ſilence ſay, ſpeak on, I will ſay nothing, let the truth of God reign and rule over me by thy word. What Samuel anſwered to the Lord himſelf (1 Sam. 3. 10.) Speak Lord, for thy ſervant heareth; that ſhould we anſwer to thoſe who ſpeak to us from the Lord; ſpeak ye, we will hear and hold our peace: or we ſhould ſay with good Cornelius, when Peter came to him (Acts 10. 33.) We are all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. When a man holds his peace (upon theſe terms) 'tis a ſign he layeth down his own wiſdom, and his will, he doth not ſtand upon his pantofles (as we ſay) nor abound in his own ſence, but is ready to be delivered or caſt into the mould of any holy and wholeſom doctrine which ſhall be delivered unto him. They are in the fitteſt frame to hold the truth which others ſpeak, who can withhold themſelves from ſpeaking.

Further, There is a twofold holding of the peace. Firſt, at the works of God, or at what God doth (Lev. 10. 3.) when God had ſmitten the two ſons of Aaron dead with fire from heaven, Aaron held his peace; that is, he did not murmure at, nor contradict what God had done. That alſo was David's temper (Pſal. 39. 9.) I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou Lord didſt it. The Prophet Jeremy deſcribes an humbled ſoul in the ſame poſture (Lam. 3. 28.) He ſitteth alone and keepeth ſilence, becauſe he hath born it upon him. When God layeth his yoke or croſs upon us, 'tis our duty to be ſilent and ſubmit (Zach. 2. 13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord: for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation, that is, the Lord begins to work, therefore let all men, or men of all ſorts and degrees be quiet and ſay nothing either diſcontentedly or complainingly. In all theſe Scriptures, holding our peace is called for and commanded or ſhewed at the works of God.

Secondly, There is a holding of our peace at the word of God, or at what God ſpeaketh. Thus 'tis when not only the tongue but the heart is ſilent, and every thought is brought into ſubjection or captivity to the obedience of Chriſt. The heart of man often ſpeaks much, and is very clamorous, when he ſaith nothing with his tongue. That's to hold our peace indeed, when the heart is quiet, let God ſay or do what he will. 'Tis not more our duty to reſiſt the Devil, that is, all his helliſh whiſperings and temptations to the doing of evil, than 'tis to ſubmit to God in all his ſpeakings and diſpenſations. Elihu ſpeaking in the name of the Lord, faithfully adviſeth Job in this ſenſe, to hold his peace.

Hence learn, We ought to ſubmit and keep ſilence when the truth of God is ſpoken. Or, when the mind of God is brought unto us, there muſt be no replying but obeying, no diſputing but ſubmitting.

They have learned much, who know how and when to ſay nothing. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 3. 6.) There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak; but this kind of ſilence is in ſeaſon at all times, we ought always to be ſilent thus, that is, always ſubmit to the mind of God. We need to be minded of this, becauſe the pride and over-weening of man is great. We have need to put a bridle upon our tongues, much more upon our hearts; it is hard to bring our wills and our underſtandings under; we are apt to ſtrive and ſtruggle when truth comes near us; yea to kick at it, when it comes very near and home to us, though indeed the nearer it comes the better, nor can it ever come too near. The Apoſtle James apprehended this when he gave that admonition (Chap. 1. 21.) Receive with meekneſs, the ingraffed word, which is able to ſave your ſouls: Meekneſs is that grace which moderates anger; a paſſionate or fierce ſpirit, receiveth not the word, but riſeth up againſt it, turns not to it but upon it; and, which is worſt of all, turns it to evil, not to good, turns light into darkneſs; and ſo the word of life becomes a ſavour of death for want of a due ſubmiſſion to it. Therefore hearken, and hold your peace when the word of God is ſpoken. Do not ſay it is but the word of man, becauſe delivered by man; God ſpeaks in and by his faithful Meſſengers; ye oppoſe the authority of the living God, not a mortal dying creature, when you reject the word. And remember, it is not only our duty but our liberty to give up our ſelves priſoners to the truths of God; we are never ſo free as when bound by it or to it. And as we ſhould hold our peace at or ſubmit to all the truths of God in all caſes, ſo eſpecially in theſe three.

Firſt, When we are reproved for our ſins in practice; then we ſhould not ſtand excuſing what we have done, but repent of it.

Secondly, When we are ſhewed our errour in opinion; then we ſhould not ſtand diſputing, and arguing for what we hold, but recant it. 'Tis time to hold our peace, when once it appears to us, that we do not hold the truth. To erre is common to man, but to perſevere in an errour, to the defence and patronage of it, is more than inhumane, deviliſh.

Thirdly, We ſhould hold our peace when our duty is plain before us; then we ſhould not ſtand queſtioning it, but do it. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 9. 10. that is, whatſoever appears to be a duty) do it with all thy might. Hold thy tongue, but do not withhold thy hand when once thy hand hath found what muſt be done. Elihu at this time was dealing with Job upon all theſe three points; He told him his ſin, that he had been too querulous and impatient, he ſhewed him his error, that he had been too bold with God, becauſe innocent towards men; And he preſſed him to duty, both that, and how he ought to humble himſelf before the Lord. The Apoſtle treating about that great point of juſtification, tells us God will at laſt cauſe all men to hold their peace. (Rom. 3. 19.) Now we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God; that is, man will have nothing to ſay, but ſit down ſilent, and hold his peace, or only ſay, I am nothing, I have deſerved nothing but death and condemnation, when he once underſtands the holineſs and ſtrictneſs of the law, together with the unholineſs and looſeneſs of his own heart and life.

Hence note, It ſpeaks, yea proclaims a gracious prudence, to know how and when to hold our peace and ſay nothing.

When men inſiſt upon their own conceit and reaſon, when they logick it unduly with God or men, and will needs ſeem to know more than the word teacheth them, what do they but give evidence againſt themſelves, that as yet they know nothing as the word teacheth, or as they ought to know, and themſelves leaſt of all? 'Tis pride and preſumption, not prudence and underſtanding which opens ſuch mens mouths. We never profit by what we hear, till (in the ſenſe opened) we have learned to hold our peace. The counſel which Elihu gave Job, was to hold his peace; yet he laid no conſtraint upon him to refrain neceſſary ſpeaking, but put him upon it in the next verſe.

Verſ. 32. If thou haſt any thing to ſay, anſwer me; ſpeak, for I deſire to juſtifie thee.

Leſt Elihu ſhould be interpreted to have taken too much upon him, or to have denied Job his liberty of ſpeaking, when he ſaid, hold thy peace; he here calls him to ſpeak; This is a full proof, that his intent was not to bar him from ſpeaking, but only that he ſhould forbear unneceſſary ſpeaking. As if he had ſaid, Now that I have gone thus far, if I have ſpoken any thing that thou art unſatisfied in, and doſt deſire I ſhould explain my ſelf about; ſpeak thy mind freely; for though I have more to ſay, yet I will not hinder thee from ſaying what thou canſt fairly ſay for thy ſelf, neither will I over-burthen thy memory, with too much at once, therefore come now and anſwer, if thou wilt or canſt, to what is already ſpoken.

The Hebrew is, If thou haſt words, anſwer me, that is, if thou haſt arguments to defend thy ſelf with, or to oppoſe me; if thou haſt ſuch words ready, as have the weight of reaſon or authority in them to maintain thy cauſe, bring them forth, I am not afraid of what thou canſt object; neither am I unwilling to hear thy defence.

Some expound Elihu ſpeaking Ironically, at leaſt Rhetorically, If thou haſt any thing to ſay, anſwer me, ſpeak and ſpare not. As if he had ſaid, Poſſibly thou canſt ſet all right, and ſhew me where I am wrong. Poſſibly thou thinkeſt I have ſpoken amiſs, when I ſaid, In this thou art not righteous. Go to then, ſhew me my miſtake, or wherein I have miſapprehended thee, make it good if thou art able againſt my aſſertion, that thou art juſt and righteous, even in that wherein I have endeavoured to detect thy unrighteouſneſs. Poſſibly thou mayſt bring me to be of thy opinion, and then ſurely I ſhall juſtifie thee, and retract my cenſure of thee. Rhetoricians call this an Artificial prohibition, by a conceſſion; or the admitting of another to do that, which they know, he cannot do when he hath done his utmoſt, or (as we ſay) hath left no ſtone unturn'd to do it. But I conceive, Elihu ſpake plainly to Job, and did not like a ſubtle Orator, put him him upon impoſſibles, but like a ſincere friend, ſoberly and ſeriouſly invited him to do and ſay as much as was poſſible in his own defence. If thou haſt any thing to ſay; anſwer me.

Artificioſa prohibitio per conceſſionem.

Simile eſt illud poetæ. I, ſequere Italiam ventis, pete regna per undas. Virg. Æn. 4to.

Hence note, Wiſe men though they have more to ſpeak, and purpoſe to ſpeak more, yet are willing that others ſhould ſpeak too.

Though they can ſpeak ſtill, yet they are ready to ſit ſtill and hear. The moſt prudent ſpeakers, are alſo patient hearers. Elihu when he began to ſpeak (Chap. 32. 18, 19.) compared himſelf to a full bottle, he was even burdened with his own conceptions. I am full of matter (ſaid he there) the ſpirit within me conſtraineth me; Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles: And though he had not half emptied himſelf, yet he could ſtop his veſſel and contain himſelf. Anſwer me, I will hear. Though Elihu was warm in his work, labouring tooth and nail to convince and humble Job, and ſhew him wherein he had exceeded and offended, though he was teaching him to give glory to God, and to abhor himſelf (as at laſt he did) repenting in duſt and aſhes, yet he was unwilling to determine till he had heard him ſpeak, if he had any thing to ſpeak, and a mind to ſpeak it.

Hence note, 'Tis but equal to give him leave to ſpeak for himſelf, with whom we are unſatisfied.

How elſe can we either get ſatisfaction, or give an account why we remain unſatisfied? We muſt not condemn any man in haſte, nor judg him till we have heard him. Neceſſary ſtops are no delays. They may procure not only a better but a ſpeedier iſſue of our buſineſs, eſpecially in matters of controverſie. Politicians have a rule, Take time and you may do any thing. To make haſte ſlowly is the ſureſt way of making haſte. Many a journying man had rid more miles in a day, if he had not rid too faſt. They who will do all at once, or in a breath, often loſe their breath, but ſeldom do any thing, that's worth the doing. And as haſtineſs hinders us in doing, ſo it altogether unfits us for cenſuring. Time brings forth truth; a ſentence deferred, may afterwards be given, but when it is once given, it cannot be recalled; therefore it is good before we cenſure, to hear every man out; If this moderation and well-tempered ingenuity were exerciſed in all our controverſies with others, it would be a great help to the ending of controverſies. And we ſhould either ſee no reaſon to condemn many, or condemn them with more reaſon, had we patience to hear them. But when firſt, we will not hear an anſwer, or when ſecondly, we ſuppreſs our oppoſites with power and violence, whom we cannot anſwer or convince by argument; or thirdly, when we interpret what they ſay in anſwer to the worſt ſenſe; or fourthly, when we are glad to find any weakneſs or inſufficiency in their anſwers, and are ſo haſty to condemn, that we will not give them leave to recollect their thoughts, or think better on't to mend their anſwers, and explain their meaning, either by ſpeech or writing; it is impoſſible breaches ſhould be healed, and differences reconciled, or that ever we ſhould come to a clear and full underſtanding of one another. This offer made by Elihu to Job is a good pattern, and ſhews us how to deal with brethren in all ſuch caſes: and that which followeth ſheweth the beſt and nobleſt ground of ſuch amicable condeſcenſions, even a willingneſs not only to agree with but to embrace thoſe from whom we differ. That's the general ſenſe of what Elihu aſſureth Job, and would have him confident of in the next words.

For I deſire to juſtifie thee.

As if he had ſaid; I have not ſpoken all or any of theſe things to thee, becauſe I would conquer thee, nor do I now provoke, or invite thee to ſpeak, becauſe I have a mind to lye at catch, or entangle thee in thy anſwers, for I tell thee, my heart and my aim in this overture, is, I (heartily) deſire to juſtifie thee.

The word whereby Elihu expreſſeth this deſire, ſignifieth more than a bare deſire.

It notes, Firſt, an earneſt deſire, or ſtrength of deſire.

Secondly, A pleaſing deſire, or delightful deſire.

The higheſt act of deſire is delight; delight is the intention and ſtrength of affection, or deſire at reſt. As if Elihu had ſaid, I have not ſpoken out of ill will to thee, or deſire of victory over thee, nor would any thing be more welcom news to my ſoul, then to ſee juſt cauſe of juſtifying thee; it doth not pleaſe me at all to prove that thou art not juſt, it would extreamly pleaſe me, even raviſh my heart with joy if thou couldſt prove thy ſelf or thy cauſe ſo juſt and faultleſs, that nothing could be blamed or reproved in either. I deſire

Non mihi volupe eſt, ut tuam cauſam injuſtam oſtendam, velim enim eſſe juſtam nec eſſe in te quod reprehendi poſſit. Merc.

To juſtifie thee.] That is, not only to judg thee a godly man, or a man fearing God (which I already do) but to judg that thou haſt in all things both done and ſpoken well, which as yet I do not, nor can, unleſs thou ſheweſt me better reaſon for it than hitherto thou haſt done. To juſtifie another is four ways applyed in Scripture; as was ſhewed more largely at the ſecond verſe of the former Chapter.

צדק eſt non modo pietatis ſed & veritatis laudem tribuere; ſignificat ſe magis propendere ad defendendum quam increpandum. Coc.

Firſt, and chiefly 'tis applied or attributed to God himſelf (Rom. 8. 33.) It is God that juſtifieth. God puts man into a ſtate of juſtification, he juſtifieth his perſon ſo fully, that none can (of right) lay any thing to his charge, much leſs condemn him upon any charge laid againſt him.

Secondly, Man juſtifieth God (Luke 7. 29, 30.) And all the people that heard him, and the Publicans juſtified God, being baptized with the baptiſm of John. God himſelf who is the Judg of all men, is condemned by many men; and when things are at worſt, he always hath ſome to juſtifie him. Man juſtifieth God when he honoureth God, taking his part, and owning both his power and his righteouſneſs in whatſoever he doth. It is impoſſible God ſhould be unjuſt, and God is pleaſed to ſay, we juſtifie him, when we maintain his ways as juſt and righteous.

Thirdly, Man juſtifieth himſelf, when he is either lifted up proudly in the thoughts of what he is or hath done well (Luke 18. 11.) or when he upon good grounds can maintain that to be well done which he hath done.

Fourthly, Man juſtifieth man, when he either conſents to, or approves of what he hath done or ſpoken, whether it be good or bad; he that approves of a man juſtifies him, though the man be unjuſt. (Prov. 17. 15,) He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the juſt, even they both are an abomination unto the Lord. Let a man be never ſo wicked, and do never ſo wickedly, ſome through ignorance of his wickedneſs, and others through love to and liking of his wickedneſs (being ſuch themſelves) will approve of him, and give him their good word. But (as Chriſt ſpeaks, (Math. 11. 19.) Wiſdom is juſtified of her children; that is, the true lovers and followers of wiſdom, having a right knowledg and eſtimation of her worth, will ſtand by her, and ſpeak for her, when ſlighted by the blind and unknowing world. And as this is true of declarative wiſdom, ſo eſpecially of Chriſt, who is eſſential wiſdom. His children highly prize and juſtifie him, while the world condemns and contemns him. In this fourth ſenſe Elihu is to be underſtood here, I deſire to juſtifie thee; that is, to give teſtimony unto thee, or ſubſcribe thy certificate, that thou art worthy of commendation. Though Elihu was a man of a very warm and keen ſpirit, full of fire, and mettle, yet he diſcovered a very honeſt bent, and a well-governed intention towards Job, in ſaying, I deſire to juſtifie thee; for 'tis as if he had ſaid, It would not pleaſe me at all to ſee cauſe of further cenſure, but it would pleaſe me fully to ſee cauſe of approving and acquitting thee. Therefore do but ſtate thy caſe and make out the merits of it, and I ſhall yield ſo ſoon as I ſee cauſe. So then, Elihu did not carry himſelf in this buſineſs, firſt, as a party, or as one that had taken a ſide, and was reſolved to hold it (as ſome do) right or wrong, becauſe he had appeared in it. Nor Secondly, was he hurried by paſſion, or intemperance of ſpirit. Nor Thirdly, was he hood-winkt by prejudice, or fore-ſtalled by his opinion againſt the perſon. Nor Fourthly, was he engaged by love to contention or hopes of victory. Nor Fifthly, was he purpoſed to ſuppreſs, ſmother or keep down the truth. Nor Sixthly, had he any deſire to aſperſe Job, and make him appear black. Nor Seventhly, had he a mind to grieve the man, or burthen him with accuſations; but declared a clear candor and much melting compaſſion towards his afflicted Antagoniſt, hungring and thirſting, yea even longing for a juſt occaſion to juſtifie him.

Some, I grant, expound this word juſtifie, as uſed here by Elihu in a very bare and barren ſenſe, as if it implyed only thus much, I will do thee right, or I have no mind to do thee wrong; but ſurely the word is much more fruitful, and bears the ſignification of a great willingneſs in Elihu to render Job as fair as poſſibly he could, or as his cauſe would bear to all the world; he waited to underſtand ſo much of him and by him, as might enable him to ſay, he had neither ſpoken nor done any thing amiſs.

Verbum juſtificare ſumitur pro juſtitiam exercere, juſtè ac rectè procedere q. d. ſtatui apud me juxta æquitâtis leges tecum agere. Bold.

Hence note, Firſt, A good man is glad to ſee any mans cauſe or caſe prove good, or better then he thought it.

The Apoſtle giving ſeveral Characters of Goſpel-love or charity, ſaith (1 Cor. 13. 6.) It rejoyceth not in iniquity, but rejoyceth in the truth. As charity rejoyceth not in the doing of iniquity, ſo neither doth it, when others are found to have done iniquity. But it rejoyceth much, when any who are either ſuſpected or charged with iniquity, are upon due tryal found clear and acquitted. Paul wiſhed that all who heard him had been not only almoſt but altogether ſuch as he, except his bonds, (Acts 26. 29.) It is a great argument that a man is good and juſt, when he heartily wiſheth that he who hath given occaſion to others to think ill of him, may at laſt appear better than they thought him.

Secondly note, A good man ſeeks not victory but truth, and the good of thoſe he deals with.

When he contends earneſtly with others, he deſires as earneſtly that truth may gain by that contention. Where a ſpirit of ſtrife and uncharitableneſs poſſeſſeth the minds of many men, they love to be vexing and trampling upon thoſe they deal with, rather than helping and informing them. This evil ſpirit is the familiar of this age; That which the Apoſtle ſpake (Phil. 1. 15.) of not a few who had the name of Goſpel-Miniſters (ſome preach Chriſt even of envy and ſtrife, and ſome alſo of good will; the one preach Chriſt of contention, not ſincerely) the ſame may be ſaid of many diſputers and Polemical writers; they do it enviouſly, they do it out of love to ſtrife and contention, not out of love either to truth or to thoſe with whom they contend and ſtrive; this is a bad ſpirit, a ſpirit far unlike that which ruled in Elihu, who wiſhed that the ſharpeſt reprehenſions he gave Job, might end in his juſtification. There ſhould be ſuch a ſpirit in man contending with man, as there is in God contending with man; who doth not thunder againſt ſinners, becauſe he would have them periſh, or delighteth in their deſtruction; but doth it, firſt, to awaken them; ſecondly, to humble them; thirdly, to convert them; fourthly, to juſtifie them; and laſtly, to ſave them for ever. I write not theſe things (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4. 14.) to ſhame you, but as my beloved ſons I warn you. As if he had ſaid, I intend not to aſperſe you, or throw dirt upon you, but only adviſe you to wipe off the dirt that is caſt upon you, or to keep your ſelves out of the dirt. I would either be a means to cleanſe you, or provoke you to preſerve your ſelves clean.

Note Thirdly, It is our duty to juſtifie thoſe whom we oppoſe, when they can clear themſelves.

As Elihu ſpake very ingenuouſly, ſo not at all beyond his duty; we ſhould be glad when they whom we have ſuſpected or charged appear fair, or better than we ſuſpected; he that doth ſo muſt be juſtified: as we muſt not hold the truth of God, ſo we muſt not hold the credit of our neighbour in unrighteouſneſs. We ſhould have three ends in dealing and debating with others: Firſt, to convince them of their errors and ſins. Secondly, to recover them out of ſin and error. Thirdly, to acquit them in what they appear and can approve themſelves not to have ſinned or erred. Elihu aimed at and attained the firſt and ſecond in his debate with Job; and it would have been a greater contentment to him, if (there being no need of thoſe two) he had ſeen cauſe only to have done the third. Speak (ſaid he) for I deſire to juſtifie thee.

Verſ. 33. If not, hearken unto me, hold thy peace, and I ſhall teach thee wiſdom.

Elihu having deſired Job to ſpeak, and he either refuſing or having nothing to ſay, he re-aſſumed and re-inforced his former counſel.

Hearken unto me, hold thy peace.] Theſe words were opened, (verſ. 31.) therefore I need not ſtay upon them here; If not, hearken, &c. and indeed what ſhould they do but hear and ſubmit, who have nothing to anſwer or reply? eſpecially when ſo gainful an overture is made them for their encouragement to hear, as Elihu made Job in the next words, which are alſo the laſt of this diſcourſe;

And I ſhall teach thee wiſdom.] Elihu may ſeem to take much upon him, and ſhew himſelf very confident, when he thus undertook and promiſed to teach Job wiſdom; yet doubtleſs the ground of his confidence was not in himſelf, but in Gods aſſiſtance; and in Job's humble ſilence. As if he had ſaid, I ſee thou wilt not ſpeak, but hear, hear then, and I ſhall teach thee wiſdom; for God (I hope) will be with us in this matter, and both open my mouth to ſpeak, and thine ears to hear that which is wiſdom indeed; having given thee a heart to receive inſtruction, he will inſtruct thee to profit, and make thee wiſe to know thy duty and do it, by my miniſtry, though a weak and unworthy inſtrument in his hand.

In Kal diſcere in Piel docere hinc Aleph Pædagogus, anteceſſor, dux, doctor, qui aliis ſolet præire ſicut Aleph prima litera reliquas antecedit.

I ſhall teach thee wiſdom.] The word which we render to teach in another conjugation ſignifieth to learn; and the Noun ſignifieth a leader, or governor. As the firſt letter Aleph in the Hebrew Alphabet is the leading letter to all that follow, ſo a Teacher ſhould be a leader, he ſhould go before thoſe that hear him, by good example as well as by wholſom doctrine. Be thou an example of the Believers, ſaith the Apoſtle to Timothy (1 Epiſt. 4. 12.) who was ſet up in the Church of Epheſus a Teacher and an Inſtructer.

Further, when Elihu ſaith, I will teach thee wiſdom; his meaning is, I ſhall acquaint thee with that which may make thee wiſe, or I ſhall ſhew thee wherein true wiſdom doth conſiſt. And that conſiſts chiefly in theſe two things. Firſt, in the knowledg of our ſelves; Secondly, in the knowledg of God: As if Elihu had ſaid, I doubt not but I ſhall make thee know more fully what thou art, as alſo who God is. And it plainly appears in the cloſe, that Job got a fuller light in both by what Elihu ſaid to him. He got a fuller ſoul-ſight of the ſoveraignty and highneſs of God, and a deeper humiliation in the ſight of his own ſinfulneſs and vileneſs. He that hath learned and is in the power of theſe two leſſons, is queſtionleſs a wiſe man; and he that faithfully teacheth theſe two leſſons doth not at all over-rate his doctrine if he call it wiſdom, nor doth he put too high a title upon his pains and endeavours, if he ſaith to his Auditors or Scholars, I will teach or have taught you wiſdom.

Laſtly, When Elihu ſaid, I will teach thee wiſdom; we muſt not conceive that he looked upon Job as unwiſe or ignorant; Elihu knew well enough he had not to do with a child or an ideot, but with a man of knowledg, with a man who was skilful in the word of righteouſneſs, whoſe ſenſes (as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, Heb. 5. 14.) were exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil. His meaning then, when he ſaid I will teach thee wiſdom, was only this, I will teach thee to be wiſer and more knowing in ſome neceſſary truths, then as yet thou art, or at leaſt, haſt appeared to be. Or we may give his ſenſe in the language of the Apoſtle, (2 Cor. 1. 24.) I will teach thee wiſdom, not as having dominion over thy faith, but as a helper of thy joy.

Hence note, Firſt, There are none ſo wiſe, none ſo holy, but they may learn more wiſdom, to be yet more holy.

'Tis out of queſtion, he was never good, who thinks he can be no better; nor doth he yet know any thing aright, who ſaith he needs know no more. It is very ſad (which is the caſe of many, 2 Tim. 3 7.) to be ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledg of the truth: Yet they who (through grace) have been inabled to come to the knowledg of the truth muſt be ever learning; and the more any man doth know, the more he ſeeth his need, and the more willing he is, to be taught and know more. The fear of God, that is wiſdom, (ſaith Job, Chap. 28. 28.) and to depart from evil, is underſtanding; and God teſtified of Job that he feared him, and eſchewed evil, in the firſt verſe of this Book, now if ſo wiſe, ſo good a man as Job might learn wiſdom, let none think themſelves too wiſe or too good to learn.

Secondly, Note, True wiſdom conſiſts in the true knowledg of our ſelves, and of God.

This was the theme or ſubject upon which Elihu inſiſted, he was not teaching Job Humane, Philoſophical, or Natural wiſdom, but Heavenly and Divine wiſdom; the greateſt meer natural Philoſophers in the world (which title ſounds them, lovers of wiſdom) were meer ſtrangers to that, which we call true wiſdom; and (as the Apoſtle chargeth them, Rom. 1. 21, 22.) became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkened, profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools.

Thirdly, Note, There is nothing worth the learning or knowing, but that which makes us truly wiſe.

For that only ſheweth us the way to be truly happy. 'Tis our wiſdom to work for a right end, and that work can never attain its end but by the choice of right means. Through deſire (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18. 1.) a man having ſeparated himſelf, ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdom. The deſire of all things (ſay Naturaliſts) eſpecially of all men runs out to good. And the better any man is, the better is that good which he deſireth, yea, if any man be truly good, he deſireth that which is beſt; for the enjoyment of God, wherein alone happineſs doth conſiſt, is his ultimate and higheſt end. But what doth he to reach this end? Solomon points us to two things: Firſt, he ſeparateth himſelf from all thoſe lets and impediments which ſtop up the way, or lye croſs to his deſire. Secondly, He ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdom, with all real and ſubſtantial wiſdom, (as the word there uſed ſignifieth) for he knoweth that nothing but ſuch wiſdom, acted in wiſe ways, is proper and ſucceſsful for the promoting of that noble end. Now if nothing but wiſdom can lead us to that end, what is there worth the learning or knowing except that which makes us wiſe?

Fourthly, From that frame of ſpirit which Elihu obſerved in Job.

Note, They that are humble and meek are fitteſt to learn wiſdom.

God reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. (Jam. 4. 6.) The humble ſoul hath receiveth grace already, and that grace received is the way to all grace. (Pſal. 25. 9.) The meek will he guide in judgment, the meek will he teach his way. The way of God is wiſdom, and they whom God teacheth ſhall undoubtedly learn it.

Laſtly, To teach ſpiritual wiſdom, or to teach man how to be ſpiritually wiſe, is the beſt leſſon that can be taught.

They are bleſſed Maſters who make ſuch Scholars. The whole diſcourſe of Elihu is about ſpiritual wiſdom, not about the wiſdom of the world which God will deſtroy; not how to climb the pinnacles of honour, and get high in the world, not how to gather riches, and to lade our ſelves with thick clay; it was not how to be great or rich, but it was how to be holy and humble, how to give glory to God, and be fitted for glory with God; theſe were the leſſons of wiſdom which Elihu taught Job, and theſe are leſſons chiefly to be taught and learned by every man, who undertakes to be a teacher, or deſires to be a learner. Thus Elihu hath concluded his firſt diſcourſe with a promiſe to teach Job wiſdom, and how well he performed and made good his promiſe, will appear, to his praiſe, in opening the following Chapters.

CHAP. XXXIV. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Furthermore, Elihu anſwered and ſaid,

Hear my words, O ye wiſe men, and give ear to me, ye that have knowledg.

For the ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat.

Let us chuſe to us judgment: let us know among our ſelves what is good.

THe former Chapter concluded Elihu's firſt diſcourſe with Job: and we may well ſuppoſe that he had made ſome pauſe; to try whether Job would give him an anſwer, as he had invited him to do. But perceiving him ſilent, and forbearing to ſpeak; he himſelf proceeds to this ſecond ſpeech.

In which we may conſider:

Firſt, His Preface, in the four firſt verſes.

Secondly, His charge or accuſation brought againſt Job, from the 5. verſe Incluſively to the 10. Excluſively.

Thirdly, We have the refutation of what Job ſaid of himſelf, and ſeem'd to charge upon God; this is proſecuted with much variety from the 10. to the 30. verſe of this Chapter.

In the four laſt verſes, Elihu gathers up the ſtrength of all he had ſaid, and makes his Concluſion.

The four verſes now under hand, are a Preface to this ſecond undertaking of Elihu with Job: In which we have Firſt, His tranſition from what he had ſaid, to what he was about to ſay, in the firſt verſe; Furthermore.

Secondly, We have his addreſs or application to thoſe about him for audience and diligent attention to what he had to ſay, in the 2. and 3. verſes; Hear O ye wiſe men, &c.

Thirdly, We have his motion; and the motion which he makes, is, that the whole procedure of the buſineſs might be both fair and friendly, as alſo judicious and juſt; or that they might to the utmoſt endeavour after a right underſtanding and diſcerning of the matter before them: verſ. 4. Let us chuſe to our ſelves judgment, &c.

Verſ. 1. Furthermore, Elihu anſwered and ſaid, or, and Elihu anſwered and ſaid.

It may here be queſtioned, by what propriety of ſpeech it can be ſaid that Elihu anſwered, ſeeing Job made no reply to what he had ſaid before.

To this query, I ſay, Firſt, that in Scripture both the beginning of a ſpeech, and the continuance of it, where nothing hath been interpoſed, is called an anſwer; we find it ſo frequently in the Goſpel (Matth. 11. 25.) Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid: there was no queſtion, no diſcourſe antecedent, yet it is called an anſwer. The like is obſervable in the 17. of Matthew, verſ. 4. and John 2. 18.

Secondly, We may reſolve this doubt thus; though Job ſaid nothing now to which Elihu made anſwer; yet he had ſaid much which was yet unanſwered, altogether unanſwered by Elihu; therefore Elihu might ſay, that he proceeded to anſwer the many matters of Job's former ſpeech, to which as yet he had given no anſwer. This may ſuffice to ſhew how or why that which he ſaid further, was an anſwer, let us now conſider what Elihu anſwered and ſaid.

Verſ. 2. Hear my words, O ye wiſe men, and give ear to me ye that have knowledg.

As if he had ſaid, I will not be my own Judg in this matter, I refer it to the judgment of wiſe and knowing men, let them determine it.

We may here take notice; Firſt, of the character given the perſons to whom Elihu ſpake, or did addreſs his ſpeech, they were wiſe men, men that had knowledg.

Secondly, We may take notice of the earneſtneſs of his exhortation or admonition, to mind what he had to ſay, Give ear, O ye wiſe men, O ye men that have knowledg.

For the clearing of theſe words, we muſt enquire, firſt, who is a wiſe man? who, a man that hath knowledg? a wiſe man in diſtinction to a man that hath knowledg, is a man of mature judgment, of clear underſtanding, and ſolid prudence, in the managing either of diſcourſes or actions. A man of knowledg is one that hath improved his underſtanding by ſtudy, reading, or long experience. Some men are wiſe, who yet have not much knowledg; and ſome have a great deal of knowledg, who have very little wiſdom. Now Elihu ſpeaks to his auditory, as conſiſting or made up both of wiſe and knowing men; O ye wiſe men, that have great underſtanding and judgment; and, O ye men of knowledg, that have attained to learning and skill in all things knowable, hear my words and give ear. Here was a choice and ſelect auditory, wiſe men, and men of knowledg.

Secondly, It may be queried, whom Elihu intends by theſe wiſe men, and men that had knowledg?

Some conceive, he takes in all that were preſent at that long and ſolemn conference between Job and his friends; and that he deciphers the whole Company under theſe titles of wiſe and knowing men, inviting them all to attend what he had to ſay, they being ſo well fitted to judg what he had to ſay; It is not good to give flattering titles to men, but it is good to give them winning titles, ſuch as may gain upon them for their good.

Yet I rather conceive, that Elihu ſpeaks more ſpecially to ſome that were there preſent; namely, to Job's three friends, who had had the matter in hand before, and now ſtood out: to theſe men he now turns himſelf, and bends his diſcourſe, ſaying, Hear O ye wiſe men: hearken ye that have knowledg; that is, ye Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad, who have all this while engaged with Job, give me leave to ſpeak a few words in your ears, and I pray attend unto me.

Thirdly, Suppoſing that they, ſpecially, were the wiſe and knowing men to whom he ſpake. It may be queſtion'd again, under what notion he called them wiſe and knowing men.

Some ſay, he called them ſo Ironically, putting a cloſe or ſecret ſcorn upon them; As if he had ſaid, Hear me, O ye wiſe men, and hearken, O ye knowing men, ye that for years and age ſhould be indeed knowing and wiſe men; and are ſo in the reputation of others, as well as by your own profeſſion and pretenſion; Ye who came from far to undertake this weighty work, the comforting and counſelling of this your afflicted friend, ſee now how well you have acquitted your ſelves, and anſwered the expectation raiſed both of you and by you. Have ye not comforted him fairly, and counſelled him wiſely? Do ye not ſee how ſhort you are of your own propoſals? and how ill you have handled the matter, he remaining as far from conviction, ſatisfaction, or conſolation, as when you firſt began with him? Thus ſome carry the ſenſe, but I ſhall not ſtay upon it, nor do I conceive that Elihu ſpake Ironically, but plainly, and in good earneſt, not only calling them wiſe and knowing men, but judging and believing they were ſo. Of theſe he begs audience.

Hear and give ear.] To hear is a natural act; a man that hath ears cannot chuſe but hear (unleſs he ſtop them) when any thing is ſpoken: but to give ear, is, as I may ſay, an artificial act, a ſtudied act, yea a ſpiritual act, when the matter ſpoken of is ſpiritual. Elihu doth not call for a bare hearing of words, but for a ſtudious hearing of the matter which ſhould be preſented to them; hear and give ear; or as the Elegancy of the Hebrew may be rendred, ear my words: for the word which we render to give ear, ſignifies ſignifies alſo the ear, ear my words. We ſay of a thing that we deſire another would reach to us, pray hand it hither, putting the denomination of the Organ or Inſtrument upon the act; ſo by a like Elegancy, it is here ſaid, Ear my words; that is, hear ſtudiouſly and diligently, with an holy art and skill. As there is an art in ſpeaking, ſo there is a great, if not a greater art in hearing; ear my words, or, give ear to me ye men that have knowledg.

Et quia auribus velut brachijs : ſtateræ ponderantur quæ audivimus, ipſæ bilances eodem quo aures nomine אאזנ appellantur. Et verbum audiendi ponderare ſignificat. Bold.

From the Conſideration of the parties here ſpoken to, wiſe and knowing men.

Note, The wiſe, and knowing, are to hear as well as ſpeak.

They that are wiſe, need more wiſdom, and they that are knowing, may improve their knowledg by hearing: They who know many, yea moſt truths, may yet know more truths; and if any know all truths, they may yet know every truth more. This cauſed the Apoſtle to profeſs (2 Pet. 1. 12.) I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of theſe things, though ye know them, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth. As the ignorant ought to hear that they may know, ſo they who have knowledg, ought to hear, that they may be more knowing; as they that are fools, ought to hear that they may be wiſe; ſo they that are wiſe ought to hear that they may be yet wiſer (Prov. 1. 5.) A wiſe man will hear, and will increaſe learning. Solomon having ſaid in the former verſe, that he ſpake theſe Proverbs, To give ſubtlety to the ſimple, to the young men knowledg and diſcretion; leſt any ſhould ſay, if your Proverbs or wiſe ſentences are ſo plain and eaſie, that the ſimple may ſound them, and young men comprehend them, then what profit ſhall wiſe and learned men get by reading or hearing them? ſhall not they loſe their labour and miſpend their time in the ſtudy of them? No, ſaith he, the greateſt Clerks and ripeſt wits may gather inſtruction from them, as well as the ſimple vulgar, and greener heads. Their depth will not drown a lamb, and they are deep enough to ſwim a Leviathan. And therefore as a wiſe man will hear, that is, is willing to hear, that he may increaſe learning; ſo let not the wiſeſt think themſelves too wiſe to hear, for they may increaſe their learning, how learned ſoever they are. And as the wiſeſt may learn every day, ſo they that are truly wiſe, do learn every hearing day, as the ſame Solomon tells us (Prov. 9. 8.) Give inſtruction to a wiſe man, and he will be yet wiſer. They are the moſt fooliſh of all men, who think themſelves ſo wiſe that they need no more inſtruction, and ſo knowing that they need learn no more knowledg. The word of God it is fitted for all ſorts and ſizes of men, it is for the ignorant, and for the knowing; it is for the fooliſh, and for the wiſe; it is milk for babes, and ſtrong meat for men; it is for them that are out of the Church to bring them in; and for thoſe that are within the Church to build them up (Eph. 4. 13.) Till we all come unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; till we are wiſe and knowing to perfection, and fulneſs of ſtature (which will not be on this ſide glory) we have need to give ear, and hear, for the perfecting of our knowledg, and the hightning of our ſtature.

Sapientum eſt velle diſcere.

Again, Theſe wiſe men were called to hear and give ear, not only that they might learn and increaſe knowledg by what was ſpoken, but to judg aright of what was ſpoken; for this was not ſo much the hearing of a Sermon (as I may ſay) as of a diſpute, or the debate of a Controverſie; and therefore wiſe men were deſired to hear it, that they might be able to judg, and give their opinion, (as 'tis ſaid in the 4. verſe) Let us chuſe to our ſelves judgment, and know among our ſelves what is good.

Hence note, Secondly, We had need to hear and give ear, or to hear diligently, before we judg either of things or perſons.

Though we may judg rightly of that we have not heard, or of that which we have heard ſlightly, yet we are not right Judges of any matter till we have heard it. 'Tis poſſible to hit upon a right judgment blindfold; but Judges muſt not be blind, nor judg blindfold. To judg right, not knowing it to be ſo, ſhall have no better reward than a wrong judgment. Yea they that are called to judg, muſt both hear and give ear, elſe they may quickly give wrong judgment.

Again, Elihu is ſpeaking here to wiſe and good men, yet how ſtrictly doth he exhort them? Hear and give ear.

Hence note, Good men are often dull of hearing, and had need to be put forward.

Chriſt tells his Diſciples that many are judicially ſo, and we know that all are naturally ſo (Matth. 13. 15.) and the Apoſtle tells the Hebrews they were ſo (Chap. 5. 11.) where treating of Chriſt called of God, an high Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedeck, he concludeth, of whom we have many things to ſay, and hard to be uttered, ſeeing ye are dull of hearing. But how did their dulneſs of hearing make thoſe things hard to be ſpoken or uttered? may it not be eaſie enough for a man to utter that which others are dull to hear? I anſwer, the Apoſtles meaning ſeems to be this? It was hard for him to utter or expound them ſo, as they might perceive the clear truth of thoſe great myſteries, becauſe their internal ear, or apprehending faculty was weak and dull. There is a ſtopple in the ear of man, and 'tis hard to pull it out. When any one ſpeaks to purpoſe, 'tis the duty of thoſe that are preſent to hear: and yet he that ſpeaks had need to invite and preſs all to hear, yea to hear and give ear. The words of the wiſe are goads to provoke and prick us on to hear the truth, as well as nails to faſten it (Eccl. 12. 11.) Elihu having called wiſe men to hear or ear his words, ſheweth the uſe or force of the ear in the next verſe.

Verſ. 3. For the ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat.

In this verſe Elihu gives the reaſon why he ſo earneſtly exhorted them to hear and give ear; The ear tryeth words, that is, by the hearing of the ear, words are tryed. It is the office of the ear to conveigh words to the underſtanding, that ſo a judgment may be made of them, before they are either received or rejected.

The word which we tranſlate to try, ſignifies to try as gold is tryed in the fire: the ear is, as it were, a furnace wherein words are tryed, the ear will diſcover whether what is ſaid be droſs or pure mettal. The Prophet (Zach. 13. 9.) ſpeaketh of a third part of men that ſhould be brought thorow the fire and tryed; as the fire of affliction and perſecution tryeth perſons, ſo man hath a fire and a touchſtone in his ear which tryeth words. The ear is given not only to hear a ſound of words, not only to underſtand the general meaning of words what they ſignifie in any language, but the ear is given to try the ſenſe and ſoundneſs of words. And when Elihu ſaith words, ſpeaking indefinitely, he includeth all words of one ſort or other; it tryeth good words, and it tryeth bad words; it tryeth heavenly words, and it tryeth earthly words; it tryeth natural words, and it tryeth ſpiritual words, the truth or falſhood of words are brought to tryal, at the bar and tribunal of the ear. But in what manner or after what ſimilitude doth the ear try words? The anſwer followeth;

As the mouth taſteth meat.] In the 12. Chapter we had the ſame expreſſion, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here. Only there the ſentence is made up by a particle Copulative; The earth tryeth words, and the mouth taſteth meat. Here by a particle of likeneſs; The ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat. There is a fair analogy or proportion, between the ear and the mouth, in diſcriminating their proper objects. Hearing and taſting, are two of thoſe five excellent uſeful ſenſes which God hath planted in the nature of man, the other three are ſeeing, ſmelling, feeling. Here we have a compariſon between two of the five ſenſes; look what the mouth is to meat, the ſame is the ear to words. In the mouth the ſenſe of taſting is placed as a Judg to diſcern between good and bad, ſavory and unſavory meats; and the ear of a man which receiveth words, is accompanied with an underſtanding, whereby we apprehend what is true, what is falſe, what is to be approved, and what refuſed. And the compariſon runs yet more clearly, while we conſider, that as the food which the mouth receiveth is prepared for the help of our natural or bodily life, ſo the words of inſtruction which the ear receiveth are prepared for the food of our ſouls, and the maintaining of our ſpiritual life.

Some conceive the compariſon is not here made between the two ſenſes of taſting and hearing, but that both are compared to thoſe wiſe and knowing men ſpoken of, and to whom appeal is made in the former verſe. For as all the ſenſes are not fitted to judg of words and meats, but only the ear and palate; ſo all men are not fit nor capable to judg of weighty matters and profound queſtions, but only wiſe and knowing men. And ſo according to this interpretation, both or either of theſe ſenſitive faculties, and both or either of their properties, are alike compared to wiſe and learned men, who are able not only to underſtand the ſound of words, but alſo exerciſe a judgment upon them, both to diſcern and determine what there is of truth and right in them. Hence that ſaying of the Ancient, Wiſdom is a ſavory knowledg. Wiſe men taſte and ſavour the things which they know. He ſurely was a wiſe man who ſaid of the word of God (Jer. 15. 16.) Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and thy word was to me the joy and rejoycing of my heart. Hear, O ye wiſe men, and give ear to me ye that have knowledg; the ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat; that is, as the ear of a man tryeth words, and as the mouth of a man doth taſte meat; ſo wiſe and knowing men try and taſte that which is ſpoken and heard. Thus both theſe ſenſitive faculties, their properties and powers are compared to wiſe men, who do not only hear the voice of him that ſpeaketh, but ſit down to conſider it. The mouth having taken meat and chewed it, taſtes it, and makes a judgment of it; Thus wiſe men deal with all they hear; ſo that, look what theſe two natural faculties do with natural things; with words naturally ſpoken, with meat naturally eaten; the ſame, they who are wiſe and knowing do to what is ſpoken ſpiritually and rationally, they try and judg it.

Sapientia eſt ſapida ſcientia.

But I conceive, we need not inſiſt ſtrictly upon this; For whether we compare theſe two ſenſes in their ſeveral operations to wiſe men, or whether we compare them in their operations one with another, yet (according to the ſenſe of our tranſlation) the meaning of Elihu is the ſame, namely, that thoſe wiſe men to whom he ſpake, ſhould not only hear but try what they heard, becauſe they had received a power ſo to do; for the ear tryeth words, even as the mouth taſteth meat.

Auris interna dicitur νοῦς, quæ vox alibi legitur in Græca editione pro οὖς, cum ſit ipſa mens, quæ verba & res dijudicat. Druſ.

There is a twofold ear, there is an outward ear, and an inward ear: And ſo a twofold tryal: The outward ear tryeth words of what ſignification they are, whether they are as we ſay good Engliſh, or Latine, &c. It tryeth them alſo as to their Grammatical ſenſe, or the conſtruction of what is ſpoken in the letter: The inward ear or underſtanding tryeth them as to their logical ſenſe, ſcope and tendency, as to their uſe, and force in the matter they are ſpoken to. Both ways the ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat; only with this difference, that the tryal which the mouth makes is meerly ſenſitive, and both begun and perfected in the mouth; but the tryal which the ear makes is chiefly intellectual, it is begun at the ear, but perfected by the underſtanding. It is the mind which judgeth, the ear only brings in the report of things to the mind.

> Hence note, Firſt, The ſenſe of hearing is a great mercy, and of great uſe to mankind.

Aurem audientem dicit auditorem verbi obedientem. Beda.

The ear is the chief gate or inlet to the ſoul; nor were our ears given only for an Ornament to the head, but for the enriching and bettering of the heart. The naturally rational ear given to hear and try words is a mercy; but when a ſpiritually rational ear is given with it to hear and try words, that's a mercy indeed. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 20. 12.) The hearing ear, and the ſeeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them. Theſe natural ſenſes are of God's own creation, and the uſe of them his bleſſing, yet common to all mankind good and bad; but the ſpiritual ſenſes of ſeeing and hearing, are a ſpecial priviledg promiſed to the elect, and a fruit of Goſpel grace. (Iſa. 35. 5.) Then the eyes of the blind ſhall be opened, and the ears of the deaf ſhall be unſtopped. He meaneth it not either only or chiefly of the bodily eyes and ears (though Chriſt wrought miracles upon them, and healed both the blind and deaf in the days of his fleſh) but of the eyes and ears of the ſoul, which are often dark and ſtopt while the other are free enough in the exerciſe of their ſeveral faculties. The ſeeing eye, which both Solomon and Iſaiah intend, is, the eye which ſo ſeeth as that it followeth the good which it ſeeth; and that's their hearing ear which believeth and obeyeth what it heareth. A ſuperficial ſeeing eye is a blind eye, and a formal hearing ear is a deaf ear in the ſight and account of God. We ſay it is the ſymptom of ſome diſtemper or growing diſeaſe upon the body, when the palate doth not reliſh meat; Surely it argueth a diſeaſed and ſick ſoul, when we have no mind to hear nor find reliſh in the word of God.

> Secondly, Note, Words are not to be received nor ſubmitted to, nor believed as true, till they are tryed.

Itching ears are bad, (2 Tim. 4. 3.) Trying ears are good. You will not ſwallow your meat till you have chewed and taſted it; nor ſhould you ſwallow words, till you have tryed them; why elſe have we ears to hear? why are we truſted with reaſon to judg things with? or with rules to judg them by? There is no greater Tyranny in the World, than to command a man to believe, (by an implicit faith) as others believe; or to impoſe our opinions and aſſertions upon thoſe that hear them, and not to give them liberty to try them. This is to be at once (as the Apoſtle James expreſſeth it, *Chap.*3.1.) many Maſters, or many Maſters where we ſhould not be one.

But ſome will ſay, when the word of God is preached, is that to be tryed by men? have we a liberty to take that into conſideration or to take and refuſe it as we are perſwaded in our own judgments?

I anſwer, The word of God is not to be brought to the bar nor to be tryed by man. The word of God is our Judg, therefore ought not to be judged by us; the word of God is perfect, and how can we that are imperfect judg that which is perfect. The word of God is truth, and all men are lyars; we are not therefore to judg the word of God, nor try that: Yet when any man ſpeaks of or from the word of God, we are to try what he ſpeaks; that is, whether what he ſpeaks be according to the word of God, and his doctrine or interpretation grounded on the Text. Every one that ſpeaks about ſpiritual things profeſſeth he brings the word of God, and it muſt be tryed whether he doth ſo or no. It is a truth to which all are to ſubmit (without diſpute) by believing that Jeſus Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners, to waſh away their ſins with his blood. This is the word of God: yet when this truth is Preached, we may conſider whether it be managed according to the word of God or no. This great doctrine, which contains the ſum of the Goſpel, may have ſuch things mingled with it, as are not to be received for the word of God. Some in the primitive time thought and taught that there was no ſalvation by Chriſt unleſs they ſtill kept the ceremonial Law and were circumciſed; though they held that fundamental truth, that Chriſt dyed to ſave ſinners; yet when they came to the explication of it, they deſtroyed it by urging a neceſſity of continuing the ceremonial Law: whereas others judged rightly that faith only, without the uſe of any Jewiſh ceremony, purifieth the heart. Therefore a council of ſpiritual and godly wiſe men was called to conſider of this matter. (Acts 15. 6.) What to do? not to try the word of God, but to try which of thoſe two different opinions was according to the word of God. Thus when we hear a Sermon, though the Word of God and Chriſt crucified be the general ſubject of it, and that is not to be tryed, but received by faith and obeyed; yet what is ſpoken upon it and delivered about it as the mind of God in the Scripture, that is to be tryed (1 *Cor.*2.15.) He that is ſpiritual, tryeth, or judgeth all things. And again (1 Cor. 14. 29.) the Apoſtle gives this counſel about propheſying, Let one or two ſpeak, and let the others judg; what? the word of God, no! but whether they ſpeak according to the word of God, or no; In this ſenſe every one muſt judg for himſelf, we muſt not take all for granted, but try what we hear by the ear, as we do what we eat by the mouth.

> Thirdly, Note, A ſpiritually judicious and conſiderate man will take time to judg of things that are ſpoken, as the palate doth of meats that are eaten.

The ear tryeth words as the mouth taſteth meat; God hath given man a faculty for that end, and he is to uſe his faculty. We commonly ſay, Look before you leap. Surely then we ſhould taſte before we eat, and prove all things whether they are good or no, before we (electively) hold that which is good. (1 Theſ. 5.21.) The noble Bereans received the word with all readineſs of mind; yet they would make no more haſte than good ſpeed to receive it, for (as the Text ſaith, Acts 17.11.) They ſearched the Scriptures daily whether thoſe things were ſo.

Fourthly, Here are two Organs of ſenſe ſpoken of, the ear, and the mouth, both are of great uſe to man, but one of them, the ear is of a more frequent and noble uſe. Beaſts have both mouths and ears; but becauſe theirs is only a ſenſitive life, they make more uſe of their mouths then of their ears. Whereas man whoſe life is rational, yea and ſpiritual too, muſt or ought to make more uſe of his ears then of his mouth.

How doth this reprove all thoſe who are more in trying meats, then in trying words? Or more for taſting, then they are for hearing? It was a complaint of ſome in the former age, that they made themſelves like brute beaſts, which having both thoſe powers of hearing and taſting, have yet no regard to hearing, but are all for feeding and eating. They carry it like beaſts, and are more brutiſh then a beaſt, who employ their mouths more then their ears. A beaſt is made in that low form, to live to eat, and work, and ſo to die; man is of a higher form, next to that of Angels, and for him to ſpend his time in eating and drinking, as if his work lay at his mouth, not at his ear, is to degrade himſelf and lead a brutiſh life. The Apoſtle brings in ſuch brutes ſpeaking thus, (2*Cor.*15.32.) Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall die; not a word of uſing their ears: they ſay not, come let us hear the word of God, let us ſeek bread for our ſouls, but come, let us eat and drink; now for a man to be ſo much in eating, as to neglect hearing and meditating, what doth he but make himſelf like a beaſt of the earth, who ſhould be like the Angels in Heaven, dayly riſing up to a ſpiritual and heavenly life; God lifts us up to Heaven (as I may ſay) by the ears. Our ears were not given us only to hear delightful ſounds, or to commune one with another about the affairs of this life; the uſe of the ear is yet more noble, even to help us in the receiving of all ſaving and ſanctifying knowledg. Faith comes by hearing, (Rom.15.17) and ſo doth every grace, both as to the implantation and growth of it, till we come to glory. Therefore conſider how you uſe this excellent ſenſe of hearing, and how you improve in ſpirituals by what you have heard. We were made after the Image of God in knowledg and righteouſneſs, and it ſhould be the great deſign of our lives to get this image renewed; and that is done at the ear, 'tis wrought by hearing; faith, repentance, and every grace come in and are wrought at the ear. Some ſcoff at this latter age, calling it a hearing age, not a working age; we (ſay they) are much for ear-work, little for hand-work; all for Preaching, nothing for doing; nor can this reproach be quite wiped off, ſeeing with our plenty of Preaching, there is ſo little practiſing; as if men had turned all the members of their body into ears, and were nothing but hearing: To do nothing but hear, or to hear and do nothing, to hear much and act little, is a high provocation. To have a ſwel'd head and a feeble hand is the diſeaſe of Religion. Yet let not voluptuous Epicures who are all for the palate and belly-cheer think to excuſe themſelves, for not hearing, or for ſeldom hearing, becauſe ſome who hear much are found doing little, or ſeldom do what they hear: for as theſe ſhall be condemned by the word which they have heard and not done, ſo ſhall theſe for not hearing the word which would have ſhewed them what to do. It hath been anciently ſaid, The belly hath no ears, nor will they either mind hearing, or mind what they hear, who mind their bellies (not for hunger and the ſupport of nature, that is, (as Solomon ſpeaks *Eccl.*10.17.) for ſtrength but) for drunkenneſs or ſurfet. When a voluptuous perſon deſired Cato that he might live with him: No, ſaid Cato, I like not your ſociety, I do not love to converſe with a man who uſeth his mouth more then his ears; who is buſied more to pleaſe his taſt in eating and drinking, then to enrich his underſtanding by hearing and diſcourſing. The Apoſtle (*Tit.*1.12. referring them to one of their own Poets) calleth the Cretians evil beaſts, ſlow bellies. They were not ſlow to fill their bellies, but their full bellies (their belly being their God, as he told ſome among the Philippians, Chap. 3.19.) made them ſlow, yea reprobate to every good word and work. Solomon gives man a great charge when he ſaith (*Prov.*23.23.) Buy truth, and ſell it not. The mart for thoſe moſt precious commodities grace and truth, is kept (not at the belly, but) at the ear; there we buy without mony, and without price both grace and truth; to get theſe is to be wiſe merchants. The beſt market we can make, the beſt trade we can drive is with and at our ears: The ear tryeth words, as the mouth taſteth meat. And from this Elihu infers;

Cum eo vivere non poſſum cui palatum magis ſapiat quam cor. Plutarchus in vita Catonis.

Verſ. 4. Let us chuſe to our ſelves judgment; let us know among our ſelves what is good.

This verſe contains the ſecond requeſt which Elihu made to Job's friends; The ſum of it is, that they might proceed judiciouſly and fairly in the cauſe before them. As if he had ſaid, Seeing it is the office of the ear to try words, as the mouth taſteth meat; let us ſee what we can do with our ears towards the determination of this matter. Job hath often wiſhed to find one with whom he might debate and try this cauſe in judgment; let us give him his wiſh, and having throughly weighed the matter and merits of his cauſe, let us ſee what juſtice will award him. Let us chuſe to our ſelves judgment, &c.

Let us chuſe,] To elect or chuſe is the work of the will. And to chuſe what is good, what is right, is a gracious work of a renewed will; as Gods Election of us from Eternity, ſo our Election of God and the things of God, at any time, is a very gracious work.

This affirmative act, To chuſe to us judgment, ſeems to imply a negative, the rejecting or laying aſide of whatſoever is contrary to or a hindrance of Judgment; that is, the laying aſide, Firſt, of all animoſities or undue heats of ſpirit; Secondly, of all prejudices and undue prepoſſeſſions; Thirdly, of all groundleſs ſuſpitions and jealouſies of the perſon we have to deal with, we can never chuſe judgment, till we are clear of all theſe.

The original word rendred to chuſe, ſignifies in the noun, a young man, a man in the flower of his age, in the beſt of his life, when his breaſts (as Job ſpake at the 20. Chapter) are full of milk, and his bones of marrow; and the reaſon is given, becauſe our younger time is our chuſing time, as to our way in this world; it ſhould be ſo much more for Heaven, or the things of another world. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, ſaith Solomon (Ec.12.1.) Some render thoſe words expreſly, In the days of thy elections or chuſings; As if he had ſaid, Remember to chuſe God in thy chuſing days, when thou chuſeſt thy calling in which to live, when thou chuſeſt a wife, with whom to ſpend thy life, then be ſure and remember above all things to chuſe God. When Moſes was a young man, he was famous for this choice (*Heb.*11.25,26.) He choſe the reproach of Chriſt rather then the riches of Egypt; when he had all the riches and honours of Egypt preſented to him, and courting him on the one ſide, and the reproach of Chriſt, affliction, poverty, diſgrace, threatning him on the other ſide, he choſe theſe rather; who would think that man wiſe who ſhould chuſe the reproach of Chriſt (in appearance nothing but dirt and droſs) before the riches of Egypt? Yet Moſes never ſhewed his wiſdom and learning ſo much in all the learning of the Egyptians, as he did in that choice.

In diebus electionum tuarum. Mont.

Let us chuſe Judgment.] Judgment may be taken two ways; Firſt, for the act of enquiry, let us diſcourſe and debate this matter, to find out what is juſt; Judgment is the reſult or ſentence given upon hearing and debate. And moſt properly a right ſentence is Judgment; and that by Judgment Elihu means a right ſentence, appears clearly from the next words:

Judicium eſt cauſæ Inquiſitio. Judicium pro æquo. Merc.

And let us know among our ſelves what is good.

Let us know,] That is, let us ſo try by the ear what ſhall be ſpoken, that we may come to a right knowledg, to a right guſt or taſt of what is good. There is a two-fold knowledg; Firſt, of ſimple intelligence, when we know any thing as it is preciſely in its own nature, true or falſe, good or evill; Secondly, of approbation, when we conclude what we know, to be true or good. We may take in both here, eſpecially the latter; It being (doubtleſs) the deſire of Elihu to find truth and goodneſs (if it were to be found) on Job's ſide.

And when he ſaith, That we may know what is good; we may underſtand it either Comparatively or Poſitively; that we may know what is good; is, firſt, that we may know good from evil; Secondly, that we may know among good things, things, what is better, yea what is beſt; let us not only diſtinguiſh between good and bad, but between good and better, better and beſt. The reaſon of man is able to put a difference not only between wheat and tares, but if you bring him ſeveral ſamples of wheat, or other grain, he is able to judg which is the better, which is beſt; a knowing man will judg to two pence in a buſhel which is beſt; ſo in all other commodities we not only judg between that which is good, and that which is ſtark naught, but when we have many parcels and particulars of any kind before us good and uſeful, we judg which is the beſt, which the principal.

Thus in ſpirituals, we are not only to judg of things ſo far as to know good from evil (which yet is a good piece of knowledg; for many put darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs; bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter, as the Prophet complained (Iſa. 5.20.) that is, they huddle all things together in a Chaos of confuſion) but it ſhould be our care to know good from good, yea to know what excels among things that are excellent. 'Tis well when we know truth from falſhood, but we ſhould labour to know which among truths is the moſt precious truth. Paul having ſpoken of what was good, yea of the beſt gifts, ſaith, Yet I will ſhew you a more excellent way (1 Cor. 12. 31.) As if he had ſaid, This is a good way you are in, the exerciſe of the beſt gifts, but here's a more excellent way, the exerciſe of grace. Thus here I take good, not ſo much Poſitively as Comparatively, Let us know what is good, what is beſt, and what is beſt of all.

Firſt, In that he ſaith, Let us chuſe to our ſelves Judgment,

> Obſerve, We muſt conſider deliberately and maturely before we paſs Judgment.

Judgment is a choice thing, and muſt be made upon choice; it is not to be ſnatched up haſtily, but duely choſen. They that are upon the choice either of things or perſons, ſhould be much in Conſideration. How uncomely (beſides unrighteous) is it, to judg men or matters raſhly, to be hurried on to election with paſſion, or to judg upon hearſays and Conjectures? This is not to chuſe Judgment, but but to ſnatch it up: to chuſe Judgment is to do it with mature deliberation; there muſt be much weighing, elſe properly no judging; raſh judgment is uſually wrong judgment; and that layeth us open to another judgment, Judg not that ye be not judged, is Chriſts warning (Matth. 7.1.) that is do not judg haſtily, or harſhly, do not judg raſhly nor rigidly, much leſs falſly, for if you do, you ſhall be judged righteouſly (indeed) as to your caſe, but not comfortably as to your condition. They who will not chuſe Judgment, do, in the iſſue, chuſe Judgment, that is, not uſing deliberation in Judgment, they draw deſervedly upon themſelves a Judgment of condemnation.

Secondly, Taking it more generally, Let us chuſe to our ſelves Judgment, or that which is right.

> Note, It is not enough for us to do Judgment, or that which is right, but we muſt chuſe it.

'Tis a work of no acceptation with God to do that which is juſt, unleſs we chuſe it as well as do it, that is, unleſs our hearts cloſe with it, and pitch upon it. Solomon (Prov. 1.29.) chargeth the ſimple for not chuſing what was good; they did not chuſe the fear of the Lord. By the fear of the Lord, he means the true worſhip of the Lord, or any work of obedience, by which we teſtifie a holy fear of him; poſſibly they might do the fear of the Lord; poſſibly they worſhipped the Lord, they prayed to him, and heard his word, but they did not chuſe the fear of the Lord; they did not ſit down and judg that beſt, or moſt neceſſary, but took it up by accident, or by cuſtom, or for company, becauſe they ſaw others do it. It will not turn to our account to be found doing good, unleſs we chuſe to our ſelves that which is good. Our elections are more eyed by God, then our actions: and the ſetting of our hearts, then the work of our hands.

Thirdly, From the latter branch, Let us know among our ſelves what is good.

> Note, Firſt, There's nothing worth our knowing, but that which is good.

Whatſoever hath a moral, or a ſpiritual good in it, is worthy to be known; the truths, the works, the ways of God, are the moſt deſirable good things to be ſtudied and known (Pſal. 4. 6.) There are many will ſay, who will ſhew us any good? What's their good? Corn, Wine, Oil, Gold, Silver, Houſes, Lands, &c. Theſe are their good, and theſe are all their good; but though a godly man knoweth that theſe are good things, and bleſſeth God for any portion in them; yet that which he calls his good, and the good, is of a higher nature; We commonly call worldly things our goods, but we miſ-call them if we call them our good. The Favour of God is our good, grace is our good, faith and love and hope and righteouſneſs are good above all, God himſelf is good, and to know and enjoy him in Chriſt through the Spirit is our chiefeſt good here, and will be all our good hereafter. Let us know what is good.

From the Comparative ſenſe of the words, Let us know what is good, that is, if there be a better to be had let us know that;

> Obſerve, It is not enough for us to have the knowledg of good things, but among good things the beſt are to be ſought out, to be known, and attained to.

This was a ſpecial branch of the Apoſtles prayer for the Philippians (Phil. 1.10.) That ye may approve the things that are Excellent; or the things that differ in Excellency; Some are contented to ſit down in the loweſt form of Chriſts School; if they have but any thing which they may call good, or true, right and ſincere, they look no further; any thing ſatisfieth them, which will ſerve turn to keep them from periſhing; they have no holy aſpirings, nor godly covetous deſires after the beſt things, and the beſt of the beſt. God is willing and hath promiſed to give us not only good things, but the beſt things (Pſal. 81. 16.) He ſhould have fed them alſo with the fineſt of the Wheat, and with Honey out of the rock ſhould I have ſatisfied thee; 'tis a mercy to have wheat, but the fineſt of the wheat, and honey out of the rock, not ordinary honey, but the beſt honey, the pureſt honey, are greater mercies. We, by our ſins, deſerve that God ſhould (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 30. 20.) give us the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction; That is, either that he ſhould give us adverſity in ſtead of bread, and affliction in ſtead of water, or that he ſhould feed us with the coarſeſt bread, with husks and bran, and give us bitter waters, the waters of Marah to drink, yet he in mercy gives us pleaſant bread, and well-taſted water; yea were we better, he would give us the beſt bread, the fineſt of the wheat, and our cup ſhould be ſweeter to us then the ſweeteſt honey. The reaſon why we have not of the beſt, is becauſe we are no better. God now gives us not only good things, but the beſt of good things, even himſelf, his Son and Spirit, who are beſt of all (O how excellent is this loving kindneſs!) therefore let us not only look after good things, but the beſt of good things, to honour God, and lift up his name to the higheſt in this World; Let us labour to know and do the beſt things; and give God our beſt ſervices and pureſt praiſes, even the male of our flock, the firſt-born, the ſtrength of our whole Souls. To theſe higheſt attainments, Elihu perſwades thoſe wiſe and knowing men, promiſing to joyn with them in that ſearch; Come let us beat out the buſineſs with diligence, that we may at laſt chuſe Judgment, and know among our ſelves what is good, what is beſt.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous: and God hath taken away my Judgment.
Should I lie againſt my right? my wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion.
What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning like water?
Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.
For he hath ſaid, It profiteth a man nothing, that he ſhould delight himſelf with God.

THe Preface hath been diſpatcht; the context of theſe five verſes contains the whole charge, or bill of complaint, drawn up by Elihu againſt Job, conſiſting of many particulars. This charge is double; The firſt part whereof is contained in the 5. and 6. verſes; the ſecond in the 7. 8. and 9. Verſes. In the firſt charge he alledgeth four things againſt Job; two in the 5. verſe, and two in the 6; The two things alledged againſt him in the 5. verſe are.

Firſt, That Job inſiſted too much upon his own righteouſneſs, Job hath ſaid, I am righteous,

Secondly, That he reflected too boldly upon the righteouſneſs of God, yea that upon the matter, he had accuſed God of unrighteouſneſs, or injuſtice, God hath taken away my judgment.

Verſ. 5. For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous.

That's the firſt charge, Job hath ſaid; Elihu gathers up, and collects thoſe paſſages of Job's complaint, which he found moſt faulty, and layeth them (as we ſay) in his diſh; Job hath ſaid; we may well remember, and he cannot deny it, for he hath ſaid it, not once only, but often, not lightly, but ſeriouſly and aſſertingly, I am juſt, or righteous; that is, I have ſufficiently ſhewed my innocency, and the equity of my cauſe, but I am not permitted to declare and hold it forth in ſuch a way as I would, before my judg; yea the Lord proceedeth with me, not in the ordinary way of Juſtice, but, being above law, afflicts me, at his pleaſure, though I am innocent. This is the ſum of what Job ſaid, as often as he hath ſaid, I am righteous.

The firſt particle which we render for, imports, the clearneſs and truth of the charge; there is no avoyding the matter of fact; It will fall upon him, let him take it off and anſwer it if he can, or as well as he can. For Job hath ſaid, I am righteous.

Vocabulum כי quia certitudinem & firmam aſſeverationem hic importat q.d. profecto equidem, verè, certè Job dixit, Juſtus ſum. Pined. Vid. c. 33. 8, 9. where this point is alſo diſcuſſed.

But it may be queſtioned, where ſaid he this?

For anſwer, I ſhall do two things.

Firſt, Shew from what paſſages in Job's former anſwers this charge may be made good, or at leaſt made up.

Secondly, I ſhall ſhew in what ſenſe Job ſaid this, and how Elihu and Job do either agree, or differ in the thing.

To the firſt, where ſaid Job, I am righteous?

I anſwer; We find not this direct aſſertion in terms, or in ſo wany words, but what he ſpake in ſeveral places amounts to it; (Chap. 13. 18.) Behold, now I have ordered my cauſe, I know I ſhall be juſtified, (Chap. 23. 10.) But he knoweth the way that I take, when he hath tryed me, I ſhall come forth as Gold. (Chap. 27.6.) My righteouſneſs I hold faſt, and will not let it go; and he inſiſted at large upon this point, his vindication from all unrighteouſneſs throughout the whole 31. Chapter. There we find him making frequent imprecations (Ver. 5. 6, 7.) If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit; Let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know mine integrity; If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to mine hands, then, &c. In all which and many other paſſages of that Chapter, Job ſpake highly of his own innocency, and ſaid in effect, I am righteous. His other friends had taken notice of this before; Eliphaz hit him with it (Chap. 4. 17.) while he put thoſe queſtions; Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? Shall a man be more pure then his maker? And ſo did Bildad (Chap. 8. 6.) If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous. Nor was Zophar behind with him (Chap. 11.4.) Thou haſt ſaid, my doctrin is pure, I am clean in thine eyes.

Secondly, In what ſenſe did he ſpeak this? For anſwer, when Job ſaid, I am righteous, we muſt conſider a two-fold righteouſneſs; Firſt, a perfect abſolute righteouſneſs, and that may be two-fold; Firſt, the righteouſneſs of juſtification, which is an imputed righteouſneſs; Secondly, the righteouſneſs of ſanctification, which is an in-wrought or inherent righteouſneſs; this latter is not abſolute, or perfect in degree, while we abide in this life, yet it is dayly growing up to perfection, and ſhall at laſt attain a perfect growth. If any ſay; Why then doth God call us to a perfection of ſanctification in this life, if it be not attainable in this life? I anſwer, he doth it, firſt, to ſhew how holy he is; Secondly, to ſhew how holy we ought to be; Thirdly, he doth it, that we might run to Chriſt, who is the Lord our righteouſneſs; and who is made unto us of God, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption: We being altogether ſhort of righteouſneſs, and ſhort in righteouſneſs, may go to him, and have a compleat and perfect righteouſneſs. Now beſides this abſolute righteouſneſs of juſtification, which is attainable here, and of ſanctification, which is not attainable here, but ſhall be hereafter, there is a comparatively perfect righteouſneſs of ſanctification, the righteouſneſs of uprightneſs, and ſincerity, when we ſtrive to the uttermoſt to pleaſe God in all things by doing good, and can ſay, we do not pleaſe our ſelves in any way of doing evil.

It ſhould ſeem that Elihu and Job did not well agree about the definition of juſtice or righteouſneſs. Job intending either civil righteouſneſs towards men, or a righteouſneſs imputed freely by God; but Elihu underſtood him of abſolute perfect perſonal righteouſneſs, which no man attains unto in this life. For when Job is charged with ſaying, I am righteous, he ſaid it either as a juſtified perſon, or as a ſanctified perſon. In the former ſenſe, he might ſay he was perfectly righteous, and in the latter he ſaid he was ſo, as to the ſincerity and uprightneſs of his heart with God, and this he might ſay of himſelf without fault or blame; for God himſelf had ſaid of him (Chap. 1.1.) that he was a man perfect, and upright.

Intelligitur juſtitia per fidem mediatoris ſpiritus ſancti Arrabone confirmata; Neq; enim aliam potuit habere Job, qui ſuam claris verbis emoliretur Coc.

I grant, Job ſeems to ſay, (though he ſaid it not, with that aim or intention, yet he ſeems to ſay) that he was even abſolutely righteous not only as juſtified but ſanctified, while he ſaid, (Chap. 31.7, 8.) If there be any blot cleaving to my hands, if my ſteps have gone out of the way, or my heart been deceived, &c. This gave Elihu occaſion to charge him with ſaying, I am righteous; he did not charge him with ſaying ſo, as juſtified through the free grace of God, nor did he charge him for ſaying ſo as to his ſincerity, but he charged him in theſe two reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe he ſpake ſo much of the righteouſneſs of his way, and of his works; for though it were true he was righteous in the ſenſe by him intended, yet becauſe he made it his buſineſs, and ſpent a large diſcourſe to tell the world, how good, how juſt, and how holy a man he had been, this was more then became him in that condition.

Secondly, Elihu checkt him for ſaying ſo, becauſe (though he were fully righteous as juſtified and ſincerely righteous as ſanctified) he complained of his afflictions, as if God might not lay his hand heavy upon him, no nor touch a righteous perſon with an afflicting hand; or as if he and all other righteous perſons, ought to paſs all their days in peace, and have an exemption from the croſs. Whereas one great reaſon why God afflicted him ſo ſorely, was, to make it known to all the world in his example, that meerly upon his own prerogative and ſoveraignty, he both may and will when he pleaſeth, afflict the moſt innocent perſon in the world. Yea, the intent of Elihu in urging and burdening Job with thoſe ſayings, was to convince him, that though he was a child of God, and had walked before him in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, yet he ought to humble himſelf and bear with meekneſs and patience the soreſt viſitations of God And that therefore he ſhould not have pleaded his own integrity, to priviledg him from affliction, nor have ſaid, Why do I ſuffer, ſeeing I am righteous?

Hence Note, Firſt, That, as it is altogether ſinful for any man to ſay,

I am altogether without ſin; (for 1 John 1. 8. If we ſay we have no ſin, there is no truth in us; and he who ſaith (in that ſenſe) I am righteous, doth but declare his own unrighteouſneſs) ſo to ſpeak much of our own righteouſneſs and goodneſs (though we are both good and righteous) is evil and very blameable. For whereas Job ſaid, I am righteous, he ſhould rather have left others to ſay it, he ſhould have been ſatisfied that he was ſo without ſaying ſo; and though it cannot be denied that Job was extreamly urged to it (as hath been ſhewed more then once in opening this Book) and it had been but neceſſary for him to ſay it once or twice in his own defence, yet becauſe he ſaid it ſo often, it drew, and that deſervedly, this cenſure or charge upon him.

Hence take this corollary or inference, If to ſpeak much of our own righteouſneſs be diſpleaſing, then how abominable is it to be proud of it or truſt upon it?

There is nothing more pleaſing to God, then to ſee man walking in ways of righteouſneſs, nor is there any thing more diſpleaſing unto God, then to ſee a man lifted up with or leaning upon his own righteouſneſs. If we make our own righteouſneſs our ſtaff, God will make it our rod. And though he is far from ſcourging us becauſe we are righteous, yet he will correct us if we proclaim our own righteouſneſs, yea if we think it much, or think much of it. We muſt have a very great occaſion when at any time we bear witneſs to our own righteouſneſs, and goodneſs; but if the heart be lifted up in pride, or truſt, at all, upon it, this renders man odious in the ſight of God. God ſaved Noah out of that common deluge, in which the old world periſhed; For (ſaith the Lord, Gen. 7. 1.) thee have I ſeen righteous before me in this generation. Noah was righteous before God, and was ſaved when others periſhed; but ſurely had he vainly boaſted or unneceſſarily voted himſelf righteous before men, he had periſhed as well as others. It comes much to one and the ſame account with God, whether men be openly unrighteous, or whether (without a juſt cauſe and call) they open their righteouſneſs before men.

> Secondly, Note, How righteous ſoever we are in life, yea though we are righteous by faith, (which is our righteouſneſs unto life) yet we muſt not plead that for our freedom from afflictions.

We may plead the righteouſneſs of faith againſt condemnation, but not againſt correction; if any man be in Chriſt, he ſhall never be condemned; but though a man be in Chriſt, and juſtified by the higheſt actings of faith in the blood of the Covenant, yet he may be ſeverely corrected. This was (I conceive) the principal ſcope and intent of Elihu in charging Job thus, even to convince him, that though he was a faithful ſervant of God, and of a very unſtained converſation among men, yet he muſt not think himſelf above the croſs, but quietly and meekly ſubmit to it. Job ſpake ſometimes fully to that point, He deſtroyeth the righteous and the wicked, if the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he laugheth at the tryal of the innocent (Chap. 9. 23.) yet at other times he forgot himſelf, and therefore he was (juſtly as to his preſent caſe, and profitably as to the future iſſue) remembred of it by this plain and home-dealer Elihu. Job hath ſaid I am righteous,

And God hath taken away my Judgment.

As if he had ſaid, Once thou didſt ſay, God deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked, but now thou ſeemeſt to ſay, thou art greatly wrong'd, and thy Judgment quite taken away, becauſe being a righteous man thou art thus afflicted.

סור Eſt auferre, declinare, divertere, ſubvertere.

Mr. Broughton renders, But the Omnipotent keeps back my right. As Judgment is right fully given, ſo there is but little difference between keeping back our right, and taking it away, therefore the word ſignifieth not only to take away, or cauſe to decline, to divert and ſubvert, but to keep back or withhold any thing in any kind, as Mr. Broughton tranſlates expreſly. This is the thing (ſaith Elihu) which Job hath ſaid, God hath taken away or kept back my Judgment.

But where did Job ſay this? He ſaid it (Chap. 27. 2.) As the Lord liveth, who hath taken away my Judgment, and the Almighty who hath vexed my Soul. Bildad charged Job with it (Chap. 8. 3.) while he put this queſtion to him, Doth God pervert Judgment? Or the Almighty pervert Juſtice? Implying that Job had ſpoken words reflecting upon the Juſtice and Judgment of God, in taking away his Judgment.

But you will ſay, What is Judgment? And what is it to take away Judgment? Or how is a mans Judgment taken away?

I anſwer; There is a three-fold notion of Judgment in Scripture.

Firſt, Judgment is the reſult or iſſue of a mans reaſon about any matter or queſtion propounded to him. God ſometimes takes away mans Judgment in that ſenſe, and then he becomes a fool, and unable to judg. 'Tis a dreadful judgment when God thus takes away mans judgment, and gives him up to a Reprobate (or an unjudicious) mind, as he did the old Gentiles (Rom. 1. 28.) for then he will quickly do thoſe things which are not convenient; not being able to diſtinguiſh nor diſcern between true or falſe, he muſt needs put light for darkneſs, bitter for ſweet, ſweet for bitter; Elihu doth not repreſent Job complaining that God had taken away his judgment in this notion.

Secondly, Judgment is any angry diſpenſation or wrath poured out or executed upon perſons, nations, or Churches; If judgment begin at the houſe of God, (that is, if trouble or wrath begin at the Church of God) what will the end of thoſe be that obey not the Goſpel? (1 Pet. 4. 17.) Davids Song conſiſted of two parts (Pſal. 101. 1.) judgment was one of them, I will ſing of mercy and judgment. This notion of judgment is every where ſound in Scripture, yet neither is this the notion of it in this Scripture. God had not thus taken away Job's judgment; he begg'd indeed that God would take away this his judgment, and it was the matter of his complaint, becauſe he did not take it away.

Thirdly, Judgment is right done or right due; right due, is judgment due; right done, is judgment done. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 72. 1.) Give the King thy Judgments O God, and thy righteouſneſs to the Kings ſon; That is, give him an underſtanding to do right, or to give every man his right. To do this is a thing ſo deſireable in all men, eſpecially in Kings and Princes, that when God at Gibeon ſent young King Solomon a blank from Heaven, and bid him ask what he would, he asked only this (1 Kings 3. 9.) Give thy ſervant an underſtanding heart, to judg thy people, that I may diſcern between good and bad. This is properly the judgment intended here. Job complained, God hath taken away my Judgment; That is, my right, or hath not done me right.

But how is Judgment taken away?

I ſhall anſwer it in three things.

Firſt, When right is quite ſubverted, and over-thrown. This the Prophet elegantly expreſſeth and reproveth (Amos 6. 12.) Ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteouſneſs into Hemlock. Right done is ſweet and wholeſom, but right denied is bitter as Gall, and baneful like Hemlock.

Secondly, When Judgment is defer'd, ſtopped, or delayed, then 'tis taken away for a time. To have judgment long delayed, is always next degree to the denial of it, and ſometimes delay is more cruciating and grievous then a denial.

Thirdly, A mans judgment is ſaid to be taken away, when the ground, or cauſe, of Gods proceeding with him in judgment, is hid, or unmanifeſt; Judgment, as to us, is not, when the reaſon of it doth not appear to us, or when we ſee not the reaſon of it. To feel Judgment and not to ſee the cauſe of it, turns it into a torment; we ſay commonly, Things that appear not, are as if they were not. When the reaſon or ground of our ſufferings is not underſtood, 'tis as if we ſuffered without any ground of reaſon.

When Job complained, God hath taken away my Judgment, we are not to underſtand him, as if Elihu intended it in the firſt or groſſeſt ſenſe, that God had ſubverted his judgment, or had done him wrong. Elihu could not ſuſpect he had any ſuch blaſphemous opinion of God; for, that had fulfilled the Devils prophecy of him, He will curſe thee to thy face. But when he ſaid, God hath taken away my Judgment; he meant it according to the two latter interpretations, either that God deferred long to reſtore him, and anſwer his prayer, or that God had hid from him the reaſon of his dealing with him, ſo that he could not make it out, how, or why he was ſo ſorely and grievouſly handled. Job knew well his own innocency, but he did not well conſider Gods ſoveraignty, which alone anſwers enough for him, how much ſoever he in this world afflicts the innocent. And therefore for as much as God held him long in that ſad condition, and in the mean time hid his judgment, or the reaſon of it from him, this was Job's grievance, and the burden of it preſſed him to cry out, God hath taken away my Judgment. In this he was too bold with God, and therefore he juſtly fell under this cenſure of Elihu: As if he had ſaid, It doth not at all become thee, O Job, as a creature, as a man, much leſs as a new creature, or as a godly man, to cry out (as thou haſt done) that God hath taken away thy Judgment, becauſe he doth not give thee an account, nor tell thee, why he judgeth thee; therefore humble thy ſelf that ever thou haſt ſaid (and take heed thou ſay it no more) God hath taken away my Judgment.

Hence Note, Firſt, God ſometimes lets the goodneſs of his moſt precious ſervants lie in the dark.

He goeth unuſual ways with many of his choyceſt ſervants; he doth not always declare their right, nor deal with them according to the ordinary rule, in giving good to them that are good, (as not always evil to them that are evil, the Lord is at his liberty in theſe preſent diſtributions, he is ſupream, and hath power over all fleſh) and ſo keeps their judgment in the clouds, or a ſecret to himſelf.

Secondly, Note, The Lord ſometimes is pleaſed to defer and delay to do his ſervants right.

And thus he takes away their Judgment. Though he hath a purpoſe to give it them, yet he doth not preſently give it them; at laſt he will make even with all men, each man ſhall have his judgment; he will reward every one according to his work, and the righteous, ſhall (without doubt) have a good reward.

Thirdly, Note, When God doth either hide or defer the Judgment of a godly man, it doth very much affect, yea and afflict his heart.

We are uſually much afflicted with any dark diſpenſation upon many accounts, eſpecially upon this, becauſe it makes us obnoxious to every mans cenſure. When God takes away our judgment, we fall under the hard judgments of men; And to lie under the ill opinions of men unvindicated or unrighted, is no eaſie burden. We have that promiſe (Pſal. 37.6.) He ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day. The righteouſneſs and judgment of a good man may be in a mid-night darkneſs as to man, and till that be brought to the light of other mens knowledg, himſelf hath, ſometimes, little light of comfort.

Fourthly, Note, It is ſinful to complain, and to be troubled, as if God had not done us right, becauſe we ſee it not done, or becauſe he defers to do it.

In this Job was moſt faulty, he uttered many paſſionate ſpeeches about what God had done, becauſe things were not brought to an iſſue, nor his condition ſtated and cleared up, either to the world, or to himſelf; This troubled him more then the extremity of his pain, or the greateſt of his troubles. How ſtifly Job ſtood upon it, that his Judgment was taken away, will appear yet further in the next words, which Elihu makes further matter of accuſation.

Verſ. 6. Should I lie againſt my right? my wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion.

In this verſe we have two other parts of the Indictment brought againſt Job, near of the ſame nature with the former; wherein he yet more vehemently urgeth his own integrity, and cryeth out both of the greatneſs and cauſeleſneſs (on his part) of his preſent ſufferings. More diſtinctly Elihu in this verſe chargeth him,

Firſt, That he did over-eagerly maintain his own cauſe, Should I lie againſt my right?

Secondly, That he ſpake of God as dealing over-harſhly with him; My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion; Theſe things (ſaith Elihu) thou haſt alſo ſaid.

Should I lie againſt my right?] We read the words as a Queſtion; others read them as a direct propoſition; There is a lie in Judging me, or, There is a lie againſt my right; The word which we here tranſlate right, is the ſame which we tranſlate Judgment in the former verſe. And when he ſaith, There is a lie againſt my right; It is as if he had plainly ſaid, I am falſly charged, I am wrongfully accuſed, I am not ſuch a man as I am ſuppoſed, nor have I done thoſe things whereof I am ſuſpected. Every falſe accuſation brought againſt a man, is a lie againſt his right.

In judicando enim me mendacium eſt. Vulg.

Secondly, Others read it thus, I ſhall make liers againſt my right; That is, whoſoever ſtands up to prove any thing againſt me, as you have done, ſaying, I am wicked, unrighteous, or hypocritical, I ſhall be able to prove him a lier. But neither the Grammatical ſignification of the words will fairly bear this ſenſe, nor doth it well correſpond with the former verſe.

Super Judicium meum faciam mentiri. i. e. falſi arguam hominem qui volet mecum contendere. Cajet. Item Chald.

Thirdly, Thus; I lie in my Judgment; That is, I am deceived in it, or I fail of it. To lie in Scripture, is to fail, or to fruſtrate the hope of another. Some inſiſt much upon this ſenſe; as if he had ſaid, I come ſhort of that which I looked for as my right or Judgment; in this ſenſe the word is often applyed to things, but not to perſons, as ſome of the learned conclude upon this place. (Iſa. 58.11.) Thou ſhalt be like a ſpring of water, whoſe waters fail not; we put in the margin, lie not, or deceive not. 'Tis a promiſe made to thoſe who keep a true faſt, and keep it truely, God will be to them as a ſpring whoſe waters lie not. All our freſh ſprings are or ſhould be in God, and he is a ſpring whoſe waters are always freſh. No man ever came to him for matter, and was fruſtrated of his expectation. Thus alſo the word is uſed (Hab. 3.17.) Although the labour of the Olive ſhall fail; That is, though when you come to the Olive tree, you find no Olives there, nor ſee any hope of a drop of oil in your whole Olive-yard, yet you may ſtill rejoyce in the Lord, he is able to annoint and fill you always with the oil of gladneſs. Thus Job is conceived complaining here of his deceived hopes, much in that ſenſe as God himſelf in the Prophet (Iſa. 5.7.) is ſaid to be deceived. He looked for judgment, but behold oppreſſion, for righteouſneſs, but behold a cry. I (ſaith Job) looked for better things, I looked for light, but behold darkneſs, I looked to be acquitted, but behold I am hardly thought of and cenſured on every hand, I am quite diſappointed, matters fall out and are otherwiſe then I did expect.

In judicio meo mentior. Piſc. Probarem ſi mentiri hoc ſenſu de perſona dici inveniretur nam de re uſurpari certum eſt. Druſ.

Fourthly, I lie in my right; Is thus expounded, I am thought to lie, while I maintain my right, or ſay I am righteous; I am judged a liar, for ſaying I have walked in the truth.

In Jure meo mentior. i.e. quum innocentiam meam defendo, putor mentiri. Piſc.

All theſe readings of the Text are given from the affirmative tranſlation.

But we, as alſo ſeveral others tranſlate by an interrogation, intimating the heat and earneſtneſs of his ſpirit, in wiping off this aſperſion; Should I lie againſt my right? I ſhould not, I will not. As if Elihu had ſaid; Job hath inſiſted ſo much upon his own righteouſneſs, and right, that he will not be taken off from it upon any terms, nay he hath ſaid, What? Should I knowing my ſelf to be innocent (becauſe of this cry againſt me) cry guilty to this indictment; and ſo betray my own innocency, or give away my right? Job ſtands ſo much upon his own righteouſneſs, that if he ſhould but acknowledg himſelf faulty, he thinks he ſhould lie, or wrong himſelf by ſpeaking againſt his knowledg and conſcience. And indeed Job (Chap. 27.4,5,6.) ſpake fully to this effect, That it would be a wrong to or a lie againſt himſelf, if he ſhould not ſtand up to the uttermoſt in his own right, and defend his innocency; and 'tis probable Elihu hits at that paſſage, while he chargeth him with this paſſionate expoſtulation, What! Should I lie againſt my right? Would you have me ſay as you ſay, and ſo bear falſe witneſs, or be a falſe witneſs againſt my ſelf? What ever comes of it, I will not do that. I will not lie againſt my right, nor let go my integrity; I will not in civility to any other mans underſtanding of me, ſubſcribe to my own wrong, or ſay I am what I am not, or have done what I have not. Elihu brings this as a ſtrong proof of the height of Job's ſpirit, as if to confeſs his fault were to fall below himſelf, yea to belie himſelf; Should I lie againſt my right?

An par eſt ut mentiar ſuper innocentia mea? Vatabl.

Hence Note, Firſt, To acknowledg we have done that, which we have not done, or that we are what we are not, is to lie againſt our own right, or to wrong our ſelves.

As many lie, by ſpeaking more good of themſelves then is true, or by denying that evil which in truth they are guilty of; ſo he that ſubmits to that guilt which he is free from, or confeſſeth more evil of himſelf then is true, lieth againſt his own Soul. So did that Amalekite (2 Sam. 1.10. compared with 2 Sam. 31.4.) charge himſelf falſly with killing Saul in hope of a reward from David for his good news. As no man ought to lie againſt another, much leſs againſt himſelf; And as that man doth wickedly belie himſelf, who ſaith he is better then he is, (for that's horrible hypocriſie; all ſuch God will unmask one time or other, who thus cover themſelves with lies, and ſay (like thoſe in the Prophet) they have dreamed when they have ſeen nothing, but the vain phanſies of their own brains, nor felt any thing but the preſumption of their falſe hearts; Now (I ſay) as he doth wickedly belie himſelf who ſaith he is better then he is) ſo for any man to deny that good which God hath done for him, or wrought in him, or what he hath done or wrought in the fear and power of God, is a dangerous way of denying and belying his own right.

Hence Secondly Note, No man ought to admit any charge againſt himſelf, wherein he is not guilty.

It is not in our liberty to give up our own integrity, we may not give up the righteouſneſs and innocency of others to a falſe witneſs, if we can detect it, much leſs our own. Let no man lie againſt his right. It is our affliction only to be wronged by others, but 'tis our ſin to wrong either others, or our ſelves. Yet, Thirdly, Note, We may quickly over-act in ſtanding upon our own right.

That caution of Solomon (Eccl. 7. 16.) ſeems to carry this obſervation in it. Be not righteous overmuch, neither make thy ſelf over-wiſe: Why ſhouldeſt thou deſtroy thy ſelf? Some expound this precept as a rule of policy, adviſing all to a moderation in the practice of (that wherein there can be, indeed, no exceſs) true piety and religion; as if it were a duty to ſtudy and comport our ſelves to a kind of neutrality and indifferency in the things of God, leſt we expoſe our ſelves to the wrath and rage of men, who cannot bear it with patience to ſee any that are better or do better then themſelves. But I conceive the Spirit of God in Solomon, was far from breathing any ſuch cold blaſt, to nip either the buddings or higheſt growths of godlineſs; and that he would not at all abate any in the practice of holineſs, but intends one of or all theſe three things. Firſt, to take men off from any opinionativeneſs, about what they judg to be righteous and themſelves righteous in doing it, willing them to take advice, and not to lean to their own underſtanding, nor to reſt in their own dictates as infallible; or Secondly, when he ſaith, Be not righteous overmuch, his meaning is, do not exact the utmoſt of others which the Law in the rigour of it will allow; he that will not remit any thing of his right, is not only over-righteous, but may ſoon do wrong; or Thirdly, when he ſaith, be not over-righteous, as he would not have men ſtand ſtrictly upon their right with others, ſo he would not have them ſpeak much of their own righteouſneſs; but rather ſometimes take blame to themſelves, then (which was Job's caſe) proclaim themſelves altogether blameleſs. As we are not to betray our innocency, ſo not give a ſhadow of any boaſting in it. We ſeldom loſe by ſaying little of our ſelves. And in moſt caſes we ſhould rather truſt God (who hath promiſed he will do it, Pſal. 37. 6.) to bring forth our righteouſneſs as the light, then be over-induſtrious in bringing it to light, or in bringing it out of the darkneſs with which it lyeth obſcured, either by or among men. As we ought never to lie againſt our right, ſo it may not be convenient at ſome times to ſpeak all the truth of it which we can. This at leaſt was Job's fault, and it will be any mans who doth like Job, yea though he ſhould be (which few have been or are like to be) under as great ſufferings as Job. The greatneſs whereof he aggravated to the hight in the next words, with which Elihu chargeth him,

My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion.

An incurable wound is the worſt of wounds, and though to be wounded without tranſgreſſion is beſt for him that receives it, yet it is worſt for him that gives it. My wound is incurable.

The Hebrew is, my arrow; the arrow is a wounding weapon, and in this Text 'tis put for the wound it ſelf. Job complained (Chap. 6. 4.) The arrows of the Almighty drink up my ſpirits; There are arrows of two ſorts, and anſwerably there are wounds of two ſorts. There are firſt external, Secondly, internal arrows; God ſhooteth his arrows both into the fleſh, and ſpirit; the former make a wounded body, the latter a wounded Soul. Job may intend both, for he received wounds in both; his fleſh was wounded, and all that belong'd to fleſh, his eſtate, his credit and good name were wounded, his Soul and ſpirit were wounded alſo, the arrows of God were ſhot thick at him, and hit him from head to foot. The Archers (as dying Jacob ſaid of Joſeph, Gen. 49. 23, 24.) ſorely grieved him, they [all] ſhot at him, and (one of them Satan) hated him; but though his bow (as to the main) abode in ſtrength, and the arms of his hands were made ſtrong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; yet he cryed out as if there had been no help, no healing, no hope for him. My wound Graviſſima eſt ſagitta mea abſque tranſgreſſione. Bez.

Is incurable.] The word which we render incurable, ſignifies not only what is very dolorous, or grievous, but miſchievous, mortal, and deadly. And from this word man is called Enoſh in the Hebrew, to ſhew how infirm and frail he is, ſin having given him a wound which is incurable, by any thing but the blood of Jeſus Chriſt. Job felt his wounds, and he ſpake of them, as a man ſwallowed up with deſperation, and expected no cure of his preſent ſad condition; My wound is incurable, and he concluded with that which is yet harder, My wound is incurable

Hanc ſagittam Elihu vocat, אנוש i. e. gravem doloratam peſſimè habentem hinc Enoſh homo ab infirmitate & fragilitate dictus.

Without tranſgreſſion.] Mr. Broughton tranſlates, My ſtroak is ſore without treſpaſs. Job in ſaying his wound was incurable, ſhewed a defect in his faith, but in ſaying it was incurable without tranſgreſſion, he ſeemeth to ſhew his defect in truth. For ſurely had there not been tranſgreſſion in him, there had never been a wound upon him; God had never ſo much as broken our skin but for ſin; Man had never felt ſo much as the ſcratch of a pins point by the hand of God, if he had not once prevaricated and Apoſtatiz'd from God. We owe all our ſorrows to our ſins, all our woundings to our tranſgreſſings. How then doth Job ſay, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion? The word here uſed is not uſually put to ſignifie ſin in general (though ſome take it ſo) but ſome ſpecial kind of ſin, and that of more then an ordinary degree, a ſin with a malignity, a provoking ſin; As if the meaning of Elihu were, that he heard Job ſay, Though his ſin were not great, though it were not any rebellion againſt light, nor dangerous Apoſtacy, though his were a very curable ſin, yet his wound was altogether incurable, his wound was great, though his ſin was little. Now, becauſe Juſtice doth uſually apportion the puniſhment inflicted both to the nature and meaſure of the ſin committed, therefore Elihu takes it (and he had too much occaſion to do ſo) as a great reflection upon the juſtice of God, when he heard Job thus bemoaning himſelf, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion. To receive the leaſt wound without tranſgreſſion, is a great wound to juſtice, how greatly then doth he wound the Juſtice of God, who ſaith he hath received a great, yea an incurable wound without tranſgreſſion.

פשע Denotat grave ſcelus vel Apoſtaſiam. Scult.

But where ſpake Job theſe words, when ſaid he, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion, (we muſt bring in that, Job hath ſaid, to every one of theſe charges) I anſwer, Job ſpake of the arrows of God (Chap. 6. 4.) and that they were incurable, he ſaith in other words (Chap. 16. 13.) His arrows compaſs me round about; he cleaveth my reins aſunder; he poureth out my gall upon the ground. When a mans reins are cleft in ſunder with an arrow, and his gall poured on the ground, his wound is incurable.

But where did he ſay, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion; Elihu might collect that from (Chap. 9. 17.) He breaketh me with a tempeſt, and multiplyeth my wounds without cauſe; and from (Chap. 16. 16, 17.) My face is foul with weeping, &c. Not for any injuſtice in my hands. While Mary waſhed the feet of Chriſt with her tears (Luke 7. 38.) ſhe might be ſaid to foul her own face with her tears. Tears, which (in a qualified ſenſe, or as a token of true repentance) waſh and cleanſe the Soul, do yet blubber and disfigure the face. My face (ſaith Job) is foul with weeping, though my hands are not foul with ſinning, or any evil doing. This was, in effect to ſay what Elihu here cenſureth him for ſaying, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion.

Hence Note, Firſt, God hath his arrows, he can wound us when and where he pleaſeth.

He ſhooteth and miſſeth not his mark. He hath a quiver full of deadly arrows; take heed how ye provoke him. Job had a whole quiver of arrows emptied upon him for trial, for the exerciſe of his patience. Wo to thoſe upon whom God emptieth his quivers in vengeance. (Pſal. 7. 11, 12, 13.) God is angry with the wicked every day; if he turn not, he will whet his ſword, he hath bent his bow, and made it ready; he hath alſo prepared for him the inſtruments of death, he ordaineth his arrows againſt the perſecutors.

Secondly, Note, The wounds which God makes cannot be healed by any medicines but his own.

Job's wound was incurable, there was no balm for him in the Gilead of this world, no Phyſician there. And therefore the Lord bids Egypt, in ſcorn, ſeek healing there (Jer. 46. 11.) Go up into Gilead and take balm, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain ſhalt thou uſe many medicines, for thou ſhalt not be cured. Who can heal where God will wound? (Pſal. 38. 2, 3.) Thine arrows ſtick faſt in me, there is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh; even David complained that the wounds which the arrows of God had made in him were incurable. Why is my pain perpetual (ſaid the Prophet, Jer. 15. 18.) and my wound incurable, which refuſeth to be healed? When Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to King Jareb to help him, yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wounds. (Hoſ. 5. 13.) God gives ſtates or bodies politick ſuch wounds, as all the medicines and means in the world cannot help; They may go to the Aſſyrian, and ſend to King Jareb, to this and that power; They may call a whole colledg of State-Phyſicians or deepeſt politicians for counſel and advice, yet neither one nor other can be a healer to them. Therefore in the next Chapter (Ver. 1.) The Church concluded upon another courſe, and a better addreſs, then either to the Aſſyrian, or to King Jareb. Come let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; only the Lord who gives the wound can heal the wound; the ſame hand which ſmites us muſt cure us, elſe our wound is incurable.

Thirdly, Note, To complain of our wounds as incurable, or paſt cure, is an argument of our unbelief.

'Tis good for us even to deſpair of help from creatures, and to ſay the leaſt wound (if but the ſcratch of a pin) is incurable by all the art, means, and medicines which this world can adminiſter, but to ſay our wound (though never ſo deep, dangerous, and deadly) is abſolutely incurable, is our ſin. While we ruin our ſelves (That is, while we provoke God to ruin us, yet) there is hope in God; O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thy ſelf, but in me is thine help (Hoſ. 13. 9.) Deſpair as much as you will of creatures help, but ſtill hope in God.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, My wound is incurable without tranſgreſſion,

Note, The Lord may, and doth take liberty to afflict thoſe grievouſly, who have not ſinned greatly.

There is no man liveth and ſinneth not, yet every man is not (in ſtrict ſenſe) a ſinner, that is, a great ſinner, a rebel, a worker of iniquity; yet the Lord when 'tis needfull giveth them great wounds, who have not (comparatively) ſinned greatly. Though no ſin ſhould be little in our eye, yet there are degrees of ſin, and ſome are leſs then others in the eye both of God and man. Elihu chargeth Job, not as ſaying he had no ſin, but becauſe he complained his wounds were great, though his ſins were not; or that there was not a due proportion between his offence and his puniſhment, his ſins and his ſufferings.

Hence Note, Fourthly, Though the Lord taketh liberty to afflict thoſe greatly that have not ſinned greatly, they muſt not take liberty to complain of the greatneſs of their afflictions, how little ſoever their ſins have been.

A gracious heart looks upon the leaſt of his mercies, as greater then the greateſt of his good deſervings, and upon the greateſt of his ſufferings, as leſs then the leaſt of his ill deſervings or demerits. And ſurely (beſides that liberty which God hath, as he is ſupream, and ſoveraign, to afflict whom he will, and in what degree he will) we muſt know, that, the leaſt ſin deſerves the greateſt wound. And evil thought deſerves all the evil that can be heaped upon us. Whatſoever we ſuffer on this ſide hell is leſs then the leaſt of our ſins. And therefore if we have reaſon to confeſs our little ſins great, and our greateſt wounds little, compared with our little ſins; how much more ſhould we confeſs our great ſufferings little, compared with our great ſins, as the Church did (Ezra. 9. 13.) After all that is come upon us (our long and hard bondage in Babylon) for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, thou O Lord, haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve.

Further, from the whole verſe, in that Eliah chargeth Job with theſe ſeveral ſayings, Obſerve, Firſt, A good mans ſayings are often worſe then his meanings.

Elihu rebuketh his ſpeeches, not his ſpirits; his words though in ſome reſpect true, yet were dangerous, and becauſe not well explained by himſelf, ſcandalous to others: But his heart was not treacherous, nor the bent of his mind wrong ſet, in uttering them. Evil men may ſpeak good words, but 'tis with a bad heart; Good men ſometimes ſpeak bad and offenſive words, yet with honeſt hearts; and when their minds are ſerene, and they cleared from thoſe clouds of perturbation, which have darkned them, they (as Job) are ready to recant them, and repent of them.

Secondly, Note, It is an high offence to intimate any thing which doth in the leaſt intrench upon the Juſtice, and righteouſneſs of God.

To ſay, God hath taken away our judgment, may call down judgments; To ſay, we are wounded without tranſgreſſion, is a great tranſgreſſion; and the reaſon, why it is ſo, is plain, becauſe ſuch ſayings, tell the world, that we ſuffer, if not quite without deſert, yet more then we deſerve; and what is this but to juſtifie our ſelves, and lay blame upon God, then which (as was ſhewed at the 2. verſe of the 32. Chapter) nothing is more derogatory to God, or more blame-worthy in man?

Thirdly, Note, If we ſpeak amiſs, or indiſcreetly about the dealings of God with us, we may thank our ſelves if we are hardly cenſured, and ſoundly chidden for it.

Though Job's heart was honeſt, yet his tongue was intemperate, and he too bold with God; and you ſee how God ſtir'd up the ſpirit of Elihu to lay it home to him, and bring him upon his knees for it. They who vent unwarrantable ſpeeches, muſt not think much if they meet with ſharp reproofs and cutting cenſures. Tongue-faults ſeldom eſcape without tongue-laſhes; And 'tis a mercy to meet with them from a faithful friend; Their laſhing and cutting tongues prove healing tongues, (Pſal. 141. 5.)

No man knows what gloſs his words may have put upon them when once uttered. Here are four ſayings brought againſt Job, yet Job never ſpoke any of them expreſly, or in ſo many words, but ſuch collections were made (indeed they were, as not falſe, ſo not favourable collections) from what he had ſpoken. And he had but a poor remedy left, to ſay he did not mean them ſo. Take heed what you ſpeak words are uſually judged as others underſtand them, not as you mean them. Indeed charity doth always incline to the beſt conſtruction; and will not interpret that ill, which may bear a better interpretation. But who knoweth whether his words ſhall always meet with a charitable interpreter? our words do not often meet with juſt and equal ones. Nothing, indeed, is more common with uncourteous hearers, then to miſconſtrue thoſe they hear, or to judg of what is ſpoken rather as it may be taken to the ſpeakers hurt and defamation, then their own profit or inſtruction. And therefore though I would adviſe every hearer to uſe as much charity as may be, yet I would alſo adviſe every ſpeaker to leave as little as may be to the charity of his hearers.

Thus much of the firſt part of the charge in theſe four ſayings. In the three verſes following, Elihu proſecutes the charge, and ſtandeth in admiration, as here at the ſayings of Job, ſo there of his doings.

VERS. 7, 8, 9.

What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning like water?
Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.
For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God.

Theſe three verſes contain the ſecond charge or accuſation, which Elihu had drawn up againſt Job. And in it we may diſtinctly conſider; firſt, the form of it; ſecondly, the matter of it.

The form of it is by way of queſtion; What man is like Job? The matter of it conſiſts of three heads.

Firſt, That he was a man of a ſcornful Spirit towards others, or that he had ſubjected himſelf to the ſcorn of others; What man is like Job, Which drinketh up ſcorning like water?

Secondly, Elihu chargeth him, as having fellowſhip with men of a vain and offenſive converſation (verſe 8.) Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

Thirdly, He chargeth him (which is indeed the ground of the former) that he was a man, not only of unſound, but of blaſphemous principles and opinions (verſe 9.) For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God. This 9. verſe is the proof of the eighth; for ſome might enquire, how doth it appear, that, Job goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men? Elihu anſwers, It appeareth by his words, or from his own mouth; For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing, that he ſhould delight himſelf with God. And if a man once judg that there is no profit in the ways of God, he thereby declares his conſent to the ways of the wicked. That's the ſum of the charge, and theſe the parts of it.

Verſe 7. What man is like Job?

The word rendred Man, doth not ſignifie every ordinary man, but a great or wiſe man, a famous or a powerful man. What great or wiſe man is like Job? Poſſibly ſome may be found among the dregs of the people or among the common ſort like himſelf, but among men of honour and reputation for wiſdom, ſurely, there are none to be found like him. Yet ſome take it (out of the ſtrictneſs of the Original word) for a man of the loweſt or meaneſt condition, what man is like Job? That is, no man, no not of the meaneſt degree is like him. And ſo the queſtion may be carried under a threefold notion.

Firſt, As a vilifying queſtion, What man is like Job? Who is there that hath but the name and face of a man that would do or ſpeak things as he? Job, in this matter, is worſe then any man, then the worſt of men. He acts and ſpeaks at a lower rate of prudence and piety then many, if not then any of the loweſt among the Sons of men.

Secondly, We may look upon it as an angry paſſionate queſtion, a queſtion carrying in it higheſt indignation; What man is like Job? who ſo vain, raſh, fooliſh and inconſiderate as he? I have ſcarce the patience to ſpeak or think of him.

Thirdly, We may take it as an admiring queſtion; What man is like Job? It is a thing unheard of, even a ſtupendious prodigie, that a man ſhould be or do as Job. All ſorts of men abſtain from or decline, yea ſcorn ſcorning ('tis a thing ſo unbecoming man) but chiefly they that are great, noble and honourable, ſuch as Job hath been in his time, yet he is turned ſcorner. As if he had ſaid, Who hath heard the like? Was there ever ſuch a man heard of, who either uſed ſuch ſcornful language againſt others, or laid himſelf ſo open to the ſcorn and contempt of others! What man is like Job,

Who drinketh up ſcorning like water?

That's matter of admiration; Elihu might have found out many other matters, wherein Job had no fellow, no parallel, ſcarce any like him in the World; who ſo afflicted, ſo humbled, ſo broken, ſo deſerted by his own relations, ſo vexed with friends and comforters like Job? But he doth not put the queſtion upon his ſufferings, but upon his ſin; What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning, &c. Drinking is here uſed metaphorically, and ſo likewiſe are eating, devouring, and ſwallowing up often uſed in Scripture, to denote that which is done to be done with much greedineſs, and with a kind of delight. And whereas there is a three fold meaſure or degree of drinking; Firſt, ſoberly, or for neceſſity: Secondly, plentifully or for moderate delight; Thirdly exceſſively, or for drunkenneſs, and the ſatisfying of a luſt. This third ſeemeth to be here intended, even an exceſſive drinking of ſcorn, till he was as a drunken or mad-man with it, or (as we ſay) mad drunk; for the Text ſaith, What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning? He doth not only taſt it a little, and ſip at the ſcorners cup, but drinks it up to a drop, or to the bottom. He drinketh up

Scorning.] And that's a ſtrange kind of drink, one of the worſt if not altogether the worſt of Natures brewing. Scorning may be taken two ways, either paſſively or actively; ſome take it in a paſſive ſignification; What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning like water? That is, who is ſo ſcorned, or who ſubjecteth himſelf to the ſcorn of men as he hath done? What wiſe or diſcreet man did ever lay himſelf ſo naked, ſo open to contempt as he? Or who like him would render himſelf ſo ridiculous, ſuch a laughing ſtock to all his hearers, who are but rational and underſtanding men? It cannot be denied (nor doth Elihu in ſpeaking thus coarſely of him deny it) but that Job, moved doubtleſs by the Holy Ghoſt, had ſpoken many excellent things, full of divine light and learning, yet moved with paſſion, he ſpake ſometimes much amiſs, and is charged for it, as if like a ſhameleſs perſon, he had proffered himſelf, by laviſh and intemperate language to the laſh of every tongue.

Quis ita ridetur & ſannis excipitur ut Job? bibit ſubſannationem id eſt ſubſannatur. Druſ. Significat Jobus ad ſe ridendum omnes provocare cum talibus ſermonibus utitur. Merc.

Secondly, Scorning may be taken actively; What man is like Job, who drinketh ſcorning like water? That is, where ſhall we find ſuch a ſcorner? Who hath uttered ſo many reproachful ſpeeches, as Job? He drinketh ſcorning, as if he thought he could never fill himſelf enough with ſcorning. This interpretation may have a double reference, Firſt, To his friends, who it ſeems, were very ſenſible that he put ſcorns upon them. Zophar complaineth of it (Chap. 11. 3.) When thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed; As if he had ſaid, when thou haſt mocked and derided us, ſhall we let thee alone, and ſay nothing? Shall we ſuffer our ſelves to be abuſed and paſs it by in ſilence? Ought we not to tell thee of it, and rebuke thee for it openly, and to thy face, that thou mayeſt ſee thy error and be aſhamed of it?

Secondly, (which is yet higher, and I judg too high) his ſcorning is referred by ſome to the dealings and providences of God, as if he had ſpoken of them with a kind of ſcorn, at leaſt with that irreverence, and ſlightneſs of Spirit, which Eliphaz did early and earneſtly admoniſh him of (Chap. 5.17.) Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Lord; and which the Apoſtle calls The exhortation, which ſpeaketh unto us as unto Children (Heb. 12.5.) My Son deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Lord. Thus alſo Elihu may in a qualified ſence be underſtood charging Job with drinking up ſcorning like water. As if upon the whole matter he had ſaid, Job hath drunk ſcorn till he is almoſt drunk with it, at leaſt, he is ſo full of it, that he pours it out upon every one that comes near him, and which is worſt of all, he ſpeaks ſo unbecomingly, that we ſhall not much wrong him, if we ſay he hath ſpoken or acted deſpiſingly (which is a degree of ſpeaking or acting ſcornfully) concerning the chaſtnings of God upon him.

Bibere ſubſannationem velut aquam eſt eſſe plenum ſermonibus ridiculis. Vatabl.

Further, When 'tis ſaid, He drinketh ſcorning like water; it may imply three things; firſt, the frequency of his ſcorning, he doth it commonly, he is at ſcorning as often as at drinking; ſecondly, the content which he was ſuppoſed to take in ſcorning, water cooleth and refreſheth the heated and wearied Body: Thirdly, it may note the eaſineſs or naturalneſs of it to him. To drink is natural to man, it puts him to no pains nor ſtudy. We ſay proverbially of that which a man doth without trouble; he doth it as eaſily as he drinks. But of this word drinking and drinking like water, the Reader may ſee more upon thoſe words (Chap. 15. 16.) Man drinketh iniquity like water.

Once more, whereas Elihu ſaith of Job, He drinketh ſcorning like water. Some have made a critical obſervation or diſtinction about it; Elihu doth not ſay, he drinketh ſcorning like wine, but like water; they who are provoked or led on to ſin by the delight and ſweetneſs which they find in ſin, are ſaid to drink it like wine (Prov. 4. 17.) They drink the wine of violence; or they drink violence like wine. It goeth down ſweetly and pleaſantly; but (ſay they) ſuch as ſin, not out of pleaſure but out of will or out of an affected maliciouſneſs, are ſaid to drink iniquity like water, which hath little pleaſure in it, little ſweetneſs or taſte in it. There's ſmall ſavour in water comparatively to wine and other delicate or delicious liquors. So that (according to this notion) they drink iniquity like water, who ſin for ſins ſake. And indeed ſome are ſo delighted in ſin it ſelf, that they will ſin in that which yields them no delight. The very act of doing evil is more contentful to them, then any fruit or conſequent of it. But we need not ſtay in this nicity, the general ſenſe falls hard enough upon Job, to drink ſcorning like water, is to be much and often in ſcorning. Water is the cheapeſt liquor, and of moſt common uſe; every man can go to the price of that which coſts nothing (in moſt places) but the labour of taking it up. What man is like Job, that drinketh ſcorning like water?

Taking the words in a paſſive ſenſe, as Job was a perſon ſcorned, and drunk in the ſcorns of men poured upon him, as the earth drinketh in water,

Note, He behaveth himſelf unlike a man, that layeth himſelf open to, and readily admits the ſcorn of men.

It is an affliction to be ſcorned by others; But it is a ſin to render our ſelves a ſcorn to others, and not to be ſenſible of it.

Secondly, (which I rather adhere to) taking the active ſenſe, he is charged with ſpeaking ſcornfully to his friends, or of the dealings of God with him; how far this charge might reach Job, hath been toucht a little already; and will be cleared yet further before the cloſe of the whole matter brought againſt him in this context. But in the mean time, from the general ſenſe of the words (not concluding Job broadly ſuch a one)

Obſerve, Scorners are the vileſt ſort of men.

What man is like Job, who drinketh ſcorning? Not to do good is ſinful, but either to ſcorn that which is good or thoſe that are good is far more ſinful. That man is gone his furtheſt length, or aſcended to the higheſt ſtep of ſin, who turneth ſcorner, or gives himſelf a liberty to ſcorn others. The firſt words of David ſpeak this (Pſal. 1. 1.) Bleſſed is the man that walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly, nor ſtandeth in the way of ſinners, nor ſitteth in the ſeat of the ſcornful. Here are three degrees of ſinning; walking, ſtanding, ſitting: He that ſitteth in the ſeat of the ſcornful, or hath commenced ſcorner, hath taken the higheſt degree, and is the chief Graduate in the Schools of ſin. And as to ſit in the ſeat of the ſcornful, is the higheſt degree of ſinning, ſo they that are got into that ſeat, care not how long they ſit in it, yea, are hardly ever got out of it. So much that chiding queſtion or expoſtulation of Solomon doth fully import (Prov. 1. 22.) Ye ſcorners, how long will ye delight in ſcorning? As if he had ſaid, When ſhall it once be? Will ye never have done, nor give over that trade? Scorners are therefore the worſt of men, becauſe they deride the beſt both of things and men (Prov. 21. 24.) Proud and haughty ſcorner is his name, who dealeth in proud wrath. Scorners are the Children of pride. A proud ſpirit vents it ſelf in ſcorning. Pride doth not appear ſo much in apparrel, in gay clothes and new fangled faſhions (all which are often uſed as flaggs of pride and vanity) nor doth pride appear ſo much in praiſing our ſelves (though there it appeareth much) as it doth in ſcorning others. Proud ſcorner is his name. And as the ſcorner is a proud deſpiſer of others, ſo a quarrelſom contender with others, and till he is ſeparated from men, there is nothing but ſeparation, no peace among men (Prov. 22. 10.) Caſt out the ſcorner, and contention ſhall go out; yea ſtrife and reproach ſhall ceaſe; which plainly intimateth, that ſtrife cannot go out till the ſcorner be caſt out. And therefore Solomon (Pro. 24. 9.) calleth the ſcorner an abomination to man. Thus the Scripture ſets the ſcorner among ſinners of the chiefeſt rank and firſt form; I may ſay, he is of the firſt three, if not the firſt of that three. Therefore take heed how ye drink ſcorning, eſpecially take heed it be not your mornings draught; for as it comes from the heart, ſo it will fly up into your head, and unfit you for any good work, at leaſt, that day.

Again, from the ſimilitude here uſed, to drink up ſcorning like water, which (as hath been ſhewed) holds out the readineſs and connaturalneſs of an action unto him that is charged with it.

Note, The more eaſily any one ſinneth, the greater is his ſin.

It is beſt to come hardly off in ſinning, and when it goeth hardly down; Many ſin as eaſily as they eat or drink. They eat up my people as bread, (ſaith God, Pſal. 14. 4.) That is, (as we ſay) they make no bones of it; there's nothing ſticks in their throats, nor troubles their conſcience. Where ſin lives altogether unmortified in any man (it doth ſo in every meer natural or unregenerate man) 'tis no more to him to ſin, then it is either to live, or to eat and drink for the maintaining of life. But they ſhall feel ſoreſt pains for ſinning, who have ſinned with greateſt eaſe; they ſhall drink dammage by ſcorning like Gall and Wormwood, who have drunk ſcorning like water. Elihu having thus taxed Job with ſcorning at good men, proceeds to tax him with overmuch freedom and familiarity with evil men.

Verſ. 8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

As if he had ſaid, you may know what he is, by the company he keeps.

Noſcitur ex comite. &c.

He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, or he aſſociates and puts himſelf into the ſociety of the workers of iniquity. Elihu doth not ſay, he dwelleth among the workers of iniquity; The beſt man in the world may dwell among bad men; Lot dwelt in Sodom. We muſt go out of the world, if we will not be among the wicked; the world is every where full of the workers of iniquity. But (ſaith he) he goeth in company with them. Which intimates the activeneſs of his ſpirit with them; yea the Election of his ſpirit, or that he choſe their company. Though a good man may be in the company of the wicked, yet he doth not chooſe their company; He is not of their body of their ſociety or gang. A wicked man doth not content himſelf to be among the ordinary ſort of ſinners, he is for, and beſt likes the worſt of ſinners, workers of iniquity. All are ſinners naturally, but ſome are ſinners artificially; they ſtudy ſin, they contrive and plot miſchief; They deviſe iniquity upon their beds, ſaith one Scripture; They weave the ſpiders web, ſaith another. Here's artificial ſinning. The Greeks call ſuch, ſin-workers, and crafts-men in evil. I have had occaſion to ſpeak of theſe from other paſſages of this Book. Here Elihu to highten the charge againſt Job, ſaith, He goeth in company with (ſuch or chooſeth ſuch kind of company) the workers of iniquity;

Κακούργους ϗ τέκτονας κακῶν.

And walketh with wicked men.] As our holineſs is expreſſed by walking with God, ſo our ſinfulneſs by walking with wicked men. To walk with God is all the commendation of Enoch, who was ſo holy on earth that God took him up to Heaven, (Gen. 5. 22.) He had this teſtimony (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 15.) before his tranſlation, that he pleaſed God. To walk with God, is to pleaſe God, or to give up our ſelves wholly to God. Can two walk together except they be agreed? Is the Prophets queſtion, (Amos 3. 3.) They who walk together are ſuppoſed to have one will, as they are ſeen to have one way. What God willeth they will, and what God willeth not, they will not who walk with him. To walk with wicked men implyeth an agreement with them, and a conformity to them, as being of their fraternity, company and livery. They that walk with wicked men, declare their familiarity with them, or that their mind and manners are the ſame. The Apoſtle tells the Corinthians (1 Cor. 3. 2.) Whereas there is among you envying, ſtrife and diviſions, are ye not carnal and walk as men, that is, as men in their natural and ſinful condition walk. Though ye are ſpiritual in your ſtate, yet ye act as carnal men. Now, as it is ſinful for a godly man to walk as a man, or according to man, (as our Margin hath it, for he ſhould walk as God) ſo it is much more ſinful to walk with wicked men, or according to the worſt of men. Thus the Apoſtle deſcribes the converſation of the Epheſians before converſion. (Eph. 22.) And you hath he quickened who were dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, in which ſometimes ye walked according to the courſe of this World. That is, according to the tide, current and ſtream of the times and places wherein ye lived. Man naturally doth not walk where he ought to go, but where he ſeeth the moſt go. He is led by the worſt of examples (ſuch are the examples of the moſt or of the many) rather then by the beſt of rules. It is our duty, and it ſhould be our delight to walk with thoſe who delight in the Law and in the way of God. David ſaith of his deceitful friend, but real enemy. (Pſal. 55. 14.)

Qua itur non qua eundum.

We walked unto the houſe of God in company. As if he had ſaid, time was when he and I were as if he had been I, both of us but one, in that one thing neceſſary, the worſhip and ſervice of God. It is a good argument, that man hath an heart for God, who walks with good men in the ways of God. To converſe much with or to be much in the company of good men, is a probable ſign of goodneſs; but when we walk with them to the houſe and worſhip of God, or converſe with them in the duties of holineſs, this is a great (though no infallible) argument of goodneſs. And to be ſure, to walk with evil men, eſpecially to joyn with them in doing evil, is an argument that the man is evil. Therefore Elihu may ſeem to bring a demonſtration againſt Job's godlineſs (that he intended it not ſo I ſhall ſhew afterwards, but, I ſay, he ſeems to ſay ſo) while he ſaith, Job walketh with wicked men.

The Hebrew Phraſe uſed in the Text is more then (as we expreſs) wicked men, we may render it men of wickedneſs; the Scripture calleth thoſe men ſo who are (as it were) transformed into wickedneſs, or formed up of wickedneſs. As ſome men are ſo witty, that we call them men of wit, and others ſo judicious, that we call them men of judgment, as ſome are ſo skilful and cunning, that we call them men of skill and cunning; ſo ſome are ſo wicked, that the Scripture calls them men of wickedneſs; even with theſe very dregs of mankind, it ſeems Job conſorted. He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

But here it may be queſtioned, was it indeed ſo with Job, or was Job ſuch a man as he is expreſly charged to be both in this and the former verſe? Did Elihu judg him a ſcorner, a companion of the workers of iniquity, and a walker with men of wickedneſs? Doubtleſs that's not Elihu's ſcope or intention; nor could he imagin that Job, in ſtrict ſenſe, was either a ſcorner of good men, or choſe the company of wicked men. And ſurely all that knew Job could certifie (upon their knowledg) that he was a man of a gracious ſpirit and unblemiſht life; that he loved good men and ſweetly converſed with them, and therefore was far from cloſing with deboiſt companions, or men of a profligate ſpirit. Why then doth Elihu ſpeak thus? Or ſpake he the words of truth and ſobriety while he ſpake thus?

I anſwer, this form of ſpeaking doth not always import a likeneſs of converſation and diſpoſition, as ſometimes it doth, (Prov. 1. 11, 15.) Come with us, and caſt in thy lot among us, let us all have one purſe. My ſon, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path; that is, do not hearken to the call of thoſe workers of iniquity. Here in the Text to go in company with the workers of iniquity, and to walk with wicked men, notes only the doing or ſpeaking that which carrieth ſome likeneſs to them, not a being altogether like them. A man is ſaid to go and walk with others, when he ſpeaks or doth that which ſeems to ſuit and favour their principles, opinions or practices, though in truth they are the abhorrence of his Soul. Elihu durſt not, could not aſſert directly and properly that Job, who was a man famous for piety in the days of his proſperity, and who in his affliction had not the leaſt degree of ability or opportunity for it, walked with wicked men: But becauſe in the anguiſh of his Soul he ſpake ſometimes intemperately of the dealings of God (which is the guiſe, ſpirit, and common language, in ſuch caſes, of wicked and ungodly men) therefore he chargeth him as ſymbolizing or complying with men of wickedneſs. So that when Elihu ſaith, he goeth with wicked men, he doth not accuſe him for keeping bad company in his proſperity; but with ſpeaking hardly of God in his adverſity, as ungodly men uſe to do, when they are under his hand. He doth not ſay, you upon ſuch and ſuch a day kept evil company and converſed with men of wickedneſs; but you have ſpoken much like the wicked in the day of your calamity. That this was his ſcope appears plainly by the proof of this charge, which is alſo a new charge (Verſ. 9.) For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God. Elihu doth not ſay, Job walketh with wicked men, for we have ſeen him in their company, and he hath been as vain and wicked as they. But his proof that Job walked with the wicked was from his words; For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing, &c. This is the language of the wicked, thus they uſe to ſpeak about the ways of God; and Job hath ſpoken thus; therefore, What man is like Job that drinketh ſcorning like water, which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men. I need not ſtay here to ſhew how great an evil it is to keep evil company, for that was not the ſin which Job was accuſed of. Yet from the letter of the Text,

> Note, Firſt, To aſſociate with wicked men, or to chuſe wicked men for our company, is the mark of a wicked man.

A godly man may be among wicked men, but he doth not chuſe their company. He while with them is as Lot was in Sodom, his righteous Soul is vexed. A godly man is among wicked men, as his graces are among his corruptions; as his humility is with his pride, his faith with his unbelief, theſe are all in his Soul at once, but his faith doth always ſtrive againſt his unbelief, his humility oppoſeth his pride, his grace of ſelf-denial reſiſts his ſelf-ſeeking, his meekneſs his paſſions, and his patience the unquietneſs of ſpirit. A godly man is pained in the company of wicked men, as David was (Pſal. 120. 5.) Wo is me that I ſojourn in Meſech, and dwell in the tents of Kedar. David was there but he did not delight to be there. To aſſociate with the wicked is proper to the wicked. The Apoſtle gives that caution (Eph. 5. 11.) Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. Seeing the works of darkneſs are unfruitful of any good, it muſt needs be bad to have followſhip with them. As we muſt not at all joyn with wicked men in ſpiritual communion or Church-fellowſhip (2 Cor. 6. 14.) Be not unequally yoaked with unbelievers; for what communion hath light with darkneſs, and Chriſt with Belial, &c. Come out from among them, and touch no unclean thing. So we ſhould have as little civil communion or ſellowſhip with them as we can; and when we are neceſſitated to have civil communion with them, we muſt utterly avoid all ſinful communion with them, that is, communion with them in their ſins. It is both a ſhame to Goſpel profeſſion and a great offence to the ſincere profeſſors of the Goſpel, when they who profeſs it are much in the company of the workers of iniquity, and walk with wicked men.

Secondly, From the matter of the charge,

> Obſerve, While godly men behave themſelves like wicked men, they may be ſaid to go in company with them.

This heavy charge falls juſtly upon them whether they demean themſelves in their affliction (as Job in ſome ſort did) like the wicked, or in the days of their fulneſs and proſperity. If we ſpeak or do like wicked men, we have our amends in our hands if we are numbred with them, though we are not really of their number. Some good men when they have got much of the world about them make but an ill uſe of it. Are wicked rich men proud? So are they in a great meaſure, you may ſee vanity in their houſes, and ſuperfluity upon their tables, as if they alſo were making proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts thereof. Now if a godly man, when he hath the abundance of this world makes himſelf more unfit for the next world; is he not in this like the wicked? Or if when God layeth him low, he be full of complainings and have riſings of heart againſt the dealings of God; what is this but to do like the wicked, who in their ſtraits quarrel with God, & blaſpheme his name? (Iſa. 8. ult.) When they are hungry and hard beſtead, they curſe their God and their King. Thus the wicked do; and it was the Devils plot to make Job do ſo too; & becauſe in the extremity of his ſufferings he ſpake ſuch things as ſavour'd of a murmuring ſpirit, Elihu taxeth him as walking with wicked men. For as when wicked men act and ſpeak like good men, it may be ſaid they go in the company with the godly, and walk with the workers of righteouſneſs, though they are ſtark naught all the while, being (as the Apoſtle gives their character, Tit. 1. 16.) Abominable, diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate; So ſome good men under temptation act and ſpeak like the wicked, yet retain their goodneſs, and are as to the general ſtate of their perſons, and bent of their hearts, acceptable, obedient, and inclined to every good work. It will do the wicked no good at laſt, that they have thus gone in company with the good; but it is very ſinful for and hurtful to good men, to go in company or walk with wicked men, though it be but (as Elihu makes his proof of it againſt Job) only in uſing their Sibboleth, or ſpeaking a language like theirs.

Verſ. 9. For he hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God.

I ſhall, Firſt, open the words a little, and then, Secondly, inquire, (as of the former) how Job might fall under this accuſation.

He hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing.] That is, a man ſhall get nothing, or have no advantage by it. As Chriſt ſaith (Mark. 8. 36.) What ſhall it profit a man to gain the whole world, and loſe his own Soul? But what was this trade which Elihu accuſeth Job to have called unprofitable? Surely that which of all others is moſt profitable. It profiteth a man nothing,

That he ſhould delight himſelf with God.] This goes deep; Elihu doth not tax him with ſaying it profiteth a man nothing to do this or that good, which God commandeth, but (which is more) that he ſhould

Delight himſelf with God.] The word rendred to delight, hath a three-fold ſignification, and all very full to this point and Text.

רצו

First, To run, which is the ſpeed of our pace. Thus the Septuagint render it, Although he run with God (Cant. 1 4.) By reaſon of the ſavour of thy good oyntments, therefore do the virgins love thee, draw us and we will run after thee. To run is more then to walk. To walk with God, notes our obſervance of all holy duties, but to run the way of Gods commandments, notes us zealous in them and for them. To run, requires not only an honeſt heart, but a large one; and therefore David ſaid (Pſal. 119. 32.) I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart. Thou (ſaith Elihu to Job) haſt ſaid, (according to this reading of the word) it ſhall not profit a man though he run with God, though he make never ſo much ſpeed in his work and ways; though he be (beſides faithful and upright) forward and active for God.

Secondly, The word ſignifieth, To have or be of the ſame will or mind with another. Thus alſo ſome render it here; It profiteth not a man, though he willeth with God, or be of the ſame mind with God. The Apoſtle exhorts (Phil. 2. 5.) Let this mind be in you which was in Chriſt Jeſus. To will is an internal motion, to run an external; How faſt ſoever a man may run with God in outward actings, yet, poſſibly, he doth not will with God at all, nor hath a mind conformable to the mind of God. The hypocrite is thus ſet out (Pſal. 50. 18, 19.) When thou ſaweſt a thief, thou conſentedſt with him, &c. Thou hadſt a mind to be a thief as well as he. One wicked man minds and wills the ſame things with another, and all godly men will the ſame things with God. Yet (ſaith Job) it ſhall not profit a man, though he have the ſame will with God, or though he willeth the ſame good things which God himſelf willeth.

Thirdly, The word (according to our tranſlation) ſignifieth more then barely to will, it takes in the affections and joys of the Soul. He that delighteth in God, hath ſweet content and complacency in God, he not only approves of all the ſayings and doings of God, he not only followeth his counſel, and his conduct, but is highly pleaſed and fully ſatisfied in God. Delight is the reſt of the Soul. When we delight in God, and find every act of obedience our joy and our ſong our meat and our drink, then the heart is wound up to the higheſt pitch of holineſs. And therefore as his heart is fallen down to the loweſt pitch of unholineſs, who ſaith, it profiteth a man nothing to ſerve God, ſo is his much more who ſaith, What ſhall it profit a man though he delight in God?

But here again it may be queried, Where did Job ſay, that it ſhould profit a man nothing though he delight himſelf with God? If you read his diſcourſe all over, he never ſpake theſe words directly or explicitely, they are the language of hell. But Job had ſpoken words, which (unleſs taken in a very favourable conſtruction) might bear this cenſure. He ſpake thus, in a manner, while he at once juſtified himſelf ſo much, and cryed out as much of the hard dealings of God with him. And while in many paſſages of this Book he denieth that the godly have a preſent reward in this life, and alſo affirmeth that many wicked men injoy outward proſperity, and paſs unpuniſhed. Theſe ſpeeches might eaſily be interpreted (by common and carnal men eſpecially) that, Job thought it an unprofitable thing to delight in God. For if all things in this life come alike to all, to the godly, and to the wicked, what doth it profit a man (as to this life) that he ſhould delight himſelf in God? Who among the ſons of men (that knoweth of no profit beyond this life) can delight himſelf in that, which brings no profit? Job alſo ſaid (Chap. 9. 22.) God deſtroyeth the wicked and the righteous, that is, he afflicts the good as much as the bad, this was a principle which he held out all along. Now becauſe the Scripture ſaith; He that cometh to God, muſt believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of thoſe that diligently ſeek him (Heb. 11 6.) and (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godlineſs is profitable for all things, having the promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come; (which Scriptures though not extant when Job lived, yet the truth contained in them was) Elihu might well be led into this apprehenſion, that Job had brought up an ill report upon the ways of God, as (in this life) unprofitable unto man. But though Job ſpake thus, yet he was far from ſpeaking this to juſtifie ſuch an opinion, that there is no profit for a man to delight himſelf with God. His meaning was only this, that a man may want temporal preſent profit, notwithſtanding his delighting in God. He was full and poſitive enough, that they who now delight in God, beſides the preſent inward peace and profit which they find and feel, ſhall hereafter be crowned with everlaſting rewards and delights. Job ſhould indeed have been more in juſtifying God, more in ſetting forth the preſent profitableneſs of his ways in the practice of an holy life; And becauſe he was ſo ſparing in this point, and inſiſted ſo often upon the afflictions of the people of God. Elihu chargeth him with ſaying, It profiteth a man nothing to delight himſelf with God.

Videtur principium unde ad omnia peccata feruntur improbi approbaſſe, eſt enim præmii fides non tantum futuri ſed hujus vitæ magnum incitamentum ad obſequium. Coc.

Hence Note; Firſt, It is our duty, and the ſum of all holy duties to delight our ſelves in God.

The very ſpirit of holineſs conſiſts in this; There is (as I may call it) a body of holineſs, but if you would have the ſpirit of holineſs (as by diſtillation we take the ſpirits of any liquor, or of any thing that liquor and moiſture hath in it, if, I ſay, we would have the ſpirits of holineſs) 'tis delighting in God. For as 'tis the ſpirit of ſinfulneſs to delight in ſin; ſo the ſpirit of Godlineſs is to delight in God.

Note, Secondly, To account the ſervice of God unprofitable, is wickedneſs bordering upon blaſphemy.

Job himſelf is now charged with that, which he charged upon the wicked (Chap. 21. 15.) What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? And what profit ſhall we have that we pray unto him? This grand prophaneſs the Prophet rebukes (Mal. 3. 14.) Ye have ſaid, It is in vain to ſerve God, and what profit is there that we have kept his ordinances? Thus the carnal heart, which would fain free or keep it ſelf from keeping the ordinances of God, is ready to queſtion, whether there be any profit in keeping them. And while ſuch ſeem only to put the queſtion, they indeed conclude, that there is no profit in keeping them; yet the truth is, the very keeping the ordinances of God, as it is an act of obedience to him, and of communion with him is very profitable, though we ſhould have no viſible nor ſenſible profit by it. In keeping the commandments of God, there is great reward (Pſal. 19. 11.) That is, the keeping of them is a reward, as well as a reward is promiſed to thoſe that keep them. The Reader may conſult this point further, at the 15. Verſe of the 21. Chapter.

Note, Thirdly, Good men ſometimes ſpeak worſe then they mean.

Job never thought it was no profit to ſerve God, yet he had let fall words which might bear that gloſs. As wicked men often ſpeak better then they mean: They have golden words in their mouths, when there is nothing but droſs in their hearts; their words are ſmoother then oil, yet they are drawn ſwords; their words ſound well, while they wound deep, (now as a carnal man ſpeaks often better then he means, and ſometimes ſpeaks purpoſely the beſt when he means worſt) ſo a godly man ſpeaks ſometimes worſe then he means, or he may ſpeak ill when he intends nothing but good. Holy David (which comes up fully to the ſenſe of what Job is taxed for ſaying here) ſaid (and what could he ſpeak more unholily) (*Pſal.*73.15.) Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, &c. What language was here? would one think to hear David foul his mouth with ſuch words as theſe? Would one think, that ſuch a word could have dropt from the mouth of David, whoſe mouth uſed to drop like an honey comb, and whoſe lips were wont to be like a tree of life feeding many? Yet David in temptation, that is, in great affliction (for he there complains that he was chaſtened every morning) ſpake thus with his tongue to the grief of his heart a little after. The tongue is an unruly member, (as the Apoſtle James ſaith, Chap. 3.8) The tongue can no man tame; we need a great command upon the heart to bridle the tongue, and tame that unruly beaſt. Many a good man hath been over-born with his tongue. That little member hath ſometimes cruſht both ſoul & body very ſorely. Job's tongue fell heavily upon him.

Obſerve, Fourthly; Inconſiderate words render us obnoxious to ſevereſt cenſures.

Thou haſt ſaid, It profiteth a man nothing to delight himſelf in God, is a very ſevere cenſure; And though Job did not deſerve it fully, yet he might have expreſſed himſelf more commodiouſly and profitably. Juſt conſequences from what we ſay, may be charged upon us as our ſayings. Indeed to wire-draw words or ſtrain conſequences from them, is very unchriſtian. Some deal ſo with the holy Scriptures (2 *Pet.*3.16.) Wreſting them to their own deſtruction; They torture and ſtretch them upon the tenters to their own hurt. And to wreſt a mans words, or as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 29.21.) To make a man an offender for a word, is an act of great uncharitableneſs towards man, and to God an high offence (Not but that a man may be an offender for his words; nor can a man be more truly an offender for any words, then when he ſpeaks reproachfully or ſlightly of the works of God) But when men ſpeak ſuch words as are real offences, and yield foul conſequences, fairly, they muſt bear the burden. And that was Job's caſe here.

But ſome may ſay, If Job never ſpake theſe words in terms, nor any words like them, with ſuch an intent, why doth he ſuffer Elihu to accuſe him, and not take off his accuſation, nor give a word of anſwer for himſelf? Why did he not vindicate himſelf, or make his Apology?

I anſwer, and my anſwer ſhall be the laſt note from this context.

A godly man will rather bear more blame then he deſerveth, then ſtand to excuſe himſelf when he hath deſerved any blame.

Job replyed no more, ſpake no more, but to ſhew that he yielded to what was ſaid, and ſubmitted to this diſpenſation of God in ſending Elihu to charge him thus. He took more upon him then he had ſaid, leſt he ſhould ſeem to juſtifie any thing that he had ſaid amiſs. (*Chap.*40.5.) Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further. As if he had ſaid, I will make no more pleas for my ſelf, nor excuſes, I will cry guilty to the whole matter of my charge, though I might clear and diſcharge my ſelf of much of it. How far was the ſpirit of Job from theirs, who though charged with that only which they have directly done, or ſpoken, yet ſtand it out in pleading their excuſe, and will never fall down before reproofs, though what they have done or ſpoken amiſs, be ſo plain, that it needs no proof.

We ſhould be careful to ſpeak and do ſuch things as are not ſubject to reproof, but when through ignorance or raſhneſs we have run into an error, either of ſpeech or practice, we ſhould be ſo humble as to ſubject our ſelves to reproof, and take it well that we are rebuked for any evil. As it doubles an offence to undertake the defence of it, ſo not to defend an offence abateth and leſſeneth it. And as he who goeth about to cover his fault by finding out arguments and pleas for it, ſheweth that he hath a will or purpoſe to continue in it; ſo he that is ſilent, and hath not a word to ſay for it, gives a good teſtimony both of his ſorrow that he ever committed it, and of his reſolution never to commit it any more. They are highly to be commended who live unblameably, and they deſerve no ſmall commendation, who being ſenſible of their own fayling, can patiently bear the blame of it, without replying upon their reprovers.

Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of underſtanding: far be it from God, that he ſhould do wickedneſs, and from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit iniquity.

For the work of a man ſhall he render unto him, and cauſe every man to find according to his ways.

Elihu having done with Job's charge for ſeveral unwarrantable ſayings in the former context, begins his refutation here, and directs his ſpeech, Firſt, To Job's friends, ſpeaking to them from the 10. to the 16. verſe.

Secondly, To Job himſelf, from the 16. verſe of this Chapter to the 34.

In the two verſes now read, we have two general points.

Firſt, A vehement denial of any unrighteouſneſs in God, (Ver. 10.)

Secondly, A ſtrong proof or demonſtration, that there is no unrighteouſneſs in God, at the 11. verſe. He enters this confutation of Job, or the vindication of the honour of God from what Job had ſaid, with an inviting Preface.

Verſ. 10. Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of underſtanding.

Elihu like a cunning Orator often ſtirr'd up his auditors to attention, and made frequent inſinuations to wind himſelf and what he had to ſay into their good opinion. Here he beſpake not the promiſcuous multitude or common ſort of hearers, but wiſe men, or men of underſtanding, ſuch as are moſt fit to judg the weight and ſtrength of thoſe arguments and reaſons, by which any point is proved and confirmed.

Hearken unto me, ye men of underſtanding.] The Hebrew is, ye men of heart, ſo the Margin hath it; As the heart is the principle of natural life, ſo the principles and powers of the rational life are often aſcribed to the heart. Job told his friends (*Chap.*12.3.) I have a heart (we render, I have an underſtanding) as well as you; and in good Authors a hearty man ſignifies not only a man of courage, or a man of ſpirit, but a man of knowledg and underſtanding, a man more then ordinarily wiſe, a man of the higheſt Elevation for wiſdom, is called a hearty man. Naturaliſts have aſcribed the moving of ſeveral paſſions, to ſeveral internal parts of the body; laughter (ſay they) riſeth from the Spleen, anger from the Gall, love from the Liver, but to the Heart they give more then a paſſion, underſtanding, which is the nobleſt faculty of reaſon. Here Elihu calls upon men of heart, or of underſtanding to hearken to him.

Egregiè cordatus homo. i. e. valde ſapiens. Cic. 1. Tuſcul.

Hence Note, Firſt, The beſt may need to have their attentions quickened.

Some will not hear at all, they are like the deaf adder (Pſal. 48.4.5.) that ſtoppeth her ear, which will not hearken to the voice of the charmer, charming never ſo wiſely; The Prophet reproves ſuch (*Jer.*6.10.) To whom ſhall I ſpeak and give warning, that they may hear, behold their ear is uncircumciſed and they cannot hearken; behold, the Word of the Lord is to them a reproach, they have no delight in it; they cannot hearken, that is, they will not; or they cannot hearken, that is ſpiritually and obedientially, though they have a natural, yet they have not a gracious ear, as the ſame Prophet (*Chap.*11.6,7,8.) upbraided them; yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear. This ſinful deafneſs the Lord complained of alſo, (*Pſal.*81.8.) Hear O my people, (ſaith God) and at the 11. verſe, My people would not hearken to my voice; Now as bad men will not hear at all to purpoſe; ſo the beſt ſeldom hear ſo well or to ſo good purpoſe as they ought and might. Men of heart or of underſtanding are ſometimes ſlow of hearing, and may need to have their ear awakened.

Secondly, Note, It is an incouragement in ſpeaking to have underſtanding hearers.

When a people have not only ears, but hearts to hear, then the word is heard indeed. We may ſuppoſe underſtanding men will probably prove the beſt hearers; the Prophet was in hope to find it ſo, though he failed of his hopes. (Jer. 5. 4.) Surely theſe are poor, they are fooliſh (men of low parts, and thin intellectuals) for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. I will get me to the great men and will ſpeak unto them, for they have known the way of the Lord, (they are wiſe ſurely and underſtanding) yet he was diſappointed in his recourſe to them, as it followeth in the ſame verſe, but theſe have altogether broken the yoke, and burſt the bonds. There is a natural wiſdom which hindereth the hearing of the word, therefore the Apoſtle ſaith; Not many wiſe men after the fleſh are called, that is, ſavingly called; the word hath its full effect upon few of them, they are not prevailed with to believe and obey; they are called, but they come not. Though wiſdom be an advantage to profitable hearing, yet all natural wiſe men do not hear profitably, nor indeed can any, by all the wiſdom of nature.

Thirdly note, A man without underſtanding is a heartleſs man.

Headleſs men are heartleſs men. It is ſaid (Hoſ. 7. 11.) Ephraim is like a ſilly dove without a heart. All the people of God are or ſhould be innocent doves, like doves for innocency and gracious ſimplicity; but how unbecoming is it that any of them ſhould be doves for ſillineſs or ſilly doves without a heart; that is, without any ſpirit or courage for God, and the things or ways of God. To be without a heart is to be without a due apprehenſion of the mind of God, or any true conformity thereunto; 'tis to have no knowledg either to do good, or to be good; all ſuch are ſilly doves without a heart, without underſtanding, and all ſuch are yet unfit and unprepared hearers. Hearken to me ye men of underſtanding, Far be it from God that he ſhould do wickedly.

The Septuagint turn the ſenſe of the words into another channel; as if Elihu ſpake here in his own vindication, and not in Gods; and ſo they render the Text perſonally of Elihu; Far be it from me that I ſhould do wickedly before God; or, that I ſhould pervert Juſtice before the Almighty; as if Elihu had ſaid, I am now to ſpeak before God, or in Gods preſence; God being my witneſs, therefore I had need look to it while I am ſpeaking before the righteous God, that I ſpeak righteouſly, and while I ſpeak before the God of truth, that I ſpeak according unto truth; far be it from me that I ſhould do wickedly before God; there is a truth in this tranſlation. But this is not a true tranſlation according to the Hebrew; nor is it the truth of this place. Elihu ſpeaking in ſo weighty a matter, might well ſay far be it from me to pervert juſtice ſo much as in a word, becauſe I ſpeak before God, and am in the preſence of the Almighty. We ſhould not ſpeak a word amiſs in his ſight or hearing, who ſeeth and heareth what all men do and ſay, whatſoever they are doing or ſaying, eſpecially, when they are doing or ſaying that which is of near concernment to himſelf. This rendring gives us a uſeful caution. But doubtleſs Elihu's purpoſe here was not to ſhew with what reverence of God, himſelf was about to ſpeak, but that he was about to ſpeak for the vindication of the righteouſneſs of God, which he thought Job had wronged by that aſſertion when he ſaid, (verſ. 9.) It profiteth a man nothing that he ſhould delight himſelf with God. Hereupon Elihu with ſome heat of ſpirit turns upon him in theſe words,

Abſit à me coram domino impie agere, &c. Sept.

Far be it from God that he ſhould do wickedly.] The word rendred, God forbid, is often uſed in Scripture, implying the greateſt deteſtation and utter abhorrence of that which is extreamly offenſive to us; the root of it ſignifieth any thing that is prophane, filthy, or polluted; becauſe all prophane things and perſons are far from God that is, ſuch as he utterly abhorreth. Further, the verb ſignifieth as to pollute, or to prophane, ſo to offer violence, to wound and kill unjuſtly or murtherouſly; which ſenſe complyeth fully with the buſineſs in hand. Job had complained that his innocency, at leaſt that he being innocent, was ſorely afflicted and wounded, and lay as it were weltring in his gore and blood. Hereupon Elihu ſtands up to vindicate the righteouſneſs and juſtice of God, Far be it from God, &c. When a Judg doth unrighteouſly, he offereth violence to the Law, and viciates that chaſte Virgin Juſtice, committed to his care and keeping. All acts of injuſtice are therefore far from God, even the abomination of his ſoul, becauſe polluted and filthy in themſelves, as alſo ſuch as pollute and defile all thoſe that uſe them. Thus Abraham ſpake to God (Gen. 18. 23, 25.) Wilt thou alſo deſtroy the righteous with the wicked, that be far from thee, &c. He ſpake of it with indignation as a thing moſt unworthy of God, to wrap up good and bad in the ſame common calamity. When all Joſeph's brethren as one man (Gen. 44. 17.) offered to become his priſoners, God forbid (ſaid he) that I ſhould do ſo, ye ſhall not all ſuffer for one mans fault; let that be far from me, he that is found in fault only ſhall be my priſoner. Thus Elihu would remove the remoteſt ſuſpition of unrighteouſneſs from God when he ſaith, far be it from God that he ſhould do wickedneſs.

חלל Profanum aut pollutum eſſe. A Deo procul eſt omne profanum. Affectionem indicat animi, qui ſcelus aliquid à ſe, vel ab alio deprecatur & horret. Sanct.

Hence note, We ſhould reject all unworthy thoughts of God with indignation and deteſtation.

The Apoſtle ſhewed a ſpirit full of this fire (Rom. 3. 5, 6.) Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ſpeak as a man) that is, natural or carnal men are apt to think ſo, but God forbid, or, let it not be once named by thoſe who name (that is, profeſs) the name of God. If every one who nameth the name of Chriſt muſt depart from iniquity (2 Tim. 2. 19.) woe to thoſe who ſay that Chriſt himſelf cloſeth with any iniquity. As God himſelf puts all evil far from him, ſo ſhould we put the leaſt thought of it far from God. What can be more unjuſt than to have ſo much as the ſhadow of a thought that God doth any injuſtice! away with ſuch blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, can he who is the very rule of righteouſneſs do unrighteouſly? To throw this dirt into the face of God, hath as much abſurdity and irrationality as blaſphemy in it. None but they who know not God, can have ſuch apprehenſions of him. To do wickedneſs is far from God, and therefore let man be far, even as far as the eaſt is from the weſt, from ſaying or thinking that he doth any. Far be it from God

That he ſhould do wickedneſs.] The Text is, far be it from God from wickedneſs, we render that he ſhould do wickedneſs. The word ſignifieth wickedneſs of the worſt ſort; that wickedneſs which does not only break the Law (ſo every the leaſt ſin doth) but ſlights it, and denyeth it any reverence or regard. It is far from a godly man to ſin at this rate, to do wickedneſs. Then, O how far is it from God that he ſhould do wickedneſs, רשע ſignificat quodvis peccati genus, quod contra æquitatis fit normam, omnique careat legis ratione. Bold.

And from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit iniquity.

Elihu uſeth two Titles or Names of God, Firſt, the ſtrong God, the mighty God. Secondly, Almighty, the All-ſufficient God; far be it from the All-ſufficient that he ſhould do any iniquity. He that hath all things in his power, and can command Heaven and Earth, heart and hand, he that is able to ſupply all deficiencies in the creature by his all-ſufficiency, far be it from this Almighty God that he ſhould commit iniquity towards man. Strength without goodneſs is always unprofitable, and often hurtful. Goodneſs without ſtrength is very unuſeful becauſe ſo weak. But where both ſtrength & goodneſs meet and center in the ſame perſon, as he is able to do much good, ſo he hath no will to do evil or offer injury to others. How then ſhould the All-ſufficient commit iniquity?

The word rendred iniquity ſignifies any crookedneſs or perverſneſs, and diſtortion of right and juſtice. Now right or juſtice is diſtorted many ways, chiefly theſe five.

Firſt, by a flat denyal of it. Secondly, by a tedious delaying of it. Thirdly, by puniſhing where there is no fault. Fourthly, by not rewarding where there is deſert. Fifthly, Juſtice or right is diſtorted, by giving the ſame or alike award to thoſe who are unlike, or (in their acts or deſerts, whether good or bad) not the ſame. To do any of theſe perverſe or crooked things is the doing of iniquity, or the perverting of Juſtice. All theſe Elihu removeth far from God, while he ſaith, Far be it from the Almighty that he ſhould commit iniquity. God will not, cannot commit iniquity, either by denying or delaying juſtice, either by not puniſhing or rewarding where there is cauſe, or by dealing out alike to thoſe in whoſe doing and diſpoſitions there is an utter unlikeneſs. Far be it from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit any of theſe iniquities.

Hence note, Firſt, To do any act of injuſtice is wickedneſs.

Elihu taxed Job, for complaining of God's Juſtice (verſ. 9.) And here he ſaith, Far be it from God, that he ſhould do wickedneſs. Injuſtice is wickedneſs againſt God, who commandeth us to be juſt, and it is wickedneſs againſt man, who is always wronged by injuſtice.

Secondly, As to that particular which Elihu chargeth Job with,

Note, If the Lord ſhould not reward thoſe that ſerve him, and delight in him, he were unrighteous.

(Heb. 6. 10.) God is not unrighteous to forget your labour of love; He is not unrighteous to forget it, that is, not to recompence it; by forgetting it, he doth not mean the letting of it ſlip out of his mind, but the not making a due return to it, or the not giving it a juſt reward. It is unrighteouſneſs in God not to reward thoſe who ſerve him, becauſe he hath promiſed to reward them. Say to the righteous, it ſhall be well with him (Iſa. 3. 10.) The promiſes run to it, all the Scripture over; and as it would be unrighteouſneſs in God not to reward thoſe that do well; ſo not to pardon them that have done ill when they confeſs their evil deeds, becauſe he hath promiſed to pardon them; and therefore the Scripture ſaith (1 John 1. 9.) If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins. The Scripture doth not ſay, he is merciful to forgive us our ſins, (though mercy act to the higheſt in the forgiveneſs of ſin) but he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins; and the reaſon why the Scripture ſaith ſo, is becauſe forgiveneſs of ſin (in caſe of confeſſion) is under a promiſe. To come ſhort of our promiſes, is to be unrighteous; promiſes are bonds upon the promiſer, and oblige to performance.

Thirdly, Note, The ſtrong God, the mighty God, neither doth nor can do any unrighteouſneſs or iniquity.

I ſay, he neither doth nor can do iniquity. God can do no iniquity, becauſe in him there is none. He is my rock (ſaith David, Pſal. 92. 15.) and there is no unrighteouſneſs in him. As none can do righteouſneſs, but they that are righteous, ſo he that neither is nor can be unrighteous, cannot do any unrighteouſneſs. That in the Pſalm is very conſiderable, that while he ſaith, There is no unrighteouſneſs in God, he immediately before ſaid, He is my rock; implying that God can no more be moved or removed from doing righteouſly, than a rock can be removed out of its place. We find Moſes alſo giving God the ſame attribute, when he ſpake of his indeclinableneſs in juſtice (Deut. 32. 4.) He is a rock, his work is perfect, all his ways are Judgment. The ways of God are not all judgment, as Judgment is oppoſed to mercy; ſome of his ways are mercy, and others of them are Judgment; but all his ways are judgment, as Judgment is oppoſed to injuſtice or unrighteouſneſs, that's the ſignification of Judgment, when Moſes ſaith, All his ways are Judgment; he is a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he. The Apoſtle puts this denying queſtion with much vehemency (Rom. 9. 14.) What ſhall we ſay then, is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid. And 'tis very conſiderable that the Apoſtle put this queſtion with ſo much abhorrence, preſently after he had ſpoken of that Act of God which is ſo much quarrelled at by the ſons of men, as unrighteous and unjuſt; Eſau have I hated, and Jacob have I loved, and that, when they had done neither good nor evil (verſ. 11.) What (ſay ſome) will God do thus? will he hate or love, before ever men do good or evil? yes, ſuch acts of love and hatred, of election and rejection are gone out from God. And becauſe Paul foreſaw, that men (according to their narrow apprehenſion) would be ready to ſay, ſurely God is not right in this; therefore he ſubjoyns, What ſhall we ſay then? is there unrighteouſneſs in God? As if he had ſaid, I know ſome men will be ready enough to ſay ſo, and think they have reaſon enough to ſay ſo; They all muſt needs ſay ſo, who meaſure God by their ſhallow brains, (ſuch are the deepeſt brains compared with God) and therefore Arminius, with his followers, (that they may avoid this difficulty) carry the interpretation of this Scripture to another point, as if it had nothing to do with the eternal purpoſe of God concerning man, but only reſpected his dealings with them about temporals, or his dealing out temporals to them. I urge that Text becauſe it hath occaſion'd (through mans corruption) great contending and quarrelling about the righteouſneſs of God; yea ſome have preſumed, there can be no maintaining that opinion of the abſolute decree, without faſtening unrighteouſneſs upon God. But the Apoſtle by the Spirit foreſeeing this fleſhly objection, hath forelayed and prevented it, concluding, O man, who art thou that replyeſt againſt God, ſhall the clay contend with the potter, &c.

Now, as in this act of eternal Election, ſo in all providential acts, the Lord is infinitely, unmoveably and unſpottedly juſt and righteous; he not only doth righteous things, but he cannot do any thing that is unrighteous. And this ſeeming impotency is the real power of God, and his moſt glorious perfection. For, as 'tis from the weakneſs of man that he can do iniquity, ſo 'tis from the power of God that he cannot. That God cannot lye, that he cannot do any unworthy thing, is an argument of his omnipotence. God can no more do iniquity, then he can ceaſe to be God; his righteouſneſs, his juſtice is himſelf; the Juſtice of God is the juſt God, the righteouſneſs of God, is the righteous God; he hath not only a principle of righteouſneſs in him, as man may have, and every godly man truely hath, but he is righteouſneſs. A Heathen Poet had this apprehenſion of his Idol Gods; They love not unrighteouſneſs, but honour Juſtice. But Jehovah the true, the living God, doth more than affectionately love and honour Juſtice, He is eſſentially Juſt. That man who is in a ſtate of righteouſneſs, loves to be doing and will do righteous acts; things and perſons are in their working as they are in their being; He that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, (1 John 3. 7.) God is righteous, infinitely righteous, in his being, or nature, therefore he cannot but do that which is righteous; to do an unrighteous act were to offer violence to himſelf, to deſtroy himſelf.

Θεοὶ δὲ οὐ σχέτλια ἔργα φιλοῦσι, ἀλλὰ δίκην τιμῶσι. Homer.

Again, God doth not work by a rule without him, as men do (and therefore men often go beſide the rule, and do amiſs, or act unrighteouſly, becauſe the rule is one thing, and they are another, the rule is without them) but God himſelf is the very rule of all things, and hence it followeth undeniably, that every thing is righteous and juſt which he doth, even becauſe he doth it; 'tis enough to prove that right which is done, if we can prove God hath done it. The proud Monarch Nebuchadnezzar, was at laſt brought to this confeſſion (Dan. 4. 34, 35.) At the end of the days (namely, of his ſeven years baniſhment to the beaſts) I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine underſtanding returned unto me, and I bleſſed the moſt high, &c. Who doth according to his will (there is the rule with him) in the Army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can ſtay his hand, nor ſay unto him, what doſt thou? Which is true upon a double account; Firſt, as to his ſoveraignty and dominion, he is ſupream Lord, and none can give him a check or countermand, Who may ſay unto him, what doſt thou? Secondly, with reſpect to his righteouſneſs. As he can do what he will; ſo he will do nothing, yea he can do nothing but what is right, or what he may; Who can ſay unto him, thou haſt done amiſs? Who can ſee a fault in any of his works? If God hath done a thing, there is no query to be put about it whether it be right or no? for he is righteouſneſs it ſelf.

Abraham uſeth another argument to ſhew that God can do no unrighteouſneſs (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the Judg of all the earth do right? God (ſaith he) is the Judg of all men, therefore he neither will nor can do wrong to any man. Abraham did not plead there, as if he doubted that God might do wrong, unleſs he by his interceſſion did take him off; but he brings an argument whereby he was aſſured that God would do right, yea could not but do right. He is the Judg of all the earth. So (Rom. 3. 6.) as ſoon as the Apoſtle had ſaid, Is God unrighteous that takes vengeance? I ſpeak as a man; he ſubjoyns, God forbid, how then ſhall God judg the world? God is Judg of all the world, and the univerſality of his power puts him above all poſſibility of error in the exerciſe of his power. The very reaſon why God doth not, cannot exerciſe his power beyond or beſides the limits of juſtice, is becauſe his power is altogether unlimited.

Fourthly, Elihu here ſpeaks of God under the notion of a Judg; Shall he do wickedly? ſhall he commit iniquity?

Hence note, It is an abomination for Judges to do unjuſtly.

Judges have juſtice, as it were, in their keeping, they have the charge of juſtice; is it not an abomination for the keepers or protectors of Juſtice to violate it! Elihu having thus denied unrighteouſneſs or any iniquity in God, proceeds to the proof of it. To deny had been enough in this matter, but he gives a demonſtration; as ſeveral have been held out already in proſecuting the former obſervation, ſo the following Text holds out another.

Verſ. 11. For the work of a man ſhall he render unto him, and cauſe every man to find according to his way.

As if he had ſaid, God doth every man right, therefore he is righteous, and there is no iniquity in him.

Elihu having denied any unrighteouſneſs to be in God, here ſheweth how he exerciſeth righteouſneſs.

The work of a man ſhall he render to him.] The work of a man is here put for the reward, iſſue, or fruit of his work; God doth not render every mans work to him in kind, that is, the thing it ſelf which he hath done, but the work in its reſult and reward. That which God returneth to a man according to his work, may be called a reward in a fourfold reſpect. Firſt, becauſe it hath in it the benefit of a reward to the worker. Secondly, becauſe it is given in anſwer to the work done. Thirdly, becauſe God hath given his people leave, yea a command to believe and wait for good fruit to themſelves, when they do good works. Fourthly, becauſe it is proportion'd to the work or duty performed. For as good is returned for good, ſo great good is returned for great good done. Though the greateſt good that ever was or can be done by a meer creature doth not deſerve (by any intrinſick worth) the leaſt good at the hand of God. Thus ſaith the Spirit (Rev. 14. 13.) Bleſſed are the dead that dye in the Lord, from henceforth they reſt from their labours, and their works follow them; not the works which they did, but that which is by promiſe due to them for thoſe works. The Prophet aſſureth us (Iſa. 32. 17.) The work of righteouſneſs is peace; we cannot underſtand it as a direct predication, but peace is the fruit or iſſue of the work of righteouſneſs, or as the latter part of the verſe clearly expounds it, The effect of righteouſneſs ſhall be quietneſs and aſſurance for ever. Which as it is moſt true of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, who is our peace (Epheſ. 2. 14.) and our Peace-maker through the blood of his croſs (Col. 1. 20.) So it is true of man's righteouſneſs, the work whereof is (by promiſe) crowned with the bleſſings of peace, both ſpiritual and corporal, temporal and eternal. The work of a man שלם reddere ad pacem pertinet; quæ loquutio ſignificat perfectam debiti alicujus perſolutionem. Bold.

Shall he render unto him.] The word ſignifies a full retribution, it ſignifies alſo, in the Noun, peace; becauſe when accounts are fully returned or rendred all is ſetled and quiet; when a man upon account is diſcharged, he hath a quietus eſt, that is an acquittance wherein he may be quiet; none can legally moleſt or trouble him. That which God will return to all men, they muſt and ſhall reſt in, though that which he will render to man for his evil works unrepented of, will give him no reſt.

The work of a man ſhall he render unto him.] The word is very general; he doth not ſay this, that, or 'tother work, but the work, which is as much as an univerſal, every work of a man, his good works, and his bad works, his open works, and his ſecret works, his great and leſſer works, there is not the leaſt grain of a mans works, that ſhall be unanſwered or unreturned to him; and, when the Text ſaith, the work of a man, &c. we are not to take works in an excluſive ſenſe, either firſt, as to words, as if God would render to man his works, but not his words; man's words will come to an account as well as his works; they muſt be anſwered for whether good or bad. (Matth. 12. 36, 37.) For every idle word, that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the day of judgment; for by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned; that is, it ſhall be rendred to thee according to thy words, or as thy words have been, ſo it ſhall be with thee. Nor ſecondly, are we to take the works of a man, excluſively, or in oppoſition to his thoughts; as if God would render to man what he hath acted outwardly, but not what he hath acted inwardly, or would paſs by his thoughts. We muſt give an account of our thoughts, which are the ſpring of our works as well as of our words, which are the publiſhers and proclaimers of them. God ſhall bring every work (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 12. 14.) to judgment, and every ſecret thing, the moſt ſecret whiſpers of the tongue, and the moſt ſecret plottings, contrivings, deviſings, deſignings, yea the ſimple and ſingle thinkings of the heart. Theſe are not only the moulds and principles of every work, but every one of theſe is a work, and all of them the whole work of the inner man; whoſe work, or what is wrought there, is chiefly, as well as only, under the inſpection and eye of God.

Again, The work of a man ſhall he render unto him, &c. He doth not ſay the works of another man ſhall he render to any man, but the work of a man ſhall he render to him; he that doth the work ſhall have the reward; the works of one man ſhall not be rendred to another, but every man's works ſhall. As the faith of another man ſhall not help us, if we have no faith; Abraham's faith (who had a mighty faith) will do us no good, if we have no faith of our own, ſo the good works of another man ſhall do us no good if we have none of our own. And as not the good works, ſo the evil works of others ſhall not be rendred to us. The hurtful works of others ſhall not hurt us, if we do no hurt. I grant we may partake of the evil works of others, yea, we may make other mens works our own, either by conſenting to them before they are done, or by approving them after they are done, or by not reproving them, when we have opportunity. In theſe and many other caſes, we may make other mens evil works our own; and ſo far as other mens works are our own, God ſhall render them alſo unto us: Hence that caution given by the Apoſtle to Timothy (1 Tim. 5. 22.) Lay hands ſuddainly on no man, neither be partaker of other mens ſins, keep thy ſelf pure. They that partake (in any of thoſe ways mentioned before, or in any other way) of any mans ſins may alſo quickly partake of his puniſhment. Thus John heard a voice from Heaven (Rev. 18. 4.) ſaying, come out of her (that is, out of Babylon) my people, that ye be not partakers of her ſins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. Not only is that work ours which we do, but that alſo may be ours, by participation, which others do. And by what title ſoever a work becomes any mans, the work of the man ſhall God render unto him.

And he will cauſe every man to find according to his ways.

This latter part of the verſe contains the ſame thing with the former in another cloathing of words.

In ſemitâ viri inveniet eum.

Some read the Text thus, and he will find every man in his way; let man go in what way he will, God will meet with him. That's a truth, God will meet or find a man in a good way to incourage, guide, aſſiſt and reward him. And God will meet or find a man in an evil way, to ſtop, oppoſe and puniſh him. God will find every man in his way, and man ſhall find God to him according as the way is wherein he findeth him.

We render very well, and fully to the ſenſe, he will cauſe every man to find according to his way.

Cajetanus.

I find an Interpreter over-curiouſly diſtinguiſhing between a man's work and his way, which doubtleſs here, in effect, are the ſame, yet there may be a gradual difference; work being taken for this or that particular act, and way, for a continued courſe either good or evil.

דרך via, actiones ſignificat quatenùs ad finem diriguntur; Quemadmodum via initur metæ & termini cauſa. Emphaticè via dicuntur actiones ad certum finem directa. Coc.

Again, The way of a man may be conſidered in aſſociation with his ends. Every man goeth ſuch or ſuch a way for ſome ſpecial end; no man takes a ſtep in any way without a purpoſe, nor doth any wiſe or good man take a ſtep in any way without a good purpoſe. Yet there is (finis operis) an end or iſſue of the work, as alſo (finis operantis) an end propoſed by the worker. And oftentimes that proves to be the end of a work which was not the end purpoſed by the worker. The end of a mans work or way, proves ſometimes better and ſometimes worſer than he propoſed. Poſſibly a man may not find according to that end of his way and work which he intended not, whether good or evil. But aſſuredly whatſoever good or evil end a man propoſeth to himſelf, when he enters upon his work or way, God will cauſe him to find accordingly. So that when Elihu ſaith, God will cauſe every man to find according to his way, he intimates, that God will not only render to man according to the matter of his work, or outward path of his way, but well conſidereth every mans ſcope and intendment, or what he would have his work iſſue in, and cauſeth him to find as he findeth that to be. As the end which man propoſeth to himſelf, hath a great influence upon his way, ſo upon his account with God about it. This is a good ſenſe. God will cauſe every man to find according to his way, both as his way is taken for the matter or courſe of his actions, as alſo for the ſcope and deſign of them.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Every man ſhall have according to what he hath done.

Our receivings will be according to our layings out, whether good or evil. God is ſo far from doing any man wrong, that every man ſhall have his due reward. (Pſal. 62. 12.) Alſo to thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy, for thou rendereſt to every man according to his work. And leſt any ſhould hope to eſcape the evil which at leaſt ſome of their evil works deſerve by the ſecrecy of them, that hope is quite daſhed becauſe God is the ſearcher and ſeer not only of our works but of our hearts (Prov. 24. 12.) Doth not he that pondereth the heart conſider it, and he that keepeth the ſoul, doth not he know it? (what follows?) and ſhall not he render to every man according to his works? Solomon ſpeaks in that place of ſuch as make excuſes to ſhift themſelves off from acts of charity; they will ſay, we know not whether it be ſo with him or no; poſſibly he may not be in ſuch want as he pretendeth. Take heed of theſe cloaks of covetouſneſs, and pitiful pleas to ſave your purſes from ſhewing pity to the poor, for (ſaith Solomon) Will not God ſearch it out, and render to every man according to his work? The holy Scripture abounds in this point. Read Jer. 32. 19. Ezek. 33. 10. Rom. 2. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Rev. 22. 12.

But ſome may ſay, how doth God render to every man his work? Is it not ſaid He juſtifieth the ungodly (Rom. 4. 5.) Are the works of an ungodly man rendred to him, when he is juſtified?

I anſwer, it is one thing what God will do through free grace, and another what he will deal out in ſtrictneſs of Juſtice. The Apoſtle ſpeaks in that place of the free grace of God to ſinners, not of his Juſtice againſt ſinners. Secondly, though God juſtifieth the ungodly, yet he never juſtifieth ungodlineſs; or, though he juſtifieth a man who hath done many evil works, yea all whoſe works are evil, yet he never juſtifieth nor rewardeth the work of an evil man. Thirdly, God acts according to juſtice and righteouſneſs where he juſtifieth the ungodly; he doth not ſhew favour to the ungodly in his own wrong. Acts of grace from God are not oppoſite to his Juſtice, much leſs do they contradict or overthrow it. He doth not juſtifie an ungodly man in himſelf, or meerly conſidered in his ungodlineſs, but he juſtifieth him in the righteouſneſs of another, even of Jeſus Chriſt, who hath given full ſatisfaction to the Juſtice of God with reſpect to the ungodly whom he juſtifieth. Laſtly, we may ſay, that God renders the work of an ungodly man to him when he juſtifieth him; for though then he hath not done, nor ever can do any works which deſerve the juſtification of his perſon; yet God doth render to him, according to that preſent work of faith in cloſing with the promiſe and the work of Chriſt's righteouſneſs therein tendred to him, and applyed by him for his juſtification.

Further, that other Scripture ſeems to lye in the way of this obſervation (Pſal. 103. 10.) He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, or rewarded us according to our iniquities. How then doth God render every man his work?

I anſwer as before; Acts of mercy do not croſs acts of juſtice. When the Lord doth not deal with any man according to his ſins, it is becauſe he hath freely pardoned his ſins; and he doth not reward a man according to his iniquity, becauſe his iniquities are done away; thus he deals with all his own people, who are received to favour through Jeſus Chriſt; but no wicked man, no impenitent perſon in the world, ſhall have cauſe to ſay, that God hath not dealt with him according to his ſin, or hath not rewarded him according to his iniquity. There may be ſome preſent ſtops of Juſtice, through the patience of God to wicked men; their works are not always preſently rendered into their boſomes, but they ſhall. God will render to every man according to his work, one way or other, one time or other; The full rendering to all men according to their works will be at the great day; in this world the godly do not ſometimes receive according to their good works, nor do the wicked according to their evil works; Good men are often rewarded with ſhame and reproach, with want and poverty, with baniſhment and impriſonment, with tortures and with death in this preſent world; but the Lord will have a time to render to them according to their works, though at no time for their works; ſo look upon wicked men, and their works, they go often unpuniſhed at the preſent, yea many of them proſper greatly (as I have had occaſion to ſhew more than once in opening this Book) they have their good things, many good things in this life, but the time will come when God will render to the wicked their work, and they ſhall be forced to ſay, that he hath cauſed them to find according to their ways. Take two or three inferences from this general truth.

If God will render the work of a man to him; Then

Firſt, Godly men have great incouragement to do good, yea to abound in doing good works. That's the Apoſtles argument (1 Cor. 15. 58.) Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable in the work of the Lord, foraſmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord; that is, the Lord will render to every man his labour. Hence alſo that of Solomon (Eccl. 11. 1.) Caſt thy bread upon the waters, for thou ſhalt find it after many days. Charities done in faith as an holy offering to God, produce a ſure increaſe. To give with a right heart to the poor, is the beſt way of growing rich. For God will render to man according to that work. And as it may incourage to do good, ſo do it againſt all diſcouragements. We muſt not only do good when the Sun ſhines, when it is fair weather with us, and all men applaud us; but though men frown and ſcorn, though (which Solomon reports as one of the great vanities of this world, Eccl. 4. 4.) For a right work, a man may be envied of his neighbour; let us not hold our hand from doing good, though we are oppoſed and checkt, though we are traduced and ſlandred, though we are miſ-interpreted and have the fouleſt gloſſes put upon our faireſt works, though men call our zeal madneſs and our circumſpect walking hypocriſie, yea though we are perſecuted and ſuffer the worſt of evils, though men caſt ſtones at us (as they did at Chriſt for his good works) yet let us not be deterred from doing good. For howſoever men deal with us, or what rendrings ſoever we find from the world, yet God will render to us both according to the rightneſs of our work done, and according to the uprightneſs of our hearts in doing it. Let this provoke us not only to do the Lords work, but to do it with much patience, and perſeverance, for in due time we ſhall reap if we faint not; where there hath been ſowing, there will be reaping; and where the ſeed time hath been with tears, the harveſt or reaping time ſhall be with joy.

Secondly, This is a dreadful doctrine to evil workers; Some (as the Apoſtle calls the Cretians, out of their own Poet) are evil beaſts, ſlow bellies; and as they are ſlothful, or ſlow bellies at doing good; ſo they are very free and forward, very quick, lively, and nimble beaſts in doing evil. O how ſhould evil workers tremble at this Scripture, To every man will God render according to his work; as a cup of cold water given to a diſciple, in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not be loſt, but have a reward, and the giver fully paid for it; (Matth. 10. 42.) ſo not any the leaſt evil work, impenitently continued in, ſhall be unpuniſhed.

Further, God will not render to man according to the opinion he hath of himſelf. (A bad man and the worſt of his works may be good in his own conceit; He may flatter himſelf in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found to be hateful, Pſal. 36. 2.) But God will render unto man according to what his works are in truth.

Secondly, God will not render to man according to the thoughts which others have of him and of his work (ſome are high in the opinion not only of the world, but of ſome good men, they have a name to be alive while they are dead, and their works dead works) but God will render to man according to that clear, certain, and infallible knowledg, which himſelf (by whom actions are weighed, 1 Sam. 2. 3.) hath of them.

Thirdly, God will not render to man according to his good meanings, when his works are evil; many will confeſs they have done amiſs, but they had good intendments in it. A right end will not excuſe us, if our way be wrong; There is no pleading of meanings againſt commandments; nor will ſincerity of intentions, cover the deformity and irregularity of actions. The Apoſtle pronounceth a fearful doom againſt thoſe who ſaid (Rom. 3. 8.) Let us do evil that good may come, whoſe damnation is juſt.

Fourthly, As God will not render according to a mans good ends, if his work be evil; ſo remember, God will not render to man according to his good works, if his ends are bad. Therefore, conſider your end when you enter your way, and begin your work. (Prov. 21. 27.) The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; how much more when he bringeth it with an evil mind; that is, when he hath ſome bad end in doing it; A wicked mans ſacrifice is an abomination to the Lord at the beſt, but much more when he hath baſe deſigns in his ſacrifices or holy ſervices. Herod ſaid to the wiſe men (Matth. 3. 8.) Go and ſearch diligently for the young child, and when ye have found him bring me word again, that I may come and worſhip him alſo: It was a good work to enquire after Chriſt, and worſhip him, but his end was to deſtroy him. Jezebel pretended a holy faſt, but her end was to feaſt her ſelf with revenge upon innocent Naboth. The beſt works of hypocrites will have an ill return, becauſe they do them with an evil mind. There are three ſorts of good works, which will never turn to a good account.

Firſt, Thoſe good works which are done but for a ſeaſon; temporary good works, or the good works of temporary profeſſors, ſuch as are deſcribed (Matth. 13. 5. 7.) by the ſecond and third grounds, who bring forth for a while, but afterwards fall away; ſuch good works (I ſay) ſhall not have a good reward. If your goodneſs be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it paſſeth away, it will do you no good. He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved, and none but he (Matth. 10. 22.) Chriſt exhorts the Church (Rev. 3. 11.) Hold that faſt which thou haſt, that no man take thy crown. They loſe the good works they have done, who hold not out in doing them. It will not advantage us to begin in the Spirit, if we end in the fleſh.

Secondly, Thoſe good works which are truſted to, or boaſted of, will never make a good return. Though a man ſhould continue doing good all the days of his life, yet if he buildeth his hope upon it, his hope ſhall be cut off, and his truſt (that is, what he truſteth to) ſhall be a ſpiders web (that is, weak like that, becauſe like that, woven out of his own bowels) he ſhall lean upon his houſe, but it ſhall not ſtand, he ſhall hold it faſt, but it ſhall not endure (Job 8. 14, 15.) you and your works will periſh together, if you depend upon your works. Good works truſted to, are as dangerous to the ſoul, as evil works perſevered in.

Thirdly, Thoſe good works which are done for baſe ends, to ſerve men, or to compaſs a worldly intereſt, ſhall have no reward from God, but that, which ſhall be upon every ſoul that ſinneth and repenteth not, anguiſh and tribulation.

VERS. 12, 13.

Yea, ſurely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment.

Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath diſpoſed the whole world?

ELihu proceedeth in the proof of this point, (the vindication of the righteouſneſs of God) with a ſtrong aſſeveration;

Verſ. 12. Yea, ſurely,

או אמנם Ingens eſt in originali aſſertionis vis.

There is a mighty force of affirmation, in the original words, we may parallel them, with thoſe aſſertive ſpeeches frequently uſed by our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel, Amen, Amen, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you; Yea ſurely, is as much as verily, verily; as if Elihu had ſaid, There is no queſtion to be made of what I affirm, that God is righteous, or will not do wickedly; as the Apoſtle writ to Timothy about the great myſtery of the Goſpel, God manifeſted in the fleſh, (1 Tim. 3. 16.) without controverſie great (or, as the word imports, confeſſedly on all hands, great) is the myſtery of Godlineſs; ſo here Elihu might ſpeak to Job, This is a truth beyond diſpute or controverſie, an unqueſtionable truth, and ſuch a truth that, if once confeſſed, will quickly determine all the Queſtions, which are depending between you and me. There are ſome Maſter-truths, ruling truths; ſuch a one is this in the Text, Yea ſurely, or undoubtedly, God will not do wickedly.

> Hence note, It becomes us to grow up into higheſt confidences, about the truths of God, eſpecially about the truth and Juſtice of God.

We ſhould not be as Meteors hanging in the air, ſpeaking with heſitation, poſſibly it is ſo, peradventure it is true; but (as the Apoſtle directs the Coloſſians, Chap. 2. 3.) We muſt labour to grow up unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding; as there is a full aſſurance of faith in believing, and of hope in waiting or expecting, ſo alſo of underſtanding in apprehending the things of God. We ſhould be (in a ſenſe) Maſters of truth; and then we are ſo indeed, when truth hath fully maſtered us, and prevailed upon both our judgment and affections, and we are led captive by light to the love and obedience of it. We have cauſe to bewail thoſe (much more have they cauſe to bewail themſelves) who are but Scepticks or Queſtioniſts in Religion, never coming to a point, nor able (after a due making up of their thoughts) to ſay, Thus it is, and by this we will abide, as Elihu did in the then preſent caſe, delivering himſelf confidently, yea ſurely, or verily, verily,

God will not do wickedly?] To clear the meaning in this Negative aſſertion, we muſt take in the higheſt affirmatives of the holineſs and Juſtice, of the righteouſneſs, truth, and faithfulneſs of God; For it ſounds like a flat and low commendation of God, to ſay, he will not do wickedly; for ſo it may be ſaid of every honeſt man. He will not do wickedly; but ſeeing in this Negative commendation given by man to God (as in all the Negative commandments given by God to man) all affirmatives are to be underſtood; what can be ſaid more to or more ſound out his praiſe and glory than this?

הרשיע Eſt aliquando impium pronunciare, condemnare; aliquando verò impiè agere vel iniquè quippiam facere. Merc.

God will not do wickedly?] The word here uſed for doing wickedly, ſignifies two things; Firſt, to pronounce any perſon wicked; and Secondly, to do any thing which is wicked; both theſe often meet together. For in many caſes to pronounce a perſon wicked, is to do a wicked thing; he that condemneth a juſt perſon pronounceth him wicked, and what thing can be done more wickedly than that? Some take the word in that ſenſe here, as a denial that God either hath done, or ever will condemn the innocent. There are two things wherein men do very wickedly, with reſpect to the perſons of men, both which the Lord abhors. Firſt, when they condemn the innocent. Secondly, when they acquit or clear the guilty. The former way of doing wickedly, is chiefly removed from God here by Elihu, as the latter is directly and expreſly by himſelf (Exod. 34. 7.) The Lord, the Lord, &c. that will by no means clear the guilty. To pronounce a guilty perſon innocent, or an innocent perſon guilty, if ignorantly done, is a great piece of weakneſs, and if knowingly done, is a great piece of wickedneſs. Yet, becauſe the latter part of the verſe ſpeaks particularly to clear God from wrong Judgment, therefore, I conceive, we may better expound this former part of it more largely, as a general denial of any evil act whatſoever, done by God. Surely God will not do wickedly,

Neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment.

The Almighty, who hath power to do what he will, hath no will to do this evil. He will not pervert Judgment. The word ſignifies both to pervert and ſubvert, as alſo to bow, wreſt, or put out of order, to mingle or blend thoſe things together, which ſhould be for ever ſeparated, or, as we ſay, to mingle heaven and earth, yea heaven and hell together; ſo do they who mingle good and ill, right and wrong together. To pervert Judgment, is, to do all this, for then (which Abraham aſſured himſelf was far from God, Gen. 18. 25.) The righteous are as the wicked, that is, the righteous fare as ill as the wicked, or the wicked fare as well as the righteous. But the Almighty will not pervert Judgment, that is, the right which belongs to any man, and therefore, he will do every man right. We had the ſame poſition in terms (Chap. 8.3.) and we have had this whole verſe equivalently in the 10. of this Chapter, where Elihu ſaid, Far be it from God, that he ſhould do wickedneſs, and from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit iniquity. Here, only one verſe intervening, Elihu reports and repeats the ſame matter again; but it is no needleſs or vain repetition, for which Chriſt reproved the prayer of the Heathens (Matth. 6.7.) there are many repetitions in Scripture, but not one vain one; how often ſoever the ſame truth is repeated there, it hath its weight and uſe, not only as it is ſtill a truth, but as it is a truth repeated. And therefore I ſhall give a threefold reaſon why this truth is here again repeated, which will alſo lead us to a fuller improvement of it.

Firſt, Becauſe this truth is (as it were) the hinge upon which the whole controverſie between Job and Elihu is turned. Job was unſatisfied becauſe he was ſo ill handled, and therefore Elihu tells him often that God is righteous, and that he will not wrong any man. Hereby giving Job to underſtand, that God had done him nothing, or done nothing to him, but right. Such grand ſwaying, controlling truths ſhould be often, and can ſcarce be too often repeated.

Secondly, Elihu repeated this again, becauſe 'tis ſuch a truth, as no man can too much, no nor enough weigh and conſider the value and worth of it. Now, that which cannot be too often nor too much thought of, cannot (if rules of prudence be obſerved) be too much or too often ſpoken of. There is ſcarce any man who hath not ſometimes at leaſt indirectly and obliquely ſome hard thoughts of the proceedings of God, either in reference to himſelf or to others; Nor is there any thing that we have more temptations about, than that, ſurely, we are not in all things rightly dealt with, and that the diſpenſations of God are not ſo even, as they might. Theſe ſinful ſuſpitions are daily moving and fluctuating in the heart of man, and therefore this oppoſite principle ought to be faſtened and fixed there to the utmoſt, that the will and works of God are all juſt and righteous, yea that his will is the rule of all righteous workings; or, that as whatſoever is done in this world, is done by the diſpoſure of God, ſo God (though the thing be evil and unjuſt) is juſt and good in the diſpoſure of it. Therefore unleſs we reſiſt or contradict the will of God, we muſt ſay, whatſoever comes to paſs, comes righteouſly to paſs, becauſe it comes to paſs by the determinate will and counſel of God.

Thirdly, Elihu repeats this aſſertion, that he might the more commodiouſly make his tranſition or paſſage to the matter following, and proſecute it with greater ſucceſs. And therefore I ſhall not ſtay longer upon thoſe words, only,

Note, Firſt, This great truth, that God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment,

Convinceth thoſe, not only of injudiciouſneſs, but of wickedneſs, who, though they are ready to acknowledg in general, God is juſt, yet as to thoſe particular providences, which concern them, or wherewith themſelves are pincht, do not, cannot acquieſce and reſt in the will of God, with freedom and ſatisfaction. That which is juſt ſhould not diſpleaſe us, though (in it ſelf) it be very bitter and unpleaſant to us.

Secondly, This truth is a ground of comfort to all the people of God, who are under heavy preſſures from this evil world, or who receive little reward or incouragement (as to ſenſe) from the good hand of God. Such are apt to ſay with the kingly Prophet (Pſal. 73. 13, 14.) Verily in vain have we cleanſed our heart, and waſhed our hands in innocency, for all the day long have we been plagued, and chaſtened every morning. David was under a temptation when he was under hatches, he could hardly perceive it worth the while to take pains in cleanſing and waſhing either heart or hand, while God was ſo conſtant and frequent in correcting and chaſtening him with ſo heavy a hand. Yet David ſoon after recovered out of this temptation, and concluded the Pſalm, with this particular aſſurance, (verſ. 28.) It is good for me to draw neer to God, as he had begun it (verſ. 1.) with a general aſſurance, Truely God is good to Iſrael, even to ſuch as are of a clean heart. God is good to thoſe who have a clean heart, even when they are in the greateſt ſufferance of evil, and therefore they who are clean hearted, have no reaſon at any time to ſay, nor ſhall they long ſay, they have cleanſed their heart in vain. Though now they ſmart, yet in due ſeaſon they ſhall be well rewarded for their waſhing. The Judgments of God are ſuch, as no man can fully comprehend, ſuch as no man can juſtly reprehend. The Almighty will not pervert Judgment.

Judicia dei plenè nemo comprehendit, juſtè nemo reprehendit. Auguſt. lib. 2. de Civ. Dei cap. 23.

Thoſe four things which cauſe men to pervert Judgment, are at the furtheſt diſtance or remove from God; whereof the firſt is envy at the good condition of others. The ſecond is groundleſs and unreaſonable love or hatred of their perſons. The third is fear of frowns from thoſe that are great, or fear of after-claps; Many are deterr'd from giving but a juſt meaſure, either of reward to good men, or puniſhment to evil men, leſt themſelves ſhould receive hard meaſure from thoſe who like neither. The fourth is hope of gain, or their private advantage. For as ſome pervert Judgment for bribes already received, ſo others for bribes promiſed, or upon expectation of ſome future favours. Now God (I ſay) is infinitely above theſe four, and all other imaginable by-reſpects, upon which Judgment is perverted every day, by the ſons of men. God is above all envy, yea above all that hatred or love which perverts Judgment; he is above all fear of evil, and hope of good. God hath nothing to fear, ſeeing none can reach him, much leſs hurt him; neither hath he any thing at all to hope for, ſeeing he is in the full poſſeſſion of all happineſs and bleſſedneſs, that is, of himſelf. Why then, or upon what account ſhould the Almighty pervert Judgment? ſo that, if at any time, we have any unbecoming thoughts of the Juſtice of God, either that he afflicts the good without reaſon, or proſpers the wicked againſt it; all this ariſeth from our ignorance, or the ſhortneſs of our ſight. We have not a full or perfect proſpect of things, we ſee but a little way backward, we are not wiſe to compare what's paſt with what's preſent, nor can we at all infallibly foreſee any thing future, or diſcern what ſhall be. Whereas God at once hath all things before him, he ſeeth what is paſt as well as what is preſent, and what ſhall be hereafter, as well as what hath been, and ſo the compleatneſs and indefectibility of his own Juſtice in all. And when we in the great day ſhall ſee all the works of God in the world brought and preſented together as in one view, we ſhall then ſay from the evidence of ſight, as now we ought from the evidence of faith, that the Almighty hath not in any one thing perverted Judgment. And therefore the Apoſtle doth moſt excellently and appoſitely call that day, The day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God (Rom. 2. 5.)

Elihu having ſtrongly aſſerted, with a yea ſurely, that, the Almighty will not pervert Judgment, yet ſtayeth not in a bare (though ſo ſtrong an) aſſertion, (which he might) but gives us the proof and confirmation of it; as he hath denied that God will, ſo he proveth by undeniable arguments, that God will not do wickedly, that the Almighty will not pervert Judgment. And this he doth in the next or 13. verſe, and the two that follow.

Verſ. 13. Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath diſpoſed the whole world?

Theſe words, (as was intimated before) are an argument proving that God neither hath nor can do wrong; That (as to the caſe in hand) he had not done Job wrong, yea, that, (as to all caſes) he can wrong no man. This argument is grounded upon the ſoveraignty, ſupremacy, or abſolute authority of God over all men. The ſum and force of it may be gathered up into this form.

He cannot do injuſtice to any, who of right hath an abſolute power ariſing from and reſiding in himſelf to do what he will with or towards all men.

But God hath ſuch a power, Therefore he cannot do any injuſtice. That, God hath ſuch an abſolute power ariſing from and reſiding in himſelf Elihu proves by a kind of Challenge.

Who hath given him a Charge over the earth?] Produce the man, let him ſhew his face, if he dareth. It is an expreſſion of the ſame importance with that of the Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 33.) Who ſhall lay any thing to the Charge of Gods Elect? let us ſee the man, let us ſee the devil, that ſhall ſo lay any thing to the Charge of God's Elect, as to prevail in his Charge; 'tis alſo like that other triumphant query, in the ſame Chapter (verſ. 31.) If God be with us, who can be againſt us? That is, who can be ſo againſt us as to hurt us, or carry the day againſt us? Thus here; Who hath given him a Charge over the world? let us ſee who; As if he had ſaid, Are there any above God, from whom he deriveth his power? Or have any committed the Government of the earth to him as his truſt and charge, for the mannagement whereof he is to be accountable unto them? Surely no. And if no, then either God is juſt, or all the world muſt be in confuſion or under oppreſſion without any redreſs or remedy. Mr. Broughton renders, Who before him looked to the earth? We ſay, Who hath given him a Charge over the earth? The ordinary ſignification of the word, is to viſit, and that פקד על ſequente ſumitur pro Jubere juxta morem Syriacū hinc פקידים præfecti. Merc.

Firſt, In a way of favour, to ſee what others want (ſo we viſit the poor) or how they do, ſo we uſually viſit the ſick, and ſometimes thoſe that are well in health.

Secondly, It ſignifieth to viſit in a way of judgment, or to puniſh thoſe that have done amiſs. Thus the Lord threatens to viſit (that is, to puniſh) the iniquity of the fathers upon the children (Exod. 20. 5.)

Thirdly, The word ſignifieth to command, to iſſue out orders, to give a charge. This ſignification of the word is very frequent both in Scripture, and in daily uſe. Viſiters (we know) have power of Government; yea they have power over Governours to order and give them a charge, that they do, or to examine whether they have done the duty of their place. In this latter ſenſe, we render it here, Who hath given him a Charge over the earth? And ſo we read it (2 Chron. 36. 23.) Thus ſaith Cyrus King of Perſia, all the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord God of heaven given me. And he hath charged me to build him a houſe in Jeruſalem, which is in Judah; who is there among you of all his people, The Lord his God be with him, and let him go up. God hath charged me (ſaith Cyrus) or he hath made that my buſineſs, a buſineſs incumbent upon me, to build him a houſe in Jeruſalem, that is, to further the work, to give the Jews leave to build the Temple of Jeruſalem; God hath charged me with this great truſt, and I am willing to anſwer it. The ſame thing is recorded, almoſt in the ſame words (Ezra. 1. 2.) Thus ſaith Cyrus King of Perſia, the Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and he hath charged me to build him a houſe at Jeruſalem, which is in Judah. God giveth Princes their Charge, ſupream ſoveraign Princes, yea he giveth inferiour Princes and Magiſtrates, their Charge; but (ſaith Elihu) Who hath given him a Charge? Certainly, no man. There is yet a twofold reading of this former part of the verſe, both conſiderable.

Firſt, Thus; Who for him hath viſited the earth? As if it had been ſaid, Hath God ſet any to viſit, or to look to the earth for him, as if himſelf ſtood by and did nothing; God uſeth the power of man, he ſets up Magiſtrates to work for him; but he never puts the work out of his own hand, nor doth he need any hand to help him in that work, though he uſeth many: and though he ſaith, By me (yea for me) Kings reign, yet we may ſay with Elihu (in the notion now expreſt) Who for him hath viſited the earth? that's a good reading.

Secondly, Who over him doth viſit the earth? Is God any mans Vicegerent? is he a Lord Deputy, or a Viceroy? No, there is no man viſits the earth over him, for, (as we render clearly) Who hath given him a Charge over the earth? As if he had ſaid, If God be an unjuſt Judg, is there any ſuperiour Judg to whom we may appeal for remedy or redreſs of our injuries? Who over him viſiteth, or, who hath given him a charge over

The earth.] That is, over the inhabitants of the earth, or over the affairs of the earth. The Earth, by a Synecdoche of the continent for the matter contained, is here put for all perſons and tranſactions over the face of the whole earth. Who hath laid that great Charge, the diſpoſal of all things and people in the earth upon God? ſurely no man on earth, no Angel in heaven, nor all of them put together. How ſhould God derive a governing power from them, who derive their very power of being from him? He governs in his own right, not by commiſſion or deputation. We have the ſame point affirmed at the 36. Chapter of this Book, (verſ. 23.) Who hath enjoyned him his way? God knoweth and taketh his own way, no man ſheweth, much leſs commandeth him his way; Who hath given him a Charge over the earth?

Or who hath diſpoſed the whole world?] This Queſtion, as the former, contains a Negation; no Creature, none beſides God hath diſpoſed of the whole world, or of all of the world. Mr. Broughron renders, Who hath ſetled all the dwelt land? The word which we tranſlate diſpoſed, ſignifies to place with a kind of art, exactly, orderly, carefully; Who hath thus diſpoſed the whole world? There is a double diſpoſition of the world.

Firſt, In Creation; who hath diſpoſed, joynted, and put the whole world in frame? who hath marſhal'd the ſeveral parts of the world as they now ſtand like the Hoſt of God? The world as created is expreſſed in the Greek by beauty and order; before God perfected the creation, all was a confuſed heap without form and void: But that rude indigeſted matter was drawn forth in the ſeveral works of that ſix-days Creation, into a moſt beautiful form and order. Thus God once diſpoſed all the world by Creation.

Secondly, God daily diſpoſeth the world by providence; And that's the diſpoſure which this Text eſpecially ſpeaks of; Who hath diſpoſed (in a providential way) the whole world? The word rendred world properly ſignifies, the habitable world; we find it oppoſed to the wilderneſs or deſert (Iſa. 14. 17.) where few or none inhabit. The word is very ſignificantly uſed here for the world, becauſe the habitable part of the world, or where men inhabit, are the ſtages on which the providences of God appear, and act moſt eminently and convincingly; Who hath diſpoſed of the habitable world? which the Greeks call, The houſe of abiding: Mr. Broughton, The dwelt land, that is, the land wherein men dwell.

תבל orbis habitabilis, οἰκουμένην vocant. i. e. homines degentes in orbe habitabili. Piſc.

Again, As the earth, before, is put for the inhabitants and occurrences of the earth; ſo whatſoever paſſeth, or is brought to paſs in the world, is here called the world. Who hath diſpoſed the whole world? He that made the whole world, diſpoſeth of the whole world, providence followeth Creation.

But ſome may ſay, Is this a good Argument to prove that God is juſt, becauſe he hath the ſupream power over all the world? Will it follow, that he adminiſtreth all things rightly, becauſe he hath a right to adminiſter all things? There ſeems but little of Argument in this, (may ſome ſay) many have a great deal of power who abuſe it, and they that have moſt power, uſually abuſe it moſt, and make it but a ſervant to their luſts and paſſions; therefore how is it a proof, that the Lord is righteous and will do no iniquity, becauſe he hath the power of all things in his hand, or is Lord over all?

I anſwer, This is a ſtrong argument, and (as I remember a good Author calls it) a peremptory argument, which can have no denial. The Lord is righteous, becauſe he is Lord over all; he is not King of ſome corner of the World, he is not King of the whole World by election or vote of the World, he is not choſen at all, much leſs (as many have been) by evil means and wicked combinations; God is the ſupream governour of all the world by natural right not choice, yet not (as ſome Princes are) by natural right of ſucceſſion inheriting after a mortal father; but by the natural right of creation, himſelf being the father of that world over which he is a governour. The Original of God's power is ſtated in himſelf; The eternal being of God, and his ſupream authority are inſeparable.

Yea, God is not only thus ſupream in adminiſtring Juſtice; but he is the ſum or fulneſs of Law and Juſtice, and therefore cannot pervert it. He whoſe power and goodneſs gave the world its being, how ſhould he act any thing which is not good in the exerciſe of his power over the World! Injuſtice is the breach of a Law, but how can God break a Law who is the ſource and fountain of all righteous Laws? who then ſhall dare to ſuſpect God of injuſtice, or require a reaſon why he doth this or that in the world, which himſelf hath made? yea, who hath not reaſon to admire and proclaim infinite goodneſs mixt with abſolute power, as in his making ſo in his ruling the world? For whoſe ſake or for fear of whom ſhould he pervert Juſtice, who hath all men alike under his power?

Earthly Judges may erre in judgment, but the Judg of all the earth cannot. God cannot do injuſtice through ignorance or miſtake; for he is omniſcient and knoweth all things; nor can he have a will to do unjuſtly, ſeeing his will is altogether juſt, and the rule or meaſure of all things that are juſt. As therefore he is not an idle Idol-god but moſt active in governing the World; ſo he is infinitely above the leaſt failure in the government of it. The ſun ſhall ſooner be turned into a cloud, and the morning light darken the earth, than any unrighteouſneſs proceed from God; yea, when clouds and darkneſs are round about him (that is, when we by reaſon either of the obſcureneſs or afflictiveneſs of his diſpenſations can give no account of them, yet even then) righteouſneſs and judgment are the habitation of his Throne; that is, his governing power abides unmoveably, or conſtantly (as in a habitation) within that bleſſed line and glorious ſphere of righteouſneſs. So then, the reaſoning of Elihu from the univerſality and independency of the governing power of God, to the righteouſneſs and equity of his government is not only probable, but demonſtrative and unanſwerable. He is alike mighty as the ſole creator, and juſt as the ſupream moderator of the World. If any man will preſume to charge God with perverting judgment in governing the earth, that man ſaith in effect that he hath given God a charge over the earth; And if any man be ſo impiouſly and impudently preſumptuous as to ſay that, let him come forth and anſwer this as peremptorily as truly denying queſtion of Elihu; Who hath given him a charge over the earth?

Ipſe quam potens eſt conditor tam pius eſt moderator. Hieron.

Hence Obſerve, The power of God is a primitive or underived power.

His power is of himſelf; yea, his power is himſelf; God doth not rule by Commiſſion or Deputation, all ruling power is fundamentally in him, as alſo the rule of that power, both which in God are one. Jeſus Chriſt as Mediator rules by Commiſſion; All things (ſaith he, Math. 11. 27.) are delivered to me of my Father. And again, the Baptiſt gave this teſtimony of him (John 3. 35.) The father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand. Jeſus Chriſt as Mediator receives his Charge from the Father, and he hath received a Charge over the whole earth, as Mediator. But conſider him as God, ſo the government of the world is fundamentally and eſſentially in him alſo. It is the higheſt honour of an earthly Prince, when (as it is ſaid of the Chaldeans, Hab. 1. 7.) their Judgment and their dignity proceedeth of themſelves; that is, when they rule in their own right, not in the right or by the deſignment of any other. How high then is the honour of God, who ruleth not only over all the people, but over all the Princes of the earth, his Judgment and dignity proceeding purely from himſelf!

Secondly, As the power of God is underived or proceeds only from himſelf; ſo the power of God is abſolute and unlimited. His is in the ſtricteſt ſenſe imaginable ſupream power. Heatheniſh Nebuchadnezzar confeſſed this truth (Dan. 4. 35.) Before him (that is, before God) all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing, and he doth according to his will in the Armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can ſtay his hand, and ſay to him what doſt thou? There's abſolute power, none can ſay, that is, none may preſume to ſay to him, What doeſt thou? no man ought to queſtion, much leſs to quarrel at the determinations of God, whether concerning perſons or nations; 'tis his right or prerogative to do what he will; and how much ſoever he acts by prerogative, he will do only that which is right; we may conſider the abſolute ſupremacy of God in a fivefold exerciſe of power.

Firſt, In commanding; He commandeth what he pleaſeth to be done; nor may his commands be diſputed; they muſt be obeyed, becauſe his.

Secondly, In prohibiting; He forbiddeth whatſoever diſpleaſeth him to be done. And how pleaſing, how right ſoever any thing is in our eyes, yet if he forbiddeth it, we muſt for ever forbear it. We all know by our own ſmart how dangerous it is to eat of a forbidden Tree.

Thirdly, In ſuffering, I mean it not of any ſuffering evil in himſelf (God is infinitely above that) but of his ſuffering others to do evil, or of his ſuffering any evil to be done. God may and doth permit, that which is naught, wicked, and unrighteous to be done in the world; and yet himſelf remains altogether holy, righteous, juſt, and good. This is a great part of the tranſcendency of his power.

Fourthly, In rewarding; God hath abſolute power, to reward; Firſt, whom he will; Secondly, for what he will, Thirdly, in what kind he will; Fourthly, in what degree or meaſure he will; Fifthly, for how long he will, he can give (which none of the Princes of the earth can) everlaſting rewards.

Fifthly, In puniſhing; God hath abſolute power to puniſh, and the abſoluteneſs of his power in puniſhing, may be exemplified in thoſe five particulars, wherein his power of rewarding (in the former Paragraph) was. In all theſe things we ſee the unlimitedneſs of the power of God, Who hath given him a Charge over the earth? or who hath diſpoſed the whole world? Himſelf alone doth it, and he doth it of himſelf. And for as much as there is ſuch a ſupremacy, ſuch an abſoluteneſs of power in God, take theſe three inferences from it.

Firſt, How freely ſhould we yield our ſelves to the commands of God, not queſtioning this as unequal, nor ſaying that is hard? we are more apt to find fault with the work which God requires us to do, than to remember that it is a great fault not to do it. The heart of man naturally riſeth againſt the will of God; It is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be (Rom. 8, 7.) the wiſdom of the fleſh thinks there is ſome unrighteouſneſs, at leaſt ſome unreaſonableneſs or rigour in the commands of God, and therefore ſuch wiſe men hope they have reaſon on their ſide if they omit them or act againſt them. Any man will (at leaſt he cannot but confeſs he ought, to) be ſubject unto that which is equal and right. Man hath no colour to diſobey, till he hath put ſome blot upon the command. And ſeeing the commands of him who hath the charge over all the earth in himſelf, and from himſelf, cannot poſſibly have any blot or defect in them, let us take heed we be not found diſobeying.

Secondly, Seeing God hath the Charge of all the earth, we ſhould as readily ſubmit to his diſpenſations, works and dealings, as to his commands. The Jews of old complained (Ezek. 18. 29.) The way of the Lord is not equal; They did even tell him to his face, his ways were not equal, and therefore they would not ſubmit. The Church in captivity ſpake well (Lam. 3. 28.) Out of the mouth of the moſt high proceedeth not evil and good; that is, whatſoever the Lord hath pronounced to do or hath done concerning us, is morally good and not evil, though it be penally evil and not good. Eli ſpake well alſo to this point (1 Sam. 3. 18.) It is the Lord, let him do what ſeems good in his own eyes; yet the thing which God was about to do, was ſuch (verſ. 11.) as at which, both the ears of every one that heard it ſhould tingle. To have the heart quiet while the ears tingle, is pure ſubmiſſion. And any unquietneſs or murmurings at the dealings of God, whether reſpecting our perſons or our families, Churches, or Nations, are in ſome degree rebellions againſt the ſoveraign power of God.

Thirdly, If the Lord be ſupream, and have the charge over all the earth, then let us ſet him up as ſupream in all things, let his ends be above our ends; let us deſign God in all we do; He who is over all, ought to be honoured by all. All our actions as ſo many lines ought to center in his honour, who is the Center of power. Of him and through him and to him are all things, ſaith the Apoſtle (Rom. 11. 36.) Becauſe all things are of him, creating them, and through him, governing them, therefore all things ſhould be to him, that is, all perſons ſhould in all things they do, yea in all things that are done, aim at and deſign his glory, as the Apoſtle expreſly concludeth the verſe before cited; To whom be glory for ever.

Thirdly, Whereas it is ſaid, Who hath given him a Charge over the earth? or who hath diſpoſed (not a part, or parcel, or canton, or corner of, but) the whole world?

Obſerve, The power of God is an univerſal power.

It is extended throughout the world, to every patch and inch of it. What David ſaith of the Sun (Pſal. 19.6.) His going forth is from the end of heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof. The ſame may we ſay of the circuit of God's power, there is nothing hid from, nor ſet beyond it. There is a fourfold univerſality of the power of God.

Firſt, In regard of perſons (Pſal. 97. 9.) Thou Lord art high above all the earth, thou art exalted far above all Gods; that is, above the Kings and Powers of the earth; whom the Scripture calleth Gods. If God hath a power over the Kings of the earth, then ſurely over the people of the earth; yea God is not only exalted and far exalted above this or that God or King, but above them all; This is a ſupremacy with utmoſt univerſality.

Secondly, His power is univerſal, as to places and nations; ſome places claim priviledg, and are exempt from the juriſdiction of Princes, if obnoxious perſons get thither, they are free from the courſe of the Law. There were Cities of refuge among the Jews, and Sanctuaries in the days of old among us, where evil-doers could not be toucht. But the power of the Lord reacheth all places, even to the horns of the Altar (Pſal. 83. 18.) Thou whoſe name alone is Jehovah, art moſt high over all the earth.

Thirdly, His power is univerſal, as in all places, ſo over all things; it extends to the ſtars of heaven, and to the fowls of the air, to the beaſts of the earth, and to the fiſhes of the Sea; to whatſoever moves in this world; they are all at the command of God, if he doth but ſpeak, they run and execute his will.

Fourthly, His power is univerſal, in reference to time; 'tis never out, nor ſhall ever end; he is King immortal, and King eternal, his Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom. The power of God is an univerſal power in all theſe conſiderations: His power of governing is of the ſame extent, as his power of creating was; that which he created at once, he governs always. He did not ſet up the fabrick of this world, and then leave it to it ſelf, but he preſerveth and ordereth all things in it. The well-being, the orderly being of the creature, is as much of God as the being of it.

Some ſay, God made the world at firſt, and ſet all the wheels of it a going, but now things go on by chance, by fortune, or by accident, at leaſt particular events are not under his government, but come to paſs as the wiſdom or folly of men is moſt active in the production of them.

I anſwer, to ſet up blind fortune, and chance, yea or the wit and policy of man as governing the world, is to ſet up other Gods in the world; if chance and fortune, or the wit of man, govern any part of the world, then they had a part in making the world. If you divide one power, you divide the other. For thoſe inviſible things of God, his eternal power and God-head, are as much, or as evidently ſeen, in the things which are done, as in the things which are made. 'Tis true indeed God uſeth many hands in governing, ordering, and diſpoſing the things of this world. The Princes of this world, are eminently his hand, but God doth not uſe any power in governing this world, to diminiſh his own, nor doth he withdraw his own power, what power ſoever he uſeth; 'tis his power that acts effectually, and gives ſucceſs in the acting of all power. It was ſaid to that King who prided himſelf in what he had done in the world; Shall the Axe boaſt it ſelf againſt him that heweth therewith, or ſhall the ſaw magnifie it ſelf againſt him that ſhaketh it? (Iſa. 10. 15.) As if the Lord had ſaid to that proud Aſſyrian Prince, Doſt thou look upon thy ſelf, as if thou didſt all, and governedſt all? thou art no more in the governing the world (though the chief earthly Governour of all the world) then an Axe is in the hand of him that uſeth it; And though the artificer cannot do his work without an Axe, though he cannot divide his Timber without a ſaw, yet I the Lord am able to do my work without thee. At beſt and moſt, men are but inſtruments in the hand of God; and he ſerves his own turn by men, not to ſignifie that he cannot work without them, nor that his work is done either with more eaſe to himſelf, or more ſucceſs as to it ſelf by their help (he is not ſo weak as to need help, nor is at all ſtrengthned by the help he uſeth) but only to ſhew that as he hath the command of, ſo he hath a uſe for every creature (Iſa. 7.18.) The Lord ſhall hiſs for the fly; if God do but hiſs to the fly, or any creature on earth, yea to the devils in hell, they are at his call, and do his will, though they intend it not. Further; though God can do all himſelf, yet he uſeth various inſtruments, that he may indear man to man, or that no man may ſay, he hath no need of another. Thus the Apoſtle argues (1 Cor. 12. 21.) The eye cannot ſay unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Surely then the feet cannot ſay to the head, we have no need of thee, nor the hand to the eye, we have no need of thee. That, Creatures may ſhew their love to one another, and ſee their need of one another, God is pleaſed to give them a charge to work and diſpoſe of the things in the world, though the charge and diſpoſure of the whole world be in himſelf.

Non eget alienis adjutoriis ad regendum mundum qui non eguit ad faciendum. Greg. Lib. 24. Moral. cap. 26.

Now if the Lord be thus inveſted with all power originally and eſſentially, then I would mind thoſe who are in power of two things, and thoſe that are under power of one.

Firſt, Let them that have power remember to uſe it for God. They that have but family-power ſhould uſe it for God; how much more they that have power over nations? (Pſal. 2. 10, 11.) Be wiſ[illegible]w therefore, O ye Kings, be inſtructed, ye Judges of the earth, ſerve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling. When he ſaith, ſerve the Lord with fear, I ſuppoſe he doth not intend it in that notion of ſerving the Lord, as ſerving him denotes our holineſs and obedience in general; but when he ſaith, ſerve the Lord with fear, his meaning is, ſerve him ſo in the exerciſe of your power, and in your places, as you have power in your hand, as you have received a Charge or Commiſſion from God over this or that part of the earth, ſo ſerve him with fear, in the uſe of that power. As man ought in all the ſervice of God to be in a holy fear, ſo eſpecially when he ſerveth God in the adminiſtration of power, becauſe all power is from God. And therefore (which is the next thing I would hence mind thoſe of that are in power)

Secondly, Remember, The day of account muſt needs be a ſad day to thoſe who abuſe their power to the oppreſſion of man; and chiefly to thoſe who turn their power againſt God; that is, againſt the ways and truths of God, againſt the ſervants and people of God, againſt the ends and deſigns of God. God will call ſuch as have had any charge over the earth to an account, and let them who either of theſe ways abuſe their power, conſider whether ſuch accounts will paſs as they muſt give. Surely when the day of the Lord ſhall be upon ſuch Oaks and Cedars, upon ſuch mountains and hills, as the Prophet (Iſa. 2. 13, 14.) calleth the Powers and Princes of this world, they will even be forced (as he deſcribes them at the 19. verſe) to go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. It is bad to be abuſed by the power of man, but 'tis worſt for that man who abuſeth his power. Thy terribleneſs hath deceived thee (ſaith the Prophet, Jer. 49. 16.) and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, that holdeſt the height of the hill; that is, thou that art in high power, and alſo holdeſt thy height, thou art deceived, and thy terribleneſs hath deceived thee; becauſe thou haſt been able to terrifie many with thy power, therefore thou haſt preſumed that none ſhall ever terrifie or trouble thee; This vain confidence hath deceived thee, for (as it followeth in the latter part of that verſe) though thou ſhouldeſt make thy neſt as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, ſaith the Lord; that is, I will bring thee to a reckoning for terrifying thoſe with thy power whom thou ſhouldeſt have protected by it.

Laſtly, This is matter of great Comfort to all good men who are under power; though they are wronged and oppreſſed by the power of man, this may ſupport them, God hath power over all the earth, he hath the charge, and he will ſee them righted one time or other. (Eccleſ. 3. 16, 17.) Moreover, I ſaw under the Sun the place of Judgment, that wickedneſs was there, and the place of righteouſneſs, that iniquity was there; I ſaid in mine heart, God ſhall judg the righteous and the wicked, for there is a time for every purpoſe and for every work. And if for every purpoſe and work, then ſurely for this, the reviewing of the unrighteous judgments of the Princes and Powers of the earth, who hold the places of Judgment and righteouſneſs; to puniſh the perverting of which, the Lord who is Prince of the Kings of the earth often poureth contempt upon Princes (Pſal. 107. 40, 41.) and cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs where there is no way; yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock. For as the Holy Ghoſt ſaith (Pſal. 138. 6, 7.) Though the Lord be high, yet hath he regard to the lowly, but the proud he knoweth afar of; hereupon his faith riſeth up to a full aſſurance in the next verſe; Though I walk in the midſt of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thine hand againſt the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand ſhall ſave me.

Thus much for the argument here uſed, the Lord is righteous, for he hath all power in his hand; and he hath no reaſon upon any account in the world to pervert power; yea for him to do any thing that is not righteous, were to act againſt himſelf, even againſt his own being and bleſſedneſs, who is God bleſſed for evermore.

VERS. 14, 15.

If he ſet his heart upon man: [illegible] he gather unto himſelf his ſpirit and his breath.

All fleſh ſhall periſh together, and man ſhall turn to his duſt.

IN theſe two verſes Elihu perfects the proof of what he lately aſſerted, that God is juſt, and that there is no unrighteouſneſs in him (verſ. 12.) yea ſurely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment, For, as Moſes in his dying ſong deſcribes him; He is the rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he. The firſt argument for the confirmation of this was opened at the 13. verſe. And it was grounded upon the abſoluteneſs and univerſality of his dominion: Here we have a ſecond argument from the ſweet temperament of his power and goodneſs. God hath power enough in his hand at once to deſtroy all fleſh, and to command every man back into the duſt. But he doth not thus put out his power. We live and live comfortably; we enjoy not only our lives, but many mercies of this life; and therefore ſurely God doth not deal rigorouſly, much leſs unrighteouſly with man. He that doth all men good beyond their deſerts, will not puniſh any man beyond his demerits. He that doth not exerciſe his power always where he might, will not exerciſe it all where he ought not. That's the ſum and ſcope of Elihu in the context under hand.

Verſ. 14. If he ſet his heart upon man.

To ſet the heart upon any thing or perſon, is a Scripture expreſſion, often uſed, noting more than barely to think upon or mind both or either. It ſignifieth to have deep and ſerious thoughts, to think with conſideration and attention, yea with ſome height and heat of affection. And all this whether that thing which the heart and affections are ſet upon, pleaſe or diſpleaſe, be comfortable or grievous; for both love and hatred, hope and fear, are thoughtful of, and ſollicitous about their ſeveral objects. Hence that caution (Pſal. 62. 10.) If riches increaſe, ſet not your heart upon them; we naturally love riches, and therefore as naturally ſpend many thoughts, both how to get and how to keep them. If a man have riches, or an increaſe of riches, it is not unlawful for him to think of them, (yet we ſhould be as ſparing of our thoughts that way as can be, our thoughts and the bent of our ſouls ſhould always be upon God) but that which the Pſalmiſt forbids is the ſetling of our hearts; As if he had ſaid, Let not your thoughts ſtay or dwell there. Riches are themſelves tranſient things, therefore they ſhould have but our tranſient thoughts. Set not your hearts upon them, for they may quickly be unſetled. Samuel beſpake Saul in the ſame language about a worldly concernment, when he went out to ſeek his father's Aſſes (1 Sam. 9. 20.) Set not thy mind on them. 'Tis like Saul was overburdened with this thought, What's become of, or what ſhall I do for my father's Aſſes? Be not ſolicitous about them, ſaith Samuel, greater things are towards thee. Abigail uſeth the ſame form of ſpeaking to David concerning Nabal (1 Sam. 25. 23.) Let not my Lord regard this man of Belial, lay not to heart what Nabal hath ſaid or done. Thus Jonadab took off David's fear, that in one day he had been deprived of all his Sons (2 Sam. 13. 33.) Now therefore let not my Lord the King take the thing to heart, to think that all the Kings ſons are dead, for Amnon only is dead. We are as apt to ſet our heart upon our loſſes, as upon our enjoyments. And to ſhew how little Pharaoh regarded the heavy hand of God upon him, it is ſaid (after Moſes had turned all the waters that were in the river to blood, Exod. 7. 23.) And Pharaoh turned and went into his houſe, neither did ſet his heart to this alſo; That is, he ſlighted what God had done. Let God ſpeak, and ſtrike once and again, yea, a third time, yet hard-hearted men do not lay it to heart, nor ſet their heart upon it. Thus here in the Affirmative it is ſaid of God, If he ſet his heart upon man; that is, if he do but intend and mind this matter, he can quickly bring it about, even the periſhing of all fleſh.

Apponere cor eſt velle, decernere, conſtituere. q.d. Si ei ſuus animus ſuggerit. Vatabl.

If he ſet his heart upon man.] The Text is rendred alſo, If he ſet his heart againſt man: The Hebrew particle ſignifieth not only upon, but againſt (Amos 7. 16.) Propheſie not againſt Iſrael, &c. And the general ſenſe of that reading may be given two ways.

אל Valet contra. Si poneret contra eum cor ſuum. i. e. ſi ſibi proponeret hoſtiliter eum aggredi. Piſc.

Firſt, If he ſet his heart againſt man, to inquire ſtrictly into his life and ways, if he ſhould critically mark all his errors, or faults, and ſo reſolve to proceed againſt him, he might ſoon make an end of him, as it followeth in the next verſe. As the ſtrongeſt, ſo the beſt and holieſt of men are not able to ſtand before him. Thus the words are an anſwer given by Elihu to that frequent requeſt of Job, that God would let him come near to judgment, and hear his cauſe argued and debated before him, even at his Bar; but ſaith Elihu (according to this ſenſe) If God ſet his heart againſt man, if he doth but ſtrictly enquire into his condition, courſe, and converſation, it would be ſad with him; All men muſt periſh. Thoſe two places in the Pſalms anſwer this interpretation fully, (Pſal. 130. 3.) If thou Lord ſhouldſt mark iniquities, O Lord, who ſhould ſtand? That is, No man ſhall; We cannot ſtand in our righteouſneſs before God, how then ſhall we ſtand in our iniquities! And therefore the ſecond Text deprecates the Lord's ſevere enquiry into our pureſt and moſt perfect ſervices, (Pſal. 143. 2.) Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, for in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified.

Secondly, If he ſet his heart againſt man, that is, If he have a general purpoſe to deſtroy and ruine him by his abſolute Soveraignty, he can eaſily do it; what God hath a mind to do, or only willeth it to be done, he hath power enough to do it: He can make any man miſerable, and not only ſtrip him of the comforts of this life, but of his life too: And as he hath power enough, if he would uſe it, ſo he hath ſoveraign unqueſtionable authority enough to bear him out in the uſe of his power. Now, ſeeing God who is cloathed with this abſolute power, yet doth not exerciſe ſuch a power, but having given man a being, continues to very many men a comfortable being in this world, & doth not willingly grieve or afflict any of the children of men, nor execute any vengeance upon them without their deſert; ſurely then God is righteous, he will not do wickedly. Thus we have the importance of the Tranſlation, If he ſet his heart againſt man: We ſay, which alſo beareth fairly enough the ſame ſenſe) If he ſet his heart upon man.

If he gathereth unto himſelf his ſpirit and his breath.

Some render it thus; If he ſet his heart upon (or againſt) man, he will gather unto him his ſpirit and his breath: and then, as it followeth, All fleſh ſhall periſh together.

Si direxerit ad eum cor ſuum, ſpiritum illius & flatum ad ſe trabet, Vulg.

We repeat the ſuppoſition according to the Hebrew Text; If he ſet his heart upon man; If he gather to himſelf his ſpirit and his breath, then, &c. Take either reading, the general ſenſe is the ſame, and in brief 'tis this: If God have a mind to it, he can quickly thruſt all men out of the world. He that gave man his ſpirit and his breath, can at pleaſure recal both, and then all fleſh periſheth and turneth again unto (what it once was) duſt. The Hebrew word which we render to gather, ſignifieth to add one thing or perſon to another: When Rachel had conceived and bare a ſon, Gen. 30. 22, 23.) ſhe called (from this word) his name Joſeph, and ſaid, the Lord ſhall add to me another ſon. Thus here, If God add, or gather to himſelf his ſpirit and his breath, that is, the ſpirit and breath of man, &c. We may diſtinguiſh diſtinguiſh between theſe two, ſpirit and breath (Some inſiſt much and curiouſly upon this diſtinction) The ſpirit denoting the ſoul or the internal rational power of man, and the breath that effect of life which followeth or floweth from the union of ſoul and body. The life of man is often expreſſed by breath; Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath (or life) is in his noſtrils; (Iſa. 2. 22.) If once man's breath goeth out, his life cannot ſtay behind; the ſpirit of a man is in this ſenſe diſtinct from his breath; for when the breath is vaniſhed, and is no more, the ſoul or ſpirit liveth. The Apoſtle in his prayer for the Theſſalonians (1 Theſſ. 5.23.) puts ſoul and ſpirit together: The very God of peace ſanctifie you wholly, and I pray God, your whole ſpirit, and ſoul, and body, be preſerved harmleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There ('tis moſt probable) by the ſoul, he intends the inferiour powers in man, or his affections, and by the ſpirit, his higher powers of reaſon and underſtanding: yet the ſpirit is often put for that whole part of man which is contradiſtinct to his body. Into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: that is, my ſoul, not forgetting my body: And I conceive, we may ſafely expound it here in that latitude, as comprehending the whole inner man. Yet it is all one, as to the ſenſe of this place, whether we take ſpirit and breath diſtinctly or for the ſame; the ſpirit being ſo called from ſpiration or breathing; If he gather unto him his ſpirit, and his breath. The gathering of the ſpirit and breath of man unto God, is but a periphraſis or circumlocution of death, or of man's departure out of this life; when man was formed or created (Gen. 2.7.) it is ſaid, God breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living ſoul: And when man dyeth, his breath or ſpirit may be ſaid to be gathered or returned back unto God; ſo then, the meaning of Elihu in this double ſuppoſition, (If he ſet his heart upon man, if he gather to himſelf his ſpirit and his breath,) is clearly this, if God were once reſolved, or ſhould but ſay the word, that man muſt preſently die, die he muſt, and that preſently.

Spiritus animam, & flatus vitam quæ ab anima provenit & conſervatur ſignificat; ego opinor idem eſſe hoc loco. Sanct.

Hence note, Firſt, God can eaſily do whatſoever he hath a mind to do.

If he do put his heart upon the doing of any thing, it is done; Men often ſet their hearts, yea and their hands unto that which they cannot do; if men could do that which they ſet their hearts to do, or have a mind to do, and thereupon ſet their hands to do, we ſhould have ſtrange work in the world. 'Tis a mercy to many men, that man is often fruſtrated in his thoughts and purpoſes, in his attempts and undertakings; and 'tis a glorious mercy to all that have an intereſt in God, that God never loſt a thought, nor can be hindred in any work he ſetteth his heart upon. He that can lett or ſtop all men in their works, can work, and none ſhall lett or ſtop him. What God will do, is not defeſible or undoable (if I may ſo expreſs it) by any power in heaven or earth. And as God can do what he will, and ask no man leave, ſo he can do what he will without trouble to himſelf; 'tis but the reſolve of his will, the turning of his hand, or the caſt of his eye (all which are ſoon diſpatcht) and 'tis done. Thus God breathed out his wiſhes for the welfare of Iſrael, (Pſal. 81. 13.) O that my people had hearkned unto me, &c. I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries. As if he had ſaid, I could and would have eaſed them of all their enemies, even of all that roſe up againſt them eaſily, even with the turning of my hand: What is more eaſily done, or more ſpeedily done, than the turning of a hand? Many things are hard to man, (and indeed very few things are eaſie to him, except it be to ſin, or to do evil, he can do evil eaſily) ſome things are are not only hard, but too hard, impoſſible for man; but there is nothing hard, much leſs too hard for God, he can eaſily do the hardeſt things; yea, the hardeſt things are as eaſie to him as the eaſieſt; for as (Pſal. 139.12.) Darkneſs hideth not from the ſight of God, the darkneſs and the light are both alike to him; ſo hardneſs hinders not the work of God, hardneſs and eaſineſs are both alike to him, if he ſet his heart upon it. From this general truth, take two inferences.

Firſt, How ſhould we fear before this God? How ſhould we tremble at the remembrance of, and walk humbly (in our higheſt aſſurance) with this God? We are much afraid to diſpleaſe thoſe men who can eaſily hurt us, and in whoſe hand it is to ruine us every hour: But O how little are we in this thought to fear the Lord, to take heed of diſpleaſing the Lord, who can with eaſe either help or hurt, either bring ſalvation or deſtruction, who in a moment can thruſt the ſoul out of the body, and caſt both into hell.

Secondly, We may hence make a ſtrong inference for the comfort of the people of God, when their ſtraits are moſt pinching, and their difficulties look like impoſſibilities, and are ſo indeed, while they look to man, when their enemies are ſtrongeſt, and the mountains which ſtand in the way of their expected comforts greateſt, if then God will be intreated to ſet his heart, and caſt his eye upon them, their ſtraits are preſently turned into inlargements, difficulties become eaſie, and mountains plains. If we can but ingage the Lord, (his own promiſe is the ſureſt ingagement, and indeed all that we can put upon him, or mind him of, if (I ſay) we can thus ingage the Lord to be with us, who can be (to our hurt, many will be to their own) againſt us?

Secondly, Note, Our life is at the beck, diſpoſe and pleaſure of God.

He can gather the ſpirit and the breath to himſelf whenſoever he pleaſeth: (Pſal. 104. 29.) Thou hideſt thy face and they are troubled, and thou takeſt away their breath, they die, and return to their duſt. If God hideth his face from us, 'tis death while we live; but if he take away our breath, we cannot live, but die. (Pſal. 90. 3.) Thou turneſt man to deſtruction, and ſayeſt, Return ye children of men. Here's man turning and returning upon the ſaying of God; man turneth to death, he returneth to duſt, and ſhall at laſt return from the duſt, and all this when God ſaith he muſt. Our life is a very frail thing, and it is in the hand of God to continue or take it away; to let us hold it, or gather it home to himſelf.

Thirdly, From the manner of ſpeaking, If he gather to himſelf his ſpirit and his breath;

Note, When man dieth, he is gathered to God.

When (as Solomon allegorizeth the death of man, Eccl. 12. 6,7.) The ſilver cord is looſed, and the golden bowl broken, &c. Then ſhall the duſt (that is, the body) return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return to God who gave it; that is, each part of man (when he departeth this world) ſhall go its proper way, and return to that which is moſt congenial to it; his body to the earth, from whence it is; his ſoul to God, of whom it is. God is a Spirit, the creating Spirit, and our created ſpirits are gathered to God when they are ſeparated from the body; yet remember there is a two-fold gathering or returning of the ſpirit to God.

Firſt, To abide and be bleſſed with him for ever; thus the ſpirits of believers or ſaints only are gathered to God when they depart out of this world.

Secondly, There is a gathering of the ſpirit to God, to be judged and diſpoſed of by him, to receive a ſentence of life or death from him. And thus the ſpirit of every man or woman that dieth, is gathered to God, be they good or bad, believers or unbelievers, (Heb. 9. 27.) It is appointed for men once to die, but after this the judgment. 'Tis the Statute Law of God, man muſt die, and the ſound of Judgment is at the heels of death. That Text ſaith, but after this the Judgment. The general day of judgment ſhall not be till the reſurrection of man from the dead; But there is a perſonal judgment, or a determining of every mans ſtate when he dieth; and for that end every mans ſpirit is gathered to God to receive his ſentence. The ſpirits of wicked men are gathered to him and condemned, the ſpirits of the righteous are gathered to him and acquitted: We are come, ſaith the Apoſtle (Heb. 12. 23.) to God, the Judg of all, and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. David knew he muſt be gathered to God, but he earneſtly deprecated ſuch a gathering as moſt ſhall have, (Pſal. 26. 9.) Gather not my ſoul with ſinners, nor my life with bloody men. It is this word, when ſinners die, they are gathered; but David would not be gathered as they are gathered; They are gathered to God, but it is that they may be for ever ſeparated from him; they are gathered to a day of vengeance and wrath: Therefore David prayed, Gather not my ſoul with ſinners. Death is called a gathering in a threefold reference.

First, A gathering to our people. Thus it is ſaid of Aaron, (Num. 20. 24.) Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people, for he ſhall not enter into the land, &c. Death ſeparates the people of God from their people, that is, from thoſe that are like them on earth, but it will be a means of bringing them into the ſociety of their people, or fellow-believers who are gone before them into heaven.

Secondly, Death is called a gathering to our Fathers, (2 Chron. 34. 28.) Behold I will gather thee to thy Fathers, and thou ſhalt be gathered to thy grave in peace. There's a gathering to a more ſpecial company, and that with other like Scriptures are an argument that we ſhall know our relations in heaven. For, to be gathered to our Fathers, ſpoken of in the firſt part of the verſe, is more than to be gathered to the grave, ſpoken of in the latter; and by our fathers, we are to underſtand more of our fathers than the grave hath in its keeping (which is but their bodies) even their ſouls, which are kept in heaven.

Thirdly, According to the phraſe of this Text, death is called a gathering to God; If he gather unto himſelf his ſpirit and his breath.

Whence note, Fourthly, The ſpirit or ſoul of man hath its original from God.

It is of him to whom it returneth; The ſoul or ſpirit of man is of God in a more ſpecial way than his body is; for though God giveth both, yet the Scripture (in the place before named) ſpeaks of the ſoul as the gift of God, but paſſeth by the body; Eccleſ. 12. 7.) The duſt ſhall return to the earth, as it was; and the ſpirit ſhall return to God who gave it. 'Tis God, not man, alone, who hath given us theſe bodies, but 'tis not man, but God alone who hath given us theſe ſpirits; therefore men are called the fathers of our fleſh, that is, of the body, in way of diſtinction, from God, who is the father of ſpirits (Heb. 12. 9.) We have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the Father of ſpirits, and live; that is, ſhall we not rather be ſubject to God than to man? Father of ſpirits is an Attribute or Title too high and honorable for any but God. One of the Ancients in his gracious breathing after God, brake out into this holy Paſſion; My ſoul (O God) came from thee, and my heart is unquiet or reſtleſs until it return to thee again; God is our center, and our reſt: He gathereth to himſelf mans ſpirit; and when he doth ſo, what then? what's the iſſue of it? Elihu tells us what in the next verſe,

Verſ. 15. All fleſh ſhall periſh together, and man ſhall turn again to his duſt.

As if he had ſaid, As ſoon as ever the ſpirit is gathered, the fleſh is conſumed, or, as we render, periſheth.

All fleſh, may be taken in the largeſt ſenſe, not only for all men that live, but for all living creatures: Thus largely Moſes extendeth it, (Gen. 6. 17.) Behold, ſaith the Lord, I will bring a flood of water to deſtroy all fleſh; that is, all the Beaſts of the earth, and Fowls of the air, together with Mankind, except a few of each in the Ark: ſo (Pſal. 136. 25.) Who giveth food to all fleſh, (that is, to man and beaſt) for his mercy endureth for ever. Yet ſome underſtand this firſt part more narrowly, for all fleſh except man; becauſe he addeth in the latter part of the verſe, and man ſhall return again to his duſt: But I conceive we are to take all fleſh here for all men, and only for men, it being uſual in Scripture to put the ſame thing twice, under different expreſſions. So then

All fleſh, that is, every man, be he who he will, ſhall periſh. Thus as all fleſh is reſtrained to man, ſo it extendeth over all men, yea over all things of man (Iſa. 40. 6.) All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the field; that is, all men are periſhing, and all that man hath, meerly as a man, is as fading and periſhing as himſelf is.

Some take notice, that man was not called fleſh till after his fall; It's ſaid before, when God ſet him up in that primitive purity of his Creation, Man became a living ſoul. He was not ſpoken of at firſt as fleſh, but as a living ſoul, (Gen. 2. 7.) but as ſoon as man had ſinned, he was called fleſh, as if he had no ſoul. There may two other reaſons be be given why man is called fleſh, both following from the former. Firſt, Becauſe man ſince his fall doth moſt for his fleſh, and neglects his ſoul altogether, till being planted into the ſecond Adam, he is brought out of that wretched condition into which he fell by and with the firſt Adam. Secondly, He is called fleſh, becauſe, ſince the fall man is become weak and frail, both as to Naturals and Morals, (Gen. 6. 3.) My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, for that he alſo is fleſh: As if the Lord had ſaid, Now man declareth himſelf to be fleſh indeed, he acts like an impotent ſorry creature, he acts as if he ſcarce had a ſoul in him, as if he were no more then the beaſts of the earth: My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, for that he alſo is fleſh; and therefore (verſ. 30.) God told Noah, The end of all fleſh is come before me; that is, Man, and all his worldly glory, ſhall all be ſwept away with a deluge of water, as here,

All fleſh ſhall periſh together.] There is a two-fold periſhing; Firſt, By way of annihilation. Secondly, By way of tranſmutation. When Elihu ſaith, all fleſh ſhall periſh, we are not to underſtand it of annihilating all fleſh; (God can do that, he can turn man back into that nothing out of which he was made) but the periſhing in the Text importeth only a change, death is called a change, and a change to periſhing: as that good and great woman ſaid, I will go in unto the King, and if I periſh, I periſh, (Heſt. 4. 16.) that is, If I die, I die. The Prophet laments (Iſa. 57. 1.) The righteous periſheth, and no man layeth it to heart. All fleſh ſhall periſh

Together.] That is, without exception, one as well as another, rich and poor, high and low, ſtrong and weak, all are alike in the hand of God, (Pſal. 33. 13. 15.) The Lord looketh from heaven, he beholdeth all the ſons of men, &c. he faſhioneth their hearts alike, or together; that is, he faſhioneth the hearts of all men: God doth not ſo faſhion mens hearts alike, as to make them all alike, (faces do not differ ſo much as hearts) but as he faſhions one mans heart, ſo anothers; he faſhions the heart of a King, as well as the heart of a begger: All fleſh ſhall periſh together; none either by power or policy can ſtand againſt a diſpleaſed God. יחד

Again, We may take the word together, for all at once, God can make a total devaſtation in the earth, and ſweep all away as filth with the beſom of deſtruction; He can deſtroy all the world, or all men, who are the chief part of the world, together, or at one blow; ſo that (as the Prophet Nahum ſpeaks, Chap. 1. 9.) Affliction ſhall not riſe up a ſecond time. All fleſh ſhall periſh together,

And man ſhall return again unto duſt.

Or he ſhall go back unto duſt, that is, he ſhall dye: that's the ſentence which God gave upon man when he had ſinned (Gen. 3. 19.) In the ſweat of thy face ſhalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it waſt thou taken, for duſt thou art, and unto duſt ſhalt thou return. Man was duſt before he ſinned; yet he had not returned to duſt, if he had not turned from God by ſin. Sin brought in death, and death brings us to the duſt. All fleſh ſhall periſh together, and man ſhall return again unto duſt.

Hence obſerve, There is no one man hath more priviledg than another, againſt the ſentence of death.

The greateſt Prince dyeth as ſoon as the meaneſt Peaſant. Death can as ſoon and as eaſily break into the ſtrongeſt fort or tower of ſtone, as into the meaneſt cottage of reeds. High and low ſhall periſh together. Let none hope to ſecure themſelves by any thing of this world from going out of this world. Riches avail not in the day of death (Prov. 11. 4.) High Titles and Honours avail not, ſtrength availeth not, beauty availeth not, none of theſe can be a protection, if God ſend out a writ or ſummons to the grave. Happy are they who get an aſſurance of life after death, for none have an aſſurance of life againſt death.

Again, In that death is here expreſſed under this notion of periſhing, Obſerve, Man is but in a periſhing condition while he is in this world.

As all the things of the world are, ſo is man, while he abideth (if I may ſay he abideth) in this world. Chriſt earneſtly exhorts (John 6. 27.) Labour not for the meat that periſheth. Why ſhould we labour, that is, ſet our ſelves with our whole ſtrength and might to purſue periſhing things, ſeeing we our ſelves are periſhing? The more periſhing we are, the more reaſon we have to look after and labour for thoſe things which do not, which cannot periſh. When the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Pet. 1. 18.) We are not redeemed with corruptible things from our vain converſation, &c. He doth not inſtance in flowers or fruits of the earth, which quickly rot, but in gold and ſilver, which are the moſt durable and laſting metals; even theſe are corruptible; but we our ſelves, as to this bodily life, are corruptible, not only as gold and ſilver, but as the moſt fading flowers and ſummer fruits of the earth.

Further, From that other deſcription of death, as 'tis called a returning again unto duſt,

We learn, Man is of the duſt.

Unleſs man, as to his body, were of the duſt when he began to live, he could not be ſaid to return unto duſt when he dieth, or departs this life. Many men pore upon their pedigree, and their minds ſwell with pride, becauſe they are of ſuch or ſuch a noble deſcent; but let them remember, man is of the duſt. The ſoul or ſpirit of man is indeed from above, as was ſhewed before; and the body of man is (I grant) a compound of all the four Elements. Our bodily ſpirits (ſay Naturaliſts) are of the fire, our breath of the air, our blood of the water, and our fleſh and bones are moſt properly of the duſt of the earth; yet the whole body of man is denominated duſt, or earth; or as the Apoſtle ſtileth it (2 Cor. 5. 1.) 'Tis an earthly houſe; If our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved. For though we may truly ſay, there is water, and air, and fire in this houſe, yet becauſe earth is the predominant Element, the whole body bears the denomination of that. God is not ſaid to form man of the water, or air, or fire, but of the duſt of the ground (Gen. 2. 7.) though all thoſe as well as earth were ingredients in the compoſition and formation of mans body. As man, with reſpect to his ſpirituals and morals, is denominated from that which is chief in him, ſo with reſpect to his naturals. Every man hath the ſeeds and principles of all ſin in him; yet many men are known and expreſſed by ſome ſpecial ſin. Thus one is called a covetous man, another a malicious man, &c. becauſe covetouſneſs and malice are their predominant ſins in practice, though the principles of all other ſins are in them. So for grace, one is ſaid to be a patient man, and another an humble man, and a third a ſelf-denying man. Though where any grace is all graces are, yet a godly man is known by that grace which acts moſt eminently and vigorouſly in him. In this notion man is ſaid to be of the duſt, and to return to duſt, as if he were nothing but duſt, becauſe duſt is the predominant Element in the natural conſtitution of man.

And if ſo, then this is an humbling conſideration. Some walk as if they thought the ground or earth not good enough for them to go upon. Moſes ſetting forth the dreadfulneſs of famine, as a puniſhment threatned the Jewiſh Nation in caſe of diſobedience, tells us it ſhall fall on all ſorts, both of men and women (Deut. 28. 56.) The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground for delicateneſs and tenderneſs, &c. Some are loth to put their feet to the ground, whereas the beſt foot that ever trod upon the ground is duſt as well as the ground trodden on, and 'tis but duſt to duſt when they are in the duſt, and dirt to dirt if they fall into the dirt. The Apoſtle, among other reaſons, for this alſo calleth the body of man a vile body (Phil. 3. 21.) Who ſhall change our vile body that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body. Our bodies are vile, chiefly from the contagion of ſin, that hath made them moſt vile: But they are comparatively vile, with reſpect to the very matter out of which they were all repreſentatively made when the firſt man was made, without the leaſt taint or touch of ſin. Man at beſt as to the body is but a little breathing duſt or moving Clay. And did we ſpiritually look upon the matter of our bodies, it would exceedingly humble our ſpirits, and keep them low even when like Jordan they are ready to over-flow all the banks of modeſty, and moderation. We hear of a Bird, who priding himſelf in ſpreading and peruſing his fine feathers, is preſently as it were, aſhamed by looking down upon his own black feet. Surely did man often conſider that his whole Body is of the earth, it would be an excellent means to keep his heart in a lowly frame, how highly ſoever himſelf is exalted in the Earth.

And as man, while he lives is from the duſt; ſo when he dyeth (that's another humbling conſideration) his body not only returneth unto duſt. but turneth into duſt. David, as the figure of Chriſt cryed out (Pſal. 22. 15.) Thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. Duſt and death are neer acquaintance, and all that die, grow quickly into neerer acquaintance with the duſt. It is ſaid (Pſal. 103. 14.) The Lord knoweth our frame, he remembreth that we are but duſt. But what advantage is that to us, that the Lord knoweth the one, and remembreth the other; I may anſwer as the Apoſtle doth to another queſtion (Rom. 3. 2.) much every way, chiefly, becauſe he will pity us and ſpare us and deal tenderly with us, as conſidering how frail we are. Now as it may be our comfort that God remembreth we are but duſt, ſo 'tis our duty to remember that we are but duſt, and that we muſt to the duſt. Shall God remember that we are duſt, and ſhall not we remember it our ſelves? Did we more remember that we are duſt, we ſhould more prepare for our return to the duſt. Yea, I may ſay, we ſhould be more in Heaven, if we were more in our duſt; that is, the gracious and ſerious meditation of our natural vileneſs and infirmities would provoke us to look Heaven-wards, and prepare for Heaven, where theſe our natural Bodies ſhall become ſpiritual (1 Cor. 15. 44.) that is, they ſhall be like ſpirits (though not turned into ſpirits) living without food or ſleep, living free from wearineſs and ſickneſs, from pains and languiſhments, yea free from the remoteſt fear of ever dying or returning again into duſt. Such as theſe and many more would be our ſouls advantages, did we often (as becomes us) remember that our bodies are of the earth, and muſt ſhortly be earth again. Thus to be earthly minded, is the way to be Heavenly minded. Many are earthly minded, that is, they mind earthly things, but few mind that themſelves are earth. In what holy heights and elevations of ſpirit ſhould we be, if we could ſpiritually remember how low we once were, and how low, as to our bodies, we within a few dayes ſhall be.

Laſtly, This truth ſhould take us off from all creature-confidence, from truſting in man. Curſed is the man (ſaith the Lord, Jer. 17. 5.) that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm. 'Tis a curſed thing for man to truſt in man, becauſe truſt is an honour proper to God; he alone is to be truſted: And as it is a curſed, ſo it is alſo a fooliſh thing to truſt in man. David a great Prince giveth us this counſel from God (Pſal. 146. 3, 4.) Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the Son of man in whom there is no help; his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth (or to his duſt) in that day all his thoughts periſh, happy is the man that hath the God of Jacob for his help. What can duſt do for duſt? What can duſt get by duſt? That which is weak may become ſtrong, by truſting to, or leaning upon that which is ſtrong; the weakeſt man is ſtrong enough, while he truſteth upon the ſtrong God; but if weak truſt upon weak, how ſhall it be made ſtrong. Therefore let all fleſh hearken to the words of the holy Prophet (Iſa. 2. 21.) Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrills; for wherein is he to be accounted of? Man himſelf is a ſoon-ceaſing Creature (David uſeth the Noun of this Verb to expreſs himſelf ſo, Pſal. 39. 4.) and therefore we have reaſon to ceaſe from man, to ceaſe from any high eſtimation of the higheſt men much more from any confidence in them. What can we aſſure our ſelves of from any man living, ſeeing he hath no aſſurance of his own life? The Prophet would have us underſtand that, while he ſaith, his breath is in his noſtrills; Mans life is gone as ſoon as his breath is gone, and how ſoon may that be gone! David deſcribeth a proud man, puffing at his enemies (Pſal. 10. 5.) He is puffed up and ſwelled with high conceits of himſelf, as if he had ſome great matter in him, and he puffs at others as if he could do ſome great matter againſt them, forgetting that himſelf is but (as to his being in this World) a puff of wind, which paſſeth away. As then, we need not fear what hurt man can do us, ſo we ſhould not hope nor have any expectation from him that he by his own power (how great ſoever his power is) can do us any good. Wherein (as to either of theſe purpoſes) is man to be accounted of? Man is an excellent creature, a creature of high account, as bearing the image of God, his ſoul is of more worth then the gain of the whole World

(Matth. 16.26.) and thus he is more to be accounted of, then all that in the World is moſt accounted of; but conſider him as to the frailty of his life, and the poſſibility, yea probability of his ſuddain paſſage out of this world, and then, wherein is he to be accounted of? If we oppoſe man to God, or compare man with God, or truſt man in ſtead of God, he is as vain and worthleſs as any thing, a thing of nothing, or leſs then nothing.

VERS. 16, 17,

If now thou haſt underſtanding, hear this; hearken to the voice of my words.

Shall even he that hateth right, govern? And wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt?

ELihu having thus far applied himſelf to Job's friends upon an Aſſurance that they were men of underſtanding; for ſo he beſpake them at the tenth verſe; Hearken unto me, ye men of underſtanding. He now turneth his ſpeech particularly to Job, and he doth it upon a hopeful ſuppoſition, that he alſo was a man of underſtanding.

Verſe 16. If now thou haſt underſtanding, hear this.

The word which we render underſtanding, is not a Noun, but the infinitive of a Verb in the Hebrew: And it may be rendred thus; If thou haſt to underſtand; that is, if thou haſt an ability to underſtand, which in ſenſe is the ſame with our tranſlation, If thou haſt underſtanding. This form of ſpeaking by the infinitive for the Noun, is frequent both in Scripture and other Authors. Thus 'tis ſaid, Your to know is nothing; that is, your knowledge is nothing, unleſs another know it, or be made knowing by it. Let us ſee (ſaith the Orator) what thy to live bleſſedly is; that is, what thou counteſt bleſſedneſs. And another, I have loſt to be aſhamed; that is, ſhamefaſtneſs or modeſty. Thus Elihu, If thou haſt to underſtand, hear this.

But it may be queſtioned, did Elihu indeed ſuſpect whether Job did underſtand, or were an underſtanding man? Every man hath an underſtanding, as he is a man. To underſtand is the property, the inſeparable property of a reaſonable creature. Why then doth Elihu put a doubt upon Job in this, and ſay, If now thou haſt underſtanding, &c.

I anſwer; Elihu indeed deals with Job as if he were ſomewhat below man in this buſineſs; at leaſt, as if he were dull, and ſlow to receive, and apprehend what had been ſpoken to him, and therefore by this Apoſtrophe, he excites and ſtirs him up to ſet his underſtanding a-work to the utmoſt; As if he had ſaid, Although thou haſt a habit of underſtanding, yet thou haſt not acted it like an underſtanding man; nor given ſuch proof of it in this matter as is expected.

Further, Theſe words, If now thou haſt underſtanding, refer not to the faculty, but to the ſpecial attributes of his underſtanding; chiefly to theſe three.

Firſt, To the ſoundneſs of it; If thou haſt any thing of a ſound underſtanding. The underſtandings of many are ſick, and diſeaſed, their underſtandings are tainted and infected with errours and miſperſwaſions. Now if thou haſt any thing of a ſound underſtanding left in thee, if there remain yet any ſtrength in thy underſtanding, to apprehend the force of thoſe arguments and reaſons which I ſhall propoſe to convince thee by, hear this. Erroneous underſtandings are altogether unfit to entertain truth. As there muſt be a ſutableneſs between the ſtomach and the meat, elſe it is not digeſted, ſo between the mind and the object, elſe it cannot be received.

Secondly, To the uprightneſs or impartiality of it; If thou haſt underſtanding; that is, if thou haſt an unbiaſſed underſtanding; Sometimes the affections turn aſide, and bribe the underſtanding; ſelf-intereſt puts a blind upon the underſtanding. When a man hath a mind to that which is not right, he will have a mind to underſtand any thing that oppoſeth it.

Thirdly, To the ſpiritualneſs of it, If thou haſt underſtanding; that is, a renewed, a ſpiritual, an holy underſtanding, or the underſtanding of the holy, hear this. A man may have a great natural underſtanding, a deep judgment, and yet be a very Child, or a man of no underſtanding in the things of God. Only a ſpiritual underſtanding is ſuited to ſpiritual things, (as the object is, ſuch muſt the faculty be) that faculty which deals a-right about ſpiritual things, muſt be a ſpiritual faculty. The Apoſtle ſpeaks concludingly (1 Cor. 2. 14.) The natural man (that is, the man unconverted or unregenerate) perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs unto him: Neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. And therefore the ſame Apoſtle profeſſeth to the Coloſſians (Chap. 1. 9.) We do not ceaſe to pray for you, and to deſire that ye might be filled, with the knowledge of his will, in all wiſdom, and ſpiritual underſtanding. The will of God being ſpiritual, cannot be truely known but by a ſpiritual underſtanding. According to this three-fold attribute of the underſtanding we may expound Elihu ſpeaking to Job, If thou haſt a ſpiritual underſtanding, and unbiaſſed underſtanding, a ſound underſtanding, hear this. As if he had ſaid, I have ſpoken, and am about to ſpeak ſuch things as many call out the ſtrength, the beſt, the utmoſt line of a ſound, impartial and ſpiritual underſtanding, to ſound the bottom and the depth of them. Thus he provokes him to attend, not only with his ear, but with his underſtanding, with the beſt of his underſtanding to the things he was to ſpeak. And in this ſenſe the moſt of men, all bad men have no underſtanding (Pſal. 14.2.) and Job, though a good man, had much deficiency in his. If now thou haſt underſtanding, hear this.

Hence Note, He that hath not a right, a ſound, a ſpiritual underſtanding, can ſcarce be ſaid to have any underſtanding at all.

There are many underſtanding men, who have not this underſtanding, or an underſtanding for this. While David ſaith (Pſal. 49. 20.) Man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, he ſuppoſeth, that a man aſcended to the higheſt pitch of honour, may yet be without underſtanding, that is, without a right, a ſound, a ſpiritual underſtanding; and then (as it followeth there) he is like the beaſts that periſh. Beaſts have no underſtanding at all, the rational or intellectual power is proper to man. A man in honour, not having this honour, a right underſtanding, may be numbred among the beaſts. If thou haſt underſtanding,

Hear this.] As if he had ſaid, I am not calling thee to hear an idle ſtory, or a trivial matter; Hear this, there is an emphaſis in the words both as to the Act and Object.

It is queſtioned what Elihu particularly intendeth by this, ſome refer it to what he had ſpoken before in Job's audience; though directed to his friends: Hear what I have ſpoken to thy friends in the former part of the Chapter, in vindication of the righteouſneſs of God. Secondly, Others refer it to what Elihu was now about to ſay; I have not yet done, I have not yet brought out all my reaſons and arguments, I have not emptied my treaſures, I have yet more to ſay, Hear this: A third ſort refer theſe hortatory words, hear this, in the former part of the verſe, to what he had already ſpoken, and thoſe in the latter part of the verſe, hearken to the voice of my words, to what he had yet to ſpeak; but it is not much to the matter to which we refer them, it being clear, that what he had ſaid, and what he had to ſay, was matter of weight; and ſo hear this, is emphatical, this great, this deep, this uſeful and neceſſary point of Doctrine, which I already have declared, or am now about to declare unto thee.

Hence Note, That which we hear, we ſhould labour to underſtand.

(Col. 3. 16.) Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you richly, in all wiſdom; It is not enough to hear the word with our ears, or to have it in our mouths, it muſt dwell in our memories, and it muſt dwell there, not in a beggerly poor faſhion, but richly; which it never doth, till we have a ſound and clear underſtanding of it, and are both in heart and life conformed to it, yea transformed into it; that is it which the Apoſtle meaneth by the dwelling of the word in us richly in all wiſdom. And he further aſſureth them (Chap. 2. 1, 2.) that he had a great conflict for them; that is (as we put in the Margin) he had a great fear or care of them that their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding, to the acknowledgment of the Myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. He had held forth thoſe great myſteries, the myſtery of God conſidered eſſentially, the myſtery of the Father conſidered perſonally, the myſtery of Chriſt conſidered mediatorily; and therefore he preſſeth them to get a full aſſurance of underſtanding about all theſe myſteries. When Chriſt was diſcourſing with his Diſciples after his reſurrection (Luke 24.45.) it is ſaid, He opened their underſtanding, that they might underſtand the Scriptures; and then they did not take in what he ſpake only at the ear, but at the heart alſo. Thus (Acts 16.14.) The Lord opened the heart of Lydia, that ſhe attended unto the things which were ſpoken of Paul; that is, he gave her an inward ear, and cauſed her to underſtand the things which he ſpake.

Secondly, Note, Whatſoever we hear is loſt, and but ſcattered in the air, if we do not underſtand it.

Though we have it in our books, yea, though we have it in our memories, 'tis loſt, if we underſtand it not; we read of a book, ſealed within, and on the back-ſide, with ſeven ſeals (Rev. 5. 1.) we read alſo (ver. 4.) that John wept much, becauſe no man was found worthy to open and to read the book: That ſealing of the book was nothing elſe but the ſhutting of it up from the underſtanding; and when Chriſt opened the book, he gave the underſtanding of it: The whole Book of God is a ſealed book, unleſs we have an underſtanding, or a ſaving knowledge of the truths therein contained. What John ſaid (Rev. 13. 18.) of counting that myſterious number of the Beaſt, muſt be ſaid in its proportion of the whole myſtery of godlineſs, let him that hath underſtanding count and conſider them.

Thirdly, Note, Every underſtanding is not fit to receive the Truths of God.

An unregenerate man is not fit to receive any of the Truths of God; The natural man (that is, the man who hath nothing but nature in him) perceiveth not the things of God, he hath not a ſutable faculty for them; and as a natural mans underſtanding cannot at all receive the things of God; ſo every degree of a ſpiritual underſtanding cannot receive all the truths of God, or not all the things of God in all their truth. The Apoſtle diſtributes perſons into ſeveral degrees, and calls ſome babes, and others grown or perfect men; that is, ſuch as have an underſtanding fit to take in and digeſt the higheſt and deepeſt things of God; and hence it is, that Chriſt told his Diſciples (John 16. 12.) who had a renewed underſtanding, only 'twas in a low degree, I have many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; I ſuppoſe the reaſon why Chriſt ſaith they could not bear thoſe many things, was not becauſe being many, they were too great a burden for their memories (though poſſibly there might be ſomewhat in that) but their inability of bearing thoſe many things, was chiefly in their underſtanding. There are ſome truths, which though a man can remember, yet he cannot bear them; and the more he remembers them, the leſs he can bear them; the weight and myſteriouſneſs of them even cracks his brain, till he receives more light from God, and more ſtrength of underſtanding, he cannot bear them: If thou haſt underſtanding hear this;

And hearken to the voice of my words.] This latter part of the verſe is but the repetition or further enforcement of the ſame thing; we had the like expreſſions chap. 33. 1, 8. and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon this, only Note further from the whole,

The beginning of true wiſdom is to have a readineſs to hear, and to ſhew our ſelves teachable.

Some overween themſelves ſo much, as to matter of knowledge, that they will not be taught; they judge themſelves ſo learned, and fully inſtructed, that they will hear no more inſtruction, nor learn any other leſſon, they are paſt the School; yet alwayes they who know much in their own conceit, are leaſt knowing in truth and reality: There is nothing doth ſo much hinder the receiving of knowledge, as an imagination or proud prepoſſeſſion of it. The ſluggard (ſaith Solomon, Prov.26.16.) is wiſer in his own conceit, then ſeven men that can render a reaſon: They which have leaſt reaſon are the greateſt neglecters of it; only an underſtanding man is willing to hear, that he may gain more underſtanding. Therefore Elihu admoniſheth Job, If now thou haſt underſtanding, hear this, and hearken to the voice of my words: What Elihu would have Job hear and hearken to, followeth in the next verſe, and in thoſe which follow, to the end of ver. 33.

Verſe 17. Shall even he that hateth right govern? And wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt?

This is matter indeed worth the hearing and hearkning to.

Shall even he that hateth right govern?] Shall he? He ſhall not, or at leaſt ſhould not, he ought not; he of all men is the unfitteſt man to govern; that is, to do all men right, who hateth right. The Interrogation leads us to this ſtrong negation, or indignation rather: What! He that hateth right, whoſe very ſpirit is againſt it, whoſe affections withdraw from it, is he made up for a Governour! The Hebrew word notes right from man to man; Juſtice or righteouſneſs conſiſts in the due order and comely diſpoſition of things and affairs, tranſacted and diſpenſed in this world from man to man, or between man and man; it imports alſo that order into which the moſt wiſe providence of God placeth both things and perſons; we may take it here in both or either of theſe ſenſes; Shall he that hateth right

משפט Judicium, ſignificat ordinem quo quicquid, in loco convenienti conſtituitur; ſic odiens judicium eſt, qui non ſubſcribit divino ordini. Coc.

Govern?] The word rendred to Govern hath a threefold ſignification in Scripture. Firſt, and moſt properly, to bind up: Secondly, by a Metaphor, to heal; becauſe there is ſo great a uſe of binding in healing; the ſkilful ligature of a wound, or of a broken limb, is of ſo much conſequence in Chirurgery, or the Art of healing, that binding alone is put for healing; that which is well bound is in a fair way to healing. We find both theſe acts put together in that great Promiſe of the Churches glory under the Goſpel, (Iſa. 30. 26.) Moreover the light of the Moon ſhall be as the light of the Sun, &c. in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the ſtroke of their wound.

חבש Ligavit, alligavit; Dominari etiā ſignificat, quod qui dominatur ſuis liget præceptis legibuſque tranſgreſſores. Pagn.

Many learned Tranſlators render the word here, by binding or healing, or by binding, as it refers to healing. The Vulgar Latine gives it paſſively, Can he who doth not love right be healed? The ſenſe of which reading is this; God doth not uſe to heal or bind up the wounds of thoſe who hate right or juſtice: Why ſhould the wounds of thoſe Magiſtrates be healed, who have no care, by doing right, to heal the wounds of others? I ſhall not ſtay upon this Tranſlation, becauſe the Original Text clearly carrieth an active ſignification. And ſome who retain this ſenſe of the word, tranſlate it actively, Shall, or will God heal him that hateth right? Surely he will not: If a man hate juſtice and right, how can he expect that God ſhould be a healer to him? And thus it is expounded in reference to Job, who complained that God did not heal him of his wounds; his wounds, though great, were not cured: Now ſaith Elihu, Will God heal him that hateth right? that is, who doth not approve of that which is right; or, as it followeth, Who condemneth him that is moſt juſt? as Elihu charged Job to have done.

Numquid qui non amat judiciū ſanari poteſt. Vulg.

An etiam odio habentis judiciū obligaret (ſc. vulnus) Jun.

Again, another renders, Will he that hateth the right heal the wounded? The ſenſe of which reading is given thus; Surely God who is ready to bind up and heal the wounds of thoſe that are afflicted when they repent, is no hater of right, no perverter of juſtice, as thou, O Job, haſt ſaid God doth; ſeeing God is ready to heal the wounds, and bind up the ſores of humbled ſinners, how unjuſtly haſt thou charged him with perverting of juſtice? The Tygurine verſion gives it thus, Will he that hates right act the part of a Chirurgion? Will he bind up and heal? Doubtleſs he will not, but will rather wound and afflict, vex and trouble more and more inſtead of being a healer. Either of theſe renderings bear a good ſenſe of this Scripture; yet I ſhall rather take up our Tranſlation, and inſiſt upon it. And therefore

An etiam is qui odio habet jus obligarit vulneratum. Piſc.

An qui odit judiciū Chirurgos imitaretur. Tygur.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies tropically to rule or govern; and the reaſon ariſeth clearly from the proper ſignification of it; becauſe he that is a Ruler or a Governour, is alſo a binder and a healer: Magiſtrates bind the people that are under them to order, they bind them by their Laws. Laws are as bonds, they have a binding power, they bind either to obedience or to puniſhment; and therefore Magiſtrates are binders, they bind the unruly and diſobedient, they bind with the rule of the Law, and with the penalties of the Law. When any break the rule of the Law, then they fall under the penalties of the Law; ſo that every way a Magiſtrate is a binder; and as he is a binder, ſo a healer: The Laws of Government by which people are bound, are for their healing, for the healing of their manners and corruptions; as alſo for the healing of thoſe whom they have oppreſſed or wounded by their evil manners and corruptions. Further, all Governours ſhould, and righteous Governours will improve their power and authority for the healing of thoſe differences that ariſe among their Subjects, or thoſe over whom they are ſet: In all theſe reſpects, Magiſtrates are healers and binders. Thus the Prophet (Iſa. 3.6,7.) expreſſeth them, When a man ſhall take hold of his Brother, of the houſe of his Father, ſaying, thou haſt clothing, be thou our Ruler, and let this ruine be under thine hand: Here is a breach, a ruine in the State or Commonwealth, let this be under thy hand, do thou untake the cure of this; but in that day ſhall he ſwear (ver. 7.) I will not be a healer: We put in the Margin, A binder; that is, I will not be your Governour; your caſe is ſo deſperate, and you are ſo obſtinate in your way, that I dare not undertake your cure, I will not be a healer to you; or, I will not be your binder; or as the reaſon of his refuſal is there given by the Prophet, from his own inability or incompetency for that undertaking; In my houſe is neither bread nor clothing, make me not a Ruler of the people. Thus the word very ſignificantly holds out the office and uſe of Governours, they are or ought to be binders or healers: The wounds of the Body politick need a healer as much as thoſe of the body natural; Governours are State-Phyſicians; and therefore we read very well, Shall he that hateth right govern? Mr. Broughton ſaith, Can a foe to Judgment rule well? Taking this ſenſe, Elihu doth two things in this verſe.

Verbum ligandi יחבוש ſumitur pro imperare vel rerum potiri, quia qui imperant ligant, &c. Merc.

Leges à ligando dicuntur.

Firſt, He ſheweth how unfit an unjuſt perſon is to rule; this he doth in the former part of the verſe.

Secondly, He ſheweth how unfit it is to condemn or cenſure a juſt Ruler; this he doth in the latter part of the verſe, Shall even he that hateth right govern? He ought not. And ſhall he that governeth rightly be hated? Shall he fall under unrighteous condemnations who condemneth others rightly? He ſhould not. As he that is unjuſt is unfit to govern; ſo 'tis not only uncomely, but abominable to condemn a juſt Governour. This is the ſum of the whole verſe. From the former part of it already opened, Shall he that hateth right govern?

What is there ſo good, but an evil man hateth it? And the better it is, the more he hateth it: How precious a thing is Righteouſneſs, yet 'tis hated (Mic. 3.1,2.) Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, &c. Is it not for you to know judgment, who hate the good and love the evil? How precious a thing is peace? And yet there are Peace-haters; My ſoul (ſaith David, Pſal. 120.6.) hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace. How ſweet a thing is Light? The Light of the Goſpel, yet there are many Light-haters (John 3.20.) He that doth evil (loving to do it) hateth the light: How precious a thing is Holineſs? And yet there are Holineſs-haters: How precious a thing is Truth? And yet there are Truth-haters: How infinitely precious is God? And yet there are God-haters: (Rom. 1.30.) How lovely, how deſirable is Jeſus Chriſt, both as a Saviour and as a Sanctifier? Yet even Jeſus Chriſt (who hath loved us, and waſhed us with his own blood) is hated: There are many Chriſt-haters, as himſelf told the Jews (John 15.24.) They have both ſeen and hated both me and my Father. And if there be that principle of abomination in the heart of man to hate God and Chriſt, what good is there that the heart of man may not ſet his hatred upon? Elihu ſuppoſeth that there are haters of Right and Juſtice, which are the moſt amiable things in the world, and ſhould attract the love of all perſons to them.

Secondly, When Elihu ſaith, Shall even he that hateth right govern? How diſdainfully doth he ſpeak of ſuch? Hence Note, To hate right is a moſt hateful thing.

He is not worthy the name of a man that hateth right. When the Prophet Eliſha told Hazael what ſtrange things he ſhould do, what havock he ſhould make in the world, he ſaid (2 Kings 9.13.) But what, is thy ſervant a dog, that he ſhould do this great thing? As if he had ſaid, To do ſuch a thing renders a man as vile and contemptible as a dog: 'Tis a piece of unrighteouſneſs to reckon or number them among men, who are haters of that righteouſneſs which ſhould be exerciſed among men, and is the preſervation of mankind; not to honour righteouſneſs is a hateful thing; not to do right at all times, and in all things, is a hateful thing; what is it then to hate right? How juſtly hateful are Juſtice haters!

Some may ſay, Are there any indeed ſo bad as to hate right?

I anſwer, Firſt, There are ſome who profuſedly, plainly, with a bold and bare face hate the right; there is in all natural men a ſeed of this hatred, The wiſdom of the fleſh is enmity againſt God; and ſurely, if it be enmity againſt God, it muſt needs be enmity againſt all that is good; now as there is a ſeed of that enmity in every mans nature, ſo there will be the workings and fruits of that enmity in many mens lives.
